A real American girl outwits a band of spies and agents for destruction in this country. It is a breathless and exciting yarn. Perhaps the nearest touch is the heroine's gradual forgetfulness of self and safety as she realizes how her country can be served. Frontispiece in color. $1.35 net.

SCHOOL NUMBER

The May 3 issue of The Churchman will be the first big school number of the year. It will help solve the problem of where to send your children next Fall.

parish on account of serious illness, has been spending the winter at Santa Barbara, California. His health is already much improved, and he expects to take up his work again by the first of September.

THE REV. JOHN H. GRIFFITH, rector of the Church of the Holy Cross, Tryon, North Carolina in the District of Asheville, has been asked to become archdeacon of the district and has signified his acceptance notifying Bishop Horner that he will assume his new duties May 15. Mr. Griffith was for twenty years, before coming to Tryon last fall, the rector of St. Mary's Church, at Kriston, Diocese of East Carolina, and through his missionary activities built three churches in his old parish city and two in adjoining towns.

THE REV. STEPHEN H. GREEN.—The street address of the Rev. Stephen H. Green is changed from 1 Dusenbury Place to 235 South Lexington avenue, White Plains, New York. On account of illness (persistent and painful rheumatism) Mr. Green has been compelled since October 1 last to give up all active work of the ministry.

THE REV. WALTER E. BENTLEY, of Brooklyn, and Secretary, Actors' Church Alliance has just closed a very successful eight day preaching mission at Trinity Church, Hoboken, New Jersey, the Rev. Malcolm A. Shipley, Jr., rector, and the following week held a mission at the Church of the Holy Faith, Bronx, New York City, the Rev. C. S. Gregg, rector.

THE REV. GEORGE L. RICHARDSON, D.D.—The address of the Rev. George Lynde Richardson, D.D., has been changed from 3914 Locust street to 1016 Clinton street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ARCHDEACON OF WEST TEXAS.—The Archdeacon of the Diocese of West Texas has made Kingsville the headquarters for his work in order to minister more effectively to the mission fields of the range country, and is now in residence. Bishop Capers has given up the down town office of the Diocese in San Antonio. All mail should be directed accordingly.

THE REV. AUGUST C. DRUMM in St. John's Church, Los Angeles, on the Feast of the Annunciation, March 25, was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Joseph H. Johnson, D.D., Bishop of Los Angeles. Morning Prayer was read by the Rev. J. C. Ingham and the Rev. Harry Gray. The ordinand was presented by the rector of the parish, the Rev. George Davidson, D.D., and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles E. Deuel, D.D., rector of Trinity Church, Santa Barbara. The Rev. Stephen Cutter Clark, Jr., acted as epistoler, and the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes as gospeller. The bishop was attended by two of the examining chaplains, the Rev. W. F. Hubbard, and the Rev. Robert L. Windsor. Other priests present and taking part in the service were the Rev. Albert L. Hall, the Rev. Ray O. Miller and the Rev. Frank Roudenbush. The newly made priest is to continue his work as assistant at St. John's. He is a graduate of the University of Toronto, and the General Theological Seminary.

Plays for Today

APPROACHING the historical with reverence for its truth, and bringing tireless energy to research and to the task of absorbing the spirit of the past, Mr. Percy MacKaye has attained a notable achievement both from the literary and the dramatic standpoint in Washington, The Man Who Made Us (Alfred Knopf).

This is the first published work for the theatre to portray Washington as its central figure. Of his aim in this presentation, the author says his desire was "so to portray him in his strong prime, with truth to reality, that we of today (and especially our young men of America, fighting today for what he fought for) may be led to feel a more intimate affection for 'the man who made us,' and for the still contemporary cause which he espoused for mankind."

The play covers a period of thirty or more years. Gigantic in its conception and execution, and absorbing in its interest, it brings a new vision of Americanism through the persons of Washington and his contemporaries—Hamilton, Knox, Tom Paine, Lafayette, Emerson, and scores of others.

And this is not all. Mr. MacKaye has evolved a new dramatic form. Calling his play a "ballad-play," he links together the sixteen different actions comprised in the three acts by ballads closely related to the theme, and by some simple action of transition. In this way, the play, diverse as are its different parts, becomes a whole.

For its deep present-day significance; as a vivid picture of the past; and for its literary and dramatic qualities, Mr. MacKaye's Washington is a valuable contribution to modern drama.

Another recent volume of plays which deals with historical people and events is Aliee Johnstone Walker's Lafayette—Christopher Columbus—The Long Knives in Illinois (Henry Holt). The plays present Lafayette instilling loyalty into the souls of his ragged Continentals, acclaimed at a ball in Baltimore where those who were present pledged their children's children to the aid of France should she ever need them; Columbus in his struggle for support in Spain, the glad ending to his voyage to the New World and his triumphant return; and George Rogers Clark in a vivid picture of the lives of the frontiersman.

The author calls her volume Brief Plays for the Young, but they are not limited in their appeal to these.

The thought which underlies the Rev. Carol Lund Bates' Patriotic Pageant and Seven Church Pageants (in two pamphlets, published by the Parish Leaflet Company, Indiana) is undoubtedly of value. Democracy Saving the World shows the growth of the spirit of democracy in the great nations, and is interesting in its pattern and good in the simplicity of its expression.

The other seven pageants (they are more nearly mystery plays) deal with the seven great seasons of the church year. And just here the question arises as to how far one is at liberty to alter historical or traditional facts in order to bring them into conformance with one's individual scheme of things. In the Advent pageant (to take a single example—there are many which might be cited) Mother Church summons Isaiah and St. John the Baptist to explain "the season's meaning and its name." Whereupon Isaiah summarizes its meaning, and St. John says, "It seemeth me, the season's name . . . should Advent be." Will not such—symbolism, is it, or poetic license?—lead children, and perhaps many older people into an erroneous belief concerning the Church and St. John? Is it permissible to use any art-form for teaching the lessons and doctrines of the Church and not be scrupulously truthful? The instance cited is unimportant. The principle which underlies it is very great.

Mr. Bates has undoubtedly felt the need for the presentation of the Church's teachings in some exceedingly simple dramatic form requiring little preparation. But in trying to fill this need he has made suggestions which are devastating to the imagination. Assuredly let us have the simplicity, the crudeness, even, of the first mystery plays if need be, but let us not sin against the artistic to the extent of "Mother Church: a young woman vested, wearing a coronet of gilded cardboard." We see Mr. Bates' point. It was to create church pageants for parishes where the time for preparation and the funds are limited. But by what process of reasoning does it seem right to him to treat the great teachings of Mother Church in so trivial a manner and to give them so unworthy a setting? Is it not better to leave such presentation alone?

All this is the more regrettable because we need leadership from within the Church against the hosts of the unrepentant who, more truly today than ever before, are daring to take great fundamental themes and body them forth with slight knowledge and superficial preparation with vision that is "narrower than an ant's eye."

There is a hint of the Grand Guignol in the quality of Emma Beatrice Brunner's volume of plays. She calls them Bits of Background (Alfred Knopf), but the title is a contradiction of the contents. Two of the plays, "Over Age" and "Making a Man," seem out of date, for they deal with German spies and the question of exemption in the language of yesterday. But there is a suggestion of Ibsen in "The Spark of Life" and real humor in "Strangers." The author chats rather delightfully with the reader about her characters and their settings, and whatever technical flaws the plays may contain they are exceedingly interesting and readable.

Children's Plays, by Ada and Eleanor Skinner (D. Appleton & Co.), are charmingly imaginative both in treatment and text. Some of the plays are original, others are adaptations from stories or plot-incidents found in the works of various writers. Planned for class room reading lessons, or for production, these little plays will be warmly welcomed by all who believe in the educational value of dramatics.

PASSING THROUGH THINGS TEMPORAL

WHEN churchmen pray that "we may so pass through things temporal that we finally lose not the things eternal" they have uttered one of the fundamental petitions of faith. The thought which that collect contains is well worth our consideration during Eastertide, because, after that we have announced the hope which belongs to our faith—the hope of immortality—immediately there occurs the question, what then? Whenever St. Paul talks about the Resurrection and immortality he jumps at once from faith to morals. He plunges with zeal from the contemplation of heaven into the problem of man's life here and now.

There is a large class of persons that must never be lost sight of at Eastertide. They are the people who frankly make the confession which William James made in his Ingersol lectures that the subject of immortality is not one of the warm, eager problems of his life; that he feels no passionate interest in the matter.

We have known people who have haltingly expressed this same indifference and coldness concerning the life beyond. Their temperaments are such that they cannot picture heaven, nor do they care so to do. They are not given to indulging in dreams of what the life beyond the grave is going to be. All the rich phraseology of our hymnal and of books of devotion, in which the streets of heaven seem veritably to be as real as the thoroughfares of earth, is to them an unknown speech and tongue. Scores of persons, spiritually fine and true, will, if they are frank, say to us that the hope of heaven has little part to play in their Christianity.

And they are religious,—that is the troublesome aspect of the matter. They never doubt the goodness and love of God. They trace His finger in the providential care of man. In trouble, they feel His Presence nearer than hands and feet. They pray to Him for the purity of heart which brings the vision of His face, and all their lives long they have struggled to forge out of experience the things which are eternal—unselfishness, peace, the sun-light view of things.

And these are not the persons either, who crave proofs of immortality. They are not deeply enough interested to ask for proof. Their condition is not that they are skeptical whether there be a heaven,—they do not question its possibility,—but that they are not concerned enough to debate the question.

Yet they trust God utterly! Their world is permeated through and through with spiritual values, and the universe as they see it is enwrapped in an exquisite texture of God's own weaving. To these persons and to many less noble souls all this ecstatic language of our Easter faith, our hallelujahs and shouts of triumph, is a foreign tongue they cannot speak. What shall we say of such?—for many of us are not worthy to unloose the latchet of their shoes.

The first thing to be said about them is that they shame us who hold the full evangel.

For the millions today who profess an undisturbed faith in heaven and share the Easter joy are not all of them lovers and seekers of things eternal. As they pass through things temporal: poverty, riches, sorrow, happiness, good fortune, bad fortune, they do not impress one as being people who have emerged from these experiences with a firm hold upon the eternal. What people often mean when they recite in the Apostles' Creed "I believe in the Life Everlasting" is "I wish for the life everlasting." A wish is not faith.

What better can we do at Eastertide than to search our hearts to know whether our songs of triumph and our words of hope are merely the conventional expression of a wish or are the product of a faith that is enabling us so to pass through things temporal that finally we lose not the things eternal.

BISHOP HALL ON THE PROPOSALS

A FORTNIGHT ago THE CHURCHMAN, in the discussion of the Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity, published an opinion which Bishop Hall very graciously in response to the editor's request submitted for our readers. The Bishop of Vermont did not write in an irenic vein, but perhaps it is well for both sides to know the worst. Bishop Hall has given us the worst. There is, as it seems to us, a sound Catholic answer to all of the objections which the Bishop of Vermont raises against the plan under discussion. Where we take issue with those who, like Bishop Hall, appear to be unsympathetic with any form of unity that does not amount to unconditional surrender on the part of other communions, is that they do not hold a high enough conception of the episcopate. It is just here that a mole hill has been made to look like the Alps in the discussion of an interchange of pulpits. As we tried to suggest in our criticism of the Bishop of London's attitude on this question, both sides in the controversy over an open pulpit frequently err by an over-emphasis and a false deduction. The interchange of pulpits is merely an elementary act of Christian courtesy. Fundamentally it has nothing whatever to do with unity other than contributing one or more gracious by-products which ultimately create a conciliatory atmosphere. This is, indeed, an element in the problem that must not be despised. But its direct significance must not be over-estimated.

It is here, we think that Bishop Hall harbors needless fears over the present Proposals. The Bishop of Vermont doubtless considers himself to be in a full sense a bishop in the Church of God, not merely an Episcopalian. With so Catholic a conception of the episcopal office, he ought to be willing to trust himself and his fellow-bishops to exercise more than a formal jurisdictional connection with Congregational laymen in their dioceses who already are members by Baptism of the Church. These baptized Christians are at worst only ecclesiastical prodigal sons. We fail quite to see how in any high definition of catholicity, some of our bishops can take the chill aloofness, which they not infrequently assume, towards these wayward children of the Church. By Baptism these children are members of the Church of God. By consecration to the office of bishop, our bishops, if they concede themselves to be bishops in the Church of God, are the fathers of these children in Christ. So, we repeat, we fail quite to understand how Bishop Hall can say that laymen under the Congregational ministers who have received ordination by the Episcopal Church "would be in no relation to the bishop of the diocese in which they live."

Furthermore, Bishop Hall makes, we think, too low an estimate of the representative aspect of the Congregational ministry. Our own unfortunately rigid distinction between the ministry and the laity does not obtain among our Congregational brethren. Congregationalists do have a really representative ministry. There is by their very organization a unity of mind and purpose between pastor and people often sadly lacking among ourselves. The group spirit, so conspicuous in apostolic communities, is a reality in the Congregational Church. The local church is a true organism. If such an organism, therefore, consisting of minister and people, agree to accept the jurisdiction of a bishop in our Church, the bishop would be dealing with a visible and well-knit organization. Whatever communion such an organization decides, under the proposed plan, to hold with a bishop could not stand out of all relation to the life of that organization.

The same solidarity of the group makes it a rare thing for one other than their own pastor to administer the Lord's Supper, so that the alternation of sacraments which the bishop fears would be extremely rare. Characteristically Bishop Hall laments in his first paragraph a too loose relation with the bishop and in his second paragraph he is fearful lest there be no recognition of episcopal authority. But ought not the bishop to concede more to a bishop's ability to commend his leadership to the faithful? After all, a good deal of a bishop's present authority in his diocese is conditioned upon the possession of qualities of leadership. The proposals are permissive, not mandatory. Pastors and flocks in the Congregational Church are not "compelled to come in." The fact that they have signified their willingness to enter into relation with the Episcopal Church suggests a mood of conformity.

On the liturgical question raised by Bishop Hall in reference to the celebration of the Holy Communion, THE CHURCHMAN is willing to trust the judgment of Canon St. George.

The Church has always been more abundantly willing to trust the bishops than they seem willing to trust themselves. We shall never have church unity while our bishops remain in the attitude of timorously guarding the Church against risk. A bishop in the Church of God should, we think, have some of the apostolic confidence and romance of the missionary. In the great constructive eras of the Church as a missionary force, the episcopate was bold. Its courage was born not of a listless indifference to essentials, it was bold because it was under the propulsion of love—a sure witness of the presence of the Holy Spirit. The fear of risk is evidence of a low spiritual vitality. The Holy Spirit can sweep men over a hundred risks and blunders safe into the path of the Kingdom. But we must trust Him.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

LLOYD GEORGE AND NORTHCLIFFE

IF the Prime Minister has broken the power of the Northcliffe press, it is a wholesome sign of the times. Audacity, cleverness and the money to own a string of newspapers may go far in dictating how a country shall be ruled, but if a nation's executives are to be brow-beaten by a man who can buy the wits to write, democratic government has fallen upon hard days. Northcliffe is the victim of a daring ambition. To be sure there have been other days in the long and honorable history of the Times when its owner and editor made and unmade ministries, but John Delane was not a Northcliffe. In its great days, the Times was content to be a great newspaper; it had no wish to absorb the functions of government.

THE CHRONICLE'S SPONSOR

IN the April issue of our contemporary The Chronicle, editorial announcement is made that from the present issue the Protestant Episcopal Society for the Promotion of Evangelical Knowledge will be sponsor for the general and editorial policy of that paper. The editorial staff will remain the same. The editor allays apprehension by announcing that The Chronicle will continue throwing high explosives into the camp of the enemy. This is quite as it should be. Heaven defend us against unanimity of opinion. While Poughkeepsie keeps in form, those engaged in efforts "to de-protestantize and unevangelize the Protestant Episcopal Church" will have to wear gas-masks. THE CHURCHMAN offers its felicitations to The Chronicle as it speeds along its way under the sponsorship of the venerable Society for the Promotion of Evangelical Knowledge.

SPRING IN TIMES SQUARE

SPEAKING of The Chronicle, reminds us of The American Church Monthly. Everybody who enjoys good literature should read in the April number of our other contemporary, which Gorham publishes, Dr. Barry's charming essay "Spring in Times Square." Those who have been familiar with Dr. Barry's published meditations know that he wields a facile pen, but perhaps his meditations have not prepared us for this delightful release of his implement into more imaginative fields. "Spring in Times Square" opens with the lavender man and closes with certain grave spiritual matters. We hope that The American Church Monthly has a large circulation for it would be a pity to confine the flavor and perfume of Dr. Barry's gift to a small, however select, circle.

But there is other spice in the pages of the April number of The American Church Monthly. We should like to have written the crisp editorial "Mental Tests for Holy Orders," had we dared. We agree enthusiastically with its contention. But perhaps we should have been under suspicion had we said this about the clergy:

Anyone who has had an extended acquaintance with young men who are preparing or who are eager to prepare for holy orders knows full well that the ministry as a profession exerts a strange attractive power over many boys and young men who might be called feeble-minded. There are those, for example, who covet the social distinction which they think goes with the profession; there are others who like to wear vestments and who could imagine nothing more inspiring than to be dressed up in a cope or a chasuble or a long surplice and black scarf; there are others who aspire to be in a position of authority at the head of an important parish, so that multitudes might be running hither and thither at their bidding. It is surprising to note how few young men have an ambition to be priests merely because it will bring them nearer to our Lord and give them an opportunity to co-operate with Him in His work of saving human souls. . . .

Many of the clergy who make shipwreck of their parishes through an ungovernable temper, through fantastic idiosyncrasies of manner or conduct, through the questionable handling of funds, or through a total lack of knowing how to deal with their fellow human beings, ought not to be harshly condemned as being morally at fault. In many instances they are simply mentally deficient, and should have been weeded out by the authorities of the Church before they began to study for the ministry.

HEARTY SERVICES

THERE are a good many contributing causes to what is known as a hearty service. Probably any of the mechanical devices which we may name may not be fundamental but we have noticed that, wherever the service seems hearty and spontaneous, the congregation invariably follows a certain rule. That rule is that the people rise together at the first note of the canticles and hymns. In the churches where the people seem to leak into the responses and hymns, the service is dull. This, of course, is a matter of training. It takes only a word now and then from the chancel for the congregation to form the habit of beginning when things begin.

THE BROTHERHOOD'S SOCIAL PRONOUNCEMENT

WE LIKE the phrasing and the conviction of the pronouncement set forth by the National Council of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew at its meeting in Philadelphia, March 15. It was published in our news columns, but it is worth a repetition of its emphasis.

We also believe that we must apply conscientiously and honestly each for himself the principles of Christianity in our everyday life; that we will not be happy or content in spending our incomes so long as it is impossible for some to secure the bare necessities of life; that labor will be elevated to its proper place and be given its just share of the profits of production and a proportionate share in its control and management; that we shall be ashamed to live off incomes which we have not earned, without rendering an equivalent in the performance of our share of the world's work; that the privileged will voluntarily give up their undeserved special privileges; that we will scrutinize our investments and not become part owners in any business that is exploiting our fellow citizens, be they men, women or children, and whether it be by the non-payment of living wages, maintaining unsanitary or unnecessarily dangerous places for work, or employment of child labor or the like; that each one of us will endeavor to do his uttermost to bring about a Christian social order, and to that end will give himself in Christ's name to that form of social service in his respective community best suited to his ability and opportunity.

We think that we are, most of us, persuaded that the time has come when Christians must do more than announce the spirit in which our social problems must be solved. We must specify in certain cases what form the solutions shall take. For Christianity requires of us that we shall use not only our hearts but our minds also, and there are times when we must reason through from the truth to its application. We did this when the Christian world pronounced against slavery. A good part of the Christian world is about to make another such pronouncement against certain abuses of industrialism. We commend the National Council of the Brotherhood for attempting to think the thing through.

DR. ATWATER'S DIAGNOSIS

IN THE thoughtful and keen analysis of the present conditions in our Church which Dr. Atwater is presenting in the papers now being published in THE CHURCHMAN, there is much to be seriously weighed. He is not alone in his opinion. From every side there comes the same criticism of the Church's inability to function nationally. The facts which he presents are these:

We have a few outstanding places where local strength brings local success, or unusual leadership accomplishes wonders.

Our failures are apparent. They are relative, of course, and must be measured by our claims and by our opportunities. Let me but state a few:

Our ministry is almost numerically stationary, although geographically agile.

We have but 1583 parishes of over 200 communicants, and some of them, all know, are on the ragged edge. Nearly two-thirds of these parishes are within the borders of five states.

Over one-half of our communicants are within the borders of five states.

Of our million communicants probably 200,000 are "padding."

Half the battle is won, if the Church recognizes the defectiveness of its machinery. We think that the Church is beginning to recognize that defectiveness. There are murmurings that the synods will awaken to their opportunities; that the bishops will exercise their right to appeal direct to the laymen of the Church, over the heads of the rectors if need be, that the facts may be known and programs inaugurated for doing the things that ought to be done. Whether the remedy is a greater centralization is a question. Centralization of authority is the mood of the day and hour. We are not quite sure that what works well in governments and what has worked so admirably during the war in the administration of war activities would work equally well in the Church. Church officials seem loath to use their authority harshly. And by harshly we mean the willingness to scrap useless machinery and to retire inefficient men. What is needed is a little ruthlessness in requiring that men appointed to do a certain work do that work or make way for more capable hands.

But first of all the Church will have to make up its mind what it proposes to do about the question of a living wage. It cannot command the leadership its problems require until it offers a decent livelihood to its workers. It is not doing this today. When it requires skilled secretaries for a specialist's work it offers a wage less than that paid to a second-rate bookkeeper. If the Church is going to get its work done as it ought to be done; yes, if it is going to get its work done economically, it will be compelled to do precisely what the great philanthropic foundations are doing—offer a competent salary to high-grade men and women. The craftsmanship of the Church's undertakings is not high.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

Jesus and Judas

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D. D.

Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. Hebrews XII-2

Falling headlong, he burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. Acts I-18.

THEY both started well. Only three years before, Judas was such a young man as Jesus would select for one of His chosen companions. But life is to be judged by its finish, and these two texts tell of the finish.

I want to remind you tonight not only that we make our own characters, that every man is growing toward what he really worships in his heart today, but I want to show you how rapidly character draws to a climax.

It was so with Jesus. It took Him thirty years to get ready, but only three years to accomplish His ministry. And in that last fateful week, He rode in triumph into Jerusalem on the very Sabbath preceding Calvary, the multitude throwing their garments in the way, and palm leaves, and shouting, "Hosanna! Hosanna in the highest! Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!" And just five days later that same multitude were crying "Crucify him! Crucify him!" He made the great sacrifice, but it opened into an Easter morning

Lift up your heads, ye sorrowing ones,
And be ye glad of heart;
For Calvary Day and Easter Day,
Earth's saddest day and gladdest day,
Were just one day apart.

Thus is it in the making of our destiny for good or for evil. All the beginning events move very slowly.

What a dreadful passage that is in the Bible, representing men starting on the down grade, thoughtlessly, unheeding of the fact that progress toward evil is accelerating; that certain grooves are being worn in the brain by force of habit, and that the farther you go, the easier you go, until toward the end it is almost impossible to stop. I think there are no more terrible words recorded in Scripture, because they are so true, and so frequently forgotten: "Their foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them, make haste."

When a man begins to descend in the plane of character, the start is often very slow. But its velocity increases with its progress. If you fire a bullet in the air, when it turns and begins to fall, the first second it may fall only 16 feet, but the next it will fall 64 feet, the third 144, the fourth 256, and the fifth second 400 feet. There has been many an office boy who has endured more pangs of hell in stealing the first quarter from his master's till than he has suffered in after years in burning a building and destroying a whole household, when once in his descent he has gained momentum.

Never a better illustration of this than in the story of Judas. He started so slowly that even on that last night, Thursday—the night of the secret supper in that upper room in Jerusalem,—just a few hours before the betrayal in Gethsemane, not one of the disciples suspected him; only the Master who knew all; so that when Jesus said, "One of you shall betray me," not one of them looked at Judas. Each began to think only of himself, and to ask, with searching of heart, "Lord, is it I?"

Judas started in sin as men start today, by degrees.

And Jesus seemed to recognize this when He said, "That which thou doest, do quickly. The time has come Judas. Underneath that veil of outward probity, I, with the eye of omniscience have been discovering the dark design, which, like the worm in the heart of the tree has been eating its way—eating its way,—until naught is left beneath the bark but rottenness and death. And now, far out across the hills I hear the distant mutterings of the tempest! The time has come for the tree to fall, crashing to its ruin. That which thou doest do quickly."

And Judas rose from the supper. The unsuspecting disciples supposed that being treasurer, he had gone to provide for tomorrow's food, or to help some poor outcast to whom Jesus might have referred. And so, just as men have gone forth to scenes of unholy lust and shame, with the pure kiss of mother or wife or child still resting upon their lips,—Judas, from the holy quiet of a room lit by the presence of the Son of God,—Judas, from the sacred company of those disciples, every one of whom, except himself, was at last to grasp a martyr's crown,—Judas, from the very memorial supper of the Lord, "went out."

And we are told, "It was night!" Night, not only upon the sea and upon the land; night, in the dark, haunted, tempest-tossed soul of the traitor; night, always black and starless night, when a soul wilfully turns his back upon that which he knows to be the highest and the best, and chooses for himself the path of evil.

The next time we meet him the plot has ripened. The priests and Pharisees despising him in their heart are ready to use him for their tool, and that same night in Gethsemane the voice of Jesus falls upon the ears of His disciples, as He catches the glimmering of approaching lanterns under the olive trees, "Rise, let us be going. Behold he is at hand that doth betray me." "And while He yet spake, lo, Judas one of the twelve came, and with him a great multitude with swords and with staves for to take him." Then as a sign to the conspirators, he kissed Him and said "Hail Master!"

And the last words which those lips which had so often prayed with him, ever uttered to the apostate, now fell upon his ear, "Betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss?" "And behold they led away Jesus to be crucified." "And Judas went out and hanged himself." And the Scripture concerning all such was fulfilled, "Their feet shall slide in due time."

What are you sliding away from? Are you sliding away from the Church? Are you sliding away from that company whom you will find there, who might help you to be your noblest and your best? Are you sliding away from purity and honesty and peace of mind? Are you sliding away from Jesus Christ? Then turn back! In the name of God and for your own soul's sake turn back! Else, "The day of thy calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon thee make haste."

REMEMBER, O Lord, all the absent members of the family, all who are near and dear to us, all who are in trouble, sorrow, need or any other adversity, all who in foreign lands are witnessing for Thee, all the blessed ones who rest in Paradise.—Bishop Wilkinson.

THE CHURCH AND THE NEW ERA—IV

BY THE REV. GEORGE PARKIN ATWATER, D.D.

THE relation to our missionary policy of such a federal council as I have described in preceding issues of THE CHURCHMAN, is an interesting study.

It is most apparent that we must revise our missionary policy, especially in the development of diocesan missions. It seems to be the dream of dioceses to put a mission station at every cross roads. Many a feeble parish or mission, which needs the care of its bishop, meets him at 4:17 p. m. and says good-bye to him at 9:48 p. m. the same day, because he must hurry to distant places where the nature of the work might be characterized by the words "low visibility." We would condemn the father who neglected his own children for the satisfaction of getting credit for adopting an orphan. But the system, not the tireless bishops, is to blame.

Certain questions must be asked and answered before any mission station is established.

(1) Can it be cared for without neglecting work already begun?

(2) Can we be sure of bringing to it some contribution that only our Church can give? To plant the mission is not enough. It must contribute our especial possessions. Otherwise we are weakening the Christian forces that may be in the locality, and which are doing fully all that we actually can accomplish with our group.

We know that in warfare it is folly for a small force to hurl itself against a strong position. The attackers are annihilated. So it is folly to multiply weakness in our Church. If we undertake to work in a community we must do it in force. Imagine the typical small town with its vagaries, its local interests, its burdensome human problem, its often meagre outlook. The Church says, "Let us plant a mission there because it is a county seat." So it sends a clergyman, underpaid, or a lay reader, and gathers a few people, and has Evening Prayer. Now I do not wish to be understood as undervaluing any spiritual effort. But as a missionary policy that is ineffective. That little service has about as much effect on the community as a Latin grammar in a popular circulating library. And when the little group tries to impress that community with its special religious advantages, and uses for the purpose the words of old Israel, "We are a peculiar people," the people of the community rise up and say, "You are indeed!"

Our missionary problem is not a local or diocesan problem alone, but a national problem. We lay a burden upon our bishops and diocesan organizations too heavy for them to bear. They feel a responsibility for every section of a diocese that weighs upon their conscience. They have inherited the tradition that every soul in a diocese is a subject of their concern. Nobly have they struggled with an impossible situation. With but slender resources they have given evidences of what consecration and determination can do. But they struggle against obdurate conditions.

For the work is at the mercy of a restless body of clergy. Some parishes are seeking clergymen and some clergymen are seeking parishes. The bishops scan the ecclesiastical landscape for men for their missions. If they cannot find a man among the temporarily unattached they find him among those who are weary with some burden in another diocese, and who yearn for a change of scene. The problem for the moment is passed on to another bishop. But it will return.

Having secured a priest they find that they have secured more. They have secured a personality. Often they find themselves the chief pastor of a liturgical experimenter. Any difference in altitude between priest and people produces a ringing in the ears of the bishop.

But why enlarge on the difficulties? What is the remedy? A national survey and a national allotment of effort. We are hampered by the notion that all diocesan fields are of the same importance. Diocesan lines, though necessary for jurisdiction, are artificial in a land where national interests and preoccupations cut across every boundary. The educational institutions of Massachusetts are the concern of the whole American Church; so are the vast foreign populations of other sections; so are the great industrial centres. Diocesan units are often too weak to face their exceptional needs. The national Church ought to have a national policy, method and agency for work whose nature is such that to allot it to overburdened bishops by diocesan boundaries is to weaken it.

A national policy applied to the missionary field as a whole would mean that each bishop would be asked to propel a limited number of mission stations, namely, the number that he can successfully oversee, and for which clerical and lay help can be assured, and which by their importance are worth support. It is no real gain to start missions for which men cannot be secured. To starve a mission in Indiana in order to feed one in Illinois, which in turn will suffer a famine, is simply wastefulness.

The national Church ought to have its laboratories, just as a state agricultural department has. It ought to determine by experiment what kind of effort is effective in any type of community in order to do it a real service. It ought to determine the mental, social and spiritual equipment necessary in the man who is to serve in a typical work.

Consider the problem of the Church in a community of five to ten thousand people. As a rule, especially in the Mid-West, they are very difficult stations. If we have a parish at all it is generally small, and offers but meagre support for a priest. If a good man is secured, he is discovered by a neighboring parish and he moves on. The parish suffers from a discontinuation of oversight about once every two years. There is generally but a handful of people who give continuous support to the parish. The priest, singlehanded, is unable to do the work that will make more than a surface impression on the community. Our ways are generally looked upon as being very unusual and elaborate. Now, if the sole purpose of the Church is to minister to the few who seek shelter in her sanctuary, we may muddle on. The situation has some resemblance to a chaplaincy in a home for women. This Church, I am convinced, has a larger purpose. We ought to determine the minimum effort required to accomplish our purpose in such a town and we ought to provide a force sufficient to make that effort. If we could enter such a town with a priest, a worker for boys, and a visiting nurse, who could also work with girls, and if we could maintain them there without interruption, we could in time affect the life of that community. Men and women should be trained for such tasks.

The rural problem must be met in the same manner. It would be far better to confine our work to strategical places and to do it with force and enthusiasm, than to dissipate our strength over wide geographical areas.

The whole program assumes the fundamental principle that we must capture the child life in every community. Any missionary effort not aimed primarily at educating children is short-sighted and almost futile.

This Church must not work under the impression that we are affecting only those who come within its doors. Its strength is not to be counted by communications or by parishes. We have a vast field of service in moulding men's opinions and judgments and also in enriching their minds by the forceful presentation of religious truth. We have begun to understand medical missions. We must begin to understand mental missions.

Our Church must capture the thinking of America. No one truth is standing out more prominently today than the truth that in the long run ideas mould the life and the institutions of the people. For an institution of such value to our nation, we are the most poorly advertised institution in America. We must challenge our land to think about us and to talk about us. Do you realize that much of the growth of Christian Science is due to the fact that it compelled people to think about it? All organizational growth arises from a culture bed of ideas.

When clergy and laity, consecrated to the great task, undertake to build upon the firm foundation laid by our spiritual ancestors, and when a comprehensive and centralized method is found which will conserve our forces and give a national aspect to our efforts, then may this Church hope to fulfil its destiny, and achieve its purposes, in the life of our American people.

AN EASTER CHORAL

BY PASCAL HARROWER

Hail Son of God! Who, over death and darkness,
Reignest forever, Prince and Lord Immortal;
To Thee we bow with hearts in love adoring,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

Thee in Thy Passion, lo! we followed grieving,
Darkness and sorrow round Thy presence gathered;
Now, in the splendor of the world's great morning,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

Dark was the shadow of Thy mighty dying,
Dark were the hearts of those who loved and watched Thee,
Laid Thee all strengthless in Thy rocky cavern,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

Wrapt in the silence, stilled Thy heart and sleeping
Like all earth's children, feet and forehead folded,
Death could not hold Thee, prisoned there forever,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

Sweetly they sleep who lie in earth's green bosom,
Resting like Thee, their toil and travel ended,
Guarded by Thee, of death and grave the Warder,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

Countless they follow, who from sin delivered,
March on Thy road, through storm and sorrow moving,
Onward to glory, out of pain and dying,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

And forth with Thee, at some high hour of dawning,
Rising triumphant, they shall spring immortal,
Pouring through earth the song and chant of victors,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

Strong Son of God! Who over death and darkness,
Reignest forever, Prince and Lord Immortal,
To Thee we bow, with hearts in love adoring,
Hail, Prince and Lord of Life!

THE new order makes its demand. The walls must be moved out. There must be room for the spirit of eight million men who died for a larger world. They bid us to let the old evils go and to bring in the new good, to ring out the slowly dying cause, the ancient forms of party strife, the want, the care, the sin, the faithless coldness of the times, the old shapes of foul disease, the thousand wars of old, and to ring in the nobler modes of life, the love of truth and right, the common love of good, redress to all mankind, the thousand years of peace. The dead ask this of us. They have a right to ask it and to threaten to stir beneath the Flanders poppies if we will not hear. And another and greater One has a right to ask it who taught us to pray and meant that the prayer should be sincere and true—

Thy Kingdom come, Thy Will be done on earth—in America and in the world—today as it is in heaven. It is of man's disobedience and failure, not of God's will if that Kingdom is not brought nearer now by many a long year.
ROBERT E. SPEER.

THERE is no wealth but life. Life, including all its powers of love, of joy, and of admiration. That country is the richest which nourishes the greatest number of noble and happy human beings; that man is richest who, having perfected the functions of his own life to the utmost, has also the widest helpful influence, both personal, and, by means of his possessions, over the lives of others.—JOHN RUSKIN.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

FATHER FIGGIS DIES SUDDENLY ON APRIL 16

Learned Historical Scholar Was Stalwart Defender of the Faith

A telegram from London announces the death on April 16 of the Rev. John Neville Figgis, D.D., Litt.D., honorary fellow of St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, and member of the Community of the Resurrection. It is a little more than a year ago since Father Figgis attempted to come to the United States to lecture and preach during Lent. His boat was torpedoed and Father Figgis suffered great exposure. He was forced to return to England and it is understood that he has never been in good health since then.

Father Figgis was born in Brighton in 1866. He received his early education at Brighton College, St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, and Wells Theological College. He was Senior Optime in 1888, first class History Tripos in 1889 and the holder of various scholarships and prizes. He was curate at Kettering, at Great St. Mary's, Cambridge, from 1895 to 1898, then lecturer at St. Catherine's College and chaplain of Pembroke. From 1901 to 1907 he was rector of Marnhull, Dorset. In 1909 he became a member of the Community of the Resurrection.

At the request of THE CHURCHMAN the following appreciation of Father Figgis has been prepared by Dr. Dickinson Miller, professor of Apologetics at the General Theological Seminary.

It is a shock to hear of the death of Father Figgis, a member of the order called the Community of the Resurrection, and repeatedly a welcome visitor in this country, where he gave the Noble Lectures at Harvard, Paddock Lectures at the General Seminary, and Bross Lectures at Lake Forest College. His figure has stood forth as that of one of the impressive preachers, one of the chief exponents and defenders of the Christian faith in the Church of England. His special undertaking of late has been to face contemporary men and movements that assail or counteract the faith, to gain a thorough knowledge of them, and to meet them on their own ground. He had a profoundly sympathetic quality of mind. This was felt in his sermons and also in the intellectual sympathy with which he could go so far with perfect intelligence in understanding and appreciating the assailants of the faith that he literally held dear. His understanding of them was not the superficial impression of an impatient churchman who is bound that they shall be wrong and foolish. He lent himself completely to their thought. But he "returned from far." He pointed out that civilization was at the cross roads, and he stood there to tell us where the roads led. He did this with the power of a mind steeped in literature and scholarship, not to say in humanity and religion. He wrote no better book, perhaps, in this vein than The Will to Freedom, or the Gospel of Nietzsche and the Gospel of Christ (1917), lectures delivered at Lake Forest College, a volume that no student of Nietzsche can afford to overlook. Much excellent material delivered in lectures and sermons remains, I believe, unpublished.

But in thinking of these later works we are apt to forget his earlier activity, never abandoned, as a scholar in political history. There is an authentic story of a group of Cambridge dons some years ago discussing the proper rank of some of the scholars of the university; were they to be graded as "alpha," "beta," or "gamma," etc.? This one, it was suggested, is "beta minus," that one "beta plus," another, alas, "gamma," etc. As to Figgis—there is no doubt about him, they agreed, he is "alpha." You may say "alpha minus" if you like; you may put as many minus signs as your taste or point of view dictates, but no one will dispute that he is "alpha." This judgment had in mind such work as The Divine Right of Kings (1896), Illustrations of English History (1902), From Gerson to Grocius (1907). The later book, Churches in the Modern State (1913), partly continues the same interest. And the fact that in conjunction with another he was chosen to edit Lord Acton's lectures and essays and his letters, and to contribute to the Cambridge Modern History, bespeaks his standing.

Father Figgis was the son of the Rev. J. B. Figgis, the leading minister of the Countess of Huntingdon's Connection, that interesting sect, originally of Calvinistic Methodists, who in 1779 were ruled out of the Church of England. The elder Figgis was for fifty-six years the minister of North Street Church, Brighton (city of eminent preachers), built by the countess herself, who sold her jewels for the purpose. Here he succeeded that Joseph Sortain so much admired as a preacher by Thackeray. A visitor to an evening service there says of the father: "He was very dark in complexion. His hair was at that time as black as the raven's wing, and he wore a black gown unrelieved. The church was full. When Mr. Figgis commenced to preach the lights were turned down and he was a strange figure in the pulpit. . . . About his power as a preacher there could be no question." His great reputation and influence were proved by the expressions poured out on all hands at the time of his death in 1916. Figgis of Brighton, as he was affectionately known for half a century, came from a distinguished Irish family in County Dublin, where the name is still widely honored. Father Figgis speaks in one of his books of his own sympathy and affection for evangelical teaching, which for him is "hallowed by the most sacred memories."

A certain reserve of manner concealed at first the depth of feeling which was his

LATIN AMERICA SECRETARY IS BACK FROM HAITI

Is Received Cordially by Officials and Finds Missions Flourishing

Dr. Gray, secretary for Latin America for the Board of Missions, returned to New York last week from Haiti. He accompanied Bishop Colmore to Port au Prince and with him visited as many of the Haitian parishes as possible, although the unsettled conditions in the north where the brigands from the hills are keeping things pretty lively prevented them from making as extensive visitations as they would have liked. Bishop Colmore proceeded into the Dominican Republic overland and Dr. Gray, accompanied by Dr. Bevan who made the third in the party, returned by boat after an absence of four weeks.

Dr. Gray had opportunity to meet the president of Haiti, the commissioner of education, and others high in government and business circles. He found them intelligent and responsive and very cordial in their attitude towards the Episcopal Church. Dr. Gray feels that the Church's contribution to Haiti should be through industrial schools and that with wise leadership this contribution can be very great.

Roosevelt Sermon Published

The masterly sermon delivered by Dr. Henry Bradford Washburn at the New York cathedral in memory of Colonel Roosevelt on February 9 has just been published in a very attractive pamphlet.

vital characteristic. After a while, however, amongst those who understood him, the reserve gave way to great frankness and most interesting talk on a wide range of topics. His strong interests embraced all forms of art and current politics, as well as literature and theology.

I remember him well as he last stood in the pulpit of the General Seminary, urging the students to read widely in the drama and the novel of our time, that they might gain a deeper insight into the human life with which they must deal, and realize with more power just what was its need of Christ and what it was He had to give it. A fineness of "atmosphere" has justly been noticed in all his utterances. Still earlier I recall how, in the same place, he exposed the weakness of "a reduced Christianity," "a muffled Christianity," the milk-and-water religion that clung to the Christian name. But best of all do I remember one of his Paddock Lectures on churchmanship, which ended with a remarkable mosaic of extracts from the glorious passages on love in St. John's first epistle, and how, when the service was over, he left the sacristy instantly in his gown, with feeling and conviction too strong to be sicklied o'er with comments of any sort on what he had uttered.

CARRANZA WELCOMES MISSIONARIES TO MEXICO

Greatest Thing in History of Republic, Says Methodist Bishop

The following editorial which appeared in a recent number of The Christian Advocate describes how the Methodists are participating in "the greatest thing in the history of missions in the republic."

Bishop F. J. McConnell was in Mexico in February, presiding over the annual conference, and also being chairman of a series of interdenominational conferences (February 17-22) which are described by a participant as "the greatest thing in the history of missions in this republic." Representatives of ten American mission boards (including twenty delegates from the United States) met to talk over a comprehensive program for the establishment of colleges, normal, agricultural, and mechanical schools, social settlements, hospitals and churches—evangelical churches.

President Carranza officially received the delegates. Bishop McConnell explained to the president that the conference was held to study how the program of the evangelical Churches may be enlarged and made more efficient, emphasizing the fact that none has any interest apart from the desire to help a neighboring people.

President Carranza replied at length, assuring his guests that he believed in the efficacy of evangelical work in Mexico, and that he saw no reason why their educational program should not be carried out with the sympathy of the government and help of the people. An outstanding college in Mexico City, combining the best of American and Mexican educational principles, would contribute much to the friendship of the two countries. He appreciated the fact that the Protestant missionaries have done all that was possible to befriend Mexico and spread the right impression through the United States.

Before such suggestion came from the president the conference had already registered its favorable impressions in the following resolution:

The Conference of Christian Workers, meeting in Mexico February 17-22, wish to express their gratitude at the cordial way they have been received by all the people, and for the fact of the improved conditions and open-mindedness of the people to permit Christian work to be carried on in all parts of the republic, with protection and welcome for the workers.

What American Christian has been able to look toward the Rio Grande for a decade without an aching heart? Our nearest neighbor has been our heartiest hater. She has questioned our motives, denounced our policies, and brought us more than once to the verge of war. The incident just narrated points to the more excellent way of cultivating international relations. Does any one believe that the cost of the Pershing punitive expedition, if invested in Mexico in such missionary institutions as are now contemplated, would have effected a Mexican revolution of a new type—a conquest of Mexico by kindness and Christian neighborliness, the only conquest that will ever make her our friend? It is for expeditionary forces of this sort that the Centenary is gathering the funds. There lies the true missionary demonstration garden, just over our back fence!

REV. W. E. JONES DIES

Secretary of Central New York Diocese Succumbs to Pneumonia

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.—The Rev. Walter E. Jones, rector of Calvary Church, here, and secretary of the diocese entered into rest after a brief illness, on Friday, April 11. The burial service was held at Calvary Church on April 15, and included a requiem celebration of the Holy Communion.

Walter E. Jones was a native of Wales who came to this country in his youth and went to live in Utica, working in his uncle's cigar store. He attended Trinity Church and for some time served as a vestryman. He was an interested and active member of the parish chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and as a lay reader served many neighboring mission stations. Thus his mind was turned toward the sacred ministry and he entered Hobart College, graduating in 1904. In 1907 he graduated from the General Theological Seminary and on December 21 was ordained both deacon and priest by Bishop Olmsted in Calvary Church, of which he then became rector. Under his able leadership and faithful pastoral work it has become a self-supporting parish, increasing in numbers from 203 communicants to 490. He also had an active part in the founding and development of St. John's Church, Phoenix and during his charge of that parish the present church building was erected. He became assistant secretary of the diocese in 1912 and in 1916 was elected secretary. He filled this office with great efficiency, issuing the convention journal with a promptness never before approximated. He was a forceful speaker, a staunch and loyal churchman, highly respected and greatly beloved. His death came in the prime of life, after a five days' illness of pneumonia. He leaves a wife and daughter.

May 4 to Be "Employment Sunday"

The United States Employment Service has requested that Sunday, May 4 (the Second Sunday after Easter), be observed as "Employment Sunday" by the churches and that the clergy from their pulpits urge employers to register their needs for help with the service or its bureaus for returning soldiers and sailors. The Methodist Church through the Joint Centenary committee and the General War-time Commission has promised co-operation. More than a third of the men discharged from the service leave without prospects of a position. The Employment Service is placing 80 per cent. of these in jobs.

Montgomery Parish Growing Fast

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA.—One hundred and seventeen new communicants have been received into St. John's Church, the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, rector, either by transference or by Confirmation since September.

BP. GUERRY SAYS SOLDIERS DON'T WANT RENTED PEWS

Charleston Welcomes Its Bishop on Return from France

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.—"The American soldiers are coming back from Europe more loyal to their home churches than before they went away, but they will expect, as they have a right to do, that their churches shall be the home and exponent of democracy in both policy and practice," said Bishop Guerry at the joint service of the Charleston churches at St. Paul's Church recently. "No exclusive narrow or aristocratic church, catering to only one class, will be tolerated by these men who have been fighting for democracy. Neither will a church having rented pews appeal to them, for they will not wait several minutes at the door to be seated in some nook or corner and then be made to feel uncomfortable by the attitude of the Christian sitting beside them."

Bishop Guerry was given an enthusiastic welcome, a congregation which practically filled the church having gathered to hear him relate some of his experiences while serving as a special preacher and lecturer under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. in Europe. The rectors of the various churches joined in the service.

Bishop Guerry referred in his address to the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, formerly assistant rector of St. Michael's Church, this city, who was serving as chaplain with an American regiment. His action in volunteering to go under shell fire to assist a brother chaplain in administering to the wounded and dying caused his colonel to cite him for bravery.

Bishop Lawrence Writes Memorial Service

BOSTON.—Acting on the suggestion of General Edwards that Sunday, April 27, be a day for the commemoration in the churches of those who have died in the war, Bishop Lawrence has set forth a special service for the Episcopal churches on that day.

Women Work for Good Housing

PHILADELPHIA. — The Churchwoman's Housing Committee of Philadelphia has called a mass meeting for April 23 to consider the bad housing conditions within the city limits. The meeting will be held at Holy Trinity Parish House in the afternoon. This committee is composed of Roman Catholic women, Jewish women, Episcopalians, Unitarians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Friends, Moravians, Presbyterians, Methodists and others. It was formed as the result of a meeting called by the Churchwomen's Association. Some seventy women have signed up as investigators and are working under the Housing Association director. The committee is planning for a hearing at City Hall when they will present some facts to the city authorities and appeal for better conditions. An open forum has also grown out of the meetings of the Churchwomen's Association. At the last meeting of the association the Charter Revision Bill now pending in the legislature was the subject of study.

BROOKLYN MORALLY WORSE THAN TEN YEARS AGO

Dr. Manning Favors Sunday Baseball Provided Church Comes First

BROOKLYN.—At a meeting held recently at the club house of the National League for Woman's Service here Mrs. E. A. Quin, president of the women's board of the Brooklyn City Mission Society, declared that moral conditions in Brooklyn are worse today, than they have been in ten years; she stated that 600 girls were "lost" every year in New York City, in addition to hundreds from out of town. Some of the immediate causes in Brooklyn she said, were a certain class of sailors from the United States navy, who appear to have no sense of manhood, and think moral obliquity part of a sailor's make-up.

The speaker strongly condemned the attitude of the naval authorities, who, she declared, appear to treat immorality among sailors as a thing to be condoned. "Our navy must take a different attitude in this matter if immorality is to be fought successfully," she continued. The meeting was also addressed by Dr. Manning, who is the founder of the Church Mission of Help in New York and the Rev. J. H. Melish.

Dr. Manning laid emphasis on the need of good, healthful, recreation as an essential to the proper development of our youths, and went on record, as favoring Sunday baseball, provided the church services of the sabbath day were attended.

Mr. Melish among other interesting truths said small wages, and unsatisfactory industrial conditions are responsible for a large number of moral lapses among young women.

BISHOP'S SON IS DECORATED

Chaplain J. B. McCormick Receives French Cross with Silver Star

The Rev. John Brian McCormick, son of Bishop McCormick, regimental chaplain in the A. E. F. has been decorated with the Croix de Guerre by Marshal Petain for gallant work in action during the fighting in the Champagne region last fall.

In a letter to his mother the young chaplain tells of the ceremonies accompanying the bestowal of the decoration but of his work at the front he writes not a word.

It is known however that last summer while with the 15th Artillery in the Soissons sector Chaplain McCormick buried the American dead, daily, often under shellfire, and aided greatly in identifying the dead in advanced positions.

"It may interest you to know," he writes, "that I have received my decoration of Croix de Guerre and was fortunate in getting one with a silver star. A plain one is a regimental citation, one with a bronze star is a brigade, and a silver star is a division citation. This was the best thing that was given as they were for work in the Champagne (Battle of Blanc Mont Ridge, October 2 to 12) and we were acting as a separate division of shock troops for the Fourth French army.

"The ceremony was the first I have ever seen and was very thrilling. My citation came from Marshal Petain. There were several other officers in the regiment who received crosses and a couple of others got silver stars and of course the regiment made a great fuss about it. What pleases me most was that my orderly got one.

CHAPLAIN McCORMICK

When I heard I was to get mine I said to the colonel that if I were entitled to it, so was my orderly, because he went everywhere with me and stuck to me like a coach dog—and sure enough he was cited and got his cross at the same time. I was surely pleased."

A Notable Confirmation Class

The Bishop of South Carolina visited Grace Church, Charleston, the Rev. William Way, rector, the fifth Sunday in Lent and administered the rite of Confirmation to a class of thirty-six. In the class were representatives from the Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Christian and Roman Catholic churches.

A Misleading Statement

ALEXANDRIA, VIRGINIA.—Many have seen a statement which appeared in several of the church papers recently on account of a proposed memorial for Lieutenant Harold Colthurst Mills, in which it was said:

"Among all the undergraduate students who went into the war from the divinity schools of the Episcopal Church it fell to one only to give up his life on the field of battle. That one was Harold Colthurst Mills."

This statement needs correction to this extent that Lieutenant Edward Howard Prince, B.A., an undergraduate of the Virginia Theological Seminary, a member of the class of 1918, was killed while leading his men in a charge against German trenches near the Meuse River on September 29, 1918, and was buried in the Meuse Valley the next day.

BISHOP OLMSTED OPPOSES REDISTRIBUTION OF DIOCESES

Says That Most Onerous Diocese Will Fall to Oldest Bishop

At the recent conference of the diocesan committees and of the bishops of the state of New York it was decided to place before all diocesan conventions the matter of redistribution of the dioceses of the state. The idea has met with a decided opposition from Bishop Olmsted, of the Diocese of Central New York, which, under the plan to be discussed, will be the diocese most largely affected. There will be much interest among those interested, therefore, when the bishop's views are published in an editorial to appear in the next issue of the Gospel Messenger, the official organ of this diocese. Part of this editorial is as follows:

"The committee appointed to consider and suggest a plan for the redistribution of the dioceses of New York, met in the latter part of January, at the residence of the Bishop of Albany. Both the Bishops of Central New York were present, and a fair representation of clergy. After much discussion and debate, a plan was decided on which had been prepared, sketched on a map and hung up on the wall for observation, according to which there were seven dioceses in the state, instead of five, as they now exist, and these were New York, Albany, Utica, Syracuse, Watertown, Rochester and Buffalo. That sounds very well, and of course, it is quite proper that those should be the cities of the new diocese; but when the counties attached to these cities come to be considered, what a mess it would make for poor Utica!

"But the Bishop of Central New York is less and less pleased with the plan as time goes on, and is quite decided in opposition to it. His home is in Utica, and of course, it is expected that he will be the bishop of this proposed new diocese, which includes that city. But when one reflects that such a proposition would be the putting of the hardest and most difficult diocese of all into the charge of the oldest bishop; taking from him thirteen of the fourteen counties over which he now presides and putting upon him the charge of those large and difficult portions of the Diocese of Albany, of which the much younger Bishop of Albany wishes to be relieved—it will readily be seen that he will be compelled to resign altogether, or else to choose the Diocese of Syracuse, which is now under his jurisdiction, together with Oneida County. Neither of these would be really satisfactory under the circumstances, and Bishop Olmsted hopes that the diocesan convention will not consent to the plan proposed, but will call for a fresh consideration of the matter."

Archdeacon's Ford Stolen

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—While the archdeacon of Queens and Nassau was assisting in a service at Roosevelt, his Ford automobile was stolen from in front of the church, which leads to the thought that "even the clergy must have their Fords insured if they would guard against the chances of the world."

PHILADELPHIA MINUTE MEN CONDEMN MILITARY TRAINING

Urge That No Units Be Allowed in Public Schools

PHILADELPHIA—The Minute Men Association of Pennsylvania have passed strong resolutions condemning the establishment of units of military training in the public schools. The resolutions follow:

WHEREAS, A statement appearing in the Public Ledger of April 2, 1919, conveys the following information:

CATHOLIC PUPILS GET ARMY UNITS NONE FOR GARBER

MILITARY TRAINING ALREADY UNDER WAY IN TWO SCHOOLS. . . . STUDENTS TO HAVE UNIFORMS AND GUNS FURNISHED BY GOVERNMENT.

The installation of the training unit in the West Philadelphia Catholic High School comes as the direct result of an appeal by the military authorities to Archbishop Dougherty for permission to establish the unit in the school, according to the Rev. Walter C. Tredtin, principal. Mr. Garber steadfastly maintaining that military training is not desirable in local public schools; and

WHEREAS, The whole world has stood aghast at the appalling devastation that has so recently been brought about, consuming millions of our sturdiest men, to say nothing of the untold billions of wealth that has been destroyed, causing agony, distress and grief that can never be assuaged, unsettling the nations of the earth, leaving in its wake a reactionary force which threatens to destroy the fundamental principles of all orderly governments and establish chaos; all of this as a direct result of militarism; and

WHEREAS, It has been proclaimed that America's participation in the war was for the purpose of establishing a world democracy; and, through a league of nations, reduce the possibilities of future wars to the minimum, calling for the disarmament of all nations; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That we, the officers and executive committee of The Minute Men Association, representing more than thirty-eight thousand voters and citizens in Pennsylvania, do most earnestly protest, against the introduction of military training into our schools, either public or private; and especially do we protest against arming and equipping any sectarian or denominational institution of any character, believing it to be a future menace to the peace and welfare of our great republic, and decidedly inconsistent and out of harmony with the proposals now being urged by the peace conference, and contrary to the expressed views of our delegates who are participating therein; and be it further

RESOLVED, That we call upon President Woodrow Wilson, commander in chief of our army and navy; and Secretary of War Newton D. Baker, to immediately disarm and disband all military organizations not under the immediate supervision and control of the United States Government; and that we urge them to initiate such legislation as will prevent any group of peoples, whether they be Sinn Fein, Bolshevik or kindred organizations, from forming any military unit, or arming and equipping the same, and that all military training shall be solely under the direction, supervision and control of the United States Government; and be it finally

RESOLVED, That copies of these resolutions be immediately forwarded to President Wilson and to Secretary of War Baker, and to all patriotic orders and societies, and to the public press; the same to be spread upon the minutes of this association, this fifth day of April, A. D., 1919.

SHALL THEY DRINK IN CHINA?

Ask Congress to Declare Americans in China Under War Prohibition

The Pastors' Federation of the national capital, on March 31, joined the International Reform Bureau in petitioning Congress to embody in the Prohibition Enforcement Act a recognition of the fact that all Americans in China, being subject to all American national laws under territoriality, are subject to national prohibition when it goes into effect on July 1, and triable in the American court in China. It was recalled that the American Court in Shanghai a few years ago summoned American prostitutes who had made the name "American Women" odious, and put them out of business; also that American doctors in China are held to be under our national drug law—both fitting precedents for reminding American brewers they can not make and sell in China a vice-promoting drink whose manufacture and sale are forbidden in the United States.

Reception to Mark Centennial

In connection with the celebration of the centennial of the General Theological Seminary, Judge and Mrs. Samuel Seabury will give a reception on Thursday afternoon, May 1, from three o'clock until six to the alumni and the visiting clergy in honor of the late professors, Dr. W. J. Seabury and Dr. Thomas Richey. Dr. Seabury was Judge Seabury's father and Dr. Richey was Mrs. Seabury's father.

Memorial for Salem Rector

SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS—Members of the vestry and other parishioners of the late Rev. James Potter Franks, for forty-seven years rector of Grace Church here, are planning to raise a fund for a memorial. The nature of the memorial will be largely determined by the amount of money that is contributed to the fund. Dr. Franks died on the Feast of the Annunciation, 1917. In July, 1920 he would have completed fifty years as rector of Grace Church.

Intercession for Missions

March 26 was widely kept as the special day of intercession for domestic missions in accordance with the plan of the Board of Missions made at its last meeting. April 30, the last Wednesday in April, will be observed as a day of special prayer for work in the Latin American field, and May 28 as a day of special prayer for foreign missions. Leaflets with suggestions for these days are available on application at the Church Missions House.

CHAPLAIN TUCKER D. S. C. BACK FROM FRANCE TELLS OF WAR

His Father and Two Brothers Are in the Ministry

The Rev. Royal Tucker, formerly captain chaplain of the 102nd Ammunition Train, whose citation for gallantry in action and consequent decoration has been noted in THE CHURCHMAN, has received his discharge from the service. He is giving a series of lectures on the experiences of a chaplain in the A. E. F. His present address is 2075 Dearborn Street, Mobile, Alabama.

Chaplain Tucker was commissioned in March, 1917, as chaplain of the 2nd New York Infantry and remained with this unit when the 2nd and the 71st were merged into the 105th U. S. A. He went with the 105th to France in May, 1918, and saw service in Belgium and Flanders. He was with his regiment in the attacks on Mount Kemmel and Vierstadt Ridge and at the battle of Guillaumont Farm. It was during the latter battle that he won his D. S. C. for bringing in wounded under fire. In October he was transferred to the 102nd Ammunition Train stationed at Verdun.

Since his return Chaplain Tucker has made several addresses recounting his experiences with the A. E. F., using them as a prelude to an appeal for a continuation of the unity, unselfishness and energy which the nation exhibited under the urge of the war. He believes that the world is at the crossroads, leading on the one hand to peaceful progress under the present social system and on the other to an overturning of the whole social order and the forming of a new one. The whole world is looking to the United States for leadership, says Chaplain Tucker, and if the Church will seize its opportunity "we will put the Cross of Christ on the staff of the American flag and in the spirit of that emblem lead the world into a new and a higher life."

BROTHER OF REV. IRWIN TUCKER

Chaplain Tucker's brother is the Rev. Irwin S. Tucker who has recently been sentenced to twenty years at Fort Leavenworth for violation of the Espionage Act in obstructing the draft. Mr. Tucker was convicted on the strength of a pamphlet written and published before the Espionage Act was passed and withdrawn from publication when the law was passed. The jury at the trial was charged not to consider the intent and purpose but only the extracts quoted from the pamphlet and their possible effect in influencing any man against the draft.

The Rev. Irwin Tucker is a graduate of the General Theological Seminary and a priest of the Diocese of New York. He was assistant at St. Mark's in the Bowdrie for some time and later editor of the Christian Socialist.

FATHER AND THREE SONS IN MINISTRY

The Rev. G. C. Tucker, the rector for thirty-five years of St. John's Church, Mobile, Alabama, is the father of the "Socialist Priest" as Mr. Tucker has styled himself and of Chaplain Tucker. The Rev. G. L. Tucker, traveling secretary of the General Board of Religious Education, is a third brother.

SECRETARY DANIELS BIDS NAVY OBSERVE SUNDAY

No Secular Work to Be Done Aboard Any Ship

The following order, just issued by Secretary Daniels, has been sent to THE CHURCHMAN by the War Commission:

In order to insure a proper observance of the Lord's Day in the navy of the United States, and to provide the officers and men with rest and recreation so essential to efficiency, the following order will be carried out:

Hereafter all commanding officers and others officially concerned will see to it that aboard ships and on shore stations to which they are attached, no work of any character whatsoever is performed except works of necessity. This order will be construed as embracing target practice and drills of every character, inspection of ship and crew, clothing inspection, issuing of small stores, and all other ship activities that violate the letter and spirit of this order.

No vessel of the navy shall begin a cruise on Sunday except in case of emergency.

In order to insure the regular performance of divine services aboard, the vessels of the U. S. navy, and at shore stations, it is further ordered that in no instance shall secular work be allowed to interfere with the holding of divine services, and that every possible assistance and encouragement be given our chaplains in the conduct of such services. A suitable compartment or room shall be designated for this purpose, and properly rigged for the occasion, and orderly quiet be maintained throughout the ship during divine services. The ship's band shall always be made available for use at divine service.

When there is no chaplain attached to his ship or station, the commanding officer will arrange for and give every possible assistance to any naval chaplain in squadron, or adjacent, or available who might be able to come aboard for such purpose. In case it is impossible to secure the services of a regular navy chaplain, it is directed that commanding officers, when practicable, invite competent clergymen from ashore to come aboard and conduct religious services.

DEACONESS DIES IN FRANCE

Deaconess Knight of Eastern Oregon Was in Y. M. C. A. Service

Word has just been received of the death from pneumonia in France of Deaconess Alice J. Knight who was serving with the Y. M. C. A. Deaconess Knight spent many years as the parish deaconess in the Church of the Holy Apostles, New York, where she was greatly beloved. Thence she went to Eastern Oregon. The Rev. Upton H. Gibbs, of Estacada, Oregon, writes as follows of Deaconess Knight and her ministry.

As one of the clergy with whom she was intimately associated while in Eastern Oregon, I beg the opportunity of writing a tribute to her work and memory. When Bishop Paddock came to the district he soon afterwards offered her work. She had been one of his workers in the Church of the Holy Apostles, New York City, of which he was rector when chosen bishop. For about eight years Deaconess Knight worked most faithfully in the district. She was the bishop's right hand, acted as his secretary and did missionary work throughout the district. No clergyman worked harder or more faithfully than she did. Her itineraries were such as to tax the strength of a man, but she persevered undaunted.

The pay of a deaconess is far below that of a clergyman, so for real self sacrifice Deaconess Knight lead the district. She had some very discouraging experiences, the environment was uncongenial, nor did she ever get entirely used to western ways. Yet she gladly did her part uncomplainingly. After leaving the district, she went back to New York where she remained until the war broke out. After persistent effort to be appointed for war work, she was accepted for canteen work in France. After the armistice was signed she was transferred to the educational department of the Y. M. C. A. and was engaged in delivering lectures at various camps. Only a week before the cablegram was received announcing her death, a letter was received by Bishop Paddock's sister from her telling of her work and the pleasure it gave her. No further particulars have been learned.

DR. CRAM SAYS WE MUST TURN TO OLD THEOLOGY

Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, lecturing in Philadelphia at the Church House last week, said that Church unity could be attained only on the basis of the sacramental religion of the Middle Ages. "We have had no real philosophy of life since the Reformation," he said, "... because we have no philosophy we fool with mechanical schemes which will never work because they do not strike at the root of the matter The first step toward reunion is for the Protestant Episcopal Church to accept the straight Catholic doctrines of the seven sacraments with mass both as a communion and a sacrifice, and sacrifice as the chief controlling feature, and having transubstantiation as the only perfect and sufficient expression of the presence of Christ in the holy sacrament of the altar."

Conferences on Healing Held

The churches of Hoboken combined their choirs and congregations at St. Paul's Church on a recent Wednesday evening for a conference on the ministry of healing, by Rev. Henry B. Wilson, rector of St. John's, Boonton, and director of the Society of the Nazarene. As a result, intercessions for the sick are being introduced among guild members. Following similar work consisting of a sermon and a conference at St. Paul's Church, Englewood, a large group of intercessors has been organized and prayers for the sick are held regularly. At these group meetings a short conference is held upon some aspect of the healing ministry. Groups of this character have been organized recently in many parishes in the South and West.

ST. LOUIS CATHEDRAL WILL CELEBRATE CENTENARY

Plans to Mark Anniversary Laid at Supper at Club

ST. LOUIS.—All Saints' Day, 1919, will mark the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Christ Church, now the cathedral, in St. Louis. This was the parish church of the first Protestant Episcopal parish organized west of the Mississippi River. It is felt that the entry of the Church into the vast territory then known as the Louisiana Purchase is an event of national significance, and it is proposed to celebrate the centennial in a manner worthy of the event. Not only the Diocese of Missouri, but the Church throughout the United States will be interested in arranging for the celebration. St. Louis was the see city of the first missionary bishop ever sent out by the Church, Jackson Kemper, whose title was Bishop of Missouri, and whose field was "all out doors."

As a first step toward making plans for the centennial of the cathedral upwards of one hundred churchmen and women gathered as the guests of a member of the cathedral chapter for supper at the St. Louis Club, on April 12. After supper, Dean Davis introduced Bishop Tuttle, and asked him to preside. Bishop Tuttle made a felicitous speech, and then introduced Mr. James A. Waterworth, prominent business man of the city, and senior warden of the parish. Mr. Waterworth told of the early days of the Church and the parish, and showed how, from the first, the parish had been closely identified with the life of the city and of Missouri. Among the founders were men who were conspicuous in laying the foundation stones of the new commonwealth. Mr. Waterworth's paper was illuminating, and gave to the younger members of the company, especially, an insight into the history of the Church in Missouri which was new to them. Brief remarks were called for, and were made by Dr. Phillips, of St. Peter's, Dean Davis, the bishop coadjutor, the Rev. John Boden, of Holy Communion Parish, Mr. Walter Robbins, of St. George's Parish, who is just released from important government duties, and the Rev. John H. Lever, missionary to the city institutions. A committee of one hundred was formed to take into consideration plans for an adequate celebration of the cathedral's centennial some time in the month of November.

An Unspiritual Church

MUNCIE, INDIANA.—Grace Church (the Rev. M. M. Day, rector) has recently taken part in a general "revival" of the churches of the county. Services were held during a period of three weeks, the preachers being the Rev. W. R. Plummer, of St. Paul's Church, Evansville; the Rev. Dr. J. E. S. Perry, of St. John's Church, Lafayette, and the Rev. Charles H. Young, of Christ Church, Woodlawn, Chicago. It is too early to judge of results, but the participation of the Church in the revival drew forth from a lady at a prayer meeting in another church a thanksgiving to God that the Episcopal Church, "which, as you know, O God, is so unspiritual, is to take part in this great effort."

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

Holy Week and Easter Services—Although the early part of Holy Week was damp and rainy, Good Friday, Easter Even and Easter were glorious sunny days in New York, and the churches and streets were thronged. The newspapers assured us that Easter was kept in the pre-war spirit of lavish spending for clothes and flowers. It is quite certain that the crowds in the "Easter parade" — which, by the way, is no longer limited to Fifth Avenue but is equally gay on Park Avenue and Grand Street,—seemed as carefree as ever. The Victory Loan decorations added a note of festivity to the scene. In the churches, however, it seemed to the writer that there was a more sober spirit, less profusion of flowers, and a more marked atmosphere of solemnity. At the cathedral the greatest crowds in its history were packed into the unfinished crossing. The crying need for the nave was abundantly demonstrated. Three thousand people were somehow accommodated in the morning and again at the beautiful festival service in the afternoon. They sat on the pulpit steps, the steps of the ambulatory, in the choir, in every available nook and cranny. The offerings which are for the support of the cathedral service, were also larger than ever before, and there were more Communion services made than at any previous Easter service. As usual the popular downtown churches, Grace, Trinity, St. Bartholemew's, St. Thomas's, the Heavenly Rest, were packed to the doors with their own parishioners and with the transients from the hotels eager to take part in a New York service on Easter Day. At the Church of the Transfiguration five new memorials were dedicated on Easter.

Holy Week At the Cathedral—The special devotional services at the New York cathedral, at which the preachers were distinguished ministers of other communions in New York City, were in every respect inspiring and impressive. The services were held in the nave and larger congregations attended than have ever before been attracted to the cathedral lenten services. It is interesting to note that the pulpit in which these preachers stood to deliver their messages was a gift of a Presbyterian, Mrs. Russell Sage. Nothing was said in these sermons to do violence to the faith of the listener. In every case the message was strongly evangelical, orthodox to a degree and glowingly loyal to our Lord and Master Jesus Christ. It was a privilege to hear these men. It was good to see them stand in the pulpit which is more and more becoming what Bishop Potter hoped to make it, the focal point of Protestant Christianity in the largest city in the world.

Two Memorial Services Planned—Next Sunday there will be a special memorial service at the cathedral for the men of the 7th Regiment. Since the seats in the interior of the cathedral will be limited to the relatives of the men who have been killed, services out of doors on the nave foundations are being arranged for the public.

At the same hour a service for Squadron A, New York Guard, has been arranged at St. James' Church by the honorary chaplain, Dr. Crowder.

Death of Rector's Wife—On April 18 Mrs. Hugh Hobson, the wife of the rector of St. John's Church, Ellenville, died at the rectory. The burial service was on Tuesday in Easter Week.

Annual Cathedral League Meeting—The annual meeting of the Cathedral League of the diocese will be held on May 3, Saturday, at half after three o'clock. Bishop Greer, who has always taken a great interest in the league, will preside. Dean Robbins and Dr. Cram will speak. Dr. Cram will describe the plans for the nave and will illustrate his address with lantern slides. The Cathedral League has devoted itself for many years to the task of raising money for the building of the cathedral.

Church Club to Meet—The monthly meeting of the Church Club will be devoted to a consideration of the plans for the Every Member Campaign planned for New York for next autumn. The meeting begins with the annual business meeting and election of officers at eight o'clock on Wednesday evening, April 30. After the business meeting, Dr. Patton and Mr. Stephen Baker will describe the plans for the campaign which of course, assumes greater importance in view of the Nation-Wide Campaign announced by Bishop Lloyd in THE CHURCHMAN last week.

St. James' In The Bronx Is Also Growing—I said recently that St. James' Church, Manhattan, was developing so well and told of the remarkable confirmation class presented by the rector. Now I learn that St. James', Fordham, can have the same said of it. The recent confirmation class numbered sixty-four, twenty of them adults from other communions. At the early Communion service the following Sunday, there were 160 present and on Palm Sunday, 60 were on hand. The church is always well filled at eleven and at four. St. James' is an old parish. The sixty-fifth anniversary was celebrated last autumn. For more than fifty years the beautiful stone church and parish building have been a landmark in Fordham. Dr. Dewitt L. Pelton has been rector for twelve years. Now that the Jerome Avenue branch of the Lexington Avenue subway has been completed, the population in Fordham is increasing rapidly.

Canteen Supper Postponed—The canteen supper which was planned in order to enlist the younger war workers in church work, has, for various reasons, been postponed until the autumn.

Woodberry Langdon Dead—On Easter Day Woodberry G. Langdon, Esq., died. Mr. Langdon was for a long time treasurer of the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee. He was a member of the Parish of the Incarnation. A noted philanthropist, he devoted his life to the furtherance of many good causes.

For the Attention of Social Service Commissions—The neighborhood kitchen just celebrating its first birthday. A year ago, when food prices, especially the price of milk, began to soar beyond the reach of many household budgets, the Cathedral Food Group eagerly caught at the suggestion made by social workers and trained dietitians that it start a "Liberty Milk Shop," where the food values of milk could be demonstrated and taught to groups of women with little children who must be nourished at all costs. No. 305 Harrison Avenue, the Liberty Milk Shop of last summer, the Neighborhood Kitchen of today, is the experiment which is one small attempt to solve the problem of making the world safe for little folk at least. During the year gallons of soup, dozens of custards, and many another nourishing dish went out to family after family. Today it is experimenting especially upon the children who are under-nourished, seeing what a fortnight of good lunches will do toward bringing up their weight to normal. It is also showing what can be done in the way of simple hot luncheons in the neighborhood factories. Its committee has under consideration further projects of home training for mothers, of more demonstration classes in the kitchen, of other groups of children to feed and interest in their own health problem. So far the kitchen has been financed wholly by private subscription and the funds of the Cathedral Service Unit in whose budget of last year it had an important place.

PITTSBURGH

Memorial Service. On Sunday afternoon, April 6, in St. Peter's Church, Pittsburgh, a memorial service was held in behalf of the Rev. Dr. John R. Wightman, late chaplain of the Laymen's Missionary League, which was attended by many members of the congregations to whom the league ministers as well as his friends throughout the city. About a dozen clergymen were present, and the league attendees in a body. After a very brief service, short addresses interspersed with appropriate hymns, were made by the bishop of the diocese, the president of the league and others.

Missions. During Passion Week missions were held in two adjacent parishes, Calvary and St. James' Memorial, Pittsburgh. In the former there were two lay evangelists of the Church, Edward Mercer and Thomas Farmer; and in the latter the preacher was the Rev. J. J. D. Hall, of Galilee Mission, Philadelphia. The services throughout the week were well attended, and on the closing Sunday night overflowing congregations greeted the missionaries.

Holy Week. During Holy Week there were services daily in nearly all the city churches, with celebrations of the Holy Communion in several of the parishes on the night of Maundy Thursday, and on Good Friday, the Three Hour Service in a considerable number of churches. In the Church of the Ascension the addresses at this service were made by Bishop Whitehead.

WEST VIRGINIA

Appointment of Secretary. The bishop has appointed the Rev. R. E. L. Strider, of St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, secretary of the diocese in the place of the Rev. W. J. Meyers recently removed. All mail intended for the secretary should be addressed to him.

Easter Offering. St. Matthew's church, Wheeling, is making an earnest endeavor to wipe out an indebtedness of almost $3,000 at the Easter offering preparatory to the celebration of the centennial of the parish in May.

INDIANAPOLIS

Mission Study Class. On the Monday evenings during Lent there has been held at Christ Church, Indianapolis, a normal mission study class for young women who are employed during the day. The class has been under the leadership of Miss Alexander, of Detroit, who is temporarily residing in Indianapolis, and has been well attended. This is the first step in a plan of the president of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary to organize a Young Women's Auxiliary.

Bishop's Bible Class. On the Friday mornings during Lent, under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, the bishop has conducted a Bible class for women on the Gospel of St. John. The attendance has been exceedingly good and keen interest has been manifested. The class was not restricted to our own church people but had a considerable representation from several other churches.

ALASKA

Allakaket, March 7. Mr. Drane arrived from Tanana on February 25 to visit us, as Archdeacon Stuck was unable to come. This is the first visit we have had from a priest since November, 1917, when the archdeacon visited us on his way to the Kobuck and Point Hope. There were not many of our natives here when Mr. Drane arrived as they had all gone out on their hunting grounds, but those who were home were delighted at the opportunity to receive the Holy Communion again. While here Mr. Drane not only celebrated the Holy Communion for us and gave us services, but most kindly mended our stove in the church. It was in sore need of attention. Also, he almost fell through the one weak spot in the church floor which is in need of repairs. Our village has been unusually well. This last year we had no death in the village and had nine births, among them twin girls to Kobuck (Eskimo) parents. These are still living, quite a curiosity to our natives as they have generally had the idea that twins never lived!

During this winter we have had an average of thirty-two Indian and Eskimo children in our school daily. The winter has been mild. We had some cold days, the thermometer dropping to 69 degrees below zero, but the cold was not continuous. Miss Koster, the nurse here, made a trip to the South Fork village to treat a sick native, about the middle of December. She stayed three days, the patient responded to the treatment, and is now perfectly well again.

Meeting at Ogdensburg. A most enthusiastic and inspiring meeting of the Archdeaconry of Ogdensburg assembled at Ogdensburg, on April 17-18, when the clergy and laity were the guests of St. John's Parish. The attendance at this meeting was the largest in the history of the archdeaconry, all but one of the fourteen of the clergy being present, together with thirty laymen. As a result of the discussion of the proposed re-delineation of the state into new dioceses, a resolution was adopted, placing the archdeaconry on record as opposed to the plan which would take two of the present counties and join them with Lewis and Jefferson counties to form a Diocese of Watertown. Discussion followed of a plan reported upon favorably to the diocesan convention of 1916 by which a Diocese of Northern New York is proposed, with the present Archdeaconry of Ogdensburg as the nucleus. No further steps have been taken in this direction up to this time on account of war conditions, but the plan was revived at this meeting and a committee of laymen was appointed to consider the raising of an adequate endowment for such a diocese.

The following officers were elected: archdeacon, the Ven. Walter H. Larom, who succeeds himself; secretary, the Rev. W. W. Silliman of Malone; treasurer, the Rev. W. J. Hamilton of Potsdam. The same members as heretofore were nominated to the diocesan convention to serve as representatives of the archdeaconry on the Board of Missions and the Board of Religious Education.

WASHINGTON

Call Sent Out to Reform the Capital.

As the national capital comes out of the war, the Diocesan Board of Social Service has sent a letter to all of the clergy and social workers of the diocese, emphasizing the duty and obligations of the Church and its members to the community, and summoning them to welfare work for the reformation of social abuses in the national capital. In connection with this, they have given the reasons for the closing down of Satterlee House and the transfer of all social service activities to the new centre at Trinity Church in the centre of the city. The following is part of the letter that has been sent out:

The Diocesan Board of Social Service, after protracted investigation and careful consideration, decided early in January to close Satterlee House, because the work we undertook to do there had been accomplished, and Glick's Alley had become a decent section. Therefore we did not feel justified in the continued expenditure of money in the undertaking, especially as all alley houses in Washington will be destroyed before long under the provisions of an act of Congress.

It is not, however, the purpose of the Board to abandon neighborhood and welfare work, but to concentrate our endeavors at the new diocesan social service centre, Trinity Church, Third and C Sts., N. W. . . .

Trinity is not only in the heart of the city, but its neighborhood has become one full of social and community problems, with scant local resources for their solution. Therefore it calls for the concentrated strength and effort of the diocese, and of the good people of the District of Columbia, to keep it from becoming a plague spot, but rather to make it a fountain of light and health for the whole city. . . .

Our aim is to help to establish justice and love in all human relations in this city. These great principles and balms fail in many quarters in our beautiful capital. As war work decreases our people must turn their thoughts and energies in generous measure to helping our Church to fulfill her mission to this community, and in particular her call here to be salt, light and heaven, and to make the national city wholesome to the core.

LONG ISLAND

Archdeaconry News.—St. Philip's Church for colored people, Brooklyn, is to be consecrated on the patronal festival, May 1. The occasion will be marked by an eight-days celebration, the program of which has been arranged by the priest-in-charge, the Rev. N. Peterson Boyd, D. D.

The Rev. F. C. Stevens a year and a half ago took charge of two missions in Brooklyn, St. Alban's, and St. Simon's. Under his care conditions improved so that it became possible to put a priest in charge of each. The Rev. Mr. Stevens has retained charge of St. Alban's, and the archdeacon will shortly appoint another clergyman to St. Simon's.

Church Charity Foundation Campaign Goes Over the Top.—Subscriptions announced on Wednesday, April 16, the last day of the Church Charity Foundation drive for one half million dollars, showed the amount to be $514,513.49. One of the large gifts announced was from Mrs. Walter Gibb, who contributed $75,000 to erect a chapel in memory of her husband, and $10,000 to be expended as an endowment for a room in the new hospital, in honor of her two grandchildren. There were many other large individual subscriptions.

Death of the Rev. W. A. Wasson.—The Rev. W. A. Wasson of Riverhead, died, on April 5, at St. John's hospital, Brooklyn, following a recent operation. Mr. Wasson was rector of Grace Church, Riverhead, from 1902 to 1910, resigning for the purpose of giving his time to speaking and writing against prohibition.

Mr. Wasson is survived by a widow, four sons and two brothers, the Rev. James B. Wasson of Manhattan, and the Rev. Edward Wasson of Jersey City. Funeral services were held on April 8 from the Church of the Good Shepherd, Brooklyn.

Woman's Auxiliary.—At St. John's Church, Flushing, a canvass of the parish for members for St. John's branch of the Woman's Auxiliary is being made and it is hoped there will be at least 200 contributing members before June 1.

Permanent Memorials.—The Rev. Charles E. Cragg, rector of St. John's Church, Huntington, announces with joy and satisfaction, that their church is to have permanent memorials of this year of great events. Probably by Palm Sunday, the anniversary of the opening of the church, the new rood screen given by one of the vestry, as a thanksgiving for victory and peace, will be in its place, and a beautiful litany desk, a gift and thank-offering for the recovery and safety of one of the young men of the congregation, will also be placed. In May, the new reredos given by a generous parishioner, will make the chancel one of the most beautiful on the whole island.

Call to Service Meeting.—About 300 women, many of them from long distances out, about thirty of the clergy and a brilliant array of speakers, made the meeting (in spite of the day, Friday, March 28), held at Memorial Hall, Y. W. C. A., a notable one. The bishop of Long Island presided and the speakers all having the one aim, showed what can be done for the world through the Church, now that the war activities are slackening.

The need for surgical dressings and hospital garments in our own hospitals, those of the South, and those of the mission fields, was presented, the need for automobile service, to take the aged, the blind, the invalid for an occasional ride, the need for workers in the mission fields or work here in Brooklyn, for the Italians, for the colored people, for church extension. All were clearly put before this assemblage of women, many of whom had come prepared to heed the cry, "don't quit" and who were shown that although the "picturesqueness has gone out and the heroes have evaporated, the real thing remains."

Floral Park.—An interesting service was held recently at St. Elizabeth's Church, Floral Park, when the altar presented by St. George's Church, Hempstead, was rededicated by Archdeacon Duffield. The Rev. G. W. McMullin of Mineola conducted Evening Prayer, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. C. H. Snedeker, of Hempstead. The altar is a memorial of the late Rev. Dr. Moore, sometime rector of the parish.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Celebrates His Ninetieth Year.—On the Fourth Sunday in Lent, the Rev. Dr. William M. Beauchamp, preached at All Saints' Church, Syracuse, his first sermon delivered since he entered his ninetieth year. It was filled with reminiscences of the early history of the Church in Onondaga County. He said:

"The first Episcopalian Church to be erected in Onondaga County was the First Episcopal Church of Manlius, which still stands more than 100 years old. I was six years old when Bishop White, the first bishop this country ever had, died.

"The early church buildings here were different from those of the present. At a time now some sixty years gone by, the pulpits in Episcopal churches hereabouts were stuck up high on the wall like a swallow's nest and from that elevated perch the sermon was delivered. The preacher in those days was wont to change his vestments four times during a service and as a result the rector in the original St. Paul's in Syracuse made four journeys from the pulpit to the far end of the church and back. The first church in the diocese to have a recess chancel was built in Skaneateles.

"There were practically no evening services in those early days because there were no facilities for lighting churches. Later there were a few churches lighted by candles dimly burning; then came whale oil lamps and finally kerosene.

"The pews in those early churches were square and entered by a door. A table occupied the centre of the area inclosed by the pew walls and the seats ran all around all sides. The family occupied the pew together with a goodly array of foot stoves, which in winter were supplied to ward off the penetrating cold."

Dr. Beauchamp heads the clergy list of Central New York, but is still active and vigorous, often supplying the parishes of his younger brethren. He also continues to serve as an examining chaplain. He is a noted authority on Indian lore and archaeology. For the past few years he has been collecting the records of the early parishes of Syracuse and vicinity.

Japanese Life Described to G. F. S.—The Rev. Charles S. Sweet, of Tokyo, addressed the annual lenten meeting of the G. F. S. in Grace Church, Utica, on the missionary field in Japan. Mr. Sweet represents Grace Church in the missionary field, and many beside the members of the society gathered to hear his address.

Utica Clergyman President of City Rescue Mission.—At a recent meeting of the Utica Rescue Mission, Dr. Coley, rector of Calvary Church was elected president. He is also one of its trustees. The mission aims to lift up the fallen and assist them back to the path of virtue and manliness. Religious services are conducted nightly and on Sunday afternoons, to which men are especially invited. Visits are made to the jail of which the mission superintendent is chaplain. Religious papers and magazines, clothing, etc., are distributed. The Rescue Mission Sunday School aims to find entrance into homes that would otherwise be closed, where there is no church affiliation—perhaps, no thought of God.

Employees' Noon Day Meeting in Rome.—The Rev. Karl G. Heyne, curate of Zion Church gave a noon day talk to the employees of the Spargo Wire Works on the care of the teeth, throat and nose.

A Parish "Community Choir."—The Rev. R. H. Gesner has entered upon the fourteenth year of his rectorship at Christ Church, Oswego. One of the interesting features in the life of the parish is the meeting of the parish at intervals as a community choir. On these occasions the Men's Club quintet leads the music and the people furnish the chorus. On Sunday mornings the congregation sing hymns for fifteen minutes after service. The effect is most inspiring.

Institution of Rector.—The bishop will institute the Rev. S. R. MacEwan as rector of St. John's, Oneida, on the first Sunday in May.

To Gain Practical Experience.—The Rev. Henry Gibbs, missionary among the Onondaga Indians will have as his assistant Mr. Cecil Taylor, a postulant. Mr. Harold Kellogg, a candidate, will assist the Rev. Ray Wootton in Emmanuel Church, East Syracuse.

NEW MEXICO

Meeting of the Auxiliary.—The Dona Ana County branch of the Woman's Auxiliary held its semi-annual meeting at St. James' Church, Mesilla Park on March 28. The Holy Communion was celebrated at eleven o'clock by the Rev. C. S. Sargent of El Paso. Luncheon was served in the parish house by the ladies of the various missions forming the Dona Ana County branch. The business session followed. At the request of the president, Mrs. J. R. Livesay, who was unable to be present through the entire session, the district president Mrs. George Routledge presided. The chairman appointed a committee to draw up resolutions on the death of the son and daughter of Mrs. Livesay. Her daughter had died in the recent epidemic of influenza and her son lost his life on the battlefield of France.

A rising vote of unqualified appreciation was given the Rev. Hunter Lewis for his valiant work in and his untiring efforts on behalf of the many missions under his care. This action to be embodied in a letter to Mr. Lewis and was spread upon the minutes of the branch. The meeting adjourned to meet at St. John's, La Mesa in October.

Religious Institute Held.—Under the auspices of St. James' Church and the Federated Church (Presbyterian and Congregational) a religious institute was held in Fergus Falls three days beginning with Wednesday, March 26. The opening service was held in St. James' Church. The Rev. E. T. Ferry of the Federated Church read the lesson, the Rev. Dr. Verkyle of Chicago (Presbyterian) read the psalter, and the rector, the Rev. S. J. Hedelund, was in charge of the service. The Rev. G. G. Bennett, rector of St. Paul's Church, Minneapolis, preached a powerful sermon on the changed religious conditions since 1914. Thursday afternoon, the Rev. Mr. Bennett and Dr. Verkyle gave expert advice to the Sunday School teachers. That evening the Rev. Dr. Verkyle gave an address on the "Three Fold Boy" in the Federated Church, which was followed by an address by the Rev. Mr. Reynolds, a returned army chaplain. The Rev. Mr. Ferry was in charge of the service, and the Rev. S. J. Hedelund read the lesson and offered prayer.

SALINA

Combined Church and Parish House at Belleville. Our church people at Belleville are rejoicing over the completion of their church building which on Easter was used for public worship for the first time. The Rev. Mr. Maltas and the devoted people of Belleville are to be congratulated on bringing to pass a long wished for building. For a number of years lots, very suitably located, have been owned by the congregation which has been worshipping in a store building. The bishop was able to purchase a portable church once used at Camp Sherman. This has been erected, with a number of improvements added, and affords a convenient and commodious combined church and parish house. The people have worked with a will, and through the generosity of the American Church Building Fund who made a gift of $500, the building will be free of debt.

The Associate Mission. The Associate Mission, which conducts from Salina as a centre a large proportion of the missions of the district, now consists of five priests, one deacon and one candidate for holy orders. These men are all doing excellent work in maintaining services in our mission stations and in developing church life where they are assigned to minister. On May 1 the Rev. David H. Jones is to join the mission. Mr. Jones comes as the special representative of St. Martin's Church, Philadelphia, and his salary is paid by the Woman's Auxiliary of that parish. Through the co-operation of this splendid band of eastern church people the bishop is enabled to begin to develop plans for the growth of the Church in unoccupied territory.

MANILA

Manila Visitors. Following the visits of Bishop Graves, acting Bishop of the Philippine Islands, in October, November and December, Dr. John W. Wood came for December and part of January. Together with Mr. C. E. Ford, secretary of Bishop Williams of Detroit, Dr. Wood journeyed to Zamboanga and Jolo where they saw the Moro work; and to Bontok and Sagada and Baguio where they visited the Igorot missions. They sailed for China January 27.

The Rev. F. C. Todd, rector of St. Andrew's Parish, Orange, New Jersey, is making a tour of the Orient, spending most of his time in the Islands. On February 16 he preached in the cathedral.

Return of Dr. Burdette. The work of St. Luke's Hospital has suffered the past months due to the departure of Dr. B. L. Burdette for Siberia with the 27th Infantry last August. A recent cable announces that he will return on the February transport. Dr. Burdette enjoys the united confidence of the whole community and his return will be a cause of much general rejoicing. During his absence Dr. W. A. McVean has been acting resident physician.

Roosevelt Memorial Service. Since hearing of the Havana unpleasantness centering about the Roosevelt memorial service it may interest many to know that in Manila the committee having the matter in

English Church News

The Bishop of Chelmsford and the Wesleyans. None of our bishops could do more than Dr. Watts Ditchfield, Bishop of Chelmsford, to advance the much-discussed scheme for union with the Wesleyan Methodists. At a recent Kingsway Hall Conference, he approached the question from the point of view of Christian missions. He traced the movement of politics in Japan, China, Egypt, and Central Africa: democratic movements were everywhere, it was a world which the Church had never had to face before. World-evangelization is the need of to-day. And for that, to use a phrase of Dr. Mott, we need "Apostles of Reconciliation." That is how Dr. Watts Ditchfield described himself; he was pleading for unity, nothing else would win the world for Christ. And first, the Wesleyans. He wanted the Church of England to make room for them, so that they could carry on all their distinctive work—services, class-meetings, etc.—and yet be joined to the Church of England. He wanted, not to crush, but to enlarge and strengthen Methodism. Were they satisfied with its progress in the last ten years? Their reports did not read like those of thirty years ago. Wesleyan doctrine, as expounded in Wesley's Fifty-Three Sermons, was identical with that of the Prayer Book. The bishop told the story of his Methodist youth, and claimed that he was still a Methodist in Wesley's interpretation of the term.

The Saving of Democracy. Few of our leaders who are trying to teach us the social duty of the Church have succeeded in putting the case better than Dr. Long, Bishop of Bathurst. It may be that having lived at close quarters with democratic government of an advanced type in his Australian diocese he has acquired more intimate knowledge than our bishops at home can possess. Distinguishing between political and social democracy, Dr. Long pointed out that the Christian Church had fostered the democratic spirit, in spite of the fact that the Church had developed its history so largely on imperial lines. And yet the Church had been losing touch with the real life of the people: it is not a "living, loving, homely centre of ideas, inspirations and restraints, among the people as a whole." It was "too hopelessly bourgeois" to fulfill its true social duty. The Church had two duties: to elevate the conscience, and to declare the cause of righteousness, summoning people into its obedience. How are these duties to be discharged? Not by austere, remote, judgments, nor by platitudes, nor by "fawning on the new forces and blessing their policies." Nor must the Church be content with the "ambulance work" of picking up social wrecks. It must discover a gift of social teaching, and be prepared to "come out of the study and the pulpit into the rough welter of the people's life." It must give a plain practical interpretation of its social gospel, in language that can be understood. "Homely humor, plain speech, frank camaraderie, readiness to be buffeted, aye, and to buffet happily and gaily in return without malice or pretentiousness, are some of the points of necessary equipment, along with the unflinching earnestness of her deeper spirit."

I am afraid I have done scant justice to Dr. Long's address, which occupies about six columns of the Guardian, but I have given enough to show that his experience at the front has not been wasted. He evidently believes that our resources are equal to the demand he makes. So they may be, if a new type of man is rapidly ordained, and if meantime the right kind of layman is called upon to speak the Church's message. But I don't quite recognize the picture of the average parish priest in Dr. Long's concluding words. And that is the real tragedy of the Church of England of to-day.

JAMES CAIRNS.

charge were unanimously in favor of the community service being held in the Cathedral of St. Mary and St. John. One of the members of the committee was Father McErlaine, the rector of the American Roman parish. The service was simple, in keeping with the wishes of Colonel Roosevelt. Justice Johnson of the Supreme Court gave the address, the service being in charge of Dean Parson, assisted by other local ministers.

VIRGINIA

St. Mark's Church, Richmond, the Rev. G. M. Brydon, rector, will move from its present site at the corner of First and Clay Streets to a location in the West End of Richmond. Owing to the rapid incoming of colored residents into the neighborhood of the church, and to the fact that a large majority of the congregation has moved away, it was decided at a recent meeting of the vestry to sell the present church building, and until the new church can be built, to hold services in the auditorium of the new Robert E. Lee Public School, use of which has been granted by the city school board. This school will be completed in a very short time and it is planned to begin services there as soon as possible.

The New Church of the Holy Comforter, Plans for the new Church of the Holy Comforter, the Rev. W. E. Cox, rector, have been secured and the work of raising the necessary funds is well under way. The beautiful new church and parish house will be located on the large plot at the corner of Grove Avenue and Rowland Street where the present church now is. The new parish house will have a sufficiently large auditorium to accommodate the congregation while the church is being built and will also furnish ample Sunday School quarters and equipment. It is hoped and planned to begin work on the new buildings some time during the summer.

FIVE MODERN SPANISH NOVELS AND OTHER FICTION JUST PUBLISHED

Five Modern Spanish Novels

CAESAR OR NOTHING. By Pio Baroja. (Alfred A. Knopf, New York.)
THE CABIN. By Vicente Blasco Ibañez. (Alfred A. Knopf, New York.)
THE DEAD COMMAND, BLOOD AND SAND, THE SHADOW OF THE CATHEDRAL. By Vicente Blasco Ibañez. (E. P. Dutton & Company, New York.)

TO those who have read The Soul of Spain by Havelock Ellis these novels will be peculiarly interesting as they so aptly emphasize his deductions. Spain is drawn as he saw her, barely awakening from her long lethargy but no longer inert, becoming slowly self-conscious, self-critical. Probably the most vehement voice in this racial self-examination is that of Ibañez, but he is ably seconded by Pio Baroja. It is curious that their books should only now be available in English translations for they represent a literature as vigorous in the realism of local color and the analysis of national characteristics as that of Russia or Scandinavia; the trouble with it as literature is that it is too concerned with nationality and not sufficiently individualistic. In that respect Baroja is more of an artist than Ibañez, his vein of talent is slighter, more illusive, but truer to life than the massive over-emphasis of which Ibañez is sometimes guilty, with his long political and historical dissertations, which so disturb the vitality of his characters that we are amazed when we notice the quotation marks, which assure us that they are meant as conversation.

In each of these books of his, Ibañez attacks some particular evil, drawing the moral of the present conditions from the history of centuries of tyranny, intolerance and luxury on the part of the kings, the nobles and the Church, a theme peculiarly congenial to a modern socialist. It is the magnitude of his theme, combined with his superb powers of description, which makes these novels so impressive, and they leave us with a tremendous sense of the personality of the country, of Spain of today half starved, weary, but still passionate, magnificent in tarnished trappings, groaning under the burdens from the past. It is a country set in the full blaze of the sun but perpetually darkened by cloud, its fertile plains arid from drought, its common people, part Moorish, still sad with the melancholy of mixed blood. The women of every nation are more typical than its men, and the costume of its women might be used as a symbol for Spain, the gown of gorgeous colors cloaked by the black mantilla.

In Caesar or Nothing, by Baroja, there is the same feeling of shadow and of the futility of real effort, as if the institutions of the country were too dilapidated to survive repair, as if any renovations would be overtaken by the inevitable decay before they could possibly be completed.

The Cabin is the simplest of the four novels by Ibañez and on that account one of the most complete. The moral of it, for he always moralizes, is that the peasant is his own worst enemy. In this book he does not moralize about it as he is so often tempted to do in his other works, but it comes to us with a terrible inevitableness through the action of the story. It is a futile tragedy of peasant solidarity, hanging together as they do through community interests, against the landlords and the law, which they considered a purely landlords' institution. Their code is revenge, and this is the story of a feud, concerning a piece of land, in which the innocent suffer vicariously and the law is powerless to interfere, because the entire community, including the victims, is bound together in a conspiracy of silence.

The hero of The Dead Command is a nobleman of Majorca, the run-out survivor of a once powerful family, who excuses his many vices in the names of his ancestors, taking a malicious pleasure in tacking them where they belong on the branches of his genealogical tree. But some of the an-

THE PRICES OF BOOKS

ACCORDING to a new ruling of the Post Office, the prices of books will no longer be published in the book reviews. Each week, however, the books received in The Churchman office during the week are listed on the inside of the back cover and in this list the prices will be given as usual.

cestral virtues are also his, and in a moment of temptation he is prevented from improving his financial condition by respect for the family honor. His scruples leaving him hopelessly involved in debt, he retires to his only remaining possession, a ruined tower on a neighboring island, where he lives among the peasants in Arcadian simplicity, but the Arcadians proving to be almost primevally human, he is forced to make his place among them as a real man, which gives him the vigor to throw off the smothering weight of his inheritance.

Blood and Sand is probably Ibañez's greatest book, it is certainly the most striking. In Sonnica and The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse he shows his power in describing the scenes and emotions of human warfare, but in the contests of the bull-ring he seems to find an even more congenial field. No one need be afraid to read the book because of the title, it does not drip with the gore of realistic horrors. It is a study of the psychology of a matador, his very courage a form of egoism, developed by the intoxication of the spectacular. A popular idol, dressed like a prince, treated like an equal by the nobility, his natural characteristics are all exaggerated and thrown out of value by the perpetual limelight. There is no sermonizing here, the hero lives and dies before us, vigorous, vain and simple against the sumptuous background.

The Shadow of the Cathedral is exactly what its name suggests, the gloom which the Church has cast over the life of Spain. The entire scene is laid inside the Cathedral of Toledo, with the contrast of the life of shabby ecclesiastical splendor, and the squalor of the cathedral workmen and their families, who eke out a bare existence working and living generation after generation, encrusted like barnacles in the former cloisters. The cathedral itself is treated with extraordinary love and sympathy, nowhere has Ibañez written more superb descriptions, it is a living entity, rough and rugged on the outside but on the inside delicately splendid, with soaring columns, stained glass, and rich carving. Even the long historical and political essays, which decidedly blur the personality of the hero, tend to enhance the dignity of the building, making it in spite of everything, the Church triumphant.

On every page of these different books Spain lives and pulsates under our eyes, proud, tragically static, but underneath, like the first tremor of an earthquake, the force of modern unrest. UNA HUNT.

With a Purpose

HERE are three books, all fiction, all written apparently with a definite purpose, and that purpose to show the complexity and the difficulty of the educational problem with reference to three types of youth in this country. These types are the son of a liberty-loving idealistic Bohemian, an out-and-out American boy, and the insurgent children of "Pennsylvania Dutch" parentage. Rekindled Fires (by Joseph Anthony, Holt) is good reading and a fairly accurate picture of what has been and probably will be repeated over and over again in every industrial centre, viz, the absorption into our American life of the sons of a sturdy overseas stock, here because of the fiercely burning fires in their own breasts. The story of Stanislaw Zabransky—Stanley Zabriskie when he entered Milford High—is something more than the tale of one lad's Americanization, it has in it the problems and issues of all that vast life which has sought to be assimilated into the currents of our economic, collegiate, social and religious institutions. The situation toward the end seems a bit overdrawn but the yearnings and longings of Michael Zabransky are unmistakably the lode stars to the young professor, his son, who is to teach philosophy in an American university.

Salt (or The Education of Griffith Adams), by Charles G. Norris, Dutton, is the re-education of an American boy, after the usual four years at the typical college, out in the world of affairs and men, where the author would prove the real training begins. There are sure to be a very large number of readers who will not agree to the picture of Griffith Adams' education, in or out of college. Mr. Norris says he expects that what he has written of the inside workings of the college Greek-letter fraternities and of business "as it is too often conducted" will provoke criticism, but for him it is all founded on facts—or "something less than facts." The re-adjustment of the college man's ideals and practices to the world he encounters is no doubt often drastic but does it go as far as Salt would have us believe? Has the college education of the past decade failed to "salt the earth" because it had lost its savour? With the contribution the colleges made to the service, some will not believe it.

Tillie, a Mennonite Maid is not so much a memory that the name of Helen R. Martin will not at once suggest a delightful tale. Maggie of Virginsburg (Century) is another "Pennsylvania Dutch" story with all the strong contrasts of ideals arising from the sordidness of those who would live by bread alone and those who are the insurgents, whether in the home, college or in the world at large. The author says she has drawn inspiration for this book from the ever recurring struggle in our universities between rebels among the faculty and the more conservative trustees. But the insurgents, Maggie and her knight Henry Butz, from the very beginning of their "rebellious" lives are an interesting and lovable pair and we are glad to get them in just such a setting.

WALKING SHADOWS. By Alfred Noyes. Frederick A. Stokes Company. New York. 1918.

When Mr. Noyes announced a volume of prose "Sea Tales and Others", we waited expectantly. Our anticipations have not been disappointed. Walking Shadows follows in the tradition of the great short stories. It is inevitable that one should compare these stories of the sea with the sea tales of that master story-teller, Joseph Conrad. Up to a point, they are reminiscent. "Marooned" is almost as grinding as "The End of the Tether"; the theme of "Goblin Peaches" almost as fantastic as that of "Heart of Darkness". But Mr. Noyes' characters are not so well limned as are Mr. Conrad's. With Conrad as with Henry James, the interest lies in the spiritual conflict of intricate natures. With Mr. Noyes the interest is superficial, in the events rather than in their subtle reaction upon the people involved. For this reason Walking Shadows is more nearly comparable with some of De Maupassant's black and white etchings of human history. "The Light-House" and "Marooned" leave one with the same sense of having seen someone in a moment slip and fall over a precipice as do "A Piece of String" and "The Necklace." Of course Mr. Noyes can not measure up to these masters; some of his stories are simply commonplace. But in his best pages, he is following in the tradition.

In the Days of Queen Ann

THE HIGHWAYMAN. By H. C. Bailey. E. P. Dutton Co., New York, 1919.

"Ods burn it, sir."

"Pray, sir, what?"

"Egad, sir, you are most obliging."

"Oh, you have always had the devil's own luck."

"Ods blades, there's a naughty way to mock a gentleman, I'll school you bully, I'll be blithe to rub you down with an oaken towel. Here give us your staff."

Scatter among these sprightly quotations a little profanity, a dash of villainy, plenty of high hearted love distracted by misunderstandings and the adventurous strategy of a Jacobite plot involving a very fair lady and another almost as fair, some gallant gentlemen of the days of Queen Ann, add a few lively raseals, and you have The Highwayman.

"Bah, you will never be a wife," Harry said, "you have too much imagination, but you make a mighty fine lover, my dear."

In the Days of Hannibal

SONNICA. By Vicente Blasco Ibañez. Translated from the Spanish by Frances Douglas. Duffield & Co. New York.

In Sonnica the author of The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse has given us a very vivid and moving description of the siege of Saguntum. He has succeeded in reproducing the atmosphere of the times, and in bringing to life again one of the most interesting events of ancient history. His portrayal of Hannibal and of the other leading characters of the book, the Greek Actaeon, and Sonnica, from whom the story takes its name, is especially successful. One feels that in the first chapters there is an undue dwelling upon the sordid side of ancient life, but after all the picture is true and only brings into stronger contrast the strength and heroism which the Saguntines displayed in defense of their city.

THE MARNE. By Edith Wharton. D. Appleton and Company. New York. 1918.

When Mrs. Wharton was bold enough to take The Marne for the title of her war novel, her admirers hastened to procure what promised to be a great book. Most of them have been disappointed. The story is slight, the characters unconvincing, the manner of writing strangely amateur. We rather suspect that the author was carried away by her enthusiasm for France into writing a propaganda pamphlet under the guise of a war novel.

Indian Life

TIN COWRIE DASS. Henry Milner Rideout. Duffield and Company. New York. 1918.

Any writer who tries to tell a story of intimate Indian life subjects himself to a comparison with the remarkably right Kipling—to use a phrase recently made famous in the Atlantic Monthly—and the reviewer of Mr. Rideout's most recent novel must admit that he feels the comparison to the detriment of Tin Cowrie Dass.

It is a well-told tale, thoroughly worth reading by the man who seeks diversion, but the author lacks that power over words which is needed to create an oriental atmosphere. Those who have been in the East and seen its sights and heard its cacophonies and smelled its stinks and felt its indifference to time and space will always find stories about it hollow unless they are written by a pen like Kipling's.

For the average American reader this is a good book. For those who know the Orient it is very mediocre—not because Mr. Rideout does not know India, but because he lacks the ability to give its atmosphere. The difference between Tin Cowrie Dass and Kim is as the difference between a figure in Madame Tussaud's and a statue in the Vatican.

Oppenheim Again

THE CURIOUS QUEST. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. Little, Brown & Co. Boston. 1919.

As Mr. Oppenheim's list of books grows and grows one can't help thinking—to indulge in a bit of pathos—of that delightful work of Titian's which hangs in that little upstairs room in the Prado at Madrid. The artist pictures a woman whose progeny far outnumber those of the old shoe dweller. The title is La Fecundidad. E. P. O. is surely a record breaker in producing entertaining trash, and this last volume is no exception to the rule. The tale is so different from any of its predecessors that a nineteenth century literary critic would have ruled it out from among the authentic works of the said scrivener. One might almost believe that Oppenheim meant his book to be a disguised sociological treatise. Certainly no one can read the story of a rich young man's serious escapade, in which he learned how real are the sufferings of the poor, without feeling more sympathy for the toilers, and less sympathy for the idle rich.

JAVA HEAD. By Joseph Hergesheimer. Alfred A. Knopf. New York. 1919.

Mr. Hergesheimer has made a peculiar specialty of the historical American novel by a method that centers chiefly in the accumulation of a vast amount of meticulously accurate historical detail. In the present instance he has chosen Salem for his scene, and his story opens in May of 1848. He has then proceeded to paint in his background, descriptions of the houses, of the furniture, of the costumes, of the food, of the shops, and of everything else needed to make the reader move in the atmosphere of exactly that place and exactly that date. And, in keeping with Salem's chief industry, much space is given to the shipping, with snatches of conversations about the China trade, the controversies on the merits of clipper ships, the prospect of California business, and so on. A vast amount of laborious research must have gone to the construction of this background.

The most sympathetic of the characters that move against this background is a wealthy merchant, virtually retired, old, old fashioned, self willed and masterful. His son, a man of mature years and a sea captain, may be called the "hero." Thwarted in his affections by his father, he has married an aristocratic Chinese woman, and brings her home, only to experience a revival of his earlier love. The girl in question is leading a most wretched and morbid existence, while she also nurses her fondness in secret. This is the somber situation, which is worked out in a still more somber key, to find its denouement in a piece of sheer melodrama, the suicide of the Chinese woman when attacked by an insane opium eater.

The greatest pains in the character drawing have been devoted to the unfortunate bride from the Orient. Whether this picture is accurate or not is difficult to say; materials for the reconstruction of the psychology of Manchu women in 1848 are scanty. But her extreme detachment is carried so far that she is uninteresting, even if not unreal; her suicide carries no distress with it, for she was never alive. The American characters also lack vitality. Were Salem merchants and sea captains really so filled with self analysis and meditation on unsatisfied longings? B. S. E.

ADVENTURES IN TASTE TOGETHER WITH OTHER ADVENTURES IN NEW BOOKS

Some Adventures in Taste

IT is no longer the proper thing to sniff at modern poetry. You will have small desire to, if you spend odd moments for a month or more browsing through Mr. Braithwaite's anthology of contemporary magazine verse (The Golden Treasury of Magazine Verse. Edited by William Stanley Braithwaite, Small Maynard). There are surprisingly beautiful things in it, as careful and conservative and classically beautiful as anyone could wish.

But woe to the modern poet who turns critic, if he does it in any such fashion as Mr. Louis Untermeyer. (The New Era in American Poetry. By Louis Untermeyer, Henry Holt). It would be more comfortable to talk directly to him about the book than to criticise it behind his back. How can you, Mr. Untermeyer, expect us to listen to your pages upon pages of extravagant and alliterative adjectives, showered upon men we scarcely know by name? Twenty pages each for James Oppenheim and Arturo Giovannitti, others in proportion! Perhaps the fundamental fault is that you try to describe modern poetry absolutely without reference to anything but itself, which cannot be done. You claim for it as if they had never existed before, values and virtues which good poetry has had from the beginning of time. Your introduction is well worth reading as an example of hopelessly naive modernism, megalomania, spread-eagle-ism. You do not say so, but you firmly believe, do you not, that America won the war? We pray you, bank your fires, and study criticism. Begin with Professor Phelps' book, where you will read this, and more, about yourself: "Mr. Untermeyer will live and learn. He is not contemptuous; he is full of pity, but it is the pity of ignorance." (The Advance of English Poetry To the Twentieth Century. By William Lyon Phelps, Dodd, Mead.)

Professor Phelps is a generous critic. He confesses at once that he is thankful for poetry wherever he finds it, which reminds us that we are, too, and when he adds that one standard of measure for contemporary criticism is always the literature of the past, we are ready to trust him. The book includes, as the title indicates, Henley, Thompson, and a dozen others, besides the Irish poets, and then the Americans, with some due sense of proportion! Of the worst of them he thinks it may be said that they are well versed in prose. The book would be delightful reading even for one who had but slight interest in its subject.

In more serious mood comes Professor Cunliffe, with matter-of-fact and rather detailed description and criticism of Meredith, Hardy, Stevenson, Shaw—eleven in all, and the Irish, and "the new poets" and "new novelists," a useful reference book. For each author there is a bibliography of his own books, each dated, and of books about him. (English Literature During the Last Half Century. By J. W. Cunliffe, MacMillan.)

The book to recommend with enthusiasm is by Professor Lowes, not so much for its concern with poetry as for its treatment of the very essence of convention and revolt. (Convention and Revolt in Poetry. By John Livingston Lowes, Houghton Mifflin.) It is a fascinating criticism of the present time. Ideas are drawn from the whole realm of literature and woven in with most telling effect. It offers a reassuring point of view, not wholly unfamiliar but too rare, from which to consider the present world at large—perhaps especially church matters though they are not mentioned. He observes that "we're averse to shocks, and we go to sleep under narcotics." "While conservatives hearten conservatives, and radicals fire radicals to keener ardors, the rest of us may at least endeavor to reach clearness." "The tendency, inherent in human nature in its protesting moods, is to throw out the baby with the bath." "The great constructive element in both life and art is the dealings of genius with the continuity of tradition. . . Cut the connection . . . and the stream runs shallow." "The vitality of tradition and the quickening impulse of immediate contact with reality, . . . either without the other means sterility." "Poetry's essence is also, in a sense that is profoundly true, the goal of life—it is creative energy made effective through restraint." GLADYS WOLCOTT BARNES.

Two Anthologies

THE ENGLISH POETS: Selections with critical introductions by various writers and a general introduction by Matthew Arnold. Edited by Thomas Humphrey Ward, M. S. Vol. V. Browning to Rupert Brooke. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918.

CORN FROM OLDE FIELDS: An anthology of English Poems from the XIVth to the XVIIth century with biographical notes. By Eleanor M. Brougham. John Lane Company. New York. 1918.

Volume V of The English Poets completes Mr. Humphrey Ward's admirable series of selections of English verse from Chaucer to our own time. A few specimens of Canadian poetry are included, but none of American. No anthology completely satisfies any one. In this volume the reviewer misses several of his favorite poems by Matthew Arnold, and he cannot understand how any one could print selections of George Meredith's verse without placing at the head of them Meredith's most exquisite poem Love in the Valley. But aside from this impossibility of an anthology's satisfying the personal taste, the series seems to us quite the best of all anthologies. The authors chosen are certainly the representative poets of their age, and in the main the verses reprinted are those most generally esteemed. The volumes are rich in critical introductions and biographical matter, and contain in brief compass and at most reasonable price ample material to serve as an admirable guide to the study of English poetry.

Miss Brougham has addressed herself to a less popular but almost as valuable task, and has executed it with equal care and discrimination. It is the task of preserving from oblivion many of the poems of minor poets, poets the majority of whom will never be read except in anthologies, and seldom reprinted. Little of the verse reprinted here is of "classic" standard; little, on the other hand, deserved the oblivion from which it is now rescued. The volume is exquisitely printed and is, therefore, a pleasure to read, if for no other reason. L. G.

Charles Booth

CHARLES BOOTH. A MEMOIR. The Macmillan Company. London and New York. 1918.

One of the most interesting books that has recently come from the press is a short memoir of Charles Booth. Deeply interested in the London poor, he made up his mind thoroughly to investigate the various problems connected with poverty. He therefore went to live with one family after another, that he might see at first hand exactly what the conditions were. The ordinary rent of his room for a week was four shillings. Sometimes the little house in which he lived was exceedingly dirty, but for the most part he found cleanliness. On the whole, though to a superficial visitor there might seem to be a good deal of discomfort, he believed that the people were happy. Sometimes he furnished his own room, of course in the same simple way in which the ordinary tenant would furnish it. He ate with the family as often as he could, sharing exactly their own fare. Often he returned to dinner, for instance, unexpectedly, that he might be sure to see exactly what the family ate when they were quite alone. While he was living in each place, he made careful notes of what he saw and heard.

From such sources Charles Booth wrote his important book, Life and Labor. Others assisted him in the research, and every student of the problems of a great city must consider the work a classic, especially the last volume.

In his book, The Aged Poor, he displayed an exhaustive examination of the condition of the aged poor all over England. The book is dull and is little read, but students in earnest read it and learned the impressive facts. Through them it formed public opinion. Pension acts were passed in remote places as a result, and in 1908 the House of Commons recorded its approval of Charles Booth's principle and passed the Pensions Act in England itself.

The memoir reveals not only a great and intelligent servant of the people, but also a most attractive and winning personality. C. L. S.

The New America

THE NEW AMERICA. By An Englishman, Frank Dilnot. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1919.

Frank Dilnot says, "that America's friends leave on an Englishman a mark for life" and then proceeds to show the marks he received when in this country discovering us. They are not half bad either; a sort of satisfaction to our vanity, at least, to know our visitor thought well enough of us to show America in the new light. The vivacious character of the sketches have added a charm to interesting events of an immediate past, which perhaps did not seem so significant for those who were part of them. Really, it is a new America Dilnot describes and thus what he says is different from the many books written by travelers and visitors who have been here before. With delicious frankness he says his sketches are meant to reveal to us "the angle of an ordinary Englishman" and to his own people give a measure of information. Nothing escapes his gift of analysis, food, dress, drink, taxi-cabs, language, humor, women, men, amusements, cities, etc. His kindly spirit disarms even when he writes sharp things, but they are not many. He believes that it is worth while to "throw up into relief the common nature of two great countries in the big things" so that they may be knit together with an extended knowledge and new sympathy, presaging a new era for coming generations. The title marks a courteous thoughtfulness and a discriminating mind; if we are a new America we like to be told so! R. P. K.

Some Bertrand Russell Essays

MYSTICISM AND LOGIC AND OTHER ESSAYS. By Bertrand Russell. Longmans, Green and Company. New York. 1918.

The essays of this volume have appeared in The Hibbert Journal, The New Quarterly, and other magazines. Half of the essays are popular, the other half technical. In one of the practical essays on A Free Man's Worship, Mr Russell writes: "Let us not weigh in grudging scales their merits and demerits, but let us think only of their need—or the sorrows, the difficulties, perhaps the blindnesses, that make the misery of their lives; let us remember that they are fellow-sufferers in the same tragedy with ourselves. And so, when their day is over, when their good and their evil have become eternal by the immortality of the past, be it ours to feel that, where they suffered, where they failed, no deed of ours was the cause; but wherever a spark of the divine fire kindled in their hearts, we were ready with encouragement, with sympathy, with brave words in which high courage glowed." From Mr. Clutton-Brock

STUDIES IN CHRISTIANITY. By A. Clutton-Brock. E. P. Dutton. New York. 1918.

Those who have read Mr. Clutton-Brock's book, The Ultimate Belief, and his essays in the volume, Immortality, will expect a good deal from any book which he is likely to write. Here he writes under the titles, "Christianity and Absolute Values," "The Christian Doctrine of Love, Christ and the Christian," "The Grace of God," and "The Future of Christianity." There is much which is suggestive and illuminating. One who ventures as fearlessly as Mr. Clutton-Brock will inevitably make some mistakes. He is, for instance, quite right when he says that the Docetic heresy is the most insidious of all the heresies; but when he goes on to illustrate this dictum by saying that it was a waste that our Saviour should have died young, that it would have been better if He could have escaped the Cross and have lived to teach and convert the Scribes and Pharisees, he is denying the very core of all righteousness. Certainly it was the glory of Christ that He flinched from nothing when He saw the path leading straight to the Cross, and so inspires youth everywhere and always to give itself without count of cost whenever the issue of righteousness becomes clear. We may imagine that, so long as this war is remembered, no nation as mad as Germany was in 1914 will ever dare to enter upon an aggressive war, because it will know that there is youth enough and love enough to go to the help of the oppressed, though it die in the attempt, and the nation from which the youth come may have nothing whatever to gain. Mr. Clutton-Brock, in such a contention as this idea of the waste of Christ's early death, has lapsed not so much from orthodoxy as from a sane imagination of what the world would be today if Christ, being Christ, living in the age in which He did live, had lived to be an old man.

THE NEXT STEP IN RELIGION. By Roy Wood Sellars. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918.

The next step in religion, according to Dr. Sellars, is toward the scrap-heap. The thing to do with religion is to take it up gently but firmly, and throw it out. This is to be done without violence or commotion, even respectfully, but with uncompromising thoroughness. Dr. Sellars assures us in his first sentence that his purpose is positive and constructive, but he brings us to the conclusion that that which remains after his discussion is not religion. As the book proceeds all that we commonly consider distinctively religious is dumped on the rubbish-pile of superstition. Superstition consists in believing things which are not so, and under this category all the Christian doctrines are included.

Religion had its origin in the age of myth, in a time when our ancestors "knew practically nothing, as we understand knowledge." Where we find forces, they found persons. Thus arose belief in gods, at first many, then one. Men desired to secure on their behalf the good-will of the gods, and thus invented magic and ritual, and sought the services of priests. By such means they obtained prosperity in war and in peace; they gained victories and good harvests. Agriculture, for example, which is now almost entirely a question of science, was then entirely a question of religion. The great days of the Old Testament calendar were originally agricultural, being related, like the Passover and Pentecost, to the harvest. Christianity, beginning in Syria and Asia Minor, was one of half-a-dozen religions in which a god dies and comes to life again; the death of the god being originally the death of all vegetation in the winter, and his resurrection the renewal of vegetation in the spring.

It is true that the life and teaching of Jesus were quite apart from this aspect of religion, but Paul brought it in from the surrounding contemporary paganism. The effect was to transform Jesus into a god. We have now outgrown the religious philosophy which made such a transformation possible. "The Hellenistic world to which dogma and ritual are mainly due is a thing of the past, existent for no one but the scholar. . . . I am certain that the deification of Jesus will be given up step by step. He was not born miraculously, nor was he pre-existent as the Word or Logos. New terms do not fit into an outlook dominated by science."

In such an outlook there is no place for any sort of religion. It is idle to debate the doctrines of Christianity when once we understand that there is no such thing as miracle. Miracle is the response of the will of God to the particular desire of man. Science in disproving it disproves at the same time the doctrine of divine providence and the practise of prayer. With the ceasing of prayer, all our services stop and our churches are no longer of any use. And this is of necessity, because the theory that we have a soul is quite without foundation. There is no such thing as immortality. Moses got along very well without reference to hell or heaven, so did Pericles, and so can we. Indeed, whatever we may think or dream, there is nothing in us to survive the fact of death "The belief in immortality and the wish for it will die out very slowly. The vague appetite for another life will persist as an under-current of half-understood desire for a good whose nature has not been clearly thought out." But it will be thought out, and all the doctrines of another life will disappear. That which will remain is what Dr. Sellars calls humanism, which consists in taking the world as it is, and saying "yea" to all the conditions and limitations in which it involves us. This is all the world there is, and we must make the best of it. Dr. Sellars is very cheerful about it.

The curious thing about the book is that the reading of it leaves the Christian believer equally cheerful. It destroys not only Christianity, but all religion, denies prayer and the soul, and takes the supernatural out of the universe, but we read it with unflinching serenity. It was published a year ago, and ought to have been received with weeping and gnashing of teeth; the defenders of the faith ought to have rushed to the defense of the beleaguered walls of religion; but nothing has happened. It is as if a modest gentleman with a quiet voice were to make a street-speech in a busy city, proving that the municipal government is all wrong, that the courts are foolish survivals of the dark ages, and that no city ought any longer to exist, all cities should be pulled down and plowed over. At the end of this address the quiet speaker bows to his small audience and goes home to dinner, and there is no notice of the incident in the evening papers. This is not for lack of interest in the presentation of the theme, nor for lack of convincing criticism; much that is said is excellent and needed. It is not by reason of indifference, neither is it the result of a conservatism which is blind and deaf. It is due, perhaps, to the contrast between the magnitude of the writer's undertaking and the smallness of his book. In sixteen short and easy chapters all the foundations of the faith are broken up. It is like throwing stones at the Rock of Gibraltar.

FAIRY CARPETS AND OTHER WAYS OF JOURNEYING INTO FAIRY LAND

Stories for Story-Tellers

AN uncle or aunt or even a parent standing near a table of children's books in a bookshop is in a very dangerous position indeed. You can't tell what might happen to him. It takes an uncommon sense of direction to find one's way to just the right book in the maze of "juvenile" literature now on the market. The books mentioned here are all of them recent, none of them trash, and as different from one another as possible. Two or three of them should certainly be added to the family's equipment for the summer months, and one at least might well go into the suitcase for use on the journey. Perhaps the best book for the suitcase, though it weighs a little more than one could wish, is The First Book of Stories for the Story-Teller. (By Fannie E. Coe, Houghton Mifflin.) Fifty-two stories have been gathered from many different sources. They are for the most part familiar tales that wise teachers and story-tellers have been reading and telling for generations. The Lion and the Mouse, Chicken Lieken, Cinderella, Hop o' My Thumb, The Story of the Anenome, How the Robin's Breast Became Red, etc., etc. The great value of the book is that it brings them all together within the covers of one volume and that the telling of them is unusually fresh and charming.

Another collection also of fifty-two stories—these better adapted for telling than for reading—is a book of short children's sermons, For the Children's Hour (by Stuart Nye Hutchison, D. D. Revell). Dr. Hutchison is a Presbyterian clergyman who is evidently experienced in speaking to children. He retells many well known stories—St. Christopher (much better told, however in the book just described), the Great Stone Face, the Joseph stories and others—and adds many anecdotes from every day life mixed up with much, rather too much, pious admonition. Each story is woven round a biblical text, the Beatitudes being very suggestively treated. It is a useful book. Stories from Far Away (by Cora Banks Smith and Hazel Northrup Revell), are missionary stories from all around the world, evidently intended to rouse children's interest in other children and to make them eager sharers of the Gospel of Our Lord. It recalls many other missionary books. One puts it down with a sigh,—"What a pity that this sort of thing isn't better done!"

It is a positive relief to turn to quite another set of stories written with no other purpose than simply to entertain. In Dutch Fairy Tales (Crowell) William Elliot Griffis has perceived the fascination common to all well-told legends (suggesting Andrew Lang's many coloured fairy books) and in addition to this has given his stories a character quite their own. We learn how wooden shoes came to be worn, why the stork loves Holland and how flax was discovered. Such a mixture of fancy and fun and charm is irresistible. It would be quite safe to get this book as a present for a ten year old or for a grown person who is by way of being a good story-teller. It is no book for amateurs in the story-telling profession. Everybody knows that gasp of interest when some stories come to an end and the almost breathless question that follows,—What Happened Then? (Lothrop, Lee and Shepard.) With this in mind Ruth O. Dyer has made an interesting experiment. She has taken fifteen standard tales of childhood, retold them, and added to each one of them a happy (and highly moral!) ending. It is amazing to discover that the famous trip into the great mountain personally conducted by the Pied Piper was an educational excursion after all. Once inside, the children began to lose their bad habits and by the time they had got rid of them all, they returned to their families in town! Curly-locks, or rather Silverhair as she is called here, went back to the three bears' house to put things to rights and mend the little bear's chair, and then she became a regular visitor! Red Riding Hood finally married the wicked old wolf who was a prince in disguise all the time!

Besides hearing and reading stories children love to "do things," and The Play Work Book (McBride and Co.) by Anna Macbeth is full of suggestions for articles that they can make, with clear and simple directions. These require no elaborate apparatus. One can do wonders with corks, spools, thread, and bits of worsted and cotton cloth. A miniature farm may be constructed, a doll's house and furniture, as well as innumerable toys of various kinds. Such a book as this is so simple that it may be given to children as soon as they begin to read. It is splendid for long rainy afternoons indoors or for the convalescent periods that are apt to be so tedious.

ADELAIDE TEAGUE CASE.

FRIENDS of the late Bishop Boyd Carpenter will be interested to hear that the Rev. Henry D. A. Major, Copgrove Rectory, Harrogate, has been entrusted with the biography of the eloquent bishop, which will be published by Mr. John Murray. Mr. Major was formerly editor of the Modern Churchman.

Fairy Carpets

WHEN the day's work is over, and you want to lie on your couch and forget problems and the oppression of the city, don't you often take down from the shelf your worn copy of Enchanting and Enchanted or Fairy Tales from the Far North or old Hans Andersen? There aren't any other stories that really equal those in which the fairies pick you up in their magic carpets and whisk you off to the land of make-believe. Of course it is much nicer if there are children curled up on the bear-skin rug in front of the fire and you are reading the stories to them. The fairy carpet swings more swiftly through the ether than if you are the only passenger.

Padraic Colum through Macmillan offers the two most delightful volumes for the fairy book shelf in this winter's collection. The Boy Who Knew What the Birds Said—with its illustrations by Dugald Stewart Walker, gives for your delightful associates the Hen-grouse and the Cock-fou and Feet-in-the-Ashes and Bloom-f-Youth and the Princess Bright Brow, and if you really do understand what the birds are saying, you can have a very happy time with them all. The Children's Homer takes you back to the heroes of Greece and Troy presented to you in Padraic Colum's charming prose and Willy Pogany's equally charming picture. The story opens with Telemachus who hears the adventures of Achilles, Hector and Odysseus from Helen and Menelaus; afterward the tales of Odysseus' return to Ithaca are recounted. Mother's Nursery Tales (Told and illustrated by Katherine Pyle. Dutton) are not new fairy tales. They are old ones, gathered together, some from one country and some from another, compiled and illustrated by a master hand—together a very pleasant book of tales. Fairy Tales of Weir are also illustrated by Katherine Pyle, although told by Anna McClure Sholl (Dutton). Weir is a town where the windows in summer open upon shimmering gardens and on whose walls in winter the fire-goblins dance. Prince Merlin and Princess Myrtle and the Wizard and Mother Huldah live there and are the very kind of people one wants to visit when flying in the magic carpet. The Book of Elves and Fairies (Houghton, Mifflin), has been written by Frances Jenkins Olcott, whose romantic story, The Maid of a Hundred Chains, was told in the pages of THE CHURCHMAN last summer. This is recommendation enough without saying that the elves and fairies have been summoned from all lands to bewitch the lucky child who falls under their spell. The Crowell Company have made their addition to 1919 fairy books by reprinting in a well illustrated edition that old favorite "Lambs' Tales." (Tales from Shakespeare. By Charles and Mary Lamb.)

Propaganda from fairyland: A Fairy League formed to give mortals greater knowledge of their fairy neighbors! The Fairies Annual (distinctly pro-mortal in tendency we would have you understand) published for mortals. This is certainly a new departure in the realm of fairy lore. But it is to be found in a delightfully printed and illustrated volume called The Fairies Annual, and published at the Bodley Head (by Cecil Starr Johns. John Lane Company). In this one can see the fairy life depicted and can gain the fairies' point of view in regard to mortals—things every boy and girl wants very much to know.

Myee had been tucked away in her little bed and should have been asleep, but she jumped out, pulled on her little blue wrapper, put on her bed room slippers, ran downstairs, through the back garden and out into the wood to see if she could catch the sinking sun. Bugs and Wings and Other Things (By Annie W. Franchot. Dutton), which is beautifully and quaintly illustrated, tells what Myee heard and saw in the wood.

Two books illustrated and reprinted in the kind of type that will delight the eyes of the small boy and also of the small girl are A Ride on a Rocking-Horse (By R. E. Marshall. Dutton) and Ducky Daddles' Party (By Bertha Parker Hall. Dutton).

Swinburne frequently expressed his desire to gather in one volume his poems of child life. Edmund Gosse has undertaken in The Springtime of Life (Poems of Childhood. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. Lippincott) to carry out the wish of the poet. The volume is enriched by the delicate and romantic fancy of Arthur Rackham.

More fascinating than fairy tales does the boy of twelve find the wonders of steam and electricity and more to be desired than the language of birds is their power of flight. So while Sister pores over Padraic Colum's stories and imagines she is a princess living in magical palaces, Brother would probably prefer to learn from Professor Darrow the story of the inventions of this present age of wonder. The Boy's Own Book of Great Inventions (By Floyd L. Darrow. Macmillan) tells how Morse and Vail invented the telegraph and how Bell and Watson first whispered from the attic to the cellar of a Boston house and later talked across a continent, how the first biplanes and Zeppelins swung into the air and how the Ford power plant is managed. Carpentry and Mechanics for Boys (By A. Neely Hall. Lothrop, Lee & Shepherd) is another treasure-book for the boy who likes to use his hands and his brain; while for the boy who wants a modern American hero to make his model, we can find nothing more enticing than Hermann Hagedorn's Boys' Life of Theodore Roosevelt (Harpers). Wonder Stories

THE LAUGHING BEAR. By Robert B. H. Bell, M. A., illustrated by Eleanor Howard. Robert Shores Publisher, 225 Fifth Avenue. New York.

To the children of St. Mark's Church, Seattle, whose interest in these stories was the inspiration that brought them to life, these fairy tales are dedicated by the author who is a Denver rector.

Whether we read "The Brown Friar," "The Mid-earth People," or the title story first we will know at once that we have discovered a writer who knows the wonders of children's day dreams, and can tell a tale to appeal to their imagination, impress a life lesson and give them a point of departure to travel from their own world into the larger world of all life where Leviathans and Gray Witches, and such creatures as Mr. Rooster are more real than grown folks imagine and just as real as children think they are. The author has the happy art of letting his story carry its purpose so well disguised that after the story is read the children will have a curiosity to solve its meaning. A. L. M.

CONFERENCES

TO FELLOW CHURCHMEN:

We, the undersigned, are convinced that the time has come for forming an association of those who believe that it is a part of the Church's duty to stand firmly for the bringing in of justice and love to the economic, political, national, and international life of the world, and who are not afraid of attempts to translate this idea into actual and specific measures.

We do not believe that the Social Service Commissions of the Church can adequately perform the latter part of this task until there has been much education of the Church's constituency, since official bodies can hardly move much more rapidly than those who constitute them and empower them. Nor do we believe that any society definitely committed to some particular social solution, such as Marxism or Socialism or the Single Tax, can properly arouse the Church to the need of radical social readjustment in general.

We, therefore, purpose to form an association to which anyone will be welcomed as a cooperator who is anxious that the Church shall definitely show herself sympathetic toward every sane radical movement looking toward the democratization of industry and the socialization of life and shall actively seek to impart to those interested in the same a Christian motivation. Membership shall bind no one to endorsement of any particular theory, but merely to the general principles stated above, and to a fearless willingness to examine facts of any movements resulting from social maladjustments, and to a willingness to pray about the problems involved.

We, therefore, ask that any who may be interested in such an association, send their names for further information to Miss Vida D. Scudder, Professor of English Literature, Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass., and further that they make arrangements to come together at a conference on the subject to be held at ten o'clock on the mornings of May 2 and 3, at the Board Room of the Church Mission House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

(Signed) The Very Rev. B. I. Bell, The Rt. Rev. Benjamin Brewster, The Rt. Rev. Chas. D. Williams, The Rev. J. Howard Melish, Miss Vida D. Scudder, The Rev. Howard Key Bartow, The Rev. Geo. I. Browne, The Rev. Smith Dexter, The Rev. W. B. Spofford, Mrs. Wm. J. Brown, Wm. F. Cochran, Miss Ellen Gates Starr, The Rev. Wm. H. Tomlins, The Rev. R. W. Hogue, Prof. Wm. Tappan, The Rev. W. P. Ladd, The Rev. Eliot White, The Rev. Douglas Matthews, Mrs. V. G. Simkhovitch, The Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, The Rev. Leicester Crosby Lewis, The Rt. Rev. William Frederic Faber, The Rev. OBITUARY

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father has called our brother, Ralph Robb Nauflts from his earthly labors to higher duties beyond, and
Whereas, We, the Rector, Wardens and Vestry of St. John's Church desire to bear testimony to the high character and noble manhood of our deceased associate;

Be It Therefore Resolved, That by the death of Ralph Robb Nauflts, we and the whole church have sustained an irreparable loss.

We miss his genial kindly presence and mourn his untimely passing.

He was one of the most efficient members of St. John's Church, and had long served with great faithfulness both as clerk and choir master.

He was always most interested in the church's welfare and ever strove to promote its great mission on earth.

Be It Further Resolved, That these resolutions be transcribed on the records of the church, printed in the CHURCHMAN, the Church Militant, and Charlestown Enterprise, and a copy transmitted to his bereaved mother.

A MASTER-WORKER IN GLASS

December 11, one of the most eminent designers of church-glass in America died. Harry Eldredge Goodhue, son of Charles and Helen Grosvenor Goodhue, lived all his boyhood in Pomfret, Connecticut. He was a singularly lovable man. His superb tenor voice, his ready wit, his skill in all out-door sports, but above all, his affectionate bonhomie, won him hosts of friends. Beside these, he leaves two brothers, one of them the eminent architect, Bertram G. Goodhue, of New York. Also a wife and three sons, of whom one bids fair to inherit his father's talent.

Mr. Goodhue's education, begun at Holderness School, was continued by extensive reading and travel abroad. He went often to France and England to obtain skilled workmen, and responded sensitively to the mellow charm of the old world, mastering many of the secrets of the 13th and 14th century craftsmen.

He began his chosen profession at the office of Phipps and Slocum, then had his own shop on Church Street, Cambridge, and latterly on Sudbury Street, Boston. He often exhibited in Boston, at the Arts and Crafts, at the Architectural Club, and elsewhere, receiving several times Honorable Mention for the beauty of his designs. His windows are in churches all over this country, the most interesting, perhaps, being the great East window of Emmanuel Church, Newport.

He wrote several articles on glass, and his ideals concerning it, for the Studio, Handicraft, Christian Art, and other magazines. In these, considering that painted and stained glass now is less good than the old Gothic glass, he tries to account for it thus: 1. "Men of the Golden Days were not obliged to compromise with their clients regarding either artistic or ecclesiastic features of their design. 2. Doctrinally divided, it is not in us to labor with the same high aim, the love and reverence of God that distinguished the founders of our Craft—it is almost as if they made their designs on their knees, their glorious achievements were their prayers, translated into lasting form.

Personally, I adhere to principles of glass work which prevailed among the old French designers, relying entirely on my design, color, and leading for my effect, and avoiding the pictorial character of much of the modern American work which uses opalescent rather than antique and transparent glass. My use of small pieces of glass and a limited palette implies acceptance of the leading as a distinct element in the decoration."

"So," writes Mr. King, in the Transcript, "he abandoned the modern use of stains, and successfully undertook to make glass in the antique way, mixing his colors directly into the glass while it was still in a fluid state, and seeking real transparency of color. Working with such glass for material, he conceived of stained windows, in the field of design, not as so many paintings set in walls of buildings at those points where the architect had chanced to leave space, but as translucent decorations bearing an ordered and integral relationship to the whole scheme of the builder's design and to the materials of which it was constructed."

Besides being a sound draughtsman, with keen sense for color. Mr. Goodhue was a man of deep religious feeling and poetic temperament. Devoted to his craft, he wrought in the exquisite translucent medium figures of touching beauty and religious appeal, delighting the eye of the beholder and uplifting his soul to God. Many of the designs which he had made but was prevented by death from executing are to be put now into enduring glass.

J. PATERSON SMYTHE'S FAMOUS BOOK

THE GOSPEL OF THE HEREAFTER

Do we live when men call us dead?
If so — where do we go?
Is it our final abode?
What kind of existence shall we have?

THE BISHOP OF LONDON says: "For the first time it makes the life beyond the grave so attractive as to be something to be looked forward to, something men and women could enjoy. I have just given away twenty copies.

Upon a subject of supreme importance this book uncovers for the enlightenment and comfort of perplexed enquirers "the light that lighteth the world."

A gift every CHURCHMAN reader might make this year to a friend that is troubled and tried.

The Church Hymnal Corporation (Acting for the Joint Commission of the General Convention) feels that it must do its utmost to fulfill the evident desire of the Church for congregational singing.

It has arranged for a third edition of 250,000 copies, to be offered on the following terms:

5% upon delivery

10% monthly thereafter

These terms apply to orders of 100 copies and upward received directly. Small parishes may secure the benefit of these terms by placing orders through their diocesan committee on the Church Pension Fund.

ROXBURY

A School for the Individual

SECONDARY school education is often a failure because it tries to fit all boys into the same mould. At Roxbury there are no forms. A boy may take exactly the courses he needs. He may take as many or as few hours of instruction as he may require in each subject. He may enter at any time during the year.

INSTRUCTION is in small classes of from 2 to 5—individual if necessary. The staff of 15 masters, nearly all former university or college instructors and assistant professors, are inspiring men and expert teachers. They first of all lay solid foundations, and teach their students to concentrate. Result—Roxbury's students do a remarkable amount of work—frequently two years in one—and do it thoroughly.

THE winter school admits 75 boys, none under 16 years of age. The summer school, with a faculty of 25, admits over one hundred. A branch at New Haven, F. C. Hesselmeyer, Ph.B., manager, with an additional faculty of 12, cares for the overflow from Cheshire, and specializes in college subjects.

THE complete equipment of a large secondary school. Campus and farm of 155 acres. All athletics, except football, under expert coaching.

ROXBURY has prepared 600 final candidates during the past 7 years for college entrance examinations. Of this number only 9 failed to enter college. Ask any school or university about Roxbury's record.

ROXBURY is an expensive school, because close personal attention and small class instruction mean increased costs. Write for an illustrated catalogue

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

BEGINNING AT JERUSALEM is the first of a series of four articles by The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell to appear in THE CHURCHMAN in succeeding issues. These articles deal with problems that immediately confront the Church. Clinton Scollard, author of the poem, "The Earth Call," has published many books of verse and has frequently contributed to THE CHURCHMAN. In response to a request from THE CHURCHMAN, Dr. Washburn has given us an article which answers many inquiries concerning the present program of the War Commission. The Rev. F. L. Carrington, LL.D., is the dean of St. Mary's College, Dallas, Texas.

BISHOP WISE'S PROBLEM

BISHOP WISE of Kansas, has a peculiarly interesting problem which is presented by the presence of four educational centers all of which minister to thousands of students. There are the state university and Haskell Institute, a government Indian school in Lawrence; the state agricultural college is at Manhattan, while Emporia and Pittsburg both have normal schools. Bishop Wise now has a clergyman at each of these centers and several times a year he meets with the four men to talk over problems common to them all. The Church is watching the experiment with a great deal of interest and already the good results of the plan are observed.

CHAPLAIN HORACE A. CHOUNARD

Through the courtesy of the War Commission this photograph of the late Chaplain Chouinard has just become available.

Chaplain Chouinard died in the autumn of cancer. "We like to think," says Dr. Washburn, Secretary of the War Commission, "that Chaplain Chouinard died in the service of his country quite as much as those who gave their lives in action overseas." He was ordained twenty years ago and served three parishes in Minnesota and Illinois before going into the army. He was with the 5th Infantry in Cuba and at Plattsburg, with the 23rd Infantry at Texas City, Galveston, El Paso and Syracuse, and then with the 1st and the 6th Engineers. He did his work well and men of all classes bore tribute to him after his death. He was one of the first chaplains to introduce moving pictures and bought his own machine for use in Cuba. He encouraged athletics and arranged for boxing-matches, skating, dances, baseball, etc. It was a great satisfaction to him to see the lines on which he had worked for so long taken up generally.

THE CHURCHMAN will gladly answer requests of its readers for information about advertisements.

Coca-Cola

Why Coca-Cola
is so refreshing

The refreshing quality of Coca-Cola, which has made it a favorite with the millions, is the result of three factors which are entirely natural and wholesome.

First—Coca-Cola is prepared with cold, carbonated water, which alone is quite refreshing.

Second—Coca-Cola contains natural fruit flavorings, which, with pure sugar, are very refreshing.

Third—Coca-Cola contains a purified extract from tea, called caffeine, which is both wholesome and refreshing.

Coca-Cola may therefore be described as "a cold, carbonated, fruit-flavored improvement upon tea, of approximately one-fourth the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

Coca-Cola is entirely wholesome, delicious and refreshing.

THE CALL TO PATRIOTISM

WE are likely, both in political circles and among those seriously concerned over spiritual matters, to hear much in the coming months about Americanization problems. Shallow appeals will be made to a shallow and indiscriminating patriotism, and very deep ethical appeals will also be made by those who have searchings of heart over tendencies that seem to imperil country and civilization.

Churchmen know full well the value of tradition. The historical perspective helps to steady the heart. There are some people in history who count for more than one. Washington did. So also did Lincoln. Why they counted for more than one it is important for us to know. Washington was a reformer. So also is Lenine. A sober study of history would reveal to some people why Americans have reason to reverence Washington and despise Lenine. Our type of patriotism, like our religion, is determined pretty largely by the heroes and saints we honor and emulate. Again and again in the stormy period of political controversy since the Civil War statesmen have evoked the name of Lincoln and Washington. The question, how would Washington, how would Lincoln have acted under the circumstances, has been the acid test of the wisdom of new policies.

One of the gravest problems which the New America (and who shall say that America is not a new America every ten years?) confronts is this: Is the nation to look for its spiritual roots in American history? Can the East Side Jew, hurling his conviction from a soap-box, be convinced that Washington and Lincoln have any message for him? Can we who pride ourselves upon being Americans by right of history insist that what Washington and Lincoln fought for shall be given a hearing by our hot-headed immigrants and our parlor Bolsheviks? Shall we not also lay it upon our conscience to see to it that the millions of quiet, gentle, well-intentioned immigrants who have come to our shores as a refuge from tyrannously hard conditions in the home land, shall every one of them be taught to read and write and speak English, that their children shall have an opportunity to know what the American ideal is, what the names of Washington and Lincoln connote in American life?

We have not done this. What we have spent on education is a drop in the ocean of what we waste recklessly elsewhere. The City and State of New York have never handled with intelligent patriotism the problem of education with which their large foreign population has encumbered them. Money is not provided in the budget to build schoolhouses enough for our children. They have been reduced to half sessions. Why is there not money enough? There is plenty to waste in other directions. But if New York City cannot afford to build schoolhouses, the nation might well provide it. The nation permits Europe to land its refugees by the thousands year by year at the port of New York. Here thousands of them stick. They crowd into our slums; poverty, crime and anarchy fester there and breed disease.

The testimony of Dr. Simons and Mr. Dennis before the Senate committee which is investigating Bolshevism in this country should make patriotic Americans thoughtful and ashamed. It is our fault, after all, that America sent to Russia the men who turned the wholesome revolution of March into anarchy. If our cities spent a quarter of the money which we raised so easily during the war for the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. on the Americanizing of our slums, we should not be anxiously investigating Bolshevism today. If we mistake not the signs of the times, America is in for the fight of her life. It is now the question whether progress is to come by means of peaceful, democratic evolution or whether we are to fall prey to sentimentalists and vicious revolutionists. Democracy places its trust in popular education. That means a good deal in America with our floodgates open to foreigners. But we invite those people here to work for us and enrich us by their labor. We must accept, therefore, the responsibility which their presence here involves.

The slum has got to go. The Churches in America might well begin a great campaign against the slum. America can be saved by education and the Christian religion. Names that are dear to us in American history, names like Washington and Lincoln and Roosevelt, must be made to mean something among the dwellers in our slums. The Christ must get to mean something more to all of us than He now means. "Putting down Bolshevism" is not the remedy. Preventing Bolshevism by teaching Americanism to our foreign population and the Christian religion in our churches is the only preventive of the thing that the Government at Washington and most of us have suddenly come to dread.

PATRIOTISM IS NOT ENOUGH

THERE are, it must be confessed, a good many strident voices heard in high places, which are proclaiming with pretty cheap intent, patriotism and Americanism. All that they are saying today after the world cataclysm, might have been said by the most shallow of political orators in precisely the same way twenty years ago. The war, apparently, has not taught them any new values or appreciations. Their nationalism is not mellowed by any higher international ethics than that which obtained in orthodox circles before the war. They appear not to see the need of any new spiritual impulses to energize patriotism and make it intelligent for the handling of our present problems.

An English contemporary states that the greatest saying of the war is that of Edith Cavel: "Patriotism is not enough." When statesmen the world over come to see that patriotism is not enough, the heart of the world will be ready for the sowing of the Christian seed. Why is patriotism not enough? Why is not love of country an effective solvent of all national ills and heresies? History answers the question. There has been no lack of patriotism in Germany. Our present loathing of Germany's nationalist doctrines ought to give us pause when we hear the many vibrant calls to patriotism. This virtue has its seamy side. We kept our eyes, during the war, pretty fixedly upon that seamy side as we held up for execration the mad sayings of German statesmen, preachers and professors. There are educators and officials among us today who are advocating an out-and-out Teutonic doctrine as regards our schools. They want to do for our American children precisely what the German schools, under government pressure, did for two generations of German citizens—teach truth with a political bias. It is being tried in New York City. It is being urged all over America. The very thing we hated and denounced as “made in Germany,” we are urged blithely to take over as an American principle of education. Heaven help America when the Government begins to instruct the schools how to teach truth! If we acknowledge the Government’s right to this interference, well may Germany say that spiritually speaking she has won the war.

The process of Americanization, the only patriotism that the new day demands, is one that has its roots in Christian nurture. We believe that in true Americanism there is an essential Christian ingredient. We believe that democracy has its roots in the Christian doctrine of the Incarnation. That is the type of democracy which America should strive to teach with all the output of energy and wisdom it can summon to the high task. It requires fine spiritual discernment to teach that type of patriotism and that quality of Americanism. It is not safe to leave the task to politicians and school boards. The Christian Church must stamp the great undertaking with its own message and interpretation. There is no time to be lost. The Church is best fitted to see the problem whole. If it fails to make clear its definitions now, it has lost, we believe, its great opportunity to mould democracy and to win its reverence and loyalty.

It is needless to say that the Christian doctrine of democracy has implications which some statesmen and patriots will not welcome into their program of Americanization. It includes, for example, principles which touch industrial justice. It touches critically the rights of property. It has a good many irritating suggestions to make to well accredited and orthodox patriots. It is not strange that these men do not see the full meaning of the issue. But it is strange that the Church is not doing more than it is doing to make them see it.

ON SETTING ASIDE SUNDAYS

SOMEWHERE in America, invisible to the naked eye, there is a power clothed with authority to set aside certain Sundays “to be observed” by the Churches for the promotion of good works. Where this power is lodged and how it functions nobody knows, but we have abundant witness to its ceaseless vigilance and tireless activity. From time to time rectors, church journals and the daily press are notified that on a certain Sunday the Churches throughout America will hear sermons and otherwise be instructed upon an appointed topic. The topic is always a timely and wholesome one. The most capacious critic, for example, could find no fault with one’s mother as a subject for a Sunday sermon nor could any but the most niggard begrudge one Sunday out of the fifty-two to be set aside as “Mother’s Sunday.” Whatever one would say about one’s mother in public would be edifying and unexceptionable. But what about father? Shall he have no Sunday devoted to his morals and memory? A good deal might be said and with emotion upon this subject. We shall refrain our thoughts.

What set us on the quest of the fountain of authority for setting aside Sundays was a clash of good works clamoring for the same Sunday in May. The first Sunday in May for some years has “been set aside” as Mother’s Sunday. One would have supposed that once having arrived in the church calendar that a Sunday sticks. No one, at least in the Episcopal Church, would entertain any fears that Quinquagesima or Whitsunday would be elbowed out of their positions by some new festival, climbing into recognition. But the difficulty with the new Sundays, recently inserted in the calendar by some central bureau, is that their tenure is precarious. Somebody forgets that they exist. This year, for example, Mother’s Sunday and Employment Sunday fall on the same busy day, the first Sunday in May. Did somebody blunder? Or are there two rival and competing bureaus, fully organized and doing business in setting aside Sundays? At any rate, May 4 has been set aside officially and authoritatively by somebody competent to act, for somebody cabled the President that “The church organizations of the country have united in an effort to assist the employment service of the United States . . . and have designated Sunday, May 4, as Employment Sunday.”

If anybody, however, suspects that a collision of Sundays can embarrass the setting-aside bureau, he underestimates the fertility of resources of such bureaus. “It seems peculiarly appropriate,” so runs the irenic announcement, “that on the first Sunday in May, which for a number of years has been observed as Mother’s Day, the Christian people of the United States should consider the welfare of the soldiers.”

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

IMPORTANT NOTICE

THE Government has repeatedly called attention to the fact that petty lawyers and unscrupulous politicians have been reaping large sums of money from the ignorant wives, children and dependent parents of injured or killed soldiers. This is criminal profiteering. The Government will pay all insurance or allotment money due any relative of a soldier without the intercession of a lawyer. The only stipulation is that the applicant fill in the proper questionnaire prescribed by the War Department, and this form may be obtained at any time by application in writing to the Treasury Department, Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Would it not be advisable for every rector to give publicity to this fact within his parish? He might be the personal adviser of every person too unfamiliar with government routine to understand the details of this measure. To do this it would be necessary for the rector to obtain a copy of this form, and familiarize himself with its questions. Write for Treasury Department Form 527, and make it generally known among your people that you will lend assistance in obtaining blanks and filling them in. THE CHURCHMAN upon request will be glad to furnish these blanks to churches.

FINDING JOBS FOR THE SOLDIERS

SOME weeks ago we called attention to the bulletin issued by the Joint Commission on Social Service, entitled The Church And the Homecoming Man, in which the general question of re-employment of soldiers is discussed. The situation has become graver since this bulletin was published, because of the failure of the last Congress to pass the Emergency Deficiency Bill which would have enabled the United States Employment Service to maintain its 750 offices at that time established. The lack of funds made it necessary to reduce the number of those offices to 55, but through the assistance of churches, organized labor, welfare associations and benevolent citizens, 400 of these discontinued offices have been re-opened.

Meantime, the task of finding suitable employment for returning soldiers and sailors demands the active co-operation of all patriotic citizens. Members of the Episcopal Church should be requested to report to the nearest office of the United States Employment Service their employment needs.

Sunday, May 4, which has been designated Employment Sunday, would be a suitable day for all rectors to give a notice regarding the employment problem. The Joint Commission on Social Service (281 Fourth Avenue, New York City) will, upon application, assist with advice and literature.

DR. SELBIE ON THE INTERCHANGE OF PULPITS

THE Church Times of April 4, published in full an address on Christian union made by Dr. W. S. Selbie, principal of Mansfield College, Oxford. No one better than Dr. Selbie can speak for nonconformists. On the subject of reordination he is firm. "It is assumed," he says, "in many quarters that before reunion can become possible ministers of the Free Churches must submit themselves to reordination. Now I understand that there are some ministers who feel that that would not be an impossible thing. I cannot say that I share that feeling. One of the old Puritans who was questioned regarding ordination, said: "It hurts my conscience; it hurts my understanding; for no thing can have two beginnings." I venture to think that that settled the question. It certainly does for me, and I believe it does for the great mass of Free Church ministers. Unless our ministry, which has been approved and, we may hope, sanctioned by the Holy Spirit of God through its works, unless that ministry can be recognized as a genuine ministry of the Church of Christ, I do not see how reunion can be expected.

On the interchange of pulpits, Dr. Selbie speaks with wisdom and common sense.

I do not believe that interchange of pulpits, by itself, would be of the slightest use. Nobody wants to see a kind of "general post" among the pulpits of the land; and we of the Free Churches are not thirsting to get into Anglican pulpits, or, indeed, to have Anglican preachers to preach from ours; we are quite happy with our own preachers, though we would cordially welcome any distinguished stranger from any Church who was a loyal and true servant of Jesus Christ. What we do feel is that it is a very sad thing that this very interchange should be held to be impossible. It is the barrier to it that we object to; not that we are eager for the thing itself; it can only be at best an occasional thing; and yet the fact that it cannot take place even occasionally seems to us to be something that is altogether contrary to the spirit of Jesus Christ. Among ourselves there is, of course, no difficulty, and it is because, I think, that the matter is so easy among ourselves that we are perhaps sometimes a little indifferent to the general question. Last Sunday, as it so happened, I preached in a Wesleyan church, and during the week I have preached in a Baptist church; but I have not felt inclined, in either of those churches, to tell the people that I was a Congregationalist, and that it was a very wonderful thing that I should be there; there was no need at all to apologize, either for one's existence or for one's particular Church. The whole thing was taken as a matter of course on the ground of our common Christianity.

Just so!

THE CONGRESSIONAL FRANK

THE New York Sun continues to hammer the government printing scandal. In the days when Dana wielded authority in the old building at Nassau and Spruce Streets, when the Sun made up its mind to go at a scandal, something generally happened. We wish our neighbor success with the government printing office. Representative Alvan T. Fuller has paid his respects to this abomination. One can hardly credit the statements which he recently made on the floor of the House.

"One of our congressmen a while ago desired to have his name considered in connection with the governorship of his state, with the result that he conceived the idea of sending out a nice collection of books to the voters of his state. He sent out 640,000 parcels of books in one day, and upon inquiry at the post office I found that the postage would have been to ordinary mortals forty-five cents each a parcel. It is a simple matter in arithmetic to see that 640,000 parcels at forty-five cents apiece cost Uncle SAM over $300,000 for postage. Of course, the cost of the books themselves would be greatly in excess of this amount."

Mr. Fuller recalled, as did Mr. West, that the commission consisting of Charles E. Hughes, A. Lawrence Lowell and Harry A. Wheeler which investigated the mail franked out by Congress in 1908 reported that in one year members of Congress sent out one-fortieth of the whole mail of the United States. A member so inclined can waste a million dollars of the public's money in flooding his district with speeches, books and seeds.

During the war when newspapers were scrimping to save paper, the Government went gaily on with its wide margins and useless documents. The Department of the Interior is helping to fill the waste paper baskets of the country day by day with unreadable publications. Just now we are consigning educational surveys to the scrap heap. We vote to give some of this money, wasted in government printing, to—well, what's the use, politics is politics.

ARCHDEACON GREIG RETURNS TO ENGLAND

THE Archdeacon of Worcester sailed on the Adriatic Monday for England, after a stay of several weeks in America. He has been a welcome guest among us. The Church Family Newspaper of England expresses surprise at this, for Englishmen suppose that America is partial to more glamorous gifts of speech than those which the archdeacon possesses and that we receive coldly methods of presentation so simple and direct as those employed by Archdeacon Greig. We can assure The Church Family Newspaper that oratory has long been in ill favor in America. The men who are most profoundly influencing the Church are men of plain and direct utterance. Simplicity in speech is now received among us as a sign of sincerity.

Archdeacon Greig has addressed many audiences, preached and conducted missions since his coming. Everywhere people have heard gladly his strong Christian message. It has been good to have him here.

SATURDAY NIGHT SERMON

How May I Know What Is the Bible?

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

And God said, "Let there be light," and there was light.
Genesis 1:3.

I AM an educated pagan. And you come to me with a little volume and tell me that there is connected with it a wonderful story; that down there in the South Sea Islands there were cannibals, and that some men at the risk of their lives, carried this volume to them; and that then, up around that book there grew homes, and just across the way the schoolhouse, and over there the church, and that people who had dwelt in fear, learned to dwell together in love and peace; and that what has happened there, has happened in many other places. And I become interested.

You tell me that it is called the Bible because bible means book, and because this is pre-eminently in all the world, The Book—The Bible. I open it and find that instead of one book there are sixty-six. I learn further that these were written by different men, during a period of fifteen hundred years or more.

Then I, an educated pagan, ask a question. I say, "I have heard of this book though I have never seen a copy, and I know something of your church history. I know about what your people term the 'Dark Ages' when for centuries this book was in manuscript form, before printing was invented, when it was kept from the people, in the hands of ignorant and perhaps designing priests. How do I know but that they took out some of the books which ought to be there, or altered their contents? How may I know what is the Bible?"

Well, how? Begin with the Old Testament, for that was all the Bible there was in Jesus' time. Suppose, a thousand years from now, someone shall wish to know how many articles there were in our Constitution of the United States in 1919. He will do just what we must do now. He will turn to some historian who was living at the time.

Here is this Old Testament. It contains thirty-nine books. Did it contain just that number and those same books, when Jesus said "Search the Scriptures, for they are they which testify of me?" How shall we find out? Just as the future historian would find out concerning the Constitution of the United States. We turn to some literary authorities who lived in the days of the Apostles, and there we find evidence as old as the gospels themselves. Josephus, himself a Jew, born about the time of Jesus' crucifixion, enumerates them, and they are the same.

But we have other evidence. We know it by the corroborative testimony of many consecrated Christian men who lived before the period of the Dark Ages; men whom we term the early Christian Fathers. They were converts from paganism, and with the zeal of converts they very early began to study this question of the canonical authority of the Old Testament, and we have received from them, catalogues of the names of these books, and they are exactly the same as those we have.

But further—and here perhaps is the most striking fact of all—and to any fair-minded man, it would seem that it must be conclusive:—Ever since the days of Jesus Christ, the Jews and the Christians have both possessed these books. Differing in so many things, and watching each other with a cautious eye, they have never differed on this: that the books which we speak of as the Old Testament were all of them included therein.

Now do you see how difficult it would have been for one party to have made any material alteration without the other party's discovering it? Suppose there were suspended here a string of pearls which both on account of their intrinsic value and of their history, you and I valued more than we did our lives. Suppose we both claimed that string as ours and spent our days and nights in watching it intently. Do you think it would be within the range of possibilities for either one to take away from that string or add to it, without the other knowing it?

Thus it is as well established as anything can be that when you open your Old Testament, you are reading the very records to which the disciples referred when after Jesus' resurrection, they said of Him, "Did not our heart burn within us as He talked with us by the way, and opened unto us the Scriptures?"

The canon of the New Testament has been established with equal care, though space will not permit to enter with detail into the presentation of the evidence. It is established by historical testimony. It has been said that if every copy of the New Testament in the world, were destroyed today, we could replace the whole tomorrow, by means of the quotations from it, to be found in the writings of the early Fathers.

But I, an educated pagan say again:—"I learn that these sixty-six books which I hold in my hand and which you call the Bible, were not printed from original manuscripts; that these were destroyed in the early persecutions of the Christians, long ago; they are simply reproductions of copies of those manuscripts. How do I know that they are correct?"

And then you answer my question with another. You ask, "How do you know that the translations of Homer are correct; or of Livy, or Caesar or any of the ancient classics? Not one of their original manuscripts are to be found. These books are printed from copies of copies." But scholars have discovered perhaps a dozen manuscripts of one of these books, and they have compared these ancient manuscripts among each other, and from them, a version has been prepared, and it is accepted by the whole learned world.

Now instead of a dozen different manuscript copies of the New Testament, we have fifteen hundred of them to use for comparison. Scholars who have devoted their whole lives to the study of the Greek language, have spent years in comparing these fifteen hundred copies, and this has resulted in the Revised Version.

And here follows a most remarkable fact: that though as we might have expected, errors have been discovered among these fifteen hundred manuscripts, copied by hand as they were, before the invention of printing, these errors are chiefly totally irrelevant, like the neglect to cross the t or dot the i, and that though there are many thousands of these varieties of renderings not a single Christian doctrine has thereby been destroyed.

Thus we may safely trust the Old Book; we may safely take it for our guide, exclaiming with the psalmist, "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against Thee!"

BEGINNING AT JERUSALEM

BY THE REV. BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

WE have often been told that if the Apostles had been content to stay in Jerusalem until they completely converted it Christianity would have perished as a Jewish sect instead of becoming a world religion. It is, however, equally true that if they had disobeyed the Lord's injunction to convert the world, beginning at Jerusalem, they would have become a scattered, inarticulate and fast-perishing enthusiasm. When Antioch got in a muddle it was able to send back to the people who had remained strongly on the job at home for guidance and direction. Furthermore, if St. Paul had spent all his time hunting up new mission fields and never revisiting and shepherding the missions already founded, half his greatness would be wanting. In missions, as in everything else, from housekeeping to international politics, great vision of opportunity must be combined with a considerable amount of statesmanlike husbanding of resources already at hand and intensive development. One trouble with the Episcopal Church has been that her leaders have been so carried away by high devotion to world vision that they have forgotten that we ourselves are, nationally considered, still a mission Church.

In most even large cities west of Ohio there is not a single Episcopal church. Men never see the type of Christianity we represent. Over and over again men at Great Lakes have told me that I was the first "Episcopal preacher" they had ever seen. Scores of them had not even heard that there was such a thing as an Episcopal Church. Our religious registration, carefully taken for a year now at Great Lakes, shows that of these mostly mid-western boys 21 per cent are Methodist, 16 per cent Lutheran, 9 per cent Baptist (including the Christian denomination), 6 per cent Presbyterians, and barely 2 per cent Episcopalians. Those having less men than us have been such as the Jews, Mennonites, Mormons, Christian Scientists, etc. The reason we have so few is that, while other bodies have been working hereabouts, with men and money, we complacent Episcopalians have been playing with the problems of domestic extension.

There have been, to be sure, great leaders sent to the West; men of heroic mold like Chace and Kemper and Breck and his companions, and Whipple, in the old days, and lately men like Bishops Funsten and Brooke; but the Church has not backed them up. Probably few churchmen know the absurd sum that Bishop Brooke was given to initiate his work in bounding Oklahoma. One year the Presbyterians spent ten times as much in one town as our Board of Missions spent in the entire district. There is a great Presbyterian work as a result. What Brooke did, he did despite overwhelming obstacles.

Occasionally one reads in the church press grave discussions about why the Church is so weak in the West. There is but one real answer, namely, that the Church has consistently refused to place big men, with enough to support them, at the command of the leaders, sent out to direct our districts and dioceses there, who have worn themselves away amid bitter disappointments bravely concealed. These missionary bishops we have even forced, often, to come cringing back, with pride in pocket and work left untended, to beg crumbs from parish to parish, lest the important work they had been commissioned to do should actually perish of inanition. No wonder we have few Episcopalians in the West.

We have seen another result at Great Lakes. Not only are there few of our men, but those few are much unshepherded. Interest has been expressed that we should have presented 340 men for Confirmation in a twelve-month. Further facts about them are even more interesting. Three hundred and ten of them registered when they came in that they were Episcopalians by preference. Of these all but a score came from the Middle West. Over half of these 290 men had never had anyone to prepare them for the bishop before coming to camp. They wanted to be presented. They hadn't had a chance. They came from places where there was either no church, or from churches so irregularly and inadequately shepherded that Confirmation classes had been practically an impossibility. Over and over again we have been unable to transfer them, when confirmed, to rectors back home for further care, because there were no rectors there.

Realizing the seriousness of this situation, we have made inquiries. What was the matter with these places? Why were they not better manned? The answer has been so uniformly the same that one may call it the universal answer. It usually runs about like this:

"Well, chaplain, some years back a few of the people in our young town got together and asked for help in starting an Episcopal mission. It was started all right and a man sent to be rector; but somehow the folks up top seemed to think we ought to pay all the support at once, right off, and we simply couldn't till the new man had spent some time getting things under way. Meanwhile the man couldn't live on his salary and shoved off. Then there was nobody, and the new mission kind of petered out. Then another man came. They gave him 600 iron men, and that was about his value. About then another denomination came into our town, with a whale of a man. They paid him 2,000 bucks, and he earned it. Most of the money came from their Missions Board for the first few years. Meanwhile our man quit, tired of being busted all the time. Then the folks up top sent a student to practise on us. Now, the folks out our way didn't give a whoop, you understand, what kind of religion they tied up with, except that the man in charge had to have the stuff in him to put over his kind strong. The other crowd did pretty well. They were self-supporting in three years. We still are doddering along, no stronger than we were ten years ago. Most of the time we have no rector. When we are vacant, we get mostly students. When we do get a regular minister, he either is some sort of a nut or a well-meaning incompetent, or else he chucks us because he's broke long before he gets a chance to make good. We're in a pretty hopeless mess."

Facing this fact, perhaps some one may say: "Well, what of it? If in the Middle West we are to have no strong Episcopal Church, what's the difference, as long as the Middle West has the other kinds of churches." Permit us to say that at Great Lakes we have found that the others are not able alone to handle the situation. The West needs just that sane, straight, simple, concrete, quiet, sacramental religion which our Church stands for. There is an increasing number of people, especially young people, who do not get much out of Protestantism as commonly presented. They have tired of its standardized methods. Revivalism is dying out. Liberal abstractions leave them cold. We know the truth of Bishop Reese's forceful statement to the last General Convention, where he said there was a unique opportunity and an especial usefulness for the Episcopal Church in the Middle and Far West in the next generation.

We know it. We three have had more than we could do to talk with men of every sort of religious training, and none, who wished to speak with us of the things of God and of how to save their souls from futility to Eternal Life. We did absolutely no proselyting. We sought them not. They came to us, came because our message was different from anything they had found at home. We believe there is great need for the Church to be strongly presented in the Middle West, as the only possible antidote for that scepticism which is being manufactured wholesale in those great higher schools, the like of which is unknown anywhere else in the world, which are educating the young manhood of the West. Apparently only rational sacramentalism can save this growing class in the West from irreligion. Both Roman priests and Protestant ministers, alert to the problem, have urged to us that the Episcopal Church is the one great needed body in this vast heart of America. And still we are hampered by a mistaken missionary policy which, with the best of intentions, is so interested in work across the seas that it forgets its vital duties at home.

We are certain, all of us here, that these are facts and not opinions. It seems unbelievable that for much longer things shall be permitted to go on as they have. There must be, surely there will be, a complete reorganization of our missions policy in these days of reconstruction. Perhaps it is too much to expect the undertaking, all at once, of a great missions campaign at home. It is only decent, however, that we should determine to support and put permanently on their feet, the struggling dioceses, missionary jurisdictions, stations, hospitals, schools, orphanages, and small churches which we have already founded. To do this adequately in our home field (exclusive of the Philippines, Cuba, and other places which are not domestic missions at all save by a fiction of the Board of Missions) the sum of at least two million dollars a year for five years will be required.

Of course this sounds like nonsense to the man who has never seen the facts as they are. It is really a very low figure for reasonably maintaining what we have and rendering it self-supporting.

Thesis: As a thankoffering to God for victory this Church should initiate, at General Convention, a great movement looking for the adequate support of home missions, a movement which should involve first the formulation of a really statesmanlike home missions policy and second the raising of two million dollars a year for five years, beginning in 1920. To insure this, only those men should be elected to the board who can be depended upon to think in national terms. The Board of Missions should be instructed to pay all members' traveling expenses to meetings, thus insuring a really representative attendance. The Board of Missions should be further instructed to leave foreign missions as they are, with no extensions, until 1925, by which time we shall have somewhat gotten our own house in order. Finally, legislation should be adopted insuring that the board follows instructions, a thing they have several times conspicuously failed to do. Thus the American Church shall show her appreciation of the fact that God loves midwestern Americans as much as He does orientals, and also of the fact that Jesus told His followers to convert all the world, beginning right at home.

THE EARTH CALL

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD

FAIN'T and far at first I heard it from the spaces of the dark,
When the host of stars assembled in the midnight's mighty arc;
Then it mounted with the morning, stirred my mind and bade me hark.

And I knew it for the Earth-call from the vital source of things,
A reveille to awaken to the hills and vales and springs,
And it throbbed and grew in volume like the rushing of great wings.

And its word was to the cornlands, and its word was to the wheat;
There was warning in its message, there was tremor in its beat;—

"See, the children of men suffer, and there must be bread to eat!

"For the air is filled with rumors, for the air is dark with dread,
Where behind War's bloody footsteps lie the windrows of the dead;
And, lest rise a ghastlier terror, those still living must be fed.

"Here, on fields unscarred, untrampled, must the fertile seed be sown;
Here, in generous abundance must the harvest yield be grown;
Here must be a vaster reaping than the land has ever known.

"Hence the Earth-call of the Mother to the loam and to the clod,
To the tillers and the toilers lest Death smite with deadlier rod;
Hence the Earth-call of the Mother, which is but the voice of God!"

LARGER SALARIES FOR CLERGYMEN

BY A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

Here are the details of a practicable plan now being operated in the Diocese of Newark, which may revolutionize the pay systems of the Church. A study of conditions in the Province of the Mid-West, included here, shows that the situation in Newark is a typical one, and that the ministry does not pay a living wage. If plans such as this are adopted everywhere, the stimulus, and resulting benefits, will be one of the greatest things that have occurred within the Church for years.—Editor.

WHAT may eventually prove to be a practicable plan for alleviating the evil of "poor pay" for the clergy is the system recently originated, and now being tried out as an experiment for the year 1919, in the Diocese of Newark. The idea arose in the Church Club, an organization representing the laymen of the diocese, and it must be stated that the fate of such an undertaking in any diocese rests first upon the existence of an enthusiastic and well-organized association of this kind. A committee of twenty-five representative members was chosen to draw up the initial program. Of these, three of the most willing were selected as an executive committee, whose duty it was to study out the administrative details and put the scheme into operation. The committee proceeded to gather data and study the situation. It was found that certain ministers deserved assistance, others did not need it, and on a carefully thought-out basis of apportionment it was computed that $14,640 was required to guarantee the plan for one year. Then the committee was astounded at the ease with which the money was raised. No campaign was necessary—indeed, so little publicity was employed that the plan is still a secret. Almost every contributor approached gave, and gave most enthusiastically.

The very healthy basis of the idea is that it is absolutely a layman's movement, and one which is conceived to stimulate an interest in the matter of ministers' salaries which will tend materially to increase their average. This is a day of organization and business analysis. People do not want to starve the clergy, or make of it a prohibitive calling to all except the rich. Yet very few laymen know in actual figures what the average salaries in their dioceses are, and nobody makes the effort to find out for them. The bonus, which it is the purpose of the plan to confer upon ministers with very low salaries, is to be raised not only by subscriptions from the wealthier members of each parish or mission, but in each case, where assistance is found necessary, it is the purpose of the committee to ask that parish or mission to pay a proportion of the bonus decided upon. The committee will study each instance, and apportion the assessment according to the locality's exhibited power to contribute. In this way, it is thought that at least one-third of the $14,640 necessary will eventually come from the parishes and missions themselves, and the surplus in the fund will be saved to begin the work of the ensuing year.

The prospectus of the scheme, as drawn up by the Newark committee, is given below. Certain details adopted later are not included, such as the fact that payments, both incoming and outgoing, may be made semi-annually. Curates and assistants are not benefited by the system, as they are considered in the light of apprentices not yet fully entitled to this recognition. Also, clergymen who have private independent means, and those who have special employment outside their parishes or missions—such as teachers or editors—are not to benefit. In other words, every precaution is taken to make the entire plan a healthy, sound, well-organized, carefully computed business proposition, increased in efficiency by the enthusiastic solicitude of those in authority for the individual personal merits of every case they study. The undertaking recommends itself as a model to be watched and emulated in all dioceses throughout the church world. That such a workable plan is painfully necessary is obvious. That this may be a most practicable and successful development of the idea it is to be devoutly hoped. Following is the text of the announcement as the laymen of the Diocese of Newark conceived it:

HELPING THE CLERGY—THE NEWARK PLAN

There are canonically connected with the Diocese of Newark 165 clergymen. A number of these are non-parochial; some are retired, some rectors emeritus, some are chaplains, and some engaged in teaching or other good pursuits. We have accurate statistics concerning the salaries of 127 of our clergy actively engaged in church work. The average annual stipend is $1964.89. Dividing into groups for financial classification, there are twenty-one who receive less than $1200 per year, twenty-six from $1200 to $1499, twenty-five from $1500 to $1999, twenty-two from $2000 to $2999, eleven from $3000 to $3999, twelve receive $4000 or more.

The Church Club, representing the laymen of the diocese, proposes to extend financial assistance to those clergy in the diocese who receive less than the average stipend. The plan is to give in 1919 to all those whose stipend is less than $1200 a bonus of 20 per cent., to those receiving from $1200 to $1500 a bonus of 15 per cent., and to those from $1500 to $2000 a bonus of 10 per cent.

To do this will cost $14,640. The plan proposed contemplates securing subscriptions for this amount. The administration of the fund will be placed in the hands of a small committee who will take up with the laymen in each parish or mission, whose clergyman is to be benefited, the question of the local congregation's participation in the plan. It will offer to the local congregation the bonus stated, upon the condition that the local congregation will itself contribute its just share toward the amount. Every congregation will wish to do all it can, and the amounts thus received will be part of the total sum expended.

The plan cannot be put into operation until the total sum is guaranteed, but it will be seen that those who subscribe in the beginning to the fund will receive back part of the amount given by them if the undertaking is not continued another year; how much cannot be told in advance.

It is thought wise to try the plan out for one year in an experimental way, and it is believed that the effect will be permanently advantageous.

It is hoped that this plan will commend itself to the judgment of the lay people of the diocese, and that those who are able will give generously to the guarantee fund. The high costs of living press heavily upon everyone, but the clergy who work in the missions and the smaller parishes are faced with a peculiarly difficult problem. Their congregations cannot increase their stipends adequately, but their needs are as great as those of their brother clergy who serve parishes whose financial resources are greater.

The value of the analysis in the Diocese of Newark as a constructive suggestion is indicated by the fact that conditions there are typical of, if not even a little better than, the average throughout the country. This is proved by the following study of salaries in the Province of the Mid-West, showing the condition on February 1, 1919. Similar studies are being made in the Provinces of New England and the Pacific, but the fact is already only too plain that the ministry does not provide a living wage. Such information as this, however, inducing systematic plans of action similar to the Newark plan, are bound to remedy the situation.

In the Province of the Mid-West there are 578 posts filled.

Of these 578 posts 5 were filled by clergymen* who volunteer their services; 11 were filled by laymen; 562 had salaries provided as follows:

PEACE WORK OF THE WAR COMMISSION

BY THE REV. HENRY BRADFORD WASHBURN, D.D.

The work of the War Commission continues at high pressure. With the exception of Bishop Reese who has returned to his diocese, and who will give the commission only a part of his time hereafter, the office force remains the same. It was thought that with the signing of the armistice the work might possibly diminish. Such, however, is not the case.

At present there are 91 commissioned chaplains overseas supported with monthly discretionary funds, averaging about $50. There are 25 commissioned chaplains in the navy, connected either with war-ships or with transports, many of whom are receiving monthly discretionary funds of $50 apiece. In this country there are 37 commissioned and 38 civilian chaplains. Almost every one of these commissioned chaplains is being financially assisted, and practically every one of the civilian chaplains is having his salary paid by the commission, and is also given a discretionary fund for work among the soldiers.

A number of the camps in this country have already decreased in size. Permanent camps and demobilization camps have created interesting problems in their immediate neighborhoods. The soldier does not care to stay within the limits of the camp any more than he can help. The neighboring parish, therefore, has suddenly become the most valuable centre of work. The War Commission is financing the war work in many such parishes either in whole or in part.

There is still strong demand for equipment:—Portable altars at about $70 apiece; Corona typewriters at $50 apiece; motor cars at about $550 apiece; Soldiers' and Sailors' Prayer Books in large and small quantities.

Bishop McCormick sailed on March 29 for France via England. He will attend to the work of the commission among the soldiers and chaplains overseas. He will make visitations among the troops and he will see that the chaplains are properly financed and equipped. In other words, the Paris office will continue to do much the same work as heretofore.

The commission is supporting the war work of the affiliated organizations.

The Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is still registering the names of churchmen in the service, having 90,000 names already on its list and attempting to secure the full 125,000 names. Its secretaries are in the demobilization camps, keeping the local churches and the ministers in touch with the soldiers. Some of the secretaries are assisting the clergy on welcoming and employment finding committees. In fact the Army and Navy Department is working harder than ever and accomplishing as much as if not more than at any time in its history.

The War Emergency Committee of the Girls' Friendly Society is placing able secretaries in the field to examine opportunities for work. It is also equipping and maintaining highly useful lodges and rest rooms for girls in centres created by the war. Present conditions have increased rather than decreased its responsibilities.

The Church Periodical Club is meeting calls from chaplains, Brotherhood secretaries and others at work among soldiers and sailors. Such calls cover recent theology, standard books about the Church, prayer cards and picture cards for the sick, lantern slides, wall pictures, band music, games and puzzles and magazines. Chaplains on transports and in the army of occupation make heavy demand for magazines. The C. P. C. will continue to send books that will keep the chaplains in touch with life and thought at home, and to supply books for returning men intending to study for holy orders.

The St. Barnabas' Guild for Nurses with the assistance of the Rev. Thomas J. Crosby, who is now meeting the returning nurses in the same spirit of thoughtful co-operation as that with which he met the nurses going overseas, is doing valuable work in the City of New York. There are not only many thousands of nurses in good health going through New York on their way to their homes, but there are 1,000 army nurses on duty in government hospitals in the greater city, as well as nurses who are patients.

The Church Mission of Help has secretaries at work on the local problems created by camp neighborhoods. It will shortly place more secretaries in the field for preventive work. It purposes to safeguard girls unprotected by family ties, to send out a trained instructor to talk on sex hygiene to mothers and daughters, to act on committees interested in problems arising from the general situation, to continue the law enforcement work now carried on and to extend this work to other centres.

The Joint Social Service Commission is undertaking the examination of centres created by the war emergency fleet and is studying other problems of an industrial nature created by the war.

The Seamen's Church Institute has broadened the scope of its interest and is now preparing to make a national demand for seamen's institutes, realizing that the problem of the Church concerns the sea as well as the land.

In these ways the War Commission is called upon to finance and to encourage work of an important nature. It would seem as if the work carried on by these organizations were even more important now than it was during the time of actual hostilities.

If sufficient money is obtained from the Church the commission will send chaplains about the country to impart to the clergy and laity the results of their religious experience, and to confer with them as to the policy of the Church in its attitude toward the homecoming men. The commission regards this duty as one of primary importance. Its fulfilment depends upon the generosity of the Church.

It is of utmost importance that every minister and every layman and laywoman should realize that the war is not over, that thousands of men are still overseas, that thousands are still in the camps, and that thousands are just returned to their homes.

The war created certain immediate demands, the armistice has continued many of these and has created others. The Christian Church should be aware of the critical nature of the situation and should see that it is properly met.

THE CHURCH AND THE GIRLS' SCHOOL

BY THE REV. F. L. CARRINGTON, LL.D.

THE Church possesses a number of schools and colleges for girls and young women which for many years have been doing a useful Christian work. These institutions represent the investment of a large sum of money. They are monuments to the heroic labors and mendicant pilgrimages of devoted bishops who had the true missionary vision. They are also our present-day reminders of the service and frequent sacrifices of faithful churchwomen in time past.

In many instances the history of the establishment of these schools is a romance of faith, and hope. Their halls are graced with the portraits of earnest women who, by reason of their love for the Church, counted it a joy and privilege to give liberally of their substance for the erection of those institutions. Most of these portraits are from twenty-five to sixty years old. There are very, very few modern ones among them. This means that in the past two decades church schools for girls have not been so richly blessed with benefactors as of yore.

There are other indications, so marked that those who run may read, of the schools' lack of generous, wealthy friends in these modern days. Painters, decorators, builders, carpenters and house furnishers looking upon them yearn to make estimates. Due to the taste and wisdom of their founders the schools are generally located amidst beautiful surroundings. The walls are solidly built, and all pertaining to the buildings indicate that the founders believed they were establishing a work that should endure. They never dreamed that the living would break faith with the dead, that their spiritual descendants of the first and second generations would suffer such sacrifices and labors to have been in vain.

It is well, indeed, that those of our Church who appreciated the necessity and importance of Christian education built as they did. Had it not been so, long since would the walls of many of our schools have crumbled into irreparable decay, and halls of instruction become habitations for owls. As it is, not a few of our educational institutions bear today the marks of a shabby gentility. They are institutions with wealthy, aristocratic connections which have fallen upon evil days, and for their poverty and distress are now looked upon with cold, disapproving condescension by friends who could reestablish and rehabilitate them if they but would.

The present generation of church people is not prepared to give liberally for the preservation and development of Episcopal schools, nor even to give meagerly to repair the inevitable ravages of use and time. Let those who are familiar with the handsome buildings and splendid equipment provided for the modern high school, or those who know aught of the care given by other religious bodies to their schools, visit two or three of our church schools for girls which have a history extending over thirty years, and they will lament that a Church with communicants of abundant means should permit her schools to struggle against overwhelming odds, handicapped from the outset by buildings long out of date and an equipment that served its purpose a quarter of a century ago. The wonder is that the majority of these schools have survived to this day.

Are we to understand that the church school for girls and young women has outlived its mission; or that the faith we profess is no longer of sufficient account for us to take as effective means for its propagation as are being diligently pursued by all other denominations? We visit Roman Catholic, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian schools and are surprised at the number of church children in attendance there. Is it any wonder the complaint is made that our young men and women are not so much interested in the Church as we might wish? The parents of these children explain that our own schools are not equipped with modern comforts and conveniences, and they must secure the best for the minimum expenditure. It rarely occurs to them that our schools are as they are for the reason that these same parents do not give for the maintenance of church schools as do their neighbors for the support of their denominational schools. A comparison of the contributions made by the Church last year for the support of her schools with those made by the smallest denomination in the United States would be distressing. In one state last year two denominations raised a million dollars each for educational institutions within the state. In the same state where we have three schools, church people gave less than $400 for a like purpose.

To those who question the value of church schools, the strenuous efforts made by all other religious bodies to increase the number of their schools are a sufficient rejoinder.

Some well-known church schools for girls closed last year. It is generally known that most of the others are fighting for dear life. The great strides of educational standards and requirements the past ten years, together with economic conditions the past four years, have brought their affairs to a crisis and hastened the day of dissolution. Such a day is inevitable for several of our church schools, unless "something be done." Because something must be done and that quickly this article is written. It is folly to continue longer with the Micawberian hope of expecting something to turn up.

Churchwomen should understand that they have a direct responsibility for the support of church schools for girls. Our women of means who give so liberally to other causes should feel that our educational institutions are entitled to their benefactions. The line is no longer drawn between home and foreign missions. Church schools are as necessary in some parts of the United States as in China and Japan. The home fires must be kept burning. The church school is a missionary agency. Boys and girls are brought into the historic Church who would never have been reached in any other way. Every branch of the Woman's Auxiliary should make a study of and give contributions to church schools for girls. Henceforth, women are to take a more active part in the affairs of the nation. It is obviously our pressing, present duty to take steps to increase and strengthen such agencies as we have which are calculated to influence the women of the future.

One efficient school being of more value to the Church than ten inefficient institutions, we should seek at once to place our church schools upon a proper financial and educational foundation. No time should be lost in appointing a competent official in connection with the General Board of Religious Education, whose task this should be. Schools disadvantageously located, and those hopelessly inefficient or financially involved beyond reclamation, should not be encouraged to remain open. An emergency fund for modern equipment should be raised to meet the immediate necessities of schools that are doing good work and have reasonable prospects of rendering valuable service to the Church.

Our schools for girls have suffered in the past because of their independent and separate existence. Overworked bishops, in addition to heavy diocesan responsibilities have often been compelled to bear single-handed the burden of the maintenance and management of a school. There should be formed an Association of Church Schools for Girls which should center around an institution equipped to do full college or university work. There is no reason at all why the Church should not have her own college for women, just as we have the University of the South for men. One of our present institutions might easily be converted into such a college. The other church schools should be required to affiliate with the college and to provide uniform and standard preparatory courses of study. This would immediately raise the standard of the schools and remove a reproach often made, though sometimes unjustly, against them.

With the organization effected, an appeal might be made to the women of the Church throughout the country to provide a moderate endowment of $100,000 for the college, and an additional $100,000, the income from which should be distributed by the college authorities amongst the preparatory schools affiliated with it.

Such a plan need not be difficult to adopt. Its details could be worked out at a meeting of the heads of the schools. If the women of the Church will take our girls' schools under their protection the future of the institutions will be assured.

MEDITATION

TO know, that no matter what cataclysms shake the earth, that no matter what tempests of hate and cruelty blast and scorch the souls of men, that no matter what floods of tears are shed and what cries of anguish are sent heavenward; that no matter how many hearts and bodies are shattered and broken; to know, that no matter what unutterable suffering and sorrow the pride, passions, ambitions and sins of men bring upon themselves and their fellows, that underneath and beyond all are the Everlasting Arms of an Infinite Love and Mercy, yearning and waiting to heal all wounds and to guide to paths of peace and righteousness; that there still stands, unshaken by any fury of hell, the blessed Rock of Ages, the sure Foundation of our hope and faith, upon which we may yet build a fairer and a better and a truer world—to know all this is indeed to have the peace that passes all our understanding, and to have the power to enter into the true joy of our Blessed Lord and to experience fellowship with Christ.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

WHEELS OF NATION-WIDE CAMPAIGN BEGIN TO TURN

Organizers Hold Setting-Up Conference in Washington

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Plans for the Nation-Wide Campaign were considered at a conference of representatives of the federal agencies of the Church and a few parish clergy who have had exceptional experience in the methods to be used in the campaign, held here on April 24. Bishop Lloyd presided, and the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell, manager of the central campaign office, was appointed secretary. After prayer had been offered by Bishop Lloyd, the Rev. Robert W. Patton, D.D., national director of the movement, outlined the scope of the campaign. This, he said, was to bring the spiritual power of the Church to bear upon the Church's whole task; to obtain and to train an increased and adequate number of people for Christian leadership, both clerical and lay; to care for the financial needs of all the general agencies and to care for in consultation with the proper authorities the financial needs of all the dioceses and missionary districts of a missionary, religious educational, or social service nature. To this end a definite organization had been formed and definite duties had been assigned to the various committees and to the director.

Discussion that followed Dr. Patton's outline led to the adoption of the following resolution, which was presented by the Rev. C. C. Rollitt, D.D., of Minneapolis:

Resolved that this conference recommend to the Board of Missions that the campaign executive committee be enlarged so as to include a representative each of the General Board of Religious Education and the Joint Commission on Social Service.

At present the campaign executive committee is composed of the president and the treasurer of the Board of Missions, Miss Grace Lindley, Dr. Patton and the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell.

The organization of the central campaign office was explained by Mr. Mitchell. Embraced in this organization will be a field department, and, for want of a better word for the moment, what Mr. Mitchell called an interpretation department, a publicity department, a survey department, and a service department. When Mr. Mitchell described his office as a clearing house for the various diocesan committees, the Rev. George Long, of Warsaw, Illinois, interrupted to inquire whether it would not be possible for the central office to work through the provincial organizations. Discussion on the point led to the adoption of the following resolution, which was offered by Mr. Long:

Resolved that where a province is effectively organized for the purposes of this campaign, the central office may work through the provincial organization as far as practicable.

Mr. Mitchell then went into the plans for a survey of the needs of the whole Church—its spiritual needs no less than its physical wants.

A call to the members of the conference asking the active assistance in the campaign met with hearty response. Nearly every member present accepted and already the Rev. J. D. La Mothe, of the Church of the Ascension, Baltimore, and the Rev. William H. Milton, of St. James Church, Wilmington, North Carolina, have been released by their parishes for an indefinite period so that they may work with Dr. Patton.

THE VICTORY LOAN

The following resolutions in regard to the Victory Loan were written by Bishop Lawrence as chairman of the War Commission:

BY the valor of our men, the devotion of our chaplains and the public spirit of all our people the Church has done a noble work in the war.

Patriotism does not end with the war and honesty demands that the cost of liberty be paid.

The patriotic and liberty-loving people of the Church will therefore subscribe to the Victory Loan.

The General War-Time Commission of the Churches has also passed resolutions approving the loan.

THE General War-Time Commission of the Churches, representing twenty-seven communions, heartily endorses the Fifth Liberty Loan. It urges every minister and every member of every congregation to support the Government in its attempt to bring to a conclusion the great enterprise so energetically begun and so successfully continued, and to fulfill all the obligations of the nation in completing its task. It hopes the Christian Church will express its patriotism by a generosity even greater than that manifested in the previous Loans.

Two Bishops Decorated

The King of Greece has conferred the decoration of an officer of the Order of George the First upon Bishop Greer, Bishop Darlington and Dr. Thomas J. Lacey of Brooklyn, because of the friendly attitude of these clergymen towards the Greek Church.

Bishop Brent Sails from France

A cable from Bishop Brent received in New York on Monday last by Stephen Baker, Esq., says that Bishop Brent sailed from France homeward bound on April 27.

KOREAN MISSIONARIES IN NO DANGER, SAYS DR. BROWN

Missionaries Are Not Responsible for Uprising in Chosen

The recent excitement in the Far East, due to the movement for independence in Korea, is not placing the foreign missionaries in imminent danger, asserts Dr. Arthur Judson Brown, author of the authoritative analysis of the Korean problem entitled The Mastery of the Far East. Dr. Brown is secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church, and he states that his office is in direct communication with the American consul-general in Seoul, and the American ambassador in Tokyo. These competent representatives are well able to look after the interests of Americans in the unsettled districts.

The reason for apprehension among friends and relatives of the missionaries in this country was that charges had been published accusing the missionaries of being responsible for the uprising in Chosen (Korea), but the Japanese-edited Seoul press calls this idea "preposterous." In view of the delicacy of the situation, however, friends of the missionaries are being warned that no communications from these missionaries should be published without explicit authority, for if they should become identified with the revolt, rightly or wrongly, "they would render it extremely difficult for the American Government to protect their interests as American citizens resident in a foreign and friendly country." Dr. Brown states that Americans should co-operate with the best Japanese elements to bring in better conditions.

City Missionaries Meet

On Tuesday and Wednesday in Easter Week, a most interesting conference of city missionaries was held under the auspices of the Joint Commission on Social Service in New York City. Representatives from Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Trenton, Newark, and a number of other cities were present. Round table discussion was the order of the day. The conference opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion at the Church Missions House and included a luncheon at Greenwich House and a visit to the institutions on Blackwell's Island. As an outcome of the conference a national council of city missionaries was formed and Dr. Wm. H. Jefferys of Philadelphia was elected president.

English Visitors Sail

On Monday, April 28, last, three distinguished English visitors to the United States sailed for home on the Adriatic, the Rev. J. H. Greig, Archdeacon of Worcester, whose mission preaching has made such an impression in the East, Miss Lucy Soulsby and Father Kelley of Kellem who has spent a short time in this country on his way from Tokyo.

BALTIMORE SOON TO START CATHEDRAL CAMPAIGN

Nave Will Be Built First and Will Seat 4,000

BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—The biggest campaign for funds that this city has ever known, aside from the Liberty Loan campaign, is to take place this fall when an effort is to be made to raise $5,000,000 for the erection of the great cathedral on University Parkway. The campaign will be carried on with all the usual machinery of such operations, and every effort will be made to reach every person in Baltimore and throughout the state who may be in any way interested or who ought to be interested. There will be an experienced campaign manager in charge, with the necessary staff of assistants and volunteer workers.

The preliminary campaign, in which it is expected to get in touch with possible contributors to the $5,000,000 fund, may last a couple of months. This will be devoted to urging the desirability of the project and its importance upon the people of the community. Then there will be about a month of a campaign for subscriptions and a month in which the money for the cathedral will be collected.

Construction is to begin with the nave and transept which will seat 4,000 people and which will cost approximately $2,000,000. The sanctuary and the choir, which will seat 500 persons, will wait, as will the chapels, the synod hall, the diocesan residence and office and library.

THE REV. F. D. HOSKINS DIES

Had Served at Important Posts in Four States

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—The Rev. Francis David Hoskins, formerly of Hartford, died Easter Even in Philadelphia. He was born in Philadelphia and was the son of Francis and Anne (Higginbotham) Hoskins. He was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1854 and studied at the Theology Seminary in Virginia. He was ordained in 1862. He was rector of St. John's Episcopal Church at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, from 1861 to 1864; Grace Church, Honesdale, Pennsylvania, 1864 to 1866; Christ Church of Towanda, 1866 to 1869; Grace Church, Elmira, New York, 1869 to 1882; Trinity Church, Swedesboro, New York, 1882 to 1884. He was warden of Seabury Divinity School at Faribault, Minnesota, from 1884 to 1888 and rector of St. John's Church, Brooklyn, New York, from 1892 to 1895. He had been corresponding secretary of the Society for the Increase of the Ministry in Hartford since 1895. He was also examining chaplain of the Diocese of Connecticut.

Vermont to Increase Clerical Stipends

BURLINGTON, VERMONT.—Bishop Hall has appointed a committee of twenty to create a central diocesan fund for Vermont to meet the need for increased clerical stipends in the diocese owing to the increased cost of living. This action was taken in view of a resolution adopted at the recent convention of the diocese.

COOPERATION

IN the last year or two our nation has made good in willing and working together. It has won the whole world's acclaim. Is not its success a challenge to the Church and its members to will and work together? The Church is the whole body of the faithful who believe in Jesus Christ as God the Son and want to love and serve Him.

A portion of the faithful body is known as the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. The good thing of willing and working together may well be commended to it. In the main it has willed and worked together very well, theoretically. The unimportant break only of the Reformed Episcopal Church has happened. The Protestant Episcopal Church shaped itself into unity in 1789, side by side with the constitutional birth of the nation's unity. To no small degree the same persons wrought the two shapings. It preserved its unity through and after the sad Civil War. There is an American mould and an American harmony in it quite remarkable. It has chosen and commissioned missionary bishops for eighty-four years. It has framed its great Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society to be an alter ego of the Church,—to be indeed the Church itself in missionary make up and missionary activities.

Yes, theoretically this Church has been well fashioned and adjusted unto the desirable willing and working together.

Now, it is planned to change theory to practice. No, not that either. We do not want to change. What we want to do is to add practice to theory in earnest effort of willing and working together.

May I not humbly but stoutly sound the slogan?

Gather to the colors of the Nation-Wide Campaign. Summon the men. Call the women. Forget not the children. Discipline the recruits. Furnish the munitions and supplies. Speak to American churchmen that they go forward.

More humbly still, I invoke upon the Board of Missions and all their helpers in the Nation-Wide Campaign the guidance and grace and blessing of Almighty God.

The Son of God goes forth to war.
The American Church goes with him.

GRACE CHURCH, PROVIDENCE, WILL HAVE FREE PEWS

Action Taken Easter Monday Follows Parish Questionnaire

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.—By vote of the corporation of Grace Church, Providence, on Easter Monday, the church is now to be a free church. The action was taken after a questionnaire had been mailed to all pewholders requesting their wish. The vestry's recommendation of this action is contained in the following statement:

"The vestry is strongly in favor of free pews in the parish of Grace Church. They believe that in spite of the many appealing arguments in favor of private ownership and control of pews, and with due regard to the associations that cluster around the pews themselves, such ownership is inconsistent with the present trend of public feeling upon which the church largely depends for the continuance of the privileges which it enjoys.

"We believe also that such ownership renders impossible the atmosphere of welcome and equality which should envelop the house of God. In our opinion, Grace Church, situated as it is, in the very centre of the city, and regarded, as it has come to be regarded, as almost the cathedral church, should be open in every part and at every service to all who desire to worship within its walls."

NEWARK PRESBYTER DIES

The Rev. J. S. Miller, Rector of House of Prayer Since 1889

NEWARK, N. J.—A priesthood of more than fifty-two years was ended April 24 by the death of the Rev. John S. Miller, rector of the House of Prayer here. "Father Miller" was stricken with appendicitis at four o'clock Easter morning at the rectory. He was removed to St. Barnabas Hospital, where, after the Holy Communion had been administered, an operation was performed. This was pronounced successful and for two days following the priest's condition was regarded as satisfactory. His advanced age, however, made it impossible for him to withstand the shock, and he died on Thursday morning.

Throughout Holy Week Father Miller conducted the services at the House of Prayer. He spent all of Saturday in the church but when evening came the strain of the day made itself felt and appointments had to be abandoned.

Father Miller was the senior clergyman in Newark where his rectorship extended over thirty years. He was loved not only by those to whom he ministered and with whom he was associated in diocesan activities but by the many who came under the influence of his personality. He exerted at times a powerful influence in civic life, and for his simple, whole-hearted and self-sacrificing devotion to the members of his church, and his loyalty to Christian standards, he gained the admiration and esteem of clergymen of all creeds. His own ideal for a priest was expressed in his attitude toward his people.

JAFFA GREATLY CHANGED DURING ENEMY OCCUPATION

Germans Destroy Orange Gardens to Make Boulevards

Jacob E. Spafford, whose letters from Palestine describing the changed conditions have been published from time to time in THE CHURCHMAN, writes from Jaffa as follows:

We find great changes in Jaffa. The Turks had dug a trench in front of a house and had carried it through the wall into the next street; this we filled up. We see many houses abandoned, with shutters and doors gone. Yet considering that Jaffa was evacuated, the loss of population is perhaps smaller, proportionately, than in Jerusalem. Quite a few of the orange gardens perished during these years of war, through inability to water them, there being no petroleum, and in many cases the Turkish authorities having taken away the machinery. Up to this time there has not been much exportation of oranges, on account of lack of steamers; some have been sent to Egypt. Lack of transportation also makes the sending of them to Jerusalem difficult, so they are rather high in price. They are selling there at about fifty cents the hundred. We have sent a load of 4000 up to Jerusalem and for the first time since the war, we will be making marmalade.

The Jaffa people had a tyrant of a persecutor here at the beginning of the war, whom they are hoping the adjusters of matters will be able to bring to task and punish for his misdeeds. We heard much in Jerusalem at the time about buildings being pulled down and streets being widened and now are astonished to see what great changes have been wrought. As in Jerusalem, nothing has been finished. The pulling down has been accomplished but not the building up. You may not be able to visualize it, but all the obstruction between the road coming in from Jerusalem and the sea, has been removed, and is a great improvement, though the loss to the proprietors has in no way been compensated. Again a wide boulevard has been cut through the orange gardens.

In the end all is for the best, but the poor fellows who happen to fall under the knife find little compensation. This boulevard was to be called Jumal Pasha's. Hasan Bey was his notorious vice-regent here, he was going to signalize himself by constructing a wonderful mosque to the north of Jaffa, no matter what he robbed, cemeteries, etc. There it stands a monument of disgrace, to his eternal shame, unused.

RED CROSS HOME SERVICE HAS TRIANGULAR PROGRAM

Government plans for the rehabilitation of the disabled and crippled soldier have three essential points, physical repair as far as possible, compensation and re-education. The machinery for working these plans is effective and competent. But, as in most undertakings which embrace so many, varied personal problems, there are frequent cases which the Government's efforts cannot reach. To supplement the program of the official organization, and care for such instances that escape the usual treatment is now the idea of the Red Cross. For example, many convalescents, becoming impatient with delay and inspired by the hope of an early return to their homes, are able to persuade their busy hospital guardians that they are well enough to be discharged. They return home, only to find they are not as fully recovered as they thought. Then it is the turn of the Red Cross to lend the helping hand, for treatment of some of war's wounds should cover long periods.

Assistance in the matter of compensation, on the other hand, is largely a matter of maintaining a bureau of information at centrally located points, where competent advice may be given to those entitled to receive Government war risk insurance relief. Such bureaus are being organized as rapidly as possible all over the country.

Regarding vocational re-education, likewise, the aid of the Red Cross consists mainly in finding and advising those entitled to such privileges, and persuading them to take advantage of their opportunities. This, it is needless to say, the Red Cross is turning its huge war organization into accomplishing as rapidly and thoroughly as possible.

CHRIST CHURCH, BOSTON, COM- MEMORATES PAUL REVERE

BOSTON.—In the north aisle of Christ Church, on pew 54, there has been placed a tablet with the following inscription:

REVERE PEW

Paul Revere's Son

Joseph Warren Revere

Bought this Pew in 1808

It is still Owned by His Descendants

On Good Friday evening after Evening Prayer and an address by the rector, the Rev. W. H. Dewart, Colonel Edward L. Logan, of the 101st Infantry, made an address and placed the lanterns in the hands of Miss Pauline Revere, great-granddaughter of the patriot, who carried the lights down the aisle and "To the belfry chamber overhead" as is the custom on this anniversary.

Protestant Ministers in Washington Church

WASHINGTON, D. C.—During Holy Week at the noon-day services the Rev. Dr. R. H. McKim invited leading and representative ministers of other Christian bodies in this city under authority of the bishop, to speak at the Church of the Epiphany. The themes were appropriate to the season, the men, vested in doctor's academic gowns, spoke with devotional feeling and real power, and a great impression was made on the large congregations. The speakers were Bishop McDowell of the Methodists, Rev. Dr. J. J. Muir, of the Baptists, Rev. Dr. Earl Wilfley of the Disciples of Christ, and Rev. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe of the Presbyterians.

Yale School of Religion Convocation

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT—The tenth annual convocation of alumni and other ministers met at the Yale School of Religion from April 28 to April 30, in connection with the Lyman Beecher lectures which were given this year by the Rev. John Kelman, D.D. on "The War and Preaching."

INDEPENDENT EASTERN NATIONS COMMEMORATED

Would Restore Church of St. Sophia to Original Owners

A meeting to commemorate the independence of the eastern nations was held at Synod House, New York, on April 7 under the auspices of the General Convention committee on relationship with the Orthodox Churches and the Anglican and Eastern Association. Bishop Darlington presided.

Addresses were made by Bishop Burch, Rabbi Joseph Silverman, the Rev. J. N. Mendelhall, D. D., of the Presbyterian Church, Bishop Luther Wilson of the Methodist Church; Rabbi Mendes of the Spanish Jewish Church, the Rev. Chas. M. Macfarland, secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, the Very Rev. D. Kallimachis of the Greek Church, and Bishop Alexander, the acting archbishop of the Greek Church in America. The following resolutions were presented and authorized to be submitted to the President at the peace conference.

Representatives of the Christian and Hebrew Churches of America, assembled on Greek Independence Day, in the Synod Hall, of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, have passed the following resolution: WHEREAS the Hellenic race has, from remote antiquity, been the chief civilizing agency in the East; WHEREAS the Greek Church has, for centuries, heroically resisted the demoralizing influence of Mohammedanism; WHEREAS the Church of St. Sophia has long been throughout the East a symbol of Christian worship and of Greek unity. BE IT RESOLVED that we endorse the memorandum presented by Mr. Venizelos at the peace conference, as a conservative and moderate expression of the minimum claims of Greece. BE IT RESOLVED that we believe that the Greek Orthodox Church is deserving of the sympathy and co-operation of the churches of America in their national aspirations. BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that we hereby petition for the restoration of the Church of St. Sophia to its original and rightful owners.

Upon learning that no clause assuring religious liberty was incorporated in the compact for the League of Nations, the following resolution was also submitted and authorized to be sent to the President: BE IT RESOLVED that we support the insertion in the compact for the League of Nations of a clause guaranteeing everywhere perfect freedom in all matters of religious belief.

DENVER.—The last Sunday in March was the thirty-first anniversary of the musical directorship of Mr. Houseley in the Denver cathedral. The choir presented him on this occasion with a gold chain, and the dean issued a leaflet containing a list of his musical productions, which it is probable exceed any other musical writer in the country. It is largely due to Mr. Houseley's faithfulness in duty that a service whose complexion is worship rather than performance has been maintained with high musical excellence and at a quarter the cost of many less acceptable services.

PHILADELPHIA

The Best Easter in Years.—In response to the repeated question, "Had you a good Easter in your parish?" there is but one reply. Everywhere larger congregations, more enthusiastic services, and more generous offerings marked the day than for years past. Lent was rather disappointing in most parishes: but Holy Week began the promise that was remarkably fulfilled at Easter. The children of the Church of the Holy Apostles had an increase in their great lenten offering of $1,600. The church had the largest amount given at the morning service in years. One reason for this may be found in a group of men who are behind the rector in seeing that 100 men attend service, and that all organizations reach at least that number in the parish. Bishop Rhinelander confirmed a large class and preached at old Christ Church, the one place in the diocese where there is a regular plan for confirmation on Easter Day. Bishop Garland celebrated the Holy Communion at the early service at Epiphany, Germantown and confirmed and addressed the children's service at Overbrook in the evening.

Three Chaplains Back for Easter.—The Rev. Dr. Jefferys, of St. Peter's Church, who has been abroad with Base Hospital, No. 10; the Rev. T. C. Cline, of Grace Church, Mount Airy, who was chaplain with the 19th Railroad Engineers; and the Rev. John H. Chapman, of St. Paul's, Chestnut Hill, who was chaplain with the Jefferson Hospital Unit, No. 38, have all returned to their parishes in time to share the joy of Easter. The people of the diocese are looking to them for many addresses on their experiences overseas. Chaplains Booth and Lane have led us to realize that the clergy served and saw much, and can give a graphic account of it all.

Germantown Convocation.—On Tuesday in Easter Week the convocation of Germantown met at St. Bartholomew's, Wissinoming, where the Rev. Azael Coates is ministering. The preacher at the morning service was the Rev. Gilbert B. Pember, of St. Michael's Church, Germantown.

Of special interest was the report of work done at St. Barnabas', the church for colored people, in Germantown. Mr. Thomas has served in his present parish for twelve years, and is able to see and show a very real growth. The convocation learned with real appreciation that Mr. Thomas had refused to go to the care of the work in the Virgin Islands, and will stay in his useful place here. Bishop Denby confirmed a class of twenty-five at his recent visitation at St. Barnabas'. The Every Member Campaign had been a great success there, and the hope was ventured of self-support in the near future. During Holy Week there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at six each morning, and the attendance varied from twenty to sixty. The early hour was set that the people might worship before going "to service" in the homes of Germantown.

United Offering Service.—On April 2, the women of the diocese filled St. Stephen's Church at the annual service when the United Offering of the Woman's Auxiliary was presented. Bishop Rhinelander celebrated the Holy Communion, Dr. Grammar preached a remarkable sermon on the ideals that consecrate offerings. At the close of the service the bishop announced that the offering amounted to $43,210.30. The doxology was sung, and prayers of gratitude were said.

Clergy in the Liberty Loan.—Bishop Garland is chairman of the committee of our clergy on the Victory Loan drive; other members are the Rev. Messrs. Richardson, Medary, Seymour, Walenta, Pember, Emhardt, Taitt, Moorehouse and Carter. Ministers of some of the denominations have spoken very strongly against the use of the government film, "The Price of Peace," on Sunday nights; some have even refused to help the loan. The pictures, however, were shown in several places on Easter night. IRVING A. MCGREW.

NEW YORK

Grace Church, Nyack.—The attendance at the services in Grace Church, Nyack, were the largest in the history of the parish. On Good Friday, the congregation at the Three Hour Service filled the church; and in the evening, when the choir sang Stainer's Crucifixion, more than two hundred people were turned away. The same was true on Easter. The new rectory will be ready for occupation about July 1 while the parish building which is being enlarged, will be completed about September 1. This building will be a memorial to the one hundred and eleven members on the parish honor roll.

Mr. Langdon's Philanthropies.—The death of Mr. Woodbury G. Langdon briefly noted last week, deprives the diocese of one of its most generous philanthropists. He was a liberal contributor to the charities of the Church of the Incarnation, and he had much to do in extending the Sheltering Arms Home for Little Children. In this and other similar institutions he was for many years the close associate of the Rev. Dr. Thomas M. Peters, formerly rector of St. Michael's Church.

He became treasurer of the General Theological Seminary at a critical period in its history and took a prominent part in improving its finances. The late Dean Hoffman was for many years his close friend and co-worker in charitable and educational projects. For many years he also was president of the Hospital and House of Rest for Consumptives in Inwood, which under his direction, became an ideal home for patients of all ages and creeds. He also was treasurer of the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee and surrendered that responsibility with reluctance on account of failing health. Among his associates, Mr. Langdon was known as an untiring philanthropic worker, and a man of great personal charm. The funeral was on Wednesday in Holy Week at the Church of the Incarnation.

Memorial Services.—At the cathedra St. James's Church, the Chapel of the Intercession, St. Thomas's Church, the Church of the Incarnation and in many other New York churches on Low Sunday services in memory of those who die in the service were held.

Women in Bedford to Vote.—Women will hereafter have a voice in voting for parish officers in St. Mathew's Church, Bedford. The right was granted at the Easter Week parish meeting and a certificate to this effect was filed with the county clerk.

BOSTON

Easter Day in Boston.—Easter morning after rain on every Sunday in Lent brought the sun which proclaimed the message of the day. The churches of Boston generally report very large congregations and increased numbers of communions. The total number of persons present at the cathedral services on Easter was over 4,000. Approximately 1,000 communions were made. In a typical suburban parish with 375 communicants on its rolls, the total number of persons present on Easter was 930 and 260 communions were made. But more than in numbers counted the spirit of the Easter devotion has been a silent testimony to the value of the Twenty Weeks.

Annual Meeting of the Archdeaconry.—The business meeting of the archdeaconry will be held at the cathedral rooms on May 2. This meeting will be resolved into the meeting of the Episcopal City Mission. The Rev. Albert Crabtree will deliver an address on "What the Church is Doing in the Prisons" and The Rev. Geo. Bently on "What The Church is Doing in the Hospitals." The public meeting will be at 8:00 p. m. and will be in recognition of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the City Mission. Bishop Lawrence will preside and the Rev. F. B. Allen will deliver an historical address. A naval band will play for twenty minutes before the service.

The Episcopal City Mission.—The young men of Trinity Church are planning an entertainment to be given in Jordan Hall, May 16, for the benefit of the Episcopal City Mission, and in celebration of the organization's seventy-fifth anniversary.

Dr. Van Allen Dons "Y" Uniform.—Early in May Dr. Van Allen plans to go abroad for six months' service among the American forces, acting under the commission of the American Y. M. C. A. It will be recalled that the invitation came to Dr. Van Allen several months ago, but with the approach of Lent he did not feel that he could accept the post until the spring. The Church of the Advent has granted him a leave of absence beginning May 1.

In the weekly leaflet issued at the Church of the Advent the rector has this to say of his trip: "I am especially glad to go in the 'Y' uniform, as showing my confidence in that great organization at a time when it has been much maligned and misrepresented. Doubtless, so vast a work as it undertook, afforded many points of legitimate criticism; but hateful bigotry and the contagion of cheap jesting are responsible for most of the attacks upon the 'Y,' I am convinced."

For Church Boys—An admirable constitution is recommended by the first Diocesan Boys' Club Council of the Order of Sir Galahad, held April 15 at Trinity parish house. Nineteen parishes were represented by twenty-five delegates. A final motion was made and adopted that this constitution, drawn in correct form, be recommended for adoption to a council meeting to be called May 8.

Plans for the Cathedral.—A cathedral for the diocese has come one step nearer to realization through action taken Monday in Easter week at the annual meeting of Christ Church parish in Hartford. Two years ago the diocesan cathedral trustees were authorized to invite Christ Church to become the cathedral. The situation, equipment, and activities of the parish are ideal for the purpose. The plan has been carefully worked out in detail to recognize and conserve the interests of all entering the partnership, the chapter being made up of the bishops and archdeacons, treasurer and chancellor, the dean and canons, and elected representatives of the diocesan convention, of Christ Church corporate, and of the cathedral congregation—a very square deal. The plan will be acted upon at the convention of the diocese in New Haven on May 21 and 22.

Plymouth Church to Be Consecrated.—St. Peter's Church, Plymouth, is to be consecrated on St. Peter's day. This old historic church, dating in its beginnings from the middle of the eighteenth century, was burned down at 4 P. M. February 27, 1915. Nearly everything was destroyed, including books, vestments, communion silver, etc. By the kindness of the Congregational church their conference room was used, and the first service (Holy Communion) was held there at 8 A. M. on the 28th. On February 6, 1916 the new church was occupied, a handsome structure of field stone, furnished completely within by the good offices of the parishioners.

Encouraging Offerings at Willimantic.—On Easter it was announced at St. Paul's Church, Willimantic, that the $2,000 needed to defray the expense of a new heating plant, has been raised. The rector raised $1,000 and the vestry the other $1,000. The Easter offering was almost double what the rector had asked for. The Rev. Walter F. Borchert is rector.

Holy Week and Easter.—Christ Church was crowded for the Three Hour Service on Good Friday when the devotions were conducted by Bishop Acheson. Easter Day the communions made at the four services exceed all records for the parish. Trinity and St. John's were among the other parishes which made new high marks in numbers. One need not discount the reports from Hartford as if the clergy were striving for numbers, for the pastoral care and personal preparations were never more thorough. St. John's appealed for $2,500 to meet a deficit and received $3,300. There was also an endowment gift of $1,000 in Liberty Bonds and a beautiful memorial processional cross. Forty girls from Simsbury School were in the eleven o'clock congregation. And on Monday night half a dozen city branches of the Girls' Friendly Society attended a great service of admission of new members, associates and seniors. At Trinity the great service was at half past six as usual.

The Bishop's Easter.—Bishop Brewster was at St. Mark's, New Britain, on Easter Day and expresses his pleasure in the progress of the parish which has recently become free from rented pews. Steps will soon be taken to begin the new church building. The situation is central and the space ample.

Services for School Children.—A week's school holiday permitted an hour's service for children every morning in Holy Week in West Hartford. The interest and work were perfect and the participants received Prayer Books, pocket Testaments, and sacred pictures as souvenirs of their attendance, catechetical "memory gems," and other work. Good Friday and Easter attendance exceeded all expectations.

PITTSBURGH

The Convention.—The convention met at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, on Tuesday and Wednesday in Easter Week. Besides the bishop's address, a summary of which appears below, notable addresses were made by Bishop Garland in regard to obtaining candidates for the ministry from among the returning soldiers and sailors, and by Dr. Patton in regard to the Nation-Wide Campaign. Resolutions on peace were passed, and also resolutions supporting national prohibition and calling upon Christians to co-operate in supplying a substitute for the saloon in the social life of the saloon's patrons. A whole evening was devoted to the report of the diocesan commission on social service and strong resolutions were passed urging the duty of class co-operation in an industrial centre such as Pittsburgh. The missionary report was also encouraging and provision was made for the appointment of an archdeacon to have superintendence of diocesan missionary work.

The Elections.—The elections resulted as follows: Standing Committee, The Rev. Drs. Vance, Hills and Brown, and the Rev. G. B. Richards, and Messrs. N. P. Hyndman, H. H. McClintic, C. S. Shoemaker and C. L. Snowdon. Deputies to General Convention, The Rev. Drs. Travers, Brown, Vance and Hills; and Messrs. W. A. Cornelius, C. S. Shoemaker, George C. Burgwin and E. S. Craig. Alternates, The Rev. Messrs. G. B. Richards, G. W. Lamb, E. J. Van Etten and F. Orr Johnson; and Messrs. H. D. W. English, A. L. Lowry, M. C. Adams and F. N. Thorpe.

The Bishop's Jubilee.—The celebration of Bishop Whitehead's jubilee of his ordination to the priesthood, his golden wedding and his seventy-sixth birthday, which was to have been observed on October 30, the birthday, but had to be postponed on account of his illness and the prevailing epidemic of influenza, was celebrated on Easter Tuesday at the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh. The service was brief, and was followed by a sermon by Bishop Garland, a native of Pittsburgh, and one upon whom Bishop Whitehead had laid his hands in ordination to the diaconate and priesthood, and in his consecration as bishop. An informal reception in the parish house followed the service, attended by representatives from all over the diocese.

The Convention Address.—The bishop in his convention address, first of all expressed his gratitude to God for his recovery to health, and his thankfulness for the kindness received during his enforced disability. Fortunately his illness occurred at a time of year when confirmation visitations are not very frequent, and when the prevailing epidemic which closed the churches had stopped almost all parish activities. The bishop did not indulge in extended remarks about the war, but exhorted the clergy and people to pray with studied devotion that unity, peace and concord may speedily come to all nations.

Many changes had taken place among the clergy, thirteen clergymen having been received into the diocese, and five removing to other dioceses. He welcomed the return of several who had been serving as chaplains in the army, or assisting in the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. work. He urged upon the diocese larger contributions for diocesan missionary work, and especially commended the plan of parish sponsorship, whereby strong parishes should assume the care, material and spiritual, of some mission.

Representation of Women.—He suggested that some consideration should be given by a special committee to the subject of women's representation in ecclesiastical assemblies, either by the erection of a house of churchwomen, or as representatives on committees, or as deputies to the convention. This matter was later referred to a committee, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. Tucker and Meade, and Messrs. Dahlinger, Adams and Lathwood.

Clerical Salaries.—With regard to increased salaries for the clergy, Bishop Whitehead said: "Suffer the word of exhortation with regard to the bounden duty of our vestries to increase the salaries of the clergy. The times are indeed hard and the cost of living high, but these assertions are even truer for the occupants of the rectory than for the people in the pews. The officials of every parish should esteem it a high privilege to remove anxiety from the clergyman's family, and make him free to exercise his ministry without financial burden. I see that our Methodist brethren of this conference have voted an increase all along the line. In the Diocese of Albany seventeen parishes have lately increased the salaries of their rectors."

"The Every Member Canvass wherever it has been tried in this diocese and elsewhere, has given strong evidence of ability to give and of willingness to increase the amount given to the support of the Church's ministrations."

"Moreover, there is every prospect of the advent of prosperous times in business. So there is no excuse for neglecting this evident duty of increasing the salaries of those who are debarred by their office from making money in commercial ways."

Memorial.—On Easter Day, at the Church of the Atonement, Carnegie, the Rev. E. J. Norris dedicated a handsome offertory bason of hammered brass, presented by Mrs. W. Allen, of Atlantic City, as a memorial of her husband, The Rev. W. E. Allen, who was rector of the church from 1902 to 1906.

CHICAGO

Death of Mr. Higinbotham.—On Good Friday Mr. Harlow N. Higinbotham, of Chicago, died in New York from injuries received in an automobile accident. The funeral was held on Easter Monday at St. Chrysostom's Church, the Rev. Norman O. Hutton officiating. Mr. Higinbotham was for many years connected with Marshall Field and Company. As one of the directors of the World's Fair, it was he who presented to the South Park Commission the three Columbus Caravals, which are replicas of the boats in which Columbus made his voyage across the Atlantic.

Mr. Higinbotham was very prominent in charitable work in Chicago. He was instrumental in starting the Chicago Home for Incurables on the South Side, and has always been one of its greatest benefactors. It was through him that Bishop Sumner when he was dean of the cathedral in Chicago, made the arrangement whereby the Chicago City Mission has charge of all the religious work done at that institution.

Result of Empty Attic Sale.—The "Empty Attic Sale" for the benefit of St. Mary's Mission House was held at 528 South Wabash Avenue on April 9, 10 and 11. There were no expenses, as the use of the store where the sale was held had been given, and over $2,200 was cleared for the work at the Mission House.

New Pastoral Staff for Bishop Anderson.—Bishop Griswold has appointed a committee of friends of Bishop Anderson to raise funds to purchase a new pastoral staff to be given him on his return from abroad. Mr. David Gibson is treasurer of the fund, and a number of gifts have already been received by him. Early in May the committee plans to make an appeal to the church people of Chicago, and it is expected that there will be no difficulty in raising the amount of money that is needed.

CHARLES L. STREET.

RHODE ISLAND

Good Friday.—A considerable number of the churches of the diocese now hold Three Hour Services. In Providence Bishop Perry conducted the service at Grace Church, the Rev. Philemon F. Sturges that at All Saints' Church, and the Rev. Julian D. Hamlin, the one at St. Stephen's Church.

Easter at All Saints', Providence.—A special feature of the Easter morning service at All Saints' Church, Providence, the Rev. Arthur M. Ancock, D. D., rector, was the dedication of a stained window in memory of all American soldiers and sailors who have died in the world war. It is the gift of the St. Andrew Chapter of the parish. The subject is the Crucifixion. Under the window is to be placed a bronze tablet bearing the names of six members of the parish who have died in the war. In addition, a window was dedicated to the memory of Samuel Anthony Hazard, as the gift of his sister, Miss Mary Hazard. The subject is Christ Blessing Little Children. Other objects dedicated were a pair of massive eucharistic candlesticks in memory of Mrs. Henry H. Field, and a set of altar linen, given by Miss Emily H. Sellev in memory of her parents.

Mrs. Barbour's Death.—The death of the wife of the Rev. James E. Barbour, of the Church of the Advent, Pawtucket, has caused widespread grief in many parishes of the diocese. Before her recent marriage to Mr. Barbour she had done effective work as a deaconess in St. John's Church, Providence, in the diocese at large as a diocesan deaconess, and latterly in the Church of the Advent before her marriage. In her long and painful illness she showed wonderful courage. Her winning personality had drawn to her countless friends who thronged the parish church at her funeral on April 15. Bishop Perry officiated, assisted by the Rev. George S. Pine. Many of the clergy were present.

New Rector for All Saints'.—The Rev. Frederick S. Penfold, D.D., rector of St. Luke's Church, Racine, Wisconsin, who has been serving as regimental chaplain with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, has returned to this country and has accepted the call he recently received to the rectorship of St. Stephen's Church, Providence. He began his duties there on Easter Sunday. Dr. Penfold was archdeacon and examining chaplain of the Diocese of Milwaukee, and prominent among the clergy of Wisconsin. He was in frequent demand as a speaker on many public occasions, and his work as a chaplain overseas was most effective. He will be a valuable addition to the clergy of Rhode Island, and, it would seem, a worthy successor to Dr. Fiske in the rectorship of St. Stephen's.

JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

COLORADO

The Lenten Program.—The lenten program has met with varying response and there are places that have no sense of spiritual responsibility which are weak and sickly and some are fallen asleep. But the attendance at St. John's Cathedral has numbered 500 to 900 every Wednesday evening. The bishop has preached. All this is gratifying in view of the many competing attractions on that night. The bishop conducted the Three Hour Service at Grace Church, Colorado Springs on Good Friday.

Bereavement of the Rector of Boulder.—It was a great shock to her many friends when Mrs. Hubert Walters recently succumbed to an attack of influenza, the more so because her husband was sick and helpless in an adjoining room. The burial services were held by the Rev. H. S. Foster who had prepared the lady for confirmation before she married the rector of Boulder.

St. Luke's, Montclair.—The bishop has appointed the Rev. A. G. Harrison to the charge of St. Luke's, Montclair, to succeed the Rev. C. W. Sprouse who has accepted charge of St. Mary's, Merriam Park, St. Paul, Minnesota.

GEORGE H. HOLORAN.

Rectorate of Thirteen Years.—The Rev. Ernest W. Simonson, rector of St. Stephen's Parish, Douglas, has just completed thirteen years of ministry in that church. He looks back with pleasure over the years as a period of constant growth characterized by absolute harmony between pastor and people. His many friends realize how important and influential a position he has held in the life of the growing city, and not only in his own parish. In fact St. Stephen's itself, through its rector's leadership, has had a fine influence in the community. This was especially evident in various ways during the influenza epidemic. In January Mr. Simonson organized a study circle which now numbers nearly eighty members, including many representative people of other congregations and of the city in general.

A Parish House Needed.—St. John's church, Bisbee, feels keenly the need of a parish house, which could be used not only for strictly parochial purposes but also as a place of meeting for the young people of the town, who have no proper gathering place. Although no definite scheme for securing the necessary funds has as yet been agreed upon, plans are being prepared and it is hoped that contributions will be received in the near future.

LONG ISLAND

Plan for Permanent Noonday Services.—Out of the noonday lenten community services in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, the Rev. J. H. Melish, rector, it is expected that a permanent organization will develop to keep the movement alive and possibly to extend it. There has been such a consistently large attendance, and such great interest displayed, that it is the desire of ministers and laymen alike to conduct the services again next year, and for that reason they wish to form a permanent organization of the most representative citizens of Brooklyn.

Confirmations.—On Monday, April 14, Bishop Burgess confirmed a class of forty-seven in the Church of St. Mark, Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn. This is the first class presented by the new rector, the Rev. A. L. Charles, and is the largest in many years. There were twenty-five men and boys, and twenty-two women and girls. On Palm Sunday evening the bishop confirmed a class of twenty-five at the Church of the Holy Trinity, the Rev. J. H. Melish, rector.

Women Vote at Church Election.—At the annual meeting of the Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn, April 21, the resolution of the vestry, that women be entitled to vote at all meetings, was unanimously passed. They at once used the privilege in the election of a warden and several vestrymen. Reports of various committees and workers were received, showing the prosperous condition of the parish, and addresses were made by Harold Rand, a member who was in the 27th Division, A.

E. F., and by Miss Josephine Sutfrin, who served in France with the Red Cross.

Grace Church Makes Good.—At Grace Church, Brooklyn Heights, the Easter attendance was the largest in years. The offering paid up the parish apportionments for both diocesan and general missions, being over $4,500. This parish also contributed over $60,000 toward the Church Charity Foundation fund of $500,000, collected during the week preceding Easter.

MISSOURI

Sister Miriam's Mission.—Five years ago Sister Miriam, who had been for many years a teacher in the Bishop Robertson Hall, having retired from her work as teacher, gathered a handful of waifs and strays in a little rented flat in the far north end of St. Louis, where no church influence was felt, and began to teach them the Catechism. Like Mr. Finney's turnip, "it grew and it grew." Sister Miriam moved the Sunday School from one hired hall to another until, two years ago, with the approval of Bishop Johnson, a good frame chapel was bought of the Presbyterians for $1,000. The children of the Sunday School, now sixty in number, brought $27 in their mite boxes on Easter Day for the Church's missions. The chapel which is in a thickly-settled part of the city, among operatives in mills and factories and railroad yards, has now been entirely paid for. There have been over thirty confirmations in the mission which is called the Mission of the Prince of Peace. Sister Miriam is now assisted in the work by Miss Emma A. Luther and the mission is under the pastoral care of the Rev. F. M. Weddell. Bishop Johnson celebrated the Holy Communion here on Easter morning.

Debt Paid.—Among the first reports to seep through since the celebration of Easter is one which comes across from the capital city that the people of Grace Church made an offering sufficient to pay off a debt which had rested on the rectory the past eight years. The rector, the Rev. George L. Barnes, asked for enough to cut the debt in two. But the people seem to have said, "Eventually. Why not now?" This is good news indeed from Jefferson City. There is no record of any such Easter offering in Grace Parish in the years gone by.

A Record Easter Offering.—From St. Augustine, Benton (St. Louis), comes the news that the Rev. Douglass H. Atwill had intended to ask the congregation to make an Easter offering of $400. The types got mixed up somehow and the printed letter asked for $500. The rector and vestry concluded to let it go that way, inasmuch as the error in printing was in the right direction. As we send this news letter to THE CHURCHMAN the total offering is reported at $475 "and still coming in." This is easily more than three times as much as any Easter offering ever given before at St. Augustine's. During the past year the people here have also cleaned up $400 long due on delinquent bills and expended for necessary repairs and have increased Mr. Atwill's salary $300.

ings for missions went over the top by several dollars and there are a goodly number of mite chests to be heard from yet. There was also a special offering of $250 toward the parish house fund.

Encouraging Reports.—A son of the rector of Rolla is in charge of Crystal City and Herculaneum, the Rev. H. N. Tragitt, Jr. He reports that lenten services at both places were attended with far more earnestness and devotion than usual, and by larger numbers of people. The mite box offering at Crystal City was twice what was asked for.

St. Timothy's, St. Louis, (the Rev. A. P. Rein in charge) sends word that it has secured during Lent and at Easter pledges and subscriptions and offerings sufficient to enable it to take up a note for $2,300 when it becomes due in May, thus relieving this young and vigorous mission of all debt and leaving it with an attractive combination parish house and a chapel and a beautiful corner lot on which it is hoped that a church may some day go up.

Your correspondent is hurrying on to you only such news as reaches him just as Easter is over. He hears a rumor that St. Peter's in St. Louis is to be consecrated by Bishop Tuttle shortly. This means that special efforts and successful ones have recently been made to clear away its debt. St. James', Macon, has lately provided a way to leave its new church building free of encumbrance and it is to be consecrated in May. Easter day in Missouri was bright and beautiful with birds and flowers and perfect skies. The services everywhere were attended by large numbers of people.

SACRAMENTO

United Service on Good Friday.—Good Friday in Sacramento was marked by a notable gathering of Christians of all types at the Three Hour Service. By invitation of Bishop Moreland, all the Protestant congregations united in St. Paul's Church on Good Friday afternoon. The addresses upon the Seven Words were delivered by representative Protestant pastors, the bishop himself taking the address upon the fourth word besides the opening and closing addresses. He made a tender appeal to all Christians to realize their oneness in the love of Christ, to minimize differences, avoid controversies and to try to understand and respect one another. The spacious church was densely thronged, so that many remained standing. The effect upon the Christian life and spirit of the community was marked for good and excited much favorable comment.

Easter Services.—Easter Day found the Sacramento churches beautifully adorned with flowers which were blooming in profusion in the gardens, owing to the advanced season. Bishop Moreland confirmed twenty-eight at St. Paul's Church, whom he had personally instructed and trained for three months previously, since the rector is still absent in France. The Rev. F. W. Crook conducted services in Trinity Pro-Cathedral, these also being largely attended.

Growth at Marysville.—St. John's Church welcomed the bishop on Palm Sunday with a full congregation and a class of eighteen for confirmation. The parish is renting temporary quarters for guild purposes, but plans to build a parish house soon. A new pipe organ has recently been installed. The Rev. Mark Rifenbark, the rector of St. John's, is president of the Standing Committee of the diocese.

Vallejo.—Ascension Parish depends upon the young life abounding in this naval base city to keep the parochial life active. The great Mare Island Navy Yard nearby provides much opportunity for service, but a changing population. The rector, the Rev. John Barrett, has trained his boys to take part in divine worship, and exerts a strong influence over many boys through his office of scoutmaster. On Monday in Holy Week the bishop was present and confirmed nine.

BETHLEHEM

Diocesan Convention.—The diocesan convention will be held in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre, on May 20. On Monday, the 19th, the rector of the parish is planning for a mass meeting at which several prominent speakers are to be present. Among them is the Rev. Alexander Mann, D.D., rector of Trinity Church, Boston.

General Seminary Association.—The Bethlehem General Seminary Alumni Association will meet on May 19 at 4 p.m. at St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre. The Rev. Alexander Mann, D.D., will be the guest of the association and will speak upon the subject of "Recruiting for the Ministry." The association will have dinner at the Hotel Sterling immediately after the meeting.

MICHIGAN CITY

The Bishop's Visitation to Howe School.—For years past Palm Sunday has been the time of the bishop's annual visitation to Howe School. This year the services of the day were impressively rendered and at the eleven o'clock service the bishop confirmed 37 boys.

The Advent Call a Lenten Call. In Elkhart the epidemic of influenza made it impossible for the women of the Auxiliary of St. John's Church to do their full part in the Advent Call. Therefore they chose Holy Week as their time for seeking that great spiritual power, which is the greatest force in the world. House to house visits were made on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons when prayer cards were given out. While the messengers were going about the town calling, intercessors were in the church offering prayers.

Deaconess Smith's Work.—Deaconess Smith at the direction of the bishop spent some time in Belleville. She is now in Cawker City and it is hoped through her energetic efforts increased interest will be evident in our work there.

The people of Belleville have made a pledge towards the priest's salary and expect from now on to meet gladly and willingly all assessments and apportionments. Belleville is rapidly increasing in population and the Church will undoubtedly share in the growth and prosperity of the town.

English Church News

The Church Press on Dr. Gore.—The comments of the church press on the resignation of the Bishop of Oxford have appeared since my note of last week. Most of them express both regret and relief, and all take occasion to write of his wonderful powers. The Challenge admires him most for his Christian idealism, his denunciation of secret treaties, his defense of the conscientious objector, and his friendliness to labor. "In America last year he did not allow even restive audiences to forget that he was a minister of Christ, and his advocacy of the League of Nations has been untiring." (I do not remember hearing of any "restive" audiences, but I suppose the Challenge is sure of its facts.) It thinks him mistaken in his objection to the baptismal franchise, and in his estimate of certain modern interpretations of the creed. But it rejoices that he will be able to devote more energy to the humanizing and Christianizing of industry. The Guardian thinks that his disappearance from the bench will be a calamity for those left upon it, but that the Church will suffer little, if at all, from the change. Yet it regrets the loss of his driving power in the church self-governing movement. His advice and counsel will not, however, be lost to the central, if informal, deliberations of the Church: he will not, for instance, "be excluded from the Lambeth Conference next year." The Guardian calls it a curious mistake on Dr. Gore's part to suppose that he will not be a member. I hope the Guardian is right, but if I remember rightly, it was held that a retired bishop must be engaged in episcopal work, not necessarily diocesan, if he is to be summoned.

Modern Episcopacy.—Both the Guardian and the Church Times take occasion to point out that modern conditions make excessive demands on our bishops. Dr. Gore was overweighted with the spiritual oversight of three counties, and severe things are said about the opposition, on purely sentimental grounds, to the division of the Oxford diocese, which had already worn out two bishops before their time. It was not surprising that he should have grown weary of "the never-ending labor, the daily scores of letters, the constant traveling, the innumerable interviews, the more than frequent committees." In the old leisurely days, our bishops neglected their dioceses, but had time to think. Our bishops now have very little time for leadership; we seem to expect in our bishops the bustling man of business, rather than the purely spiritual attributes. Sub-division of the dioceses is not in itself, the Guardian thinks, a full remedy; the bishop of the new and smaller diocese speedily becomes as busy as when he had to deal with a larger population. So it suggests that much of the bishop's routine and formal and office work might be transferred to the archdeacons. Unfortunately at present archdeacons receive a smaller stipend than many a curate, and so they have to hold a benefice or canonry to give them a living wage. The new central fund might find them a proper stipend.

The Archbishop Pleads for the Central Fund.—The Archbishop of Canterbury is fortunate in having enlisted the support of the Times in favor of the scheme for a central fund. In a half-column letter he points out that the new political, social, and industrial order must be built on a spiritual foundation, and that the Church of England must take a foremost place in the work. There are at least three things, absolutely necessary, which cannot be done without this new material support: the training of the 2,000 candidates who have offered themselves for the ministry, more adequate payment and pensioning of the clergy at present at work, and, thirdly, the training of school teachers on a definitely religious basis. Such things are beyond the powers of diocesan funds or special societies; nothing less than a general fund for the whole Church will suffice. And so the archbishop gives his official answer to the many opponents of centralization who have been making their voices heard. The Times strongly endorses the idea, and mentions that the King and Queen have subscribed to the fund.

The Age for Confirmation.—A new organization, which will make the E. C. U. sound almost humdrum and respectably "safe," has just been started for clergy only. It is styled the Federation of Catholic Priests, and is concerned to uphold the perpetual virginity of the Blessed Virgin, the bodily resurrection of our Lord, reservation of the Blessed Sacrament, the invocation of saints, penance and fasting communion, and catholic order generally. Some of its members have been active in the controversy about the service of benediction. In these broad-minded days there is no reason against a combination of those priests who are satisfied that they can maintain their position in our Church while holding such views. But one could wish that they would keep their hands off certain subjects which have no place in their program, and one of these is that of the best age for confirmation. Many people are advocating this on quite different grounds from those which the federation urges in a memorial which it has sent to the archbishops. To the federation the question is bound up with the other one of confession by children, with which it has no necessary connection. It is not surprising to find that an expert on this subject, Canon Anthony Deane, shows some resentment at the action of the federation in making this a "party subject." Common sense and experience, he says, must settle this question, and they are not the monopoly of any party. If indeed, he adds, the case for early confirmation is bound up with the doctrinal views of the federation, then cadit quæstio. Canon Deane then argues for a reform, which I think I have described formerly in this column, of which his very large experience in preparing candidates of the educated class has made him the advocate. He would have the confirmation itself administered to children when quite young. The children would have the help of the Holy Communion in their impressionable years. But the renewal of the vows of baptism he would have at the age of seventeen or eighteen, after another course of instruction. He believes that by this method the children would get the advantages which are urged on behalf of both early and late confirmation combined.

Dr. Dearmer in London Again.—We have Dr. Dearmer back among us, after his rich experiences in India and in America. He is as convinced as ever on the importance of art in our churches, and he lectured on his familiar theme at St. Martin's-in-the-Fields. We are encouraging base things in music, architecture, and decoration, and are too much under the dominion of the "correct thing." We should do better if we arranged our churches as we do our homes: which is what our catholic forefathers did. And we should win the people if we did this, thinks Dr. Dearmer. He adapts the famous saying of Abraham Lincoln to the circumstances of the church. A century ago the churches ceased to hold the people. "If we could win them without manifesting the goodness, the truth and beauty of God, we should be only fooling them. And you cannot do that all the time."

JAMES CAIRNS.

Wants European Episcopate Established

Writing in The Witness, Dr. George Parkin Atwater suggests that a wise move on the part of General Convention next October would be the establishment of a European episcopate. "Why could we not have a suffragan bishop to our presiding bishop," he says, "whose jurisdiction would be Europe? If this could be done the logical man for such a bishopric would be Dr. Samuel N. Watson."

Bolsheviki Suppress Music

The New York Times in commenting upon the concert given recently by the Schola Cantorum in Carnegie Hall cites what it calls "a striking illustration of what thug rule means in Russia, one of the most ardently religious countries and particularly famed for its church music." The program contained Rachmaninoff's "All Night Vigil." This was finished by him in 1915 during the war and only one copy of it has reached this country via England from which copy the performance was prepared. The composer who is now in the United States and who was present at the concert, tells of the marvelous performance by the choir of the Moscow cathedral. Church services are not permitted by the Bolsheviki and so it behooves lovers of religious music in other countries to keep alive the tradition of Russian music until this tyranny be overpast. "It is inconceivable" the Times concludes "that such tyranny of a criminal, unwashed minority should continue long in Russia. In the meantime we are glad to enjoy such gems of Muscovite ecclesiastical music."

The Open Forum

Soldiers for Convention

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In the midst of all of our discussion about the returning service men and the Church, why not let us consider the one very substantial way in which we can prove to these men that the Church not only wants them but needs them? Let every parish in electing its delegates to the coming diocesan conventions, choose at least one churchman who has seen service. This will give the Church the advantage of the counsel and advice of the very men it is seeking to appeal to at this time.

Then in turn let every diocesan convention send at least one layman who has seen service and one of its returned chaplains if possible, as delegates to the Detroit convention. Certainly if this legislative body next October comprises one-third or even one-fourth returned soldiers and sailors and chaplains we may expect great things. No problem will be too great for them to help solve and it will demonstrate to the men themselves that the Church needs their help and advice in solving its destiny.

So firmly am I convinced that not only the men but the Church in general, will benefit if such a plan of representation is issued by a majority of the dioceses, that I am asking the parishes of the Diocese of Kansas to send at least one returned service man to our sixtieth annual convention in Topeka next May.

JAMES WISE.

Mexico

Your issue of April 12 publishes a letter from the Rev. Allan Burleson, under the caption, "The Bishop of Mexico." Mr. Burleson, who is my good friend, and who has devoted himself to our English-speaking work in Mexico, will forgive me for venturing to write in behalf of our native work.

During these past six years that I have been in Mexico, eleven American missionaries in our native work (twelve, counting myself) have resigned. Of these twelve, not one has resigned because "driven out of the country and forbidden to return by the Government of the United States." Not one of those who have undertaken missionary work in other districts has done so because political conditions made it "impossible for them to return to work in Mexico."

The United States Government is not at present issuing passports to Mexico to people who have not necessary business there; it issues passports, however, to both men and women who are regularly appointed missionaries serving under their respective boards. Miss McKnight, the head of our Hooker School, has just returned to Mexico after a brief vacation at home. When I left Mexico City four months ago, a group of new Methodist missionaries, women workers, had just arrived.

Mexico's new constitution inhibits foreign-born clergymen from exercising their ministry. This does not apply to laymen or to women workers; it restricts clergy-men only in so far as they perform "ministerial acts." Moreover, this legislation has been in force only two years; our Church has been in Mexico longer than two years.

It is true that Mexico at present presents such hardships and dangers as are to be expected in a country in war time. These conditions make our church work difficult; they do not make it impossible. The hardships and dangers are certainly not greater than those encountered in times past by missionaries in other fields, and do not compare with those encountered by the Apostles.

I am personally acquainted with over forty American missionaries, both men and women—Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists—who are at this moment in Mexico; not to mention many others whom I do not personally know. The work of the Presbyterians and Methodists, who are doing magnificent work and have the best schools in the republic, has not only continued but has grown, during these past eight years of revolution. The anti-religious bitterness of the present laws is directed primarily against the Roman Catholic Church, which has notoriously meddled in politics and which is notoriously corrupt in Latin America. The work of Protestants, by which I mean non-Roman Catholics, is just now rather favored than otherwise. In Mexico City, Protestant missionaries are invited to work in the prisons and government hospitals. I have been invited to do this, myself, and only last April appealed for another assistant to take advantage of this.

This letter is not a criticism, in any way whatsoever, of the Bishop of Mexico. I am in no wise referring to the cited editorial, in whose authorship I had no part, nor am I discussing the present methods of our church work in Mexico. Mr. Burleson has written concerning our English work in Mexico. Because I have found that many people here at home have scant knowledge of conditions there, I am afraid that certain parts of his letter may be interpreted as referring to the native work also. Of the members of our staff in Mexico at the time of my resignation, four months ago, I am one of those who had been in the native work longest. For the sake of this work I am permitting myself to call attention to certain facts which I feel that the Church at home should know.

The relation of our American Church to the Church in Mexico is a peculiar one. A little group of clergy and members of the Roman Catholic Church revolted against the gross corruption and superstition of that Church in Mexico, and called themselves "The Church of Jesus." Desiring, however, to remain in the Church Catholic, with its privileges of apostolic succession and sacramental life, they asked to be made a mission of our Church in the United States. We thus went into Mexico through no fervor of proselytizing, but at the earnest solicitation of Mexicans who said, "Come over into Macedonia and help us."

Some of us who have been in the native work feel keenly and with anguish of heart that Mexico asked us for bread and that we have given it a stone.

At present, our American staff in the Mexican work consists of a bishop and one woman worker in the whole Republic of Mexico. Whatever the reasons for it—and there are probably more than one; nor am I denying that perhaps some of us missionaries, as individuals, have failed—the fact remains that other religious bodies in Mexico are succeeding, even in time of revolution, as our Church is not. It is for the Church at home to ask itself seriously the reason for this, and to seek out a remedy.

"How to Know the Bible"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

There are two principal ways of approaching the study of the Bible among scholarly students. By one way it is regarded as substantially, a reliable historical record—a trustworthy record of revelation. This has been the view held by the Jewish Church, from at least the time of Ezra, and of the Christian Church, from the beginning. It is also the view which beyond question was held by the first preachers of the Gospel, St. Peter, St. Paul, St. Stephen, and by Jesus Himself.

The other method starts with the acceptance of a theory of the origin and structure of the books of the Old Testament which considers the early narratives unhistorical and untrustworthy. For instance, it holds that the book of Deuteronomy was composed in the year 621 B. C., 800 years after the death of Moses. In that case the exhortations and laws which it solemnly declares were given by God through Moses, were never really so given, and convey a materially erroneous account of his work.

This is the point of view from which Dr. Hodges approaches the study of the Scriptures in his recent book, How to Know the Bible. It is important that his readers should be aware of this fact; and that they should also know that although this view is accepted by a large number of biblical students, there are many very able scholars who challenge its soundness. The unlearned reader has also the right to know that the view in question has never received the imprimatur of the Anglican, or of any other branch of the Christian Church.

The League of Nations

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Some paragraphs in your number of yesterday (April 12) seem based on misapprehension. Let me state the facts.

When the peace commissioners met committees were appointed—on the League of Nations, on responsibility for the war, on the violation of the laws of war, on reparation and indemnity. In addition the question of boundaries of the new states came up for consideration. These were dealt with by separate groups. President Wilson has not delayed the peace treaty. On the contrary, the committee on the League of Nations, of which he was chairman, was the first to report. This it did February 14. That report has been under consideration in this country ever since. The other committees at this writing have not reported.

Again, Archdeacon Greig uses very harsh language about the conference. But has he read the published report of their proceedings? Does he realize the magnitude and difficulty of the questions before them? Has he read Mr. Balfour's recent account of their work? I have made a careful study of it. In my humble judgment no conference in the history of the world has ever been more diligent or dealt more wisely with the questions they had to meet.

He criticises their attempt to prevent future wars by agreement to use "force and the economic boycott." There he condemns St. Paul, who declares that the civil magistrate bears not the sword in vain, but is the minister of God to execute justice upon evil-doers. The Christian spirit, of which the archdeacon speaks, is of the first importance, but it is not opposed to the spirit of justice, nor to the maintenance and use of force to prevent or to punish crime. That is what the league covenant provides.

Our Place in the League

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

So much has been said and written in regard to the covenant of the League of Nations that perhaps it may seem superfluous to add anything more. Yet, to my mind, there are points which have not received due emphasis. It is not a question of whether we shall join the League of Nations or not. The fact is, we are already in the League of Nations; we have been in it for more than two years and we cannot now withdraw with honor to ourselves, with proper regard for our honored dead who have made the supreme sacrifice in its defense, or with safety to the rest of the world.

The only real question is, how can we reconstitute the league so as to perpetuate the results which have been attained at such tremendous cost of life, of labor and of human suffering, so as to guarantee future generations against the recurrence of conditions which rendered this cost necessary?

The covenant of the league is but a development of the idea which brought our American union into existence (a league of states) and America would be stultifying its whole past history if it did not take a leading part in the constitution and maintenance of the league. In such a league there should be no time limit or provision for withdrawal any more than there should be a time limit or provision for withdrawal in the Constitution of the United States. Like our Constitution, it is to form a more perfect union, and as the purpose for which it is formed is perpetual, so it should be perpetual.

Men may differ as to certain provisions of the covenant. It will doubtless be changed in many particulars from its original draft, before it is finally adopted. Practical experience will doubtless indicate the wisdom of further amendments but "union and liberty," "one and inseparable," "now and forever" are as true of the covenant of the league as of our own Constitution and we shall strangely misconceive the meaning of all America's history "if we hesitate or waver in the support we give it."

Who Has Some Pews?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I am about to open a new Italian mission and need among many other things, a few pews for the chapel. I am almost sure that there are in New York churches, old pews no longer used, which we would gladly accept. Your interest in our work among the foreigners and your kindness in the past assures me that you will please to mention briefly this need for pews in THE CHURCHMAN, thus helping the spreading of the Kingdom among the Italians.

Reformation as a Condition

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The addresses on unity by Dr. Manning and Mr. Zabriskie at the last meeting of the Church Club were both interesting and inspiring.

I think, however, that as faithful churchmen before taking further steps toward a general conference, we ought carefully to consider what reforms should be required from the unreformed Churches—Armenian, Assyrian, Russian, Greek and Roman as conditional to our fellowship. Are they to renounce autocracy, infallibility, indulgences, miracles, worship of saints and relics and the many modern dogmas now taught by one or other of these different communions? If not there would seem to be no choice for loyal members of our Church.

The Proposals Towards Unity

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The most striking thing about the Proposals towards Unity, which have been put forth by the distinguished representatives of the Congregational and Episcopal Churches, is the humble and large-minded sincerity of the Congregationalists. May our own Church meet it with a like sincerity, and with an act of conspicuous and venturesome faith.

But let us not be satisfied with half way measures, such as this is at best. Why not use this opportunity for realizing on a limited scale, at least, that which we are moving towards universally? It is an opportunity for an experiment in unity. Let us meet this fine, unselfish approach on the part of our brethren of the Congregational Church by proposing that we undertake to bring about the organic union of the two bodies into a single communion, not merely ordaining a few Congregational ministers to the historic ministry, but, inasmuch as they are ready to accept the principle of succession through the Catholic episcopate, proceeding to consecrate as bishops a proportionate number of their ministers, chosen by their own body and approved by us. And, then, as one household of faith let us work out together a policy that shall safeguard and preserve the best that each possesses.

The communicant strength of the two bodies is roughly 790,000 Congregationalists and 1,098,000 Episcopalians. At the present time we have 126 bishops. This would mean that about 90 chosen leaders in the Congregational ministry should be advanced, through the lower orders, to the episcopate, as soon as the union should be consummated. The united Church, pending the realization of unity on a larger scale, might be designated in some such way as that part of the Holy Catholic Church, formerly known as the Congregational and Episcopal Churches respectively.

Such an act of bold and daring faith on our part will at once win the widest approval, and show beyond question of doubt our sincerity and good faith. Furthermore it is only such an act of confidence in our Christian brethren of America, as well as such a degree of faith in our orders, that will ever unite American Christianity.

St. Paul exhibited a faith of infinitely greater proportions when, as his custom was, he "ordained elders in every church" (Acts xiv:23) in order to hand on the Church's faith and order, and his faith was eminently justified. All things considered it is doubtful if there were any more flagrant abuses of the trust which he gave them than can be easily adduced today, and everywhere the faith was held, the ministry safeguarded, and the sacraments administered and perpetuated. The unity of the faith and practice of the early Church on a wide scale is remarkable.

In our case the proposal is to share this sacred "trust," for it is in that light that we regard our three-fold apostolic ministry, with distinguished Christian leaders, conspicuous for their faith and good works, and filled with a consuming love and zeal for the Kingdom of God.

May the Episcopal Church rise to the opportunity to propose some such great-hearted, broad-visioned, plan as this, which after all may be the way God is calling us to lead the way for realizing this eagerly longed-for hope.

Games on Sunday

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

For the second time in an editorial on the desecration of Sunday, you throw ridicule on those organizations who approve all games on that day, by saying that the alternative of games is to twirl one's thumbs. As a matter of fact there are many other alternatives and as a member of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance I protest at your lack of common politeness to other members of Christ's flock. Above all things Christians should be loyal to each other.

Roman Compromise

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

You were kind enough to print in THE CHURCHMAN of April 12 a letter from the Rev. Arthur Bruce of the Canadian Church, with the caption "A Case of Tyranny." In it he says: "The great Church of Rome, to her honor be it said, has withstood the attempt to substitute for the lawful authority of the Body of Christ the truly appalling pagan tyranny of the State."

In the case referred to, the Church of Rome compromised, as she sometimes does, and her compromise called down upon me the "petty tyranny" of "the powers that be" and they used the authorities to try and compel me to submit saying "everybody else has submitted."

I do not desire you to publish this, nor did I know any one would come to my defense much less a clergyman of the Canadian Church, though he knows California and especially this diocese and county. But I want you to know that it was the American Church and not the Roman Church which stood out against the "petty tyranny" of the people here who overrule the authorities of the town. The Roman Church compromised, "The request—not ordinance—was to hold no gatherings of churches or lodges." The Red Cross went right along and the Roman priest gave notice for his people to scatter through his orchard so as to be in view of him on his back porch saying it was not necessary for them to hear the Mass so long as they could see it.

It was our rainy, cold season and I opened the church and kept it warm. I was the only person arrested—three times—or fined.

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE—THE LAND OF THE HUGUENOTS

The Idealism of France—The Courage of Belgium Have Made Possible Our Freedom

The World Is Their Debtor

Now that the smoke of battle has lifted, it is our duty, our privilege, to learn more of these brave, indomitable peoples. We who have thrilled at the sacrifices and the heroism of these brave Allies of ours, want now to know them better. We have heard the story of their sufferings and their triumphs. Now we must learn of those wonderful qualities that made it all possible. We seek to know

The Soul of France—The Heart of Belgium

The word Huguenot—what does it mean to us? Those noble figures of Henry of Navarre, of Gaspard de Coligny, of Jeanne d'Albrêt—all of glorious memory—do they stand out on our horizon? Are they as real to us as Foch and Clemenceau, as King Albert and Queen Elizabeth?

What do we know of French and Belgian Protestantism, of its struggles through the centuries of persecution, of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew and of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes? Do we realize that French Protestants today are united on the Foreign Mission field and that they have made splendid contributions to the literature, the idealism and the practical philanthropy of their native land?

THE NEW HAND BOOK OF FRENCH AND BELGIAN PROTESTANTISM

deals with all these vital questions and with scores of others equally fascinating.

You will want this book. It tells you just the things you have been wanting to know about the part Protestantism has played and is today playing in the life of these two brave and stricken nations. It should be in the hands of every Christian worker.

The Handbook, prepared by Louise Seymour Houghton, has 256 octavo pages with 8 full-page illustrations. It is attractively bound in French blue cloth with the Huguenot Cross stamped in gold. The price is only 75 cents per copy postpaid. Order today from the *Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, 105 East 22nd St., New York, N. Some Books About the President

President Wilson

THE PEACE PRESIDENT, A BRIEF APPRECIATION. By William Archer. Henry Holt and Company. New York. 1919.

WOODROW WILSON, AN INTERPRETATION. By A. Maurice Low, M. A. Little Brown and Company. Boston. 1919.

Mr. Archer's position is brought out in his introduction. He contends that there have been three great crises in our American history and that each was met by a great president; Wilson is put in the same category of eminence with Washington and Lincoln.

In harmony with this thesis he reviews the President's life. And he finds nothing in the record which contravenes his estimate of the exceeding greatness of his hero. It must seem to the impartial reviewer that sometimes he chooses his material pretty carefully. For example, in creating the President's Mexican policy there is the statement of the refusal to recognize Huerta, but not a word of the purpose to drive him from his office.

In another place the author lays himself open to the charge of misstating the facts. He asserts that Wilson rightly held off from the European war because he had not the people back of him. But he goes on to say that the election of 1916 gave the President the mandate which he finally obeyed by entering into the war. As a matter of fact, Wilson was re-elected because he had held off from war, and further it appears that after his election he obeyed the popular mandate by desperate efforts to force the belligerents to make peace so that America would not have to fight.

Very grudgingly Mr. Archer admits that the famous phrase "too proud to fight" was unfortunate, but he adds that "it was a trifling literary lapse." Further he admits that the expression "we are not interested" [to search for the obscure causes of the war] was perhaps ill chosen. Beyond these the English writer finds no occasion for criticism.

Mr. Low's interpretation is full and sympathetic. If he will admit that there is a vulnerable spot in the heel of Achilles, the spot is very small and has rarely if ever been touched. The author reviews the President's course, and interprets his deeds and his words in the most favorable light. The book is an invaluable vade mecum to that considerable body who uphold Mr. Wilson in everything he has done, but to the impartial reader—if such indeed there be—there is much which resembles special pleading.

In his review of that critical period from the sinking of the Lusitania to the declaration of war Mr. Low finds the President's course consistent and commendable. He is able to take that position because he asserts that Mr. Wilson was devoting himself to the education of the people so that at the right time he could lead a whole people to war as he had kept them at peace.

There is one point in which all will argue that the President's course was consistent and admirable. At Germany's declaration of submarine war, he declared that he would not stand for the loss of American life or property by that unlawful agency.

To this point he adhered, and it is worth while recalling the fact that it was only when Germany threw aside all pledges and proposed unrestricted piracy that the President dismissed the German ambassador and prepared for the declaration of war.

Mr. Low's last chapter takes up the question of the verdict of history. One would indeed like to know what that verdict will be. Anyone may conjecture, but no one can tell. At the present time American opinion is hopelessly divided. All argue that the President has tremendous ability. All rejoice that America had her small though essential place in the great war. Then America becomes two camps. One party believes Mr. Wilson to be a singularly astute politician, and rests there; another party believes him to be indeed a great president; a man raised up at the critical moment to meet one of the great crises in human history. It is only long years hence that the umpire will render the final decision.

In Defense of the President

THE GREAT ISSUE Disclosed by the Leaders and the Plain People in Europe and America. By John Farwell Moors. Marshall Jones Company Boston. 1918.

Mr. Moors is a banker, a fellow of Harvard College, the president of the Boston Associated Charities. He is an ardent defender of President Wilson and his present policy. One may not, perhaps, be able to speak with the same admiration of all that the President has done and said during these last fateful years; but one cannot help being grateful that a man of Mr. Moors' ability has made this eloquent plea in behalf of the President's policy. Mr. Moors holds up the idealism of the American people. "Thousands of sophisticated Americans," he says, "who believe themselves Christians and pray that they may be brought to that fair city of peace whose foundation is justice, mercy, and good will, rise from their knees only to demand an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." There are other thousands who reserve to themselves the right to ask questions and to criticize and still hold fast to their Christian idealism; but for those who cannot, this essay of Mr. Moors has great value.

A Fitting Memorial

A MEMORIAL OF THREE TRUE LIVES.
By Ralph M. Harper. The Fort Hill Press, Boston, 1919.

This a most gracious tribute which the rector of St. John's Church, Winthrop, has devised as a memorial to three young men in his parish who have laid down their lives in the service of their country. The well printed little book consists of sketches of the lives of Chandler Colby, Marcus Rowe, and G. Lincoln Richardson made up for the most part from letters written to Mr. Harper by their friends, employers and teachers. Mr. Harper's plan would be an excellent one for other rectors to follow.

Anne, Maryland, Father Miller was educated in that state, studying for the ministry in Baltimore under the late Bishop Wittingham. His father, the late William Miller, was for thirty-seven years senior warden of St. Andrew's Church, Princess Anne. In 1864 Father Miller was ordained a deacon and in 1866 advanced to the priesthood. He served as curate in Mt. Calvary Church, and Old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, and in All Saints' Church, Pittsburgh. Later he became rector of Mt. Calvary Church and chaplain of the Church Home and Infirmary. In 1889 he was called to Newark and under his leadership the House of Prayer has steadily gone forward.

Father Miller had served the Diocese of Newark as examining chaplain. He was a member of its standing committee, was for years an active trustee of St. Barnabas' Hospital, and chairman of its executive board, and was also secretary general of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament for the Province of New York and New Jersey.

Cathedral School Benefactress Dies

Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, who died in California recently, was one of the largest benefactors of the National Cathedral School at Washington. She gave $250,000 towards its erection. This is only one of the many gifts she made towards educational and philanthropic institutions. Mrs. Hearst was the sole executrix of her husband's large fortune.

She was one of the earliest and largest benefactors of the National Cathedral Foundation at Washington. Her interest was aroused by her realization as a senator's wife, long active in social and public life in Washington, of the great need in the District of Columbia of a woman's school of the first order for the daughters of men in the nation's service. The school, now in its twentieth year, the first of the cathedral institutions to get into operation, and enrolling upwards of two hundred pupils, from more than thirty states in every section of the Union, has abundantly justified Mrs. Hearst's wisdom and generosity. When word came of Mrs. Hearst's death the school was about to begin its Easter vacation, but appropriate memorial exercises were held.

Dresden Rector Dies

SOUTHPORT, CONNECTICUT.—The Rev. T. F. Caskey, D. D., for many years the rector of St. John's Church, Dresden, Germany, died here on Easter Tuesday. The funeral was held at Trinity Church on Friday.

Confederate Fighter Dies

GALVESTON, TEXAS.—The senior warden of Trinity Church, the Hon. George E. Mann, died here recently and at the last meeting of the vestry of Trinity Church resolutions were passed upon his death. He had been one of the pillars of Trinity Church for over fifty years and had served as senior warden nearly all of that time. He was a graduate of Kenyon College, fought in the army of the South from '61 to '65 and then settled in Galveston.

Linen Specials at McCutcheon's

TWO very interesting shipments of Damask Linen Table Cloths and Napkins have just reached us from bond. These Cloths and Napkins were purchased early in 1918, which makes it possible for us to quote especially attractive prices.

Lot No. 1 is of Scotch full-bleached Linen Damask in our own regular makes and patterns.

Breakfast Napkins, $7.00, 7.50, 8.00, 8.75, 9.50 the dozen and up.

Dinner Napkins, $8.75, 9.00, 10.00, 10.50 the dozen and up.

Table Cloths, 2x2 yds., $7.00, 7.25, 8.00, 8.50, 9.50, 10.50 each and up.

Table Cloths, 2x2½ yds., $8.50, 8.75, 9.50, 10.00, 12.00 each and up.

(Other sizes at proportionate prices.)

LOT No. 2 comprises a good variety of Cream and half-bleached Irish Damask, which we very strongly recommend as being especially suitable for hard use. Nothing could be better for the bungalow and the country home, where moderation in price is desired.

Each washing adds to the appearance of these Linens and tones them to an attractive silver grey. If dried in the sun, these cloths will eventually turn white.

The quantities are limited; therefore we urge our Patrons to make their purchases as promptly as possible.

Cloths, $6.75, 7.75, 8.50, 9.00 and 9.75 each

72-inch Piece Goods, $4.25 and 4.50 per yard

22-inch Napkins, $7.75 the dozen

THE CHURCH CONGRESS

THE Church Congress which met last week in New York was, upon the whole, an important and interesting session. THE CHURCHMAN, during the year, will publish some of the papers that are of general interest and, especially, those which bear upon matters to be brought before the next General Convention. The papers will be published in full in the journal of the Congress to be issued, it is hoped, early in June. Some of the addresses were of a very high order. It was noteworthy in the discussion of all the topics that at whatever angle the speaker approached his subject, whether as a conservative or a radical, there was an open-mindedness to the thoughts that are now stirring people everywhere. There seemed to be no "old-fashioned churchmen" at the Congress. There were high churchmen and there were broad churchmen, and there were churchmen without tags, but one and all had their eyes looking forward, eager to see and understand the problems of which earnest people everywhere are asking for a solution.

This fact was strikingly apparent in the discussion on Essentials of Prayer Book Revision, Necessary Readjustment in the Training of the Ministry and The Functions of the Episcopate in a Democracy. Nashotah seemed as eager as Cambridge to make the Church of the twentieth century serviceable to men and women who are meeting the problems of the hour. Noticeably was this the case in the papers at the last session of the Congress. All three speakers were radical. The Bishop of Colorado and the Rev. Mr. Bell left no one in doubt as to where they stood upon the question of apostolic succession. And the Rev. John Howard Melish made it perfectly clear what value he placed upon that doctrine. But all of the three speakers proclaimed that Christian democracy demands certain radical readjustments in the Church of our time. They started at different doctrinal points, but they finally, after flaying certain opponents, stood, as it were, hand in hand, making their bows to the new democracy. This is significant.

One cannot forbear mentioning an illuminating coincidence. While, on the evening of May Day, the Rev. Dr. Percy Grant and Mrs. Simkhovitch were demonstrating at the Congress the need of an American Labor Party to defend the rights of labor, soldiers and sailors were sacking the office of the socialist paper, The Call, and producing near-riots in the rendezvous of agitators. The riots did not extend to Synod Hall. We regret the small audience at this session of the Congress. Perhaps the clergy of the city and the leading laymen were participating in the downtown riots. At any rate they were not present at this intensely interesting discussion. Dr. Grant found the small size of the audience indicative of the interest that the Episcopal Church has always taken in the rights of labor.

It may be noted in passing that while distinguished clergymen came from Washington, Baltimore, New England and the Middle West to attend the Congress, some of the rectors of New York parishes did not put in an appearance at any of its sessions. There were papers delivered at the Congress by which even our metropolitan clergy might profit. Once more the Church Congress has demonstrated its fitness to serve the Church. It was good to share four days of its stimulating life.

HAS INTEREST IN DEBATE DECLINED?

WE think that it has, and we think it a bad omen for democracy. The will to think things through by submitting ideas to the test of debate has been in the virile days of our American history a badge of democratic government. The town meeting was the appointed place for citizens to think aloud. And they thought aloud and with vigor and courage. Perhaps the decline of oratory, which most of us do not regret, is a symptom of people's impatience with public discussion. Things get threshed out and "fixed up" in committee meetings, then they are "railroaded through" our legislative conventions. The despatch of business will not tolerate open covenants openly arrived at.

The decline of debate is marked in the Church. Some of us recall former meetings of the Church Congress, when, with the largest hall in town packed with an eager audience, the great debaters in the Church met to oppose opinion on the great controversial topics of the hour. There was an electrical interest at those sessions—interest in the practice of debate itself, but also a keen relish of controversy. It was noticeable at the session of the Congress just closed in New York that there were few volunteer speakers from the floor. After the appointed papers were read, the discussion subsided. The test of the quickness of life of a Congress, is the debate that begins when the appointed speakers have finished.

But this apathy is apparent everywhere in our public life. The Lodge-Lowell debate was not a debate. The press of the country did its best to stage large what might have been an historic event, but it proved not to be another Lincoln-Douglas affair. It is impossible, it seems, to revive the town meeting. A little cynicism has come into our handling of public questions. We have come thoroughly to distrust and to discount the opinions of the press. The day of great editors has passed. Men do not eagerly reach for their morning paper to see what Greeley or Dana will say about some abomination in official life. Though in passing one must remember that it was the press of the country that has all but disposed of the colossal impudence and inefficiency of Mr. Burleson.

Especially in the Church, it is to be regretted that there is a decline of open and free discussion. The lack of dissenting voices does not indicate unanimity of opinion. It may show a cynical indifference. "What's the use?" is frequently heard. But controversy has a use, and a very beneficent one, if its spirit is Christian and tolerant. The will to discuss questions of moment is both the cause and effect of healthy spiritual and intellectual life. For this reason the Church Congress justifies its existence.

DEAN HODGES' ILLNESS

THE news of Dean Hodges' serious illness and his enforced retirement from his work for a time brings sorrow and great anxiety to Christians of every name in America. Dean Hodges has been an indefatigable worker; he has not spared his strength. From the beginning of his ministry he has packed his days with the kind of good works that have been for the lasting benefit of the Church and the progress of the Kingdom of God. The readers of THE CHURCHMAN to whom Dean Hodges' contributions have brought pleasure and profit will, we know, be eager to send to the beloved dean sympathy and earnest wishes for recovery.

The dean has gone to his summer home at Holderness for a long rest, but those who know best the dean's temperament will not be surprised to read shortly in THE CHURCHMAN as elsewhere sparkling sentences from his pen. So we hope and pray.

A CHRISTIAN BEWILDERMENT

BISHOP ISRAEL'S sermon at the opening of the Church Congress in New York was a pleasing surprise in its contrast with the war sermons which have been heard among us since the beginning of the war. If the Bishop of Erie will pardon what seems a patronizing commendation, we should say that the sermon was Christian. That, after all, is merit and praise not always earned by the preachers of religion. It was impressive and moving to hear one of Christ's ministers, who for six months before America's entrance into the war arranged with the Archbishop of Canterbury to assist his clergy at the front and who for eighteen months has been serving in English and American camps, in trenches and hospitals, say:

Permit me the unpardonable—a personal reference. I was no pacifist in the crisis. To my mind there was but one thing to do after the conflict began. My hand could hold no sword. But six months before America entered the war I had arranged with the Archbishop of Canterbury to join and assist his clergy at the front. For eighteen months I have been in American and English camp and trench and hospital ministering to the soldiers and sharing their life—teaching, exhorting, inspiring them for the conflict. And yet it was and is ever with me, the question, should might have been opposed by might, slaughter by slaughter, horror by horror. What would have happened if the nations, like Christ, had endured the cross, despising the shame, endured the suffering, the death, instead of calling upon the "legions of angels?" Who knows? Might we Christian nations not have aided the Christ to draw all men unto God? The crucifixion of a nation, of several nations, perhaps of all nations, is surely not as terrible as the crucifixion of God. The principle of Right was crucified in Christ and rose again in power. Might it not have done the same in the case of the nations? I do not know. I am one among you, bewildered, seeing as through a darkened glass, groping for the truth. It would have been disloyalty before, but now we must face the problem of a Christian peace among semi-Christian nations.

Bishop Israel is not a pacifist, but the stern contact with war has brought him humbly to the feet of Christ to ask the meaning of the Gospel. Such humility and such discernment is not so common today as to fail to startle us. "I do not know. I am one among you, bewildered, seeing as through a darkened glass, groping for the truth."

Those are eloquent, touching words coming from a soldier of the Cross who has also been a soldier in the camps of war. But out of such reverent "bewilderment" will come, we feel quite sure, the true Christian solution of problems that trouble the race. There is hope for Christianity when our bishops are bewildered by the depth and awe of Christian truth.

HOW SOME OF THE CONGREGATIONALISTS FEEL

AN editorial in the issue of May 1 of The Congregationalist and Advance is devoted to "how the brethren feel" about the Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity now under discussion. Apparently they do not feel very kindly disposed and they seem to be in no eagerness to hurry into the open, or partly open arms, of the Episcopal Church. The Congregationalist and Advance says:

Thus far the landslide in Congregationalism toward the reordination of its ministers in the fashion proposed by a conference of prominent Episcopalians and Congregationalists has not assumed momentous proportions. The number of men who have signified a desire or even a willingness to have laid upon their heads the hands of Episcopal bishops is considerably smaller than that of those who scrambled to get front windows from which to watch the parade of the Yankee Division in Boston last Friday. The talk in ministerial gatherings is decidedly unfavorable and out of several score of letters and comments which have reached us during the last three weeks, only two or three are in cordial sympathy with the proposal. The critics and the objectors express themselves in terms ranging from the fiery philippics of Dan Bradley of Cleveland and Secretatry Cady of the A. M. A. to the softer but no less significant words of Shepherd Knapp of Worcester and Willis Butler of the Old South Church, Boston. Correspondents for whose protests we have not yet been able to find room will bear with us until we can pass on their sentiments to our readers. Incidentally we may remark that this is what hack writers call the "psychological moment" for the staunch advocates of the idea to rally to its defense against the embattled hosts of dyed-in-the-wool independents.

Meanwhile, as one of the signers of the document said last week, "The discussion will help educate the Episcopalians." Sure enough, and we don't at all object to the similar effect upon our own body. Such a debate as that before the Suffolk West Association of Massachusetts last week, when Professor Williston Walker of the Yale School of Religion defended the proposals and Dr. Albert E. Dunning, former editor of The Congregationalist, criticized them, is sure to be of value. It makes us Congregationalists more aware of the beliefs which have given life and power to our body for three hundred years. It shows Episcopalians that while predisposed to every honest movement looking toward unity, we cannot part with deep-going convictions in order to satisfy some one else's "scruples."

It also shows that while we must not cease to think of and hope for a larger organic union, it is a long way to that goal, and that every wrong step in that direction will have to be retraced. On the other hand, the path to immediate and effective Christian co-operation in good works is straight and clear, and neither Congregational nor Episcopalian wayfarers need err thereon.

IN THE NAME OF THE PROPHET, FIGS!

A CORRESPONDENT takes THE CHURCHMAN to task for having published in its news columns in the issue of April 26 an item bearing the caption, "Dr. Cram says we must turn to old theology." The item contained a brief statement of the substance of a lecture, delivered by Mr. Cram in Philadelphia, in which the lecturer is reported to have affirmed that the "first step towards reunion of Christendom is for the Protestant Episcopal Church to accept the straight catholic doctrine of the seven sacraments with Mass both as communion and a sacrifice, and sacrifice as the chief controlling feature, and having transubstantiation as the only perfect and sufficient expression of the presence of Christ in the holy sacrament of the altar."

Our correspondent thinks that THE CHURCHMAN should not stand sponsor for such opinions and doctrines. Well,—that is a new interpretation of the function of "news." If Mr. Cram or anybody else in Massachusetts should burn down a church or murder a bishop we should have to report the fact in our news columns, but our reporting in the matter would not imply that THE CHURCHMAN stood sponsor for the deed. Church news is likely to be a bit dull and to lack humor. Whenever we can find Dr. Cram speaking upon theology we are eager to quote him, for he is always inspiring and his views help to "lighten up" a dull page. Dr. Cram on church unity is bound to be amusing. Is a church paper to be denied a little fun now and then?

If our anxious correspondent wants to know what THE CHURCHMAN thinks about these opinions reported to be Mr. Cram's, well,—let him read THE CHURCHMAN.

REAL AND ARTIFICIAL DISTINCTION

IN an editorial in Commerce and Finance, Theodore H. Price preaches the spirit of the new day. He says:

The other most important effect of the war thus far noticeable is the increase in the political and economic power of those who labor with their hands, including the small farmer who works for himself as well as the wage earners, and the recognition of the doctrine that the community owes a fair and decent living to all those who are willing to work.

This doctrine has been well stated by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in his "Industrial Creed," recently published in the Forum, the fourth article of which reads as follows:

"I believe that every man is entitled to an opportunity to earn a living, to fair wages, to reasonable hours of work and proper working conditions, to a decent home, to the opportunity to play, to learn, to worship and to love, as well as to toil, and that the responsibility rests as heavily upon industry as upon government or society, to see that these conditions and opportunities prevail."

No one can foresee just where the general assertion of these two rights, namely, the right of society to limit individual wealth and the right of every man to a living wage is likely to lead us. Both are in some aspects distinctly novel, for the first is in a sense confiscatory of private property and the second conflicts with the law of supply and demand as applied to labor, but we may be sure that their novelty will not prevent their recognition. We will, therefore, do well to adjust ourselves and our philosophy to the new order promptly and unprotestingly.

Those of us who are optimists believe that in the destruction of the artificial distinctions that great wealth has created men will be made happier, that snobbishness and discontent will be diminished and that exceptional ability will find its reward in the esteem of one's fellows that is more to be desired than money because it excites love instead of envy and is ours as long as we deserve it.

PULPITS IN GERMANY

THE English Challenge asserts that the German pulpit, which reached such depths of degradation during the war, is now, since the signing of the armistice, beginning to redeem its soiled reputation. Unfortunately, by our processes of international publicity, we were kept fully aware of what the German pulpit was saying during the days when German pastors were doing their best to bring their people into Christian condemnation, but now that what the German pastors are preaching lacks news value to those in control of propaganda we are not informed of what is said.

The Christian World has been publishing, however, some of the more striking sermons of the last few months. These sermons seem to show a change of heart among German ministers. Such erstwhile "fire-eaters" as Doctors Trant, Conrad and Fassbinder are now taking their texts from the New Testament in place of the Old. Their congregations are reminded that Germany might have gained the whole world, but lost her own soul, and the fervent hope is expressed that, in the words of Amos, yet another famine may spring up—a famine of hearing the words of the Lord.

MAJOR-GENERAL O'RYAN ON MILITARISM

IN his farewell statement to the officers and men of his division General O'Ryan made a most significant utterance. He uttered a warning against the United States' rearing a military class. It is unusual to hear the dangers of militarism proclaimed by a popular and victorious general. General O'Ryan saw a good deal of war; he has also received his share of adulation. But he hates militarism and he believes that the returning soldiers have a part to play in keeping the nation free from the dominance of a military caste. This is what he is reported to have said:

There is another and more difficult mission for the citizen soldiers of America. The history of nations is largely a history of war—war with its trail of ruin and passion, death and sorrow—war with the glory which incites repetition. War as an institution has had numerous perpetuating causes and not the least of them has been the influence of the military class. Nothing could be a greater travesty upon truth than the saying that "The soldier, least of all, wants war because he is the greatest sufferer." Every part of that is untrue. War is the life opportunity of the military class, while the families of the nation are its greatest sufferers. While men remain human they will ever be influenced by self-interest, and so war will continue to be regarded by those who may profit by it in a light very different from that of the ordinary citizen. When the military class of a nation becomes numerous and influential that nation has begun its drift toward war.

Are there any who do not now appreciate that the world war was conceived, planned, developed and finally ordered by the great German General Staff?

Military ambition and military power in Germany were the sources of the war. National prejudices, commercial rivalries and diplomatic grievances were merely agencies cultivated and stimulated by the military class to serve their ends.

I do not believe there is any military group in this country knowingly planning against the interest of the United States. But the same could have been said of the military class of Germany prior to the commencement of this war. The criticism is directed toward the system, any system which will give undue prominence, strength or power to the military class in the country. The German military class recognized that even in Germany the confidence of the people must be won, must be intellectually won over to support their plans, so they began with the children in the school. Jointly with physical training and elementary military instruction, they implanted in young minds the ideas which later turned the German people into a nation of military paranoiacs.

I think it will be found that the returning citizen soldiers—the men of the National Army, of the Reserve Corps and of the Guard Divisions—are unanimous in many of their views concerning the qualities that count in battle, the efficiency of the citizen soldier in war and the principles upon which a proper military policy should be based. I think they will be found to be in accord that there must not be overcentralization of authority, but that the system of training and service should be akin to that of Switzerland, with decentralization in relation to the appointment of officers and all other features, which, if wholly centralized might become a menace to the people.

Bishop Brent, who was the chaplain general of the American Expeditionary Forces, was the first to call attention to the danger of transferring militarism from Prussia to America. The danger is not one which should be ignored.

How to Treat the Old Folks

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

Honor thy father and thy mother. Exodus XX—12.

AMONG the many interesting characteristics of the Jewish people, to whom this command was originally given, there is nothing more beautiful, even to this day, than their reverential affection for the old folks. It is interwoven into their whole national life; yes, it is a part of their very religion. When, at the beginning of their history, God gave to them only ten commandments, He made one of those ten, the command that they should honor their father and their mother. The whole Jewish nation has always been, and is today, steeped in this thought of veneration for parents.

I am speaking not only to youth, but to those who, no longer young in years, are still young in interest and sympathy and response to life. Though we may thank God that we are surrounded by children whose greatest joy is to bring joy to us, let us not be forgetful of others whose daily cry is that of Lear:

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,
To have a thankless child.

How shall we treat the old folks? Well, in the first place, forget that they are "old folks."

There is a difference between your generation and theirs; there must be. Then make that difference just as little as possible. Have you heard a good story down town? Save it for them; and the more bubbling over with innocent, rollicking humor it is the better. Is there a book you are reading, or even a daily journal which contains some choice bit of fun or well-expressed wisdom? Save it for them, and let them know that you saved it for them. They are no longer on the stage among the actors; but an old player always loves to sit where he can watch the play. Then ring up the curtain for them just as often as you can. Whatever interests you, bring it home to them. Let them feel, to the very end that you are their chum.

That was a noble tribute which the mother of Henry Ward Beecher rendered to him in her old age, when she said, "I always love to have Henry come and see me. He brings so much sunshine and he makes me feel young again." Forget that they are "old folks."

And then, in the second place, remember that they are "old folks." They are not as young as they once were. They cannot stand what they once could. Then, remember that, that you may ever be thoughtful and patient and kind. The shoulders are bent now. Seventy, seventy-five, eighty years are a long time. But what made them bent? Carrying your burdens.

Yes, they are "the old folks" now. But it was not always so. That aged mother was young once. Her eyes sparkled and her face was smooth and beautiful. She was young then. And what did she do with her youth? She gave it to you. When you had the croup it was her hand which bound up the throat and bathed the aching head. When you came sobbing with some childish sorrow to her, she was never too busy nor too tired to take you in her arms and comfort you. Never a touch of tenderness like hers. It isn't strange that the hand trembles and the memory is beginning to fail a bit now, for she has given her strength and all she was for you. No wonder that her step is not so strong as it once was, and there are wrinkles on the kindly brow, and snow upon the locks. Ah, make their last days bright and beautiful. Never let them think that they are in the way. Let them know that for them it is not true, that "all shut their doors against the setting sun." Remember that they are "the old folks."

And then, finally, while you remember that they are "the old folks," and you forget that they are "the old folks," help them to forget it.

Whether they are useful or not—and almost everybody can be useful if you will let them be so in their own way—help them to think they are. Wait upon them when it is necessary but be not too ready to do so. I have known many old people, for I have taken pains to see them in their homes and win their confidence, and that which brings the greatest sadness to them often, is the unintentional reminder that they are no longer of any use; that they are no longer an indispensable factor in life. Lie awake at night if need be, devising some way in which they, without being burdened, can show their helpfulness. Nothing which you can do will please them more.

The other day, I sat, pouring over a diary which had been kept for many years, by one whom I had known well and I found there a little poem; simply a few fugitive verses of anonymous authorship, but to me, of deepest interest because of their history. They went to the heart because they had so evidently come from the heart. They were entitled "Write them a letter tonight." And in the diary, by the side of that poem, was the entry, "Cut out by mother, and found by me in one of her books, while visiting her in New York City, 1883." Here are the verses.

Don't go to the theatre, lecture or ball,
But stay in your room tonight;
Deny yourself to the friends that call,
And a good long letter write.
Write to the sad old folks at home,
Who sit when the day is done,
With folded hands and down-cast eyes,
And think of the absent one.

Don't selfishly scribble, "Excuse my haste;
I've scarcely time to write."
Lest their brooding thoughts go wandering back,
To many a by-gone night,
When they lost their needed sleep and rest,
And every breath was a prayer,
That God would leave their delicate babe
To their tender love and care.

Don't let them see that you've no more need
Of their love and counsel wise;
For the heart grows strangely sensitive
When age has dimmed the eyes.
It might be well to let them believe
You never forget them quite;—
That you deem it a pleasure when far away,
Long letters home to write.

For the sad old folks at home,
With locks fast turning white
Are longing to hear from the absent one.
Write them a letter tonight.

And then, in the diary of this man, underneath that poem was this entry, written fourteen years later, "September 18, 1897. I have just returned from laying her to rest in Cypress Hills. How happy I am now, that I wrote to her so often while I could."

Thou shalt honor thy father and thy mother.

DETROIT, THE CONVENTION CITY

BY THE REV. WILLIAM E. GARDNER, D.D.

I HAVE had three days in Detroit making arrangements for the educational events of the General Convention. I have seen the hotels, halls and churches that will house the convention, and best of all, some of the people who will be the hosts and hostesses.

The daily life of the convention will be like the movement of quicksilver in a thermometer. Imagine the hotels at the bulb and Woodward Avenue, with its churches and halls, running straight north, and you have the picture.

The Hotel Statler (the headquarters of the convention), Hotel Charlevoix, New Hotel Tuller, and many other hotels are all grouped about a small circle with fountains, flowers and walks. Here the convention will eat and sleep. St. John's Church is only two minutes' walk up Woodward Avenue. Most of the members of the convention will start their day at the early service of this church. Here also they will probably meet for the early educational classes. A few blocks further north on Woodward Avenue is the Arcadia, the meeting place of the House of Deputies. Opposite is the large Jewish synagogue, which has been generously placed at Bishop Williams' disposal by the rabbi and which will be used for forums and mass meetings. A few blocks further north on Woodward Avenue is the cathedral, with its spacious assembly halls and committee rooms, where the House of Bishops will convene. Here, appropriately, the thermometer will register its highest point. Cars pass every minute between the circle and the cathedral, but the broad sidewalks and the wide avenue with its attractive shop windows will invite the walker, and the more "walking delegates" the convention has the better it will be.

A few facts about Detroit are worth remembering. It increased 90,000 in population last year. It now has nearly a million inhabitants. It is the first big "dry town." "This is no longer a bar but a candy store; ladies can enter with safety," reads one sign. There is a life and spotlessness about the best parts of Detroit that seem in keeping with its natural position and productivity. From the beginning God endowed the shores of that little strait of water connecting Lake St. Clair and Lake Erie with abundance and luxury. Cadillac, the French nobleman who founded the city in 1701, wrote:

The living and crystal waters keep the banks always green. Natural orchards soften and bend their branches under the weight and quantity of their fruit. The ambitious vine, which has never wept under the pruning knife, builds a thick roof with its large leaves and heavy clusters weighing down the top of the tree. The woods are full of game and the waters of fish, and the swans in the river are so numerous that one might take them for lilies among the weeds in which they crowd together.

Such a setting must provide a thriving city, for not only is it backed today by fertile farms, but to its shores come big lake freighters laden with iron ore, copper, coal, grain and lumber. "These pass in majestic procession over the river course."

In 1916, 100,907,279 tons of freight passed over the Detroit River, an amount greater than that of the ports of New York and London combined.

With characteristic energy Detroit is determined to give its best to the convention and get the most possible out of it. A committee on "Preparedness for the General Convention" has issued a handbook for local distribution. It deals with the Church and reconstruction, and states in clear terms some of the issues in Christian unity, missions, education and social service that will make the debates of this convention interesting and exciting.

Another committee is organizing five church Sunday Schools as demonstration schools for Christian Nurture and the New Junior Plan. One Sunday morning I drafted the services of a willing member of the Home Service League and in her automobile was whizzed from school to school. Each school revealed what happens when teachers and pupils have a plan and a purpose. I have seen many church Sunday Schools in my ten years of educational roving, but never five in one city all dealing with different problems due to localities, and all using plant and teaching force with remarkable efficiency. Each school has increased in size and has a higher average attendance than in the past. All the schools are meeting on week days by groups and classes, putting into practice the lessons learned on Sunday and coming to a clear recognition that the instruction in the Church is for the purpose of helping the pupil to make a better parish, a better neighborhood, a better nation and a better world.

I called on Mrs. F. B. Stevens, the president of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Michigan, who presided at the triennial convention of the Woman's Auxiliary in Cincinnati and who is thoroughly familiar with the kind of halls, conference rooms, offices, etc., that are needed for the triennial meeting of the Auxiliary.

An hour with Bishop Williams let me into the centre of preparations. Big and human, the bishop is determined that this convention shall fulfil the needs of these crucial days and that the Church shall speak a message to the world. He is also determined that the smallest detail for the comfort and happiness of the convention shall not be neglected. An effective committee of laymen from the Church Club has charge of the arrangements of hospitality and administration. Mr. George L. Bahl is the chairman of this committee and Mr. Wm. S. McCormick is his assistant.

All men of the Church should plan to go to Detroit the week before the convention and take part in the annual convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. I had some rare moments with Mr. Reese and Mr. DuMoulin, who are now living in Detroit, making preparations for the greatest convention the Brotherhood has ever held.

Dr. Gardner, secretary of the General Board of Religious Education, has given in this article a vivid impression of Detroit, gathered on a recent visit. The Churchman will publish, from time to time during the coming months, articles dealing with the next General Convention.

Mr. Reese is working with boys. His aim is to train the older boys to be leaders of the younger. I met some of his boys and talked with them. I am convinced that no man has ever before given the study of our boy problem in the Church such an open minded, four-square study as Reese is now doing. The Brotherhood could make no better contribution to the Church than to tell us more about the boy's needs and teach us how to meet those needs and make him a loyal worker for Christ in the Church. Reese has conducted eight training periods with groups of boys in five different churches. He is now starting new groups and new periods in other churches. As a result the boys are beginning to feel a responsibility for the Church's work. They are taking Sunday School classes, working with groups of smaller boys and conscious of the vital things in religion and of the "big jobs" in the Church that only they can do.

Every man interested in boys' work should plan to attend the Brotherhood convention, meet these boys, hear Reese and get a new perspective of what the boys will do for the Church if the right things are done for them.

Mr. DuMoulin's work is of the same nature, only with men. He, too, in October, will have his results to show and practical methods to explain.

How wise the plan to have the General Convention preceded by a conference of the men of the Church if the war against sin is to be successful! The laymen must take a larger leadership than they have in the past. The convention of 1919 is a good time for them to begin.

Detroit is ready to do its part in making a great convention. The Church must bring great things to Detroit. The Church must expect great things. That will be granted.

SOCIALIZED REPENTANCE

BY THE REV. BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

*For which cause St. Peter the Apostle . . . said to them, Repent and be baptized, everyone of
you. . . .*

FOR the moment I forgot the three men whom I was preparing to baptize. Those words in the long exhortation pierced down to the subconscious me. Here was the key to a problem which had been causing me much troubled thought. That problem was to explain why the Church as a moral teacher had been so without effect in the lives of the men to whom we have been ministering at Great Lakes. Here, in one sentence, was summed up what numbers of fellows had sought haltingly to explain to me. It was absurdly simple.

We of the Church have been magnifying personal sins and forgetting the social motivation of them. We have been preaching a definition of badness which hits only the exceptional folk,—the drunkards and prostitutes, the wastrels and thieves, the blasphemous, the wife-beaters, and people guilty of equally patent and shocking errors. We have not had a teaching of evil bad enough to include the badness of respectable people.

There must have been all sorts of people in that crowd to which the Apostles spoke on Pentecost. Doubtless some of them were vicious. Most of them must have been quite decent folks, good, according to the standard of right and wrong held by their fellow-citizens. But Peter said, "Repent, every one of you." Their sins were various, in degree and complexion; but their sin was common, social, shared by them all. If the Church is ever to move the world ethically it must broaden its moral teaching so as to teach the sinfulness that is beneath sins.

The common name of that sinfulness is selfishness, placing self-interest ahead of God's interest and the brotherhood's interests. In deploring specific sins we have forgotten to attack this motive force behind all of them. Consequently, the ordinary "gob," which means the ordinary young male American, has grown to look on us not as prophets crying a fundamental repentance but as prissy Puritans and pious Pharisees.

The next Sunday I preached a sermon to a couple of thousand men in our ravine. Some of it went like this:

"In every man two tendencies fight. One he got from his brute-beast ancestors. It bids him grab all he can, no matter who may be hurt in the process; to scramble over the other animals who walk on their hind legs for a good sized bit of 'the kill.' The other tendency comes straight from God. Some people call it a soul. Others call it a conscience. It tells him he ought to be more than a beast, really a human being; that he ought to devote his superior strength not to exploiting but to assisting the less capable; that it is a rotten thing to prosper at another man's expense; that it is a dirty trick to grab a large hunk of food and gorge while others stand on the outside of the pack and starve, or to dress in furs while they are naked, or to revel in luxuries and recreations while they are weary and lonely. These two tendencies are in absolute, unending conflict. We are fighting nationally with the latter against the former, which has ruled Germany; but this beastliness is not confined to Germany. There's a deal of it to be fought in America, too; much of it in our own hearts. To let the animal rule, to be selfish and brutal and hoggish, to admire nations or other men or ourselves for possessions instead of for service rendered, to seek reward for acquisitiveness and greed, that is sin. The Church is in the world as a means whereby God may help us to be real men, simple, sacrificing, unselfish, helpful, instead of a breed of more intelligent beasts. Her first job is to convince us that this sin in us and the world about us is easy, common, foolish, rotten, and bound straight for God's garbage heap, Gehenna. When we get men to repent of this sin and to fight it, then we've done something. Christian morals has to do not so much with things you do or don't do. It has to do with what you are, a self-seeker, bound for hell no matter what people may think of you, or a real man, bound for heaven by the road of voluntary sacrifice, no matter what it costs."

At the end of the sermon a keen young fellow,—he owns his own farm in Montana,—came up and said, "Chaplain, that was saying something, all right; but it's mighty funny talk from an Episcopalian. I've been around to a lot of your churches, and I never saw one yet where the man with the long green, no matter what sort of a fellow he was, didn't run things pretty much to suit himself. Lots of folks believe that with you plunder is a sure sign of piety. You're training with the wrong team."

I grinned and told him he was dead wrong; but I have been thinking things over. Many a good fellow this past year has let slip out his impression that the Episcopal Church was tied up to wealth, good or bad having little to do with it, and was therefore afraid to preach sin in terms of our social and industrial problems. I do not believe it, myself, for one moment; but it seems certain that most folks do think it true. Must we not correct, right at the beginning of these days of reconstruction, this most unfortunate false impression? If so, how can we do it?

The thing of prime necessity is that General Convention shall come out flatfootedly with a social declaration which shall be more than a string of glittering generalities. What good does it do for individuals to speak emphatically if there is nothing they can appeal to to back them up? The individuals are merely looked upon as eccentrics who are "training with the wrong team." I know one priest who preached a sermon last month, saying that it was a Christian requirement that every worker should be enabled to earn a minimum wage. Some of the vestry objected, saying that the Episcopal Church had not committed herself to a minimum wage, and that the man was preaching what was not of the faith. The preacher had no recourse. He quoted precedents from catholic theologians, but these vestrymen were "Protestants." He quoted statements of the Federal Council of Churches, but these people were "Episcopalians." The time has come when our only authoritative body, General Convention, must speak out for the Church.

I am well acquainted with every bit of legislation ever enacted on social lines by General Convention. Moreover, I believe I know every such utterance of a provincial synod. Only in one instance has there been any real attempt to utter a downright social message. The synod of the Mid-West in 1917 adopted a resolution which at least tried to hit the nail on the head. It not merely defined Christian social service as "the establishment of a social state where every individual shall have a chance for living a full human life, with due opportunity for physical, mental and spiritual development," but it proceeded to say that to this end in our day there were necessary a number of things, among which were enumerated a minimum decency wage for every worker, the recognition of the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, the abolition of child labor, the protection of women workers so as not to hamper motherhood, etc. Everyone of the things advocated was in strict accord with the stream of Christian ethical teaching through the centuries; but the statement was specific enough to bewilder no one. So far as I have been able to discover, this has been the only attempt definitely to utter the mind of the Episcopal Church about the ethics of our modern industrial and social problems.

But who ever heard of these resolutions? No one that I have met in camp. Instead, I find that a number of men have found meat in the Federal Council of Churches' program and wondered why our communion has consistently failed to endorse or to better it. Not one official utterance has there been, except some resolutions, very pretty in sentiment, introduced hesitantly and so worded as to offend no one and mean nothing, in both of which purposes they have been highly successful. The ordinary young man still insists that the Episcopal Church is a Church of wealthy and would-be-wealthy people who are afraid to face the social situation.

THREE WITNESSES

BY FREDERICK A. WRIGHT

WHEN childhood comes from heaven
To dwell upon the earth,
There is no secret leaven
Of sorrow in its mirth,
Nor darkening dross of even
To dim its golden worth.

When April days come hither,
The bloodroots in the mead
Are not aware of either
Earth's struggle or its greed,
Or that the flower can wither,
Or that the stem can bleed.

And poesy, that fertile
Sweet April of the soul,
Wraps in a flowery kirtle
The minds it doth control,
'Neath cypress tree and myrtle,
The heart-break and the dole.

Child, flower, intuition,
Are you false prophets three
Of lying superstition?
Or is your prophecy
A gleam of light elysian
Out of eternity?

THE SANCTUARY

BY LOUISE MARSHALL HAYNES

AT evensong I entered there, beneath the cedar spires, Through colored windows in the trees, to watch the golden west,
It seemed a hushed and sacred place to meditate and rest,—
And all at once like angel hosts, began the feathered choirs.

The chorus rose, then chanted low, through that cathedral wood,
It sang of love and thankfulness, it swelled in joyous hymn,
Each little feathered soul outpoured—until the west grew dim,—
My voice was still—how my heart sang!—as in that place
I stood.

A CAMPAIGN FOR PUBLIC HEALTH

BY H. E. DOUGLAS

ONLY within the last twenty years has the term "Public Health" come to mean a definite individual responsibility shared mutually by every citizen of the United States. Although it was first started in the big cities, notably New York, Chicago, Providence and Boston, perhaps forty years ago, the last two decades have seen its greatest advance. There is now hardly a city in the United States having a population of fifty thousand or over which does not have an organized public health activity of some kind.

The smaller towns and rural communities, however, have not shared in this development. Isolation and a lack of community interest, due to the fact that farms often lie remote from large cities, and widely separated from each other, are probably responsible for this slow growth. The services of graduate nurses are almost impossible to secure in such localities, and as in the early pioneer days, the women of the neighborhood are often the sole guardians of the lives of their families in time of sickness.

Do you remember when your consulting specialist told you that little Betsy had developed pneumonia, from "that cold" she caught while playing with a sick neighbor, and that if you had only known about her "bad tonsils," she would have had more than a fighting chance for her life now? And when you, yourself, were hurt last summer, think how much a cooling bath, an alcohol rub or a pillow tucked under your tired knees might have meant in helping you through the long afternoons or the hot breathless nights.

Because health is more than anything else a matter of home hygiene and care, the American Red Cross is including on its peace program a nation-wide effort to teach every woman and girl in the United States how to maintain to the highest degree possible, the physical well-being of her family and to nurse members of her household in time of minor illness. Such instruction strikes at the very roots of epidemics. If every woman in this country had known that the influenza epidemic, instead of being a new and deadly scourge from which there was little escape, was no more than "an acute form of grippe" and depended largely on competent nursing care for the recovery of its patients, this one disease would probably not have had a casualty of over 400,000 in the United States alone.

Epidemics and contagion require more than sympathy and good intuition; they can be checked only by universal knowledge and precautions. Minor ailments, malnutrition, a lack of understanding of the fundamental principles of household hygiene and sanitation can be met and remedied only by competent home nursing if as a nation, we are to defeat the oldest and most cruel enemy of mankind—preventable disease.

The Red Cross, to prepare American women to meet emergencies in the future, offers a course in home hygiene and care of the sick. It explains the causes, symptoms, and prevention of common sense diseases, treatment of minor wounds and burns, care of babies and that almost lost art, the way to make a bed a thing of comfort, permanence and beauty. While this course is in no way intended to prepare women for the profession of nursing its greatest value lies in the fact that it does teach "what to do before the doctor comes"—and after he goes.

Such instruction in home nursing is not limited merely to those students who wish to take the standardized course, and to receive a certificate for the completion of the full work. This course may be given to factory operatives, girl scouts, nursemaids, saleswomen in large department stores and other specialized groups and no examination is required after the completion of the work.

As well as instruction in the care of the sick, the Red Cross teaches ways of promoting the health and efficiency of the well. Food has always played a large role upon the lives of the American people. Few women, however, really know exactly how to feed their families. You are only too careful of the carburetor of your new car; but do you give a moment's thought to your breakfast, luncheon and dinner, other than that these meals must tickle your palate? Do you realize that upon the amount of green vegetables, of milk in its thousand and one different forms, of tissue building proteins and of fruits, oils and fats may depend your health, your daily work and specially your good disposition? To meet this need for a more complete understanding of the proper selection and preparation of food, the Red Cross course in home

In the reconstruction which will follow the treaty of peace, there is no question more vital than that of the public health. Just as the war has brought about a political world-conscience, modern medicine has shown the imperative need that we develop community responsibility for higher standards of living. Strong moral obligations demand that we remove, as far as lie within our power, all conditions which cause our fellow beings unhappiness and pain.

The American Red Cross is now mobilizing its strength for a new fight against "one of the oldest enemies of mankind—preventable disease." Its peace program includes a nation-wide effort to better public health, through urging communities to employ a public health nurse and through educating every wife and mother in the United States in maintaining to the highest possible degree the health of her family and to nurse members of her household during minor illnesses, through the Red Cross courses of instruction in home hygiene and care of the sick and home dietetics.

Such a program for "a healthier, happier America today and tomorrow" challenges the interest and co-operation of every church member in the United States, in that it is one of the most practical forms of social service.

*Alfred Harding,

dietetics aims to teach simple home cooking and the essentials in properly balanced family diet—what every woman should know and what few rightly understand. These courses are now being offered at local Red Cross chapters, and complete information regarding them may be secured from the chapter offices.

The Red Cross is only too glad to place its instructors and class-rooms at the disposal of parochial organizations interested in forming classes in home hygiene and care of the sick. In rural communities, traveling equipment which has been packed in boxes suitable for transportation in an automobile, is available, and the Red Cross nurse might become a very valuable factor in promoting interest in isolated and remote districts where church and community activities are greatly in need of stimulation.

Instruction in the basic principles of "home-making" is not as spectacular as business training or reconstruction work in France, but it is, above else, woman's work and a field in which she may well be proud to serve.

A PROBLEM "OVER HERE"

BY MATTHEW K. SNIFFEN

FORTY years ago a prediction that the American Indian would some day fight shoulder to shoulder with the white man to preserve our civilization would have met with derision. Yet today there are approximately 10,000 Indians in our army and navy (mostly volunteers), who have done their part in the gigantic struggle to make the world safe for democracy. Back from the firing line, thousands of them have shown their patriotism in other ways. Their subscriptions to the four Liberty Loans were about $20,000,000; they have been industrious in Red Cross work and other war activities, and responded splendidly along agricultural and stock-raising efforts. And, strange as it may seem, the majority of these Indians do not enjoy the privileges of that democracy for which they have worked and fought!

Because of the magnitude of the war, some home problems are in danger of being overlooked by the people of the country; and so far as the Indian is concerned, that is exactly what certain exploiters greatly desire. They will not neglect the opportunity that such a situation presents, but will take full advantage of it.

In the early days of this country the schemers sought to despoil the Indian by force; by inciting outbreaks and causing him to be "moved on" under the pretext that his presence was a menace to the peace of the border. Now the same ends are often attempted in a more subtle way—"under cover of law," by act of Congress.

Within the brief limits of this article I must assume that the reader possesses a certain knowledge of the subject; that he understands the past blundering and plundering policies; how solemn treaties were merely "scraps of paper;" how the Indian service was cursed by politics; how the guardian government, through indifferent or incompetent employes, allowed the ward to be robbed, until an awakened public conscience demanded that the Indian be treated with justice, honesty and intelligence.

The present policy is to transform the Indian into a law-abiding citizen, and yet he has been the victim of the most brutal and lawless methods on the part of those who sought to deprive him of his rights. Such things were of common occurrence in the past, but what about the present, when the greatest battle in the world's history has decisively refuted the doctrine that might is right? Let me answer the question by citing three cases that are now engaging our attention.

Recently a petition reached our office from the 3,000 Navajo Indians under the jurisdiction of the Pueblo Bonito Agency, New Mexico, calling attention to the many grievances and wrongs they have suffered at the hands of a small group of American stockmen. This particular section has been the home of a portion of the large Navajo tribe for probably a century or more. The present generation has made rapid progress, is thrifty, law-abiding and self-supporting, and their industry contributed largely to the building up of prosperous towns adjacent to their reservation, where many Americans have amassed comfortable fortunes as a result of their trade. But in the midst of this progress the stockmen began to fence in many miles of the country, monopolizing the Indian lands, driving them off their individual allotments, and when that action was resented the Indians were threatened and intimidated. Instead of resorting to force to eject the intruders, these Indians sum up their case in the following simple but eloquent manner:

We appeal to the fair and unbiased judgment of every loyal American: Is it right to intimidate, terrorize, and endeavor to drive out 3,000 self-supporting, law-abiding Navajo Indians, with their flocks and herds, for the sole benefit of ten or twelve American stockmen? We ask the American people to investigate our matters here. Who have invested the most money in Liberty Bonds, or contributed the most to the Red Cross funds? The ten or twelve American stockmen, or our 3,000 Navajo Indians?

A representative of the Indian Rights Association visited these Indians this fall and secured first-hand information that verifies their statements. The matter has been presented to the authorities at Washington, but legislation may be required to secure an adequate adjustment of the difficulties. In that event, will not the American conscience support this plea for justice? It was Secretary Stanton who said to Bishop Whipple: "Congress never redresses a wrong until the people demand it."

The Mescalero reservation, in New Mexico, is a tract of about 300,000 acres, and the home of 625 Apache Indians. While not adapted to agriculture, the country is fine for grazing sheep and cattle. In addition, the reservation contains standing pine timber worth at least $3,000,000. A bill is now pending in Congress that proposes arbitrarily to make this reservation a national park, or playground, "for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States." The consent of the Indians has not been asked, nor does the bill provide compensation for the confiscation of their property.

The whites of that section are not suffering for pleasure grounds, as the National Forest reserves adjoining the Mescalero country on the north and south are more than ample for their needs. The fact that the senator who inroduced the bill has a ranch adjoining the reservation, and that its passage would undoubtedly increase the value of his private interests, makes his advocacy of such a measure indelicate, to say the least.

Six thousand Pima Indians live on a reservation near Phoenix, Arizona. They are thrifty, industrious and law-abiding, and it is their proud boast that they never made war on the white man. They have always been self-supporting, and ask aid from no one if their water rights are respected. The country is hot and arid, and without irrigation agriculture is a failure. By reason of priority of use, these Indians have the first legal right to the normal flow of the Gila River, but the whites above them simply take practically all the water regardless of that fact. During the past summer I visited this reservation, and also went over the farming region above it. What I saw clearly answers the question, "Why don't the Pimas get their water?" Along the Gila River there were seven diversion dams by which the water was carried to the various ranches of the whites, while the Indian ditches were bone dry. The crops of the former were prosperous looking, but on the reservation the Indians' fields were parched and ruined.

The Indian Bureau is now preparing to take legal action to secure an equitable division of this water, and it is hoped that something will be accomplished soon. Meanwhile, the Pimas are threatened with an "inside" danger. A former superintendent of the Pima Agency, who stands high in the councils of the Indian Bureau, recently acquired a financial interest in a large ranch that joins the reservation. This gentleman, who is still in the Indian service, has a thorough knowledge of the legal and physical aspects of the question at issue, and he has probably been advising the authorities on the situation. It was claimed by friends of the Pimas that this ranch was unlawfully diverting water that should have gone to the Indians, and that their erstwhile friend knew that such was the case. Not wishing to trust to rumor, I interviewed this official at Phoenix, when he not only admitted his financial interest in this ranch, but he acknowledged that his company was not entitled to the water; that they knew it belonged to the Indians. Notwithstanding this admission, I saw and photographed, not one, but four, diversion dams that this company had built across the Gila River, that made it almost impossible for any water to reach the Indian ditches below.

These facts were presented by me to the Indian Bureau upon my return from the west a few months ago and it is hoped that the conclusion will soon be reached that anyone connected with the effort to protect the Pima water rights should be above suspicion. Certainly he should not be allowed to "carry water on both shoulders," for thus far it has not spilled on the right side. His continuance in the Indian service would seem to be untenable. This statement is hardly a matter of controversy, but an attempt has been made to evade the real issue by accusing those mentioning it of being pro-German! How appropriate from one who adheres to the Hun doctrine that might is right!

What would happen if these schemers attempted to dispossess white settlers of their rights under similar circumstances? Probably armed resistance and bloodshed, if past history has any value; yet the Indian, instead of resorting to force, is trusting, with child-like faith, that his rights will be protected by the guardian Government.

In spite of defects in administration and adverse environment, the Indian has made rapid progress in the past three decades. He is now in a transition stage, and it should be noted that he was asked to do more than was ever expected of the white man, namely, to take a step in a generation or two that required centuries for the Anglo-Saxon race. He has advanced more speedily than the regulations under which he is governed. Secretary Lane well said: "We are to control less and to help more. Paternalism is to give way to fraternalism." In other words, departmental red tape, with its various and petty restrictions, should be rapidly reduced and not increased.

The time has come when all Indians should be under the same law that governs the whites; when they should enjoy all the rights of that democracy which they have helped to maintain. This is aimed at in the Carter-Heyden bill, now pending in Congress, which provides in its opening section that "every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States and shall have the benefits of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the state or territory in which he may reside."

I do not want to close this article without merely mentioning the fact that the efforts of the Christian missionaries, the development of a governmental educational system—and especially the pioneer work of General R. H. Pratt at Carlisle—together with some able and intelligent men and women in the Federal Indian service, have done much to bring about this advance of the Red Man.

Another factor that should not be overlooked is the Indian Rights Association, which was organized thirty-six years ago (as a result of Bishop Hare's invitation to Herbert Welsh and Henry S. Pancoast to visit the Sioux country), to produce "such public feeling and congressional action as shall secure to our Indian population civil rights and general education, . . . and in time bring about the complete civilization of the Indians and their admission to citizenship." In the beginning of its work, the late General Armstrong, the founder of Hampton Institute, suggested a policy that has been strictly adhered to by the Association, namely, a first-hand study of actual conditions by frequent visits to the reservations, and on the basis of the information thus gathered, appeal to the proper authorities and the public. The effect of these efforts is summarized in a statement written by Bishop Hare shortly before his death, as follows:

The Indian Rights Association as a free and independent society has given to the cause of Indian rights disinterested ability of a high order. It has brought to light hidden things of darkness. It has made officials feel that they were under the public eye. It has made ears attentive to cries for help which otherwise had been deaf, and it has given faithful officials the reward and help of knowing that they would have in all their right measures strong public backing. Without it the friends of the Indian would feel that by definite, earnest effort they could accomplish but little and were beating the air.

While much has been accomplished, the work is by no means completed, and it will undoubtedly be needed for many years to come. Final success cannot be achieved in the twinkling of an eye; the process of the Indian's absorption into our body politic must necessarily be gradual, because of varying conditions; but the ultimate end will be greatly helped if democracy at home is made safe for him.

ORGANIZATION FOR BETTER SOCIAL ORDER PLANNED

Churchmen Meet in Two-Day Conference to Make Plans

What promises to be an undertaking of considerable interest and influence was launched last week at a two-day conference held at the Church Mission House, New York, by a group of church people. This gathering, which crowded the board room, came together in response to the call printed a fortnight ago in the church press. Professor Vida Scudder of Wellesley presided. Among those present were the Rev. J. H. Melish, the Rev. B. I. Bell, Dean Lathrop, Dean Ladd, Mrs. Ladd, Professor Hunt, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Simkhovitch, Mr. Tittsworth of the Brotherhood Army and Navy Department, Miss Margaret Lawrence of the C. A. I. L., the Rev. G. I. Brown, the Rev. W. B. Spofford, William F. Cochrane, the Rev. R. W. Hogue, Mr. Crouch and Canon Elmen-dorf of the Social Service Commission, the Rev. G. P. Atwater, Deaconess Lloyd, the Rev. Francis Barnett and the Rev. Edgar LeBlanc.

Enthusiasm, a strong sense of social responsibility, a desire to work both wisely and fearlessly and a deep spiritual purpose marked the conference. Although no definite action was taken, those present agreed to form an association for the promotion of social justice and to that end an executive committee of twelve was formed in whose hands the formulation of name and aim, the drafting of a constitution and the mapping out of an initial program was put. This executive committee is to report at a meeting to be held during General Convention. The personnel of the executive committee is as follows: the Rev. G. I. Brown, William F. Cochrane, the Rev. W. B. Spofford, Dean Ladd, Dean Lathrop, Bishop Faber, the Rev. B. I. Bell, the Rev. R. W. Hogue, the Rev. J. H. Melish, the Rev. W. H. Hazard, Miss Scudder, Mrs. Simkhovitch.

The purpose of the suggested organization is to make good the resolutions passed by General Convention in 1913 in which it demanded "the achievement of a social order in which there shall be a more equitable distribution of wealth, in which the social cause of poverty and the gross waste of the present order shall be eliminated and in which every worker shall have a just return for that which he produces, a free opportunity for self-development and a fair share in all gains of progress."

CHURCH PAGEANTRY AND DRAMA COUNCIL MEETS

The first meeting of the Council on Church Pageantry and Drama recently appointed by the General Board of Religious Education met last Wednesday in New York under the chairmanship of the Rev.

Carroll Lund Bates. The council expects to ask the General Board for a central worker who can at once establish a clearing-house of information in regard to church pageantry and drama and later develop the field work. A reading committee was appointed (the Rev. Phillips Osgood, chairman, Mrs. Henry L. Hobart and Miss Marjory Lacey-Baker) to prepare a list of mystery plays, pageants etc., recommended by the council. A publicity committee (Miss M. J. Hobart, chairman) was appointed to disseminate information in regard to church drama. The Rev. George Long, D.D., who produced the pageant at the St. Louis convention was empowered by the council to take up the question of religious dramatic productions at the Detroit convention.

IMMORTALITY PROVED BY SCIENCE, SAYS PROF. HYSLOP

Professor Hyslop delivered a striking address at St. Mark's Church in the Bow-erie Sunday afternoon, May 4, on the light which psychical research has shed upon the Resurrection. Dr. Hyslop said that the doctrine of immortality and the ethical content of Christianity, as shown in the Sermon on the Mount, were the two dominant features that had made for the growth and spread of the Christian religion. The doctrine of immortality emphasized the worth of the individual. The bodily resurrection of Jesus Christ, he said, did not of itself prove the immortality of the soul. St. Paul, however, gives us the doctrine of the spiritual body which by conceiving of spirit and soul apart from the body, implies immortality. The data collected by the Society of Psychical Research has convinced Professor Hyslop that the doctrine of immortality has received by science a credible demonstration of its truth. The work of that society will have an important bearing upon Christian conduct by giving increased emphasis to the significance of the individual. The ties of loyalty to those we know and love here on earth are given increased significance, for psychical research has shown that these ties persist after death.

It was stimulating to hear Professor Hyslop affirm so confidently the ability of science to show that the spirit survives the body and that communication can be established between earth and heaven.

Editor's Congress Paper in Nation

There have been many requests that THE CHURCHMAN publish the paper delivered at the Church Congress by the editor, the Rev. William Austin Smith, on the topic, "The Effect of the War on Religion." Mr. Smith feels that he cannot comply with this request, but the editor of The Nation has asked permission to publish the address and it will appear in the issue of The Nation for May 10.

PHILADELPHIA CHURCHMEN ENDORSE NEW CHARTER

Social Service Commission and Churchmen's Association Approve Reform

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—The Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Pennsylvania is deeply concerned in the movement for a new charter for Philadelphia, and is attempting to secure interest and co-operation in securing the passage of the pending measures intended to achieve this end.

The commission announces that it is primarily concerned in every movement that has for its object the improvement of conditions in Philadelphia, and is particularly interested in those which are designed to provide the citizens with a more effective instrumentality for the working out of their ideas and ideals. It asserts that the city and its various activities are constantly handicapped by the lack of modern governmental machinery, and declares that a city of the size and importance of Philadelphia should have the most complete and up-to-date instrumentality at its command. "We are therefore interested," runs a statement recently made public by the commission, "in those concerns which provide for a small legislative body in place of the present cumbersome two chambers, and for the concentration of responsibility and authority in executive matters that is essential to effective government. For this reason we join with other public bodies and public-spirited citizens in urging upon the legislature a favorable consideration of the pending legislation dealing with this subject, and especially the bills introduced by Senator Woodward."

The Churchwoman's Association has also interested itself in the matter of charter revision, and at a meeting held on March 28 the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, The Government of a city affects the well-being of all its inhabitants, and

WHEREAS, The present Government of Philadelphia has resulted in grievous conditions, and

WHEREAS, The hope for better civic conditions lies in a change of government,

BE IT RESOLVED, That the members of the Churchwoman's Association endorse the proposed plan of charter revision, believing that the changes to be brought about by its adoption will make for a fuller and more abundant life for the people of Philadelphia.

Church Abolishes Rented Pews

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—By action of the vestry and approval of the pewholders the custom of renting pews in St. Barnabas's Church has been given up, with the understanding on the part of those who formerly rented pews or sittings that their subscriptions will equal the amount previously given in the form of rent.

INTERCHURCH MOVEMENT HOLDS OPENING MEETING

Cleveland Conference Launches Great Interdenominational Campaign

The sessions of the opening conference of the Inter-Church World Movement met last week on April 30 and May 1 in Cleveland, Ohio. At the Hotel Cleveland, nine hundred rooms had been reserved for the members of the conference. The purpose of the conference was to place the business and the plans for the movement directly before the delegates. J. Campbell White of Wooster, Ohio; S. Earl Taylor, R. E. Diffendorfer, Fred P. Haggard of New York; A. E. Cory of Cincinnati and Raymond Robins of Chicago were the chief speakers. The purpose of the Inter-church World Movement is to carry out "an adequate world program for the Christian Church in the new era" by means of united study and united effort to assure the support of the mission work of the co-operating communions at home and abroad. United study, a united budget, a united program and a united appeal are the main features of the plan. The campaign may be compared to the Nation-Wide Campaign for the united support of the federal agencies of the Episcopal Church just launched from the Church Missions House, New York.

AUBURN PRISONER TRIES TO STEAL SUNDAY OFFERING

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK—St. Paul's Church here would have been poorer by $108, the amount of a recent Sunday's offerings, had it not been for the quickness of Mr. Charles Ketley, a seventy year old warden of the parish. On Monday afternoon, Mr. Ketley, according to his custom, was counting the contributions in an upper room of the Lockwood Memorial Parish House. Leaving the money stacked in piles on the table he went down stairs to obtain a bag in which to carry it to the bank. When he returned a moment later the money had disappeared. From the window he saw a man, whom he had previously noted in the lower hall of the building, walking down the street. He immediately started in pursuit, raising the cry of "stop, thief." The man broke into a run and a number of people attempted to stop him. Detective Bennett was standing outside the post office building and made an easy capture. The man gave his name as Walter Jepson, and proved to be a paroled prisoner from Auburn.

Bishop Brent for Geneva Conference

It has been announced by the board of governors of the Summer School of Province II, which will meet at Geneva, New York, from June 30 to July 11, that Bishop Reese will not be able to conduct the conferences for the clergy on the 8th, 9th and 10th, but that Bishop Brent will be present and will conduct the conferences instead. The speaker at the Fourth of July evening meeting will be Chaplain John Ward of the 107th Infantry in the 27th Division. Chaplain Ward was twice decorated and was cited for bravery every time he went into action. He is the rector of Grace Church, Buffalo.

Chaplain Browne D. S. C. Back

Chaplain D. H. Browne, rector of Christ Church, New Brighton, Staten Island, has returned to this country, after eighteen months service with the A. E. F. He comes home with the rank of captain and with the D. S. C. for bravery in the Argonne drive. Under the fire of the German machine guns he dragged ten men one by one to places of safety.

CROOK WHO STOLE $2500 FROM CLERGY ARRESTED

Confesses Guilt When Trapped in Albany by Pittsfield Rector

PITTSFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.—The clever imposter whose game to extract financial help from the clergy has been exposed in the church press, was finally caught in Albany by the Pittsfield police through the help of the Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, rector of St. Stephen's Church here. Late on the afternoon of April 23 Ralph Walter Hall, aged thirty years, was identified in the crowded station at Albany by Mr. Keeler and arrested by Chief of Police Sullivan and Inspector McCloghan, who rushed him in an automobile over the state line to Pittsfield. Hall was identified by several warts on his right hand and by four false front teeth which he removes when convenient. Hall had tried to defraud Mr. Keeler of $150 the day before, but Mr. Keeler was suspicious, and Hall left Mr. Keeler's study in Pittsfield only to telephone him later from Albany where Mr. Keeler made an appointment to meet him at the railroad station. Mr. Keeler then notified the Pittsfield chief of police, who went with him to Albany and there effected the arrest. The following account of Hall's visit to Mr. Keeler's rectory has been sent by Mr. Keeler to THE CHURCHMAN:

"In a recent issue of THE CHURCHMAN there was an article warning the clergy against a clever crook, who was obtaining money from the clergy under false pretenses. He turned up yesterday in my study, representing himself to have been, until recently, the secretary of Bishop Morrison, and to be suffering from tuberculosis. Later what purported to be a long distance telephone conversation with Bishop Morrison took place, followed later in the day by two telegrams from Bishop Morrison. In these, the bishop directed me to give the man $100, and send him to Iowa.

"I became suspicious of him, and, in spite of his clever acting and very intimate knowledge of the bishops and clergy of the Church, I was able to trap him and caused his arrest in Albany yesterday afternoon.

"By his own confession, he has obtained $2,500 at least from the clergy of the Church since January 1. He has represented himself to have been at some time the secretary of Bishop Anderson, Bishop Morrison, Bishop Greer, Bishop Longley, Dr. Roland C. Smith of Washington, Dr. Alexander Mann of Boston, and Dr. Karl Reiland of New York. The clergy are usually called by the long distance telephone, when some well-known bishop or priest of the Church commends to their care a young fellow, Mr. Ralph C. Hale, who is in their city and stranded. Not long after that, Mr. Hale shows up and, by his manner and general knowledge of the Church and its clergy, works his game.

"It would be a great help to the Pittsfield police and to me if any of the clergy or laymen of the Church, who have been his victims, would communicate with me. So vigorous and widespread have been his operations, from St. Paul to Washington, that he ought not to be left at large nor get off with a light sentence."

A SERVICE ABOARD THE U. S. S. SEATTLE

The books in the hands of the men were given by the War Commission. The chaplain officiating, the Rev. John S. Putnam, is not a minister of the Episcopal Church, but of the Dutch Reformed Church, in which he has served for some years; he is, however, a candidate for holy orders and will soon be ordained to the diaconate.

SEMINARY CENTENNIAL CELEBRATED BY ALUMNI

Notable Speakers Address Friends of "The General" on Anniversary

By Charles Chase Wilson.

The General Theological Seminary has just completed the celebration of its one hundredth anniversary. The week's festivities opened with a service at St. Paul's Chapel on Monday, April 28, at which time the students and faculty of the seminary took part in a memorial service in commemoration of the first classes of the seminary, which were held in the vestry-room of St. Paul's Chapel. There was a procession in academic costume around the church and up into the vestry-room, where Dr. Manning and Dean Fosbroke made short addresses. After the service the students and faculty of the seminary were entertained at lunch in the parish house.

The celebration proper took place on the Wednesday and Thursday following. About one hundred and fifty, including both graduates and undergraduates, were present at the choral celebration of the Holy Communion in the chapel on Wednesday morning. This was followed by breakfast in the refectory. The weather was warm and bright, and most of the alumni spent what was left of the morning about the steps of the buildings welcoming their friends and classmates among the new arrivals.

After a stand-up lunch in the gymnasium the order of the day, for the first part of the afternoon, as announced on the program, called for "class and group reunions of the alumni in specially designated rooms." The class and group reunions undoubtedly took place, but from the appearance of the close they were all held on various sections of the iron fence, from Jarvis to Eigenbrodt. The class of 1917 met on the chapel steps, only to adjourn after passing a vote of welcome to Chaplain Carhart of the navy, recently returned from overseas. By half past three the general aspect of clerical black, already relieved somewhat by the olive drab and blue of chaplains' uniforms, began to be illuminated still more by the bright colors of the hoods of the alumni and invited delegates from universities and other seminaries, as they formed in line in front of Sherred Hall. Just before four o'clock, led by a crucifer in cossack and surplice, the procession left the Ninth Avenue entrance of the seminary, and made its way across the street and into St. Peter's Church around the corner. First came the students, after them the alumni, the juniors first, then the visiting delegates and the faculty, and last of all the bishops, among whom were Bishop Tuttle and Bishop Greer.

The general subject for the afternoon was education in the new age. When the procession had come to St. Peter's Church, and all had found their places, Bishop Greer made a short address of welcome to the alumni and delegates and appreciation of the work of the seminary, and then introduced the first speaker, Chancellor Brown of New York University. Chancellor Brown called attention to the rôle that education must play in teaching the true meaning of democracy. He said that just now the fact was that the greatest interest on the part of students was in chemistry, engineering and medicine, but predicted a swing back to humanistic studies, studies humanistic in a new sense, psychology, economics, sociology, and especially history. "History should not be simply a recital of past events," he said, "but an interpretation of past events with an eye to the future. The history of the past will have to be re-written in the light of the war, and that re-written history in its turn, will have a profound effect upon the world's future. We must have a reverence for the past, but that reverence must not degenerate simply into a bulwark of conservatism."

The next speaker was the Hon. Frederick Paul Keppel, Assistant Secretary of War and formerly dean of Columbia College. He gave an account of the moral condition of the American troops, and spoke very highly of the recreational work that has been done in France, especially since the armistice. To show that this work is being appreciated on the other side he quoted the following request which appeared a short time ago in the daily official cablegram from overseas. "Send over plenty of welfare workers. The best men you can send are the women." He praised the work of the chaplains, and said that experience has shown that mixing up welfare work with that of the chaplains has not been a success. The men do not like heart to heart talks sandwiched in between the third and fourth reel of a moving picture. He predicted that the chaplains would play an increasingly important part in the work of the army. "If the War Department's plans go through," he said, "the position of chaplain will be more worthwhile than ever for high-minded men."

Bishop Rhinelander's subject was the relation between theology and education. He pointed out that education, by its very nature, must be dogmatic and urged that this be generally recognized, and that more definite teaching be given in our parishes.

After evensong in the chapel the alumni dinner was held. There were almost three hundred present. The refectory was packed table to table and there were a large number who had to be served downstairs in the gymnasium. In the pauses between courses the general hum of conversation was punctuated by class cheers. After dinner Professor Jenks read a paper on the history of the seminary.

The weather on Thursday was rainy and disagreeable, but the chapel was filled for the service of thanksgiving which took place at eleven o'clock. After opening prayers by Bishop Lines, the president of the Board of Trustees, a psalm, and the Nicene creed, Dean Fosbroke read the bidding prayer in which the benefactors of the seminary are commemorated.

The sermon was by Bishop Tuttle. His text was from Genesis XL, 8: "How old art thou?" He spoke about the founding of the seminary, with special reference to certain turning points in the missionary history of the church, and closed with an appeal to the seminarians. At the close of the sermon a solemn Te Deum was sung in thanksgiving for the seminary's hundred years of service.

BISHOP OF ALBANY CONDEMNS SELFISH NATIONALISM

Calls for Tolerance, Courage and Leadership in Convention Address

ALBANY, NEW YORK—The diocesan convention began here on May 6. Bishop Nelsons convention address was delivered on the opening day. The question of diocesan boundaries was the first topic he discussed. He explained that since Central New York and Albany were the dioceses affected by the plan drawn up by the provincial committee, any recommendation to General Convention would depend upon their action. He himself refrained from comment. In speaking of world peace he said:

"We must avoid Pharisaism in considering the object of our national existence, and we cannot emphasize too strongly Mazzini's great saying that "Nationality is Mission." The Italian patriot believed that there is a general purpose for humanity, in which each nation has its special part. It exists in order to make its contribution toward the purpose of humanity and not merely to become selfishly powerful and rich.

"We have felt and expressed our righteous indignation toward that imperial and imperious state which aimed at selfish aggrandizement and plunged the world into war. Must we not be even more indignant at those self-styled patriots who court popular favor by proclaiming that our country has no concern or obligation in maintaining peace in other continents."

Christian unity requires courage as well as tolerance, said the bishop. Greater freedom to exercise leadership in promoting of unity should be granted the bishops by General Convention. In regard to leadership, he continued:

"No problem of Church or State is of greater practical importance in these days than that which has to do with leadership, because leadership rightly exercised and properly guarded against abuse is a necessary element of democracy. Bearing this general principle in mind, let us note certain assumptions which seem to underlie a more or less popular conception of present day statesmanship in the Church. First, it is recognized that we are confronted by a great moral crisis. Second, the Church must meet this as a unit. Third, there must be leaders to point the way.

"The first and second steps in this sequence are obvious and may be regarded as almost axiomatic. The third gives rise to questionings. Who are to be leaders: how are they to be chosen: how are they to lead?

"In answering these questions it is important that we should consider whether those who are to be led are intelligent, earnest and capable of initiative, or whether they are so lacking in these qualities that they must depend upon others for vision and program."

HOLY TRINITY, PARIS, TO BE AMERICA'S WAR MEMORIAL

Plan to Raise Half Million to Commemorate Fallen Heroes

The following announcement of the plan to make Holy Trinity Church, Paris, America's great memorial, has just been sent to THE CHURCHMAN by the Rev. F. W. Beckman, rector of Holy Trinity.

Across the Atlantic, three thousand miles from home, under wooden crosses lie thousands of America's best and bravest. Fighting for the right, they made the supreme sacrifice and God has received them.

In the land where they lie buried, in the city of Paris, the heart of France, is the famous American Church of the Holy Trinity, the largest and most beautiful American church abroad. Episcopalian in name, its pews, its services, its ministrations have been free to every American of whatever church allegiance throughout the war. Scores of the clergy, including many bishops, and almost all of them chaplains or special workers in our army, have spoken from its pulpit. Thousands upon thousands of American boys in khaki, blue and marine green have worshiped there. For many it was their last service in God's house, and many have been borne by their comrades under the folds of Old Glory out through its doors to their last camping ground. In addition to this, Holy Trinity from the very beginning of the Great War, has made its contribution in countless ways to the cause of the Allies.

Because of all this, the thought has spontaneously been urged that after the war, Holy Trinity must be more than America's great church in Europe, it must be America's memorial church, her Westminster Abbey in Europe.

To present this matter to our citizens at home was the object of my recent visit, which was all too short and only permitted me to go to a few eastern cities. The world knows the war record of America, it knows the value of its contribution to the allied cause. It knows of the unsurpassed fighting qualities of our men. The story of Cantigny, Chateau Thierry, Belleau Woods, St. Mihiel, The Argonne, have been written imperishably in American annals and the world's. Lasting memorials will be erected at home and in Europe but none will be more fitting or appropriate than the conversion of America's most famous European church, one which itself has a record of contribution to the cause, at the same time unique and glorious into a church of memorials for America's hero dead. Just how fitting this is Holy Trinity's war effort (included as it is as a part of the greater whole) will show. From the very beginning of the war, Holy Trinity became headquarters for American leadership and work in the desperate cause of French and Belgian relief. Working daily through these terrible months and years, the rector, (until April 1, 1918, the Rev. S. N. Watson, D. D.) and his wife, together with the church's many loyal members, gave themselves, their time, their influence, their money to the great cause. Hundreds of thousands of dollars, tens of thousands of garments, food, artificial limbs, etc., were distributed through them to the destitute. Working through the Fatherless Children of France and French and Belgian organizations, it has cared for thousands of widows and orphans. Since the coming of the A. E. F. the clergy and people, (including the War Commission assistant) have worked unceasingly, not only in the church itself, but in military hospitals, soldiers' and sailors' clubs and canteens, the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. The present rector and his wife, with one hundred assistants, since October, 1917, have directed the American Soldiers' and Sailors' Club and canteens founded by Rodman Wanamaker and the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania. Known, since their opening, for hospitality and cheer by American soldiers and sailors who visit them at the rate of five thousand a day, they are still doing their important work, with an influence wider than ever. The clubrooms, restaurant, entertainments, American ice-cream, the ice-cream service to the military hospitals, (the most extensive in France) sightseeing tours for the convalescent and men on leave, free tobacco, chocolate, jam, etc., distributed in camp, hospital and club, will be forever remembered by the A. E. F.

But reverting to the church itself, throughout the entire period, since America's entrance into the war, its pews have been filled with soldier, sailor and war worker. Many civilians left Paris in 1914, and when the menace of the German offensive again threatened in the spring and summer of 1918, many more departed. I am sure that the military service held every Sunday afternoon—the especial pride of Chaplain Arthur Washburn, the War Commission assistant assigned to Holy Trinity's staff—is the most popular and distinctive military service in France. The music is led by a United States infantry band and war choir of sixty voices. Prayers are offered, songs of home and national anthems are sung, addresses are made by chaplains and others in the service, Old Glory is borne into the church by a color sergeant with guard under arms detailed by the commanding general. The church is filled.

On all national days all America in Paris finds its way to Holy Trinity. The services held on Memorial Day, 1918, (a description of which appeared in THE CHURCHMAN), on the Sunday after the armistice at which Bishop Brent preached, and again on the first Sunday after President Wilson's arrival in France, which he attended, and at which Bishop Guerry preached, are unforgettable, and are a part of the history of the war.

Therefore, it is not strange that to a church so consecrated and to a people so devoted should come the vision of perpetuating within her walls for all time and with visible memorials her country's effort and sacrifice, and in which she, herself, has been an inseparable part. The war memorial plan already adopted includes:

1. The annual Memorial Day service for American soldier and sailor dead.
2. A great tablet to be placed on the west wall in memory of the American dead of the great war.
3. Tablets to the American combat divisions, (thirty), the navy and those who gave their lives before America's entrance.

4. A Book of the Gold Stars, to contain service records with place of burial in Europe of Americans.

5. Certain flags and standards, if procurable, for the church's interior.

6. Possibly, the completion of a memorial chapel within the church.

The plan also includes, a war memorial endowment fund of one half a million dollars to be given by thousands of American gold starred families, churches, Sunday Schools and other organizations in memory of those of their number whom they may name and who rest in soldiers' graves in Europe. This fund will be invested for the many times increased work of this American church among its countrymen and will serve as a witness in France of America's faith in God through Jesus Christ.

The greater America in France, after the war is certain, and consequently the opportunity for Holy Trinity and not only at Holy Trinity itself but at its Chapel of St. Luke's which with its clubrooms has been in years past, American student headquarters in Paris. Since the war, when all students left, this property has been used as a part of American Military Hospital No. 3 for officers. Within the past month, 2500 students selected from the A. E. F. have entered upon courses in the Paris schools and universities and are living in the student quarter. In the autumn, thousands will come from America, including those who formerly would have gone to Germany for special work. Last Sunday the clergy of Holy Trinity made the first announcement of the opening of work among American students and twenty-five men remained after the morning service to discuss plans. This is but one of the many channels of American opportunity for work among Americans through which Holy Trinity's influence must flow.

It has been gratifying to be assured on all sides, that of all war memorial plans thus far presented, Holy Trinity's is the most appealing. An American committee is now being organized, representative of the clergy, laity and officers and men of the army and navy, which in the near future, under the chairmanship of Dr. Stires, rector of St. Thomas's Church, New York, who spent many months in overseas duty, will announce its campaign. The executive secretary of the committee, is Major Archibald G. Thacher, commanding a battalion of the 306th Infantry, A. E. F. (address 59 Wall street, New York). It is the confident purpose of this committee, co-operating with a similar committee in Paris to bring this campaign to a successful conclusion within a few weeks after it is formally begun.

BISHOP LAWRENCE SUMMONS CHURCH TO MEET SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Massachusetts Convention Hears Stirring Call from Bishop Who Describes the Twenty Weeks Campaign as His Way of Celebrating His Twenty-fifth Anniversary

Opening Service and Convention Address—The convention of the Diocese of Massachusetts opened on May 1 in Trinity Church, Boston, with the Holy Communion. At this service Bishop Lawrence made his annual address in which he summarized the work of the year. After touching on the missionary and the educational work done in Massachusetts, the bishop gave this call to social service.

The Church's Social Responsibility—"In the matter of social service," said Bishop Lawrence, "good church people say, 'Why does the Church touch that problem? Why not leave it to the social workers?' The Church touches the problems because it is the Church of Christ; and the Church has not the spirit of Christ if it does not touch these problems. The people who need as much arousing as any are the people in our churches every Sunday. We read, 'I was in prison and ye visited me.' Christians are responsible for the welfare of our prisoners and their humane treatment. How many people in the Boston churches last Sunday know that the Charles Street Jail right within a half a mile of us now is a disgrace to the city, brutal, inhuman in some of its conditions? How many people in our churches throughout the state know that the State's Prison only two miles from us, is mediaeval in its structure and in some respects unfit for men to live in? These conditions are not the fault of officials of the prison, city or state, but of so-called Christian people who do not care to know the facts, or if they do, do not want to pay the taxes to correct them."

Responsibilities at Our Doors—"How many of our communicants know," he continued, "that the problem of the feeble-minded loose upon our community is a source of grave danger to the morals and health of our young people? How many now that the legislature hesitates today at appropriating money for new schools and homes for the feeble-minded lest Christian people be unwilling to pay the taxes? How large a proportion of our so-called best church people know anything of the problem of housing the poor in the city, of the efforts to diminish the terrible so-called social diseases, and how many give a thought to the devotion of the district nurses and the heroism of the police? How many employers who are also craftsmen and communicants have read the remarkable statement of representatives of labor in England as to what they think are the just relations of labor and capital,—a striking appeal for justice and industrial peace? Almost equally remarkable, especially as coming from the Church of England, is the Report of the Archbishop's Committee of Inquiry upon Christianity and the Industrial Problems. I wish that the Church in this country could prepare a document one-half as able and prophetic."

Dangerous Lethargy—"And yet there are those who say that the Church does not need arousing in matters of religious education and social service. These are living questions of the day. It is no wonder, if this lethargic spirit prevails, that young men and women who have living questions of the day at heart, have no use for the Church."

The Church's Part—"The aim of social service in the Church is not in my judgment to create new organizations or to carry out special social service work, but to arouse in the people a spirit of service in society, and by illustration, education and practical leadership move them to work for results through social organizations."

The Bishop's Anniversary—The bishop then spoke of the way in which he celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary—by the Twenty Weeks' Campaign. He also announced that his physician had again ordered him to lay down the work of the diocese and to take a complete rest until the autumn. The bishop described the work he had done in connection with the Church Pension Fund and the new hymnal, and closed with two suggestions in regard to our temper and attitude in relation to the restlessness of the times.

Americanization—"First," said Bishop Lawrence, "we hear much about Americanization of the foreign speaking peoples here.... One-fourth of the drafted men in this country of enlightenment and education were illiterate; ten to eleven millions of persons in the United States cannot read or write the English language. One out of every thirty-two persons in this state cannot read or write the English language. Now what is our motive for Americanizing them? Why are we interested in them at all? Is it because we want to get more out of them by making them more intelligent? Is it because we are afraid of them and we want to stop riots and keep the wheels of business moving? Or is it because we are really interested in them as men, women and children? Is it because as they have come to this country, we really want to make them fellow citizens with ourselves, and we have a kindly, genuine desire to know them and have them know us, that we may live together as brethren? Motives of self-interest are strong and often beneficent, but the motive that really wins men is a love for the man and sympathy with him. Employees of labor may promote co-operative methods and have some success, but the only enduring form of co-operation must rest on the co-operative spirit. When the administrators of factories and other business organizations personally know representatives of the workers and are really desirous to co-operate with them, not as a matter of expediency but in order to give them their best chance, we may hope for better days."

The Fear of Bolshevism—"Second," continued the bishop, "timid and conservative people are shaking in their shoes at the sound of Bolshevism and lawlessness. They insist that the laws must be observed and that those who disobey or evade them are dangerous characters. Some of us who are not Bolsheviks will soon have a chance to test that out. Soon the execution of war prohibition and later of constitutional prohibition will begin. The question will then be not that of temperance, but of loyalty.... The point is, are we going to obey the laws or not? Are we going consciously to evade the law or not? Are we going to be lawless or loyal? No man who breaks the law in order to have a drink can complain if a brick goes through his window some riotous evening."

The New Piety—"My brethren," Bishop Lawrence said in conclusion, "some of these paragraphs are not such as the bishops of another generation spoke in their convention addresses; there was more of the flavor of piety in theirs. In these days, however, piety has taken on a new meaning, which, however, was current in the Apostle's day when he reasoned of righteousness, temperance or self-control and judgment. With great solemnity and high hopes we look for the future. We who have fought for liberty and law, for humanity and brotherhood, must live for these things and carry them on for our children's children. God help us do it."

The Business Transacted—The business sessions of the convention were held as usual in Huntington Hall. Most of the reports were printed and in the hands of the convention, including the revised form of the constitution and canons as presented by Dr. Endicott Peabody. During the morning session several of the returned chaplains appeared in convention and were all given a warm greeting. Dr. Patton, director of the Nation-Wide Campaign addressed the convention and won its interest in this undertaking. In his report for the Church Pension Fund, Dr. Mann said that every premium in the diocese had been paid, for which great credit is due to Mr. Charles E. Mason. Archdeacon Dennen, reporting for the committee on training of laymen, wanted to turn over this work to the board of education, and it was so voted.

Resolutions—The Rev. Philo Sprague introduced a resolution endorsing the League of Nations—the essential principles as fundamentally Christian. Bishop Babcock was appointed to convey the love and sympathy of the convention to Dean Hodges in his serious illness.

Dinner of Episcopalian Club—The members of the convention were the guests of the Episcopalian Club at dinner at the Copley-Plaza. Bishop Lawrence spoke on the formation of an organization of chaplains with provision for regular training and advancement for chaplains in the peace establishment of the army. There was community singing. Chaplains Addison, Peabody, Rollins, Dewart and Edwards spoke.

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

Community Drama—The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. are planning to make an interesting gift to the community in the way of neighborhood drama. There is to be a brief series of dramatic incidents from American history as the culminating feature of the community sings to be held in the open air throughout New York this summer. These dramatic incidents will be quite frankly forms of folk drama in which the audience will be brought into participation with the actors both through the spoken word and through song.

Out-of-Door Evangelistic Meetings—The Evangelistic Committee of the city is making plans for its open air street, park, shop and tent meetings from May to October. In 1918 over three thousand such meetings were held at two hundred and twenty centres with speakers who made their addresses in many languages. Bishop Greer, Mr. Stephen Baker, Mr. R. Fulton Cutting and other churchmen are on the committee.

New Officers in Diocesan Organizations.—One new vestryman was elected at the Easter Week parish election of Trinity Parish, Lawson Purdy, Esq., a member of the Chapel of the Intercession. At the annual meeting of the Church Club, Henry L. Hobart was re-elected president, Stephen Baker, J. Greer Zachry and Wm. Jay Schieffelin, vice-presidents, Francis Skiddy Marden, secretary, E. S. Pegram, treasurer. The new trustees are Taber Sears, Aymer Johnson, W. Willis Reese and Wm. N. V. Hoffman.

Bishop Kinsolving in New York.—On the eve of sailing for Brazil, Bishop Kinsolving addressed a meeting hastily arranged by the Brazil Committee of the Woman's Auxiliary. He described the splendid service the sons of the Brazilian clergy have rendered during the war. Part of the fund thus far contributed to mark the anniversary of his consecration, was presented to him at this reception. It is hoped that the fund will continue to grow.

Dr. Barbour's Resignation—Some weeks ago as we were going to press, I heard of the resignation of Dr. Barbour, rector of the Church of the Beloved Disciple, which is to take effect on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his rectorship, February 1, 1920. I had no time then for more than brief mention of this fact.

The Church of the Beloved Disciple was erected through a gift of Miss Talman of Trinity Parish. The cornerstone of the church was laid in 1870. Dr. Barbour came to the church from Trinity Church, Trenton, where he had served for nineteen years. There are five hundred communicants in the parish.

The Service Men's Club, organized by Dr. Barbour shortly after the armistice was signed, has sixty-five members. The club will be a nucleus for post-war work.

Discussing the changes caused in a religious point of view by the war, Dr. Barbour says:

"I believe a lasting good has come of the close relations our army chaplains have had at the front. They have worked together, and on this account have overcome many differences which stood in the way of church coöperation. The general effect of the war along this line will slowly bring about better understanding among denominations of the world."

The vestry of the Church of the Beloved Disciple have just announced their acceptance of Dr. Barbour's resignation and have passed resolutions expressing their deep regret at his decision to give up the rectorship.

In Memory of Dr. Vibbert.—On May 11, the Third Sunday after Easter, a memorial service for Dr. Vibbert will be held at Trinity Chapel at eleven o'clock. Dr. Manning is to make the memorial address. Dr. Vibbert was vicar of Trinity Chapel from 1891 to 1910 and vicar emeritus from 1910 until his death last August.

Special Services.—Bishop Dunn of British Honduras was the preacher at Trinity Church last Sunday morning. In the afternoon the annual service of the Girls' Friendly was held. On Wednesday a service in memory of the Lusitania victims was held at the cathedral.

To Go to France.—Miss Edith Hadley, the diocesan president of the Girls' Friendly who has done such fine work in organizing the G. F. S. for war service in this city, has resigned from the presidency and is planning to sail for France in June to work under the Committee for Devastated France.

Community House Suggested in Connection with Grace Church—A plan to establish and carry on a people's co-operative community in connection with Grace Church was outlined at a meeting recently held at 47 University Place under the direction of Dr. Slattery and others.

The proposed building for the people's community, a twelve-story affair, would contain women's and men's dormitories, club and recreation rooms, a co-operative store, a department store, restaurant, cafeteria, grillroom, dining rooms, and also would be equipped in one of its sections as a family apartment hotel.

The tentative plans also specify a women's club on one of the floors, and possibly another such suite for men. There would be a library and reading rooms in both of these club suites, and a music room, not to mention billiard rooms and possibly bowling alleys.

The suggested site for the community building is that of the old St. Denys Hotel, so far as the Broadway frontage is concerned. According to explanations given at the meeting as to the building, the cost would be in the neighborhood of $4,900,000.

Harmonious treatment is suggested for the Broadway side of the building, taking the form of parks on either side of the avenue, with cloistered entrances on each side also. The proposed new structure architect-turally harmonizes with Grace Church, directly across Broadway, as would the park and entrance features.

The entire proposition, it was explained, was for the purpose of social work. Plots of ground are planned for the children, and also general child recreation is embraced in the scheme.

ALASKA

Anvik, March 2—The quarantine rules which have prohibited travel in this section all winter, have been relaxed about Marshall. The influenza did not appear all in this section. The new reindeer herds with native Indian apprentices in charge under an Eskimo herder, at Shageluk, apparently doing well. The mission here had three deer carcasses this winter—pounds. The success of the reindeer herds will tend to stabilize Indian life and move the necessity for their present nomadic existence. Gold has been discovered only two days' journey from the mission at Anvik, but there is as yet no evidence of great success.

Physician Dies of Influenza—Frank W. Lamb, of the delta section of Yukon, died from influenza. He is survived by his mother, wife and infant son, all now at Akiak. Dr. Lamb was much beloved all in this section, and will be greatly missed. He came from St. John's Park, Detroit.

Tanana Crossing—Some of the difficulties in keeping a mission open here is centralizing the Indians at this point can be realized when present prices are quoted: Sugar, 50 cents per pound; flour, 30 cents; 30-30 cartridges, $3.00 per box of 20; $1.50 per pound and everything in proportion. A co-operative store run for the Indians would help greatly in bringing them together. And these isolated Indians do want to learn the Christian way of life; they want the mission for one reason. When the mission was closed last year, their one plea was that they had just begun to see the light a little, and they feared that with the mission closed they might lose the light and turn back to the old way (the heathen way) of life. During all the three days of discussion prior to the leaving of Mr. McIntosh not once did they mention the project saw-mill or anything else; they were concerned only about whether they were to have a mission to lead them in God's way and hold them to Jesus' trail. They were told that their help on the mission building would be good evidence to the Christians in the United States of their desire for a mission. The boys whipsawed (by hand) about 3,000 feet of lumber and 600 logs 32 feet long, besides helping the erection of the building, with no pay but their board. The result is one of the finest mission buildings in Alaska, but is untenanted. This work calls for missionaries of the highest calibre, for there is no regular line of communication; months are passed without mail; no telegraph, but the Indians are sending for the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us!" Will it go unheeded?

RHODE ISLAND

Easter at St. Paul's, Pawtucket—A scarcely a parish in the diocese had a more notable Easter than St. Paul's church, Pawtucket. At Morning Prayer 6:30 A. M. three stained windows, Eucharistic lights, white altar hangings and other gifts were dedicated. At the 7:30 A. M. the largest number made their communions at any one service in the history of the parish. Bishop Perry preached in the forenoon. At the Sunday School carol service in the afternoon the offering for missions was over $1,000, a remarkable sum for a school numbering less than 300 members.

Twenty-Year Rectorship—The twentieth anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. James E. Barbour at the Church of the Advent, Pawtucket, was celebrated on recent Sunday.

Gifts—St. Paul's Church, Providence, has received as a thank-offering a brass basin in memory of Mr. Alfred Blease, whose house seven years ago the first services were held for a year. At the church of the Holy Spirit, Fruit Hill, a processional cross was dedicated on Palm Sunday. Both these churches are prospering under the guidance of the Rev. George Pine, associate diocesan missionary. By the will of the late Mrs. Sarah K. Cook, a communicant of St. James Church, Woonsocket, the parish receives $5,000, to be placed in the fund accumulating for a new church.

NEWARK

Women Vote at Trinity Cathedral—At the annual parish meeting Easter Monday morning in Trinity Cathedral Church women were permitted to vote for wardens and vestrymen, as well as for deputies and alternates to the diocesan convention. This enfranchisement was a result of a recommendation made by a committee headed by Morrison C. Colyer. The committee was appointed a year ago to investigate the charter issued in 1746 by King George II. of England. Until such investigation had been made it was held that the amended union of the Newark diocesan convention, which, in 1913, made it lawful for women to vote at parish meetings did not affect parishes governed by colonial charters.

Bishop Lines Commends Parishioners' Efforts—Bishop Lines commended the efforts of members of St. Agnes' Church, East Orange, upon his annual visitation there Easter Sunday night, in their campaign to raise funds for the building of a new edifice. He recalled the fact that his first official act after becoming bishop was the organization of St. Agnes' Mission. The parish, now independent, was never so strong and capable of doing things as it is today, the bishop declared in expressing his belief that the present project will be accomplished. The Rev. W. W. S. Hohenchild is rector of the church.

New Rectors for Bayonne Churches—The Rev. Claude S. Soares of Richfield Springs, N. Y., assumed charge, April 1, of Calvary Church, Bayonne, succeeding as rector the Rev. John S. Haight, now vicar of St. Thomas's Chapel, New York. The Rev. Richard W. Baxter of Brooklyn has become rector of Trinity Church, United Services Very Successful—The three parishes in Hoboken, St. Paul's, Trinity and Holy Innocents' united on Wednesday evenings in Lent holding the services alternately in the three churches. The three choirs also united and made a very worthy representation. All of the services were very well attended despite the stormy weather and the last service, in St. Paul's, was most inspiring. Beginning in Trinity Church on the evening of Ash Wednesday with Bishop Stearly, the services carried on to Holy Innocents' with the Rev. Charles L. Gomph of Grace Church, Newark, as the preacher; then to St. Paul's with the Rev. Henry B. Wilson of St. John's, Boonton; then to Trinity again, the preacher being the Rev. Walter E. Bentley of the Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn; then to Holy Innocents', Bishop Talbot of Bethlehem as preacher and finally, St. Paul's at which time Bishop Lloyd preached. Wednesday evening in Holy Week the services were in the respective churches, the rectors preaching. For the three hour devotion on Good Friday all united in Trinity and Professor Edmunds of the General Seminary preached. All the churches feel that it was a splendid plan and brought the people closer together.

OHIO

Memorial Oak at Painesville—At the time of the bishop's visitation to St. James' Parish (the Rev. R. J. Freeborn, rector), when eighteen persons were confirmed, a special service was held after the confirmation and an oak tree was planted in the yard of the church, as a memorial to Miss Nellie M. Dingley, a nurse, who served abroad with the Lakeside Hospital Unit. Miss Dingley was a native of Painesville and went to France two years ago, serving as a nurse until the time of her death last August.

Furnishings at Bellevue—During Lent many articles of furniture have been placed in St. Paul's Church, Bellevue, Trinity, Lyme, and Grace Mission, Clyde. The rector, Dr. Selinger was presented with a purse for the purchase of an automobile, in order that he may more efficiently care for his widely separated cures. The combined confirmation classes at these stations numbered twenty-two persons.

Large Confirmation Classes—Among the many large confirmation classes presented to the Bishops of Ohio are these in Cleveland, Trinity Cathedral, fifty-six; Emmanuel, forty-four; Incarnation, thirty; St. Luke's, twenty-six. At Trinity, Toledo, there were fifty-one candidates presented.

Memorials at Elyria—A memorial altar, reredos, sanctuary wainscoting and sedelia, were dedicated in St. Andrew's Church, Elyria, (the Rev. E. B. Redhead, rector) on Palm Sunday. These memorials are placed "to the glory of God, and in loving memory of David Lewis, 1860—1917."

Easter Day at Lima—At Christ Church, Lima, (the Rev. K. B. O'Ferrall, rector) Easter was a day of great rejoicing and inspiration. The congregation taxed the capacity of the church, the number of communions made exceeded any previous year, while the offering, $3,700, almost doubled the amount asked for. This will cancel the debt of Christ Church, and form a nucleus for other parochial equipment.

Easter Day in Cleveland—In all the parishes in Cleveland Easter brought out large congregations at every service. After a Lent that had been a particularly devotional one, the people were the better prepared for the Easter services as is shown by the reports from the following parishes: Trinity Cathedral, eight hundred twelve communions, $17,500 offering; St. Paul's Church, $9,900 offering; Emmanuel, seven hundred fifty communions, $4,750 offering; Incarnation, three hundred forty-five communions, $3,100 offering; Christ Church two hundred fifty communions, $1,300 offering; St. Luke's, two hundred communions, $500 offering; St. Paul's, East Cleveland, two hundred thirty-two communions, $1,000 offering; St. Alban's, one hundred twelve communions, $400 offering.

MISSOURI

A Unique Document—St. Peter's Church, St. Louis, thinks that it has, probably, an instrument unique in the archives of the Church in this country. The sentence of consecration signed and sealed by Bishop Tuttle reads, "In the fifty-second year of our consecration. St. Peter's mission in St. Louis started over fifty years ago. The Parish of St. Peter's was formed in 1872. About twenty-five years ago the present beautiful stone church was built on Lindell Boulevard. A parish house named in memory of the Rev. Dr. William Short adjoins the church. During the rectorship of Dr. Phillips, the present rector, a dwelling adjoining the church on the other side has been purchased and occupied as a rectory and an attractive tower has been added to the church. During Lent of this year a drive was made to secure $25,000, the amount required to cancel the church debt and the building was consecrated by Bishop Tuttle on the first Sunday after Easter. Bishop Tuttle preached the sermon and especially commended the congregation for its generosity in missionary givings. The bishop also recalled tender memories in connection with Dr. Short who, in his last illness, was supported by the parish just as during his active ministry, the parish meanwhile paying the salary of the rector. Bishop Tuttle dared to believe that the parish had been blessed and prospered because of its policy of kindly generosity and liberal missionary offerings. The bishop spoke feelingly of St. Peter's first rector, Dr. Berkeley, of Dr. Francis K. Brooke, sometime rector and later Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma and of Dr. Phillips who is in the seventh year of his rectorship. The Standing Committee of the diocese and various of the city clergy participated in the service of consecration.

ALBANY

Churches Honor War Heroes—The Albany churches observed Sunday the 27th as a memorial day for the men and women of America who gave their lives in the world war. At the cathedral, the Rev. Royal K. Tucker, Chaplain of the 105th Infantry of the 27th Division, was the preacher. In the afternoon 600 members of the 10th Infantry attended memorial services. Dean Larned, just back from naval service, made the address. At St. Peter's Church the rector dedicated a "victory pcw" as a memorial to the brave boys of the church who so nobly responded to the call for service. This is a thank-offering made by the congregation as an expression of gratitude for victory and is the first public memorial in Albany to commemorate the services and sacrifices of Albany soldiers and sailors. At Grace Church a requiem Eucharist for the souls of American men and women who have died in the war was celebrated. Palmer Camp of Spanish War veterans headed by their commander attended the service in a body. At St. Paul's Church, sixty-seven men of "B" troop attended special services in the afternoon.

ATLANTA

A Lively Parish—The Sunday School of Emmanuel Church, Athens, has been merged into the Junior Auxiliary. The first Sunday of each month a missionary talk or program is given and special envelopes are used for a missionary offering in addition to the duplex ones. This has created much interest in the mission work among the children. The rest of the parish is equally busy. The woman's guild consists of four chapters, works for philanthropy and the building fund. During the past few years they have built the commodious and beautiful church edifice, an up-to-date rectory, a convenient parish house and are now finishing the church tower, which will be a memorial. The altar guild not only furnishes the altar hangings and linen for the parish use, but has given three altar sets to mission stations. The Woman's Auxiliary convenes twice a month, and studies missions, prays for missions, and gives to missions at each meeting. Like Christ Church, Macon, they have no dues. Everything is voluntary and there is a special service for the United Offering on All Saints and on Maundy Thursday. A number of the churches through the diocese have these services and they always give a fresh impetus to the offering. In the case of Emmanuel Parish, the offering has steadily increased every six months for the last nine years.

E. S. TAYLOR.

NEVADA

Legislature Follows Bishop's Advice—The recent legislature passed four laws suggested by the bishop in his annual address and endorsed by the convocation. The statutes were drawn up by the chancellor. One changes the date for the annual meeting of incorporated parishes to January 6, to meet requirements of the general canons. Permission is given for Indians and whites to marry. A new form of marriage license is provided which will give previous marital condition, divorced or not, grounds for divorce, date of same, etc., and all answers to be sworn to, and providing a penalty for perjury. School census marshals are now required to enumerate Indian children, who are not on reservations, and provision will be made for their entrance into the public schools.

Death of a Faithful Worker—The Church has suffered a loss in the death of Mrs. Ada McCarthy of Hawthorne. For years she kept the work of the Church alive in her little community.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

St. John's, Roanoke—A memorial window has been placed in the aisle of St. John's Church, Roanoke, in memory of the late Mrs. James S. Battle, a devoted communicant and a member of the Daughters of the King. The parish chapter now bears her name. The interest of the people of St. John's during Holy Week and Easter week developed a marked response to the spirit of these times. The attendance on Holy Thursday, Good Friday and Easter Day was excellent.

Christ Church, Roanoke—A memorial font has been placed in Christ Church, Roanoke, by Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Wilson, members of the parish, in memory of Mrs. Wilson's mother, Mrs. Adelaide E. Sauling, whose death occurred in 1913. Lent, Holy Week and Easter were most encouraging and beneficial in this parish. Large congregations attended throughout, and on Easter the offering was $11,000 which was used for the building fund. The Good Friday service was participated in by a large number of ministers of the various communions in Roanoke, and was appreciated as a token of unity and fellowship by congregations which nearly filled the church during the three hours. Bishop Thomson visited this parish on Sunday, the 27, and confirmed a class of twenty-seven.

G. OTIS MEAD.

PHILADELPHIA

Memorial Tablet—A bronze tablet, which was on view for the first time on Easter morning, was placed last week in the Church of St. Luke and the Epiphany, as a memorial to the late Theodore Voorhees, sometime president of the Reading Railroad and for many years a vestryman in that parish.

New Church Opened—On April 6 services were held for the first time in the Chapel of the Mediator, the Rev. Phillips E. Osgood, vicar. This church was built in memory of the late George C. Thomas by Mrs. Thomas, although a part of the expense was defrayed by a fund raised by gifts from people all over the world who had been helped by Mr. Thomas. The chapel is part of the Parish of the Holy Apostles. In the last year it has grown very rapidly and occupies now an important place in the life of West Philadelphia.

Dr. Jefferys Commends Women—At Holy Trinity Church a second meeting was recently held by Christian women of the city to protest against housing condition and high rents. In May 1,000 women are to march in protest against the condition they have found. At this meeting a letter was read from Dr. Jefferys, of the City Mission; he said, "Almost overnight you committee is making itself felt from on end of the city to the other, by its daring in ripping into shreds the white linen with which our city has draped its hypocritical filth and beastliness until today. Your committee has determined that we shall know, as a whole body, the unspeakable horror of the present housing conditions by which landlords are collecting a percentage that would make Shylock jealous, or property neglected. There are leaking roofs, tumbling walls, mouldy floors, unhinged doors and murderous insanitation."

IRVING A. MCGREW.

EAST CAROLINA

An Encouraging Report—Bishop Delany spent Easter with St. Cyprian's Parish, New Bern, North Carolina, the Rev. R. I. Johnson, rector. He preached twice, confirmed six and baptized ten. The Easter offering exceeded all previous Easter offerings and amounted to $600. "The Resurrection" was sung at daybreak on Easter and was followed immediately by the Holy Communion.

DULUTH

St. Paul's Parish—In St. Paul's Church the largest class ever confirmed was presented to the bishop on Palm Sunday evening. There were fifty-four, and half were adults. The Good Friday Three Hour Service was conducted by the Professor Ramsey of Faribault. Many came and were edified by the thoughtful address of the speaker. During Lent there were nearly thirty baptisms, mostly adults. Easter Day was a high day, in that there were more people in attendance than could possibly be accommodated and more communions made than ever before in the history of the parish. A parish dinner helped the attendance of people at the annual meeting and financial affairs were found to be in excellent condition. It has already been reported that altar ornaments had been given. They are of hammered silver and very artistic and four companion vases are to be given by another person. A memorial gift of the income from $5,000 was also announced, this to be used exclusively for flowers for the altar. The church is out of debt and is planning new advancement.

HARRISBURG

Christ Church, Williamsport—At Christ Church, Williamsport, the Rev. Charles Noyes Tyndell, rector, on Easter Day over 80 per cent of the communicants made their communions and during the octave communions of the sick and "shut-ins" amounted to 95 per cent. The offerings in round numbers were $5,350; including the Church School mite-chest offering of $250. On the Sunday after Easter the Whitaker Memorial Organ, the gift of Mrs. Max L. Mitchell, a communicant of Christ Church, in memory of her mother will be dedicated. On March 30 the Rt. Rev. Dr. Edward Arthur Dunn, Bishop of British Honduras, was the guest of Christ Church and preached before a very large congregation. On April 6 the Bishop of Harrisburg confirmed a class of forty presented by the rector of Christ Church.

BOSTON

The Year Book of Trinity Church.—This Year Book (107 pp.) provides interesting and stimulating reading. The work of various parochial organizations is summarized and reviewed. The variety and breadth of interest in good works which is aroused in a well organized parish, may be appreciated by a glance into it. The statistics are useful. Trinity reports this year 2142 communicants. This is almost a diocese in itself. There is a large Church School. But with approximately 300 children (I suppose mostly between the ages of 4-18), we see that it takes seven communicants in good standing to keep one child in the trenches. This problem, of course, is not peculiar to Trinity Church. But Rachel is mourning for her children "because they are not."

The Cathedral Naval Service Club.—It was found last summer that men of the navy while on shore leave resorted to the beaches in hot weather in large crowds. Accordingly the Cathedral Service Club opened hospitality rooms at Revere Beach, where several thousand sailors enjoyed rest, music, refreshments, and wrote letters home. The experiment proved so successful last year, that when the hot weather arrives and people flock to the beach, the Cathedral Naval Service Club will transfer its work from Bromfield Street to the same summer resort as last year.

Memorials in West Newbury.—At All Saints Church, West Newbury, Massachusetts, of which the Rev. Glenn Tilley Morse is rector, two noteworthy memorials were dedicated on Easter morning. One is a beautiful stained glass window made by Clayton and Bell, London, representing the Transfiguration of Christ, and provided for in the will of Brainerd P. Emery, in memory of his father and mother, the late Rev. and Mrs. Rufus Emery. It was much admired while on exhibition recently at the Arts and Crafts Society, Boston. The other memorial is a book-rest for the altar, carved in oak by John Kirchmayer, the famous wood-carver who has done most of the carving in this exquisitely beautiful church. It is in memory of Mrs. George Henry Poore.

CHARLES CHASE WILSON

Easter Week.—Easter week in Washington was filled with diocesan events. The bishop was more than busy. Tuesday he motored Archdeacon Greig of Worcester, England, upwards of 185 miles to and from St. Mary's City, Maryland; Wednesday he was engaged with the National Cathedral Association at Mount St. Alban all day; Thursday he attended the meeting of the General Theological Seminary trustees in New York; Friday he motored 85 miles to La Plata in Charles County to conduct in beautiful Christ Church memorial services for Lieutenant Harry White Wilmer, of the U. S. air service, killed in action in the Ardennes in October. He was the youngest son of General L. A. Wilmer, a leading layman and citizen, and the whole countryside for miles turned out and filled the church to testify their admiration and respect for this brave young man whose comrades saw him fall smiling and waving his hand to them. He entered the war in the Canadian Expeditionary Force at the beginning but later won a commission in our army. Lieutenant Wilmer had been a communicant from early childhood. "Lead Kindly Light" was "wae hymn," learned by heart and often on his lips, and was sung at the memorial service.

The Visit to St. Mary's City.—The visit to St. Mary's City (the site of the founding of Maryland, its church, Trinity, being built on the very spot and out of the brick of the old Colonial State House) was partly to show the archdeacon old Maryland, settled by the English nearly 300 years ago, with many of the old families and houses still surviving, and also to give the people of our remote rural sections the benefit of Mr. Greig's inspiration and teaching. The new rector, the Rev. C. W. Whitmore, lately removed to this cure from Christ Church, Picawaxen, in Charles County, and president of the Archdeaconry of Southern Maryland, made his usual thorough preparations and a large and representative congregation assembled.

Cathedral Plans.—The National Cathedral Association meeting on Wednesday was begun by a festival celebration of the Holy Communion in the Bethlehem Chapel. At this the bishop told of the plans maturing to build the cathedral at once as a thank-offering for the self oblation of America, and especially her young men. These plans he had first announced at the victory service at the cathedral on the Sunday after the armistice was signed, which the participation of President Wilson, the Vice-President, the cabinet, the diplomatic corps, and officials from every civil and military branch of the Government, made the only representative national thanksgiving for the victory so far celebrated. The dean exhibited some new views of the interior of the cathedral and several of the canons spoke on the place of the cathedral in city and nation.

Other Easter week events were the Daughters of the King's diocesan convention at St. Alban's Church on Thursday, a session of the examining chaplains the same day, and a meeting of the Archdeaconry of Southern Maryland on Wednesday at Mechanicsville, St. Mary's County.

GEORGIA

Savannah.—The local clericus has kept up its meetings steadily through the year, and through Lent the papers and discussions were especially full of interest. Following is a list of some of the subjects and readers: Need of the Increase of the Ministry and Ways of Supply, the bishop of the diocese. Suggestions for the Keeping of Lent, Bishop Osborne. Preachers and Preaching, Archdeacon North-Tummon. The Preaching Needed at This Time, the Rev. W. McGlohon. Education through Environment, the Rev. J. D.

Miller. The Christian View of the Intermediate State, the Rev. J. D. Wing. The Appeal of the Primitive Church, the Rev. W. Dakin. The Opportunity for America, the Rev. J. L. Taylor. The Body of Christ and the League of Nations, the Rev. J. D. Miller.

Sewanee Endowment.—The work of raising the endowment for the University of the South has gone on energetically in the diocese. Unfortunately, by some oversight, Holy Week was fixed by the central committee for a special effort with meetings, suppers and collections. This prevented the parish clergy from taking the interest in it they otherwise would and will probably cause the amount raised to be less than it might have been with better arrangements. It is a matter of wonder that any one should have proposed that week.

At St. John's Church, Savannah, on Palm Sunday night Bishop Reese made his annual visitation and confirmed a class of twenty-seven, fourteen boys and thirteen girls. The bishop also preached upon the religious education of the young.

EDWARD W. OSBORNE

BALTIMORE

Crowded Services at St. Paul's.—At Old St. Paul's, Baltimore, the lenten services were unusually well attended. On Good Friday the three-hours' service drew a congregation of about two thousand from many parts of the city, scores standing up throughout the service. On Easter Day every available bit of space in the large church was filled. The communicants at Easter in the mother church numbered over seven hundred, and at the chapel more than five hundred, twelve hundred in the parish. More than 32,000 soldiers and marines have been entertained at the parish house since the United States entered the war. The Easter offering for St. Paul's Chapel aggregated $4,000.

IOWA

Easter Events.—Several unusually happy occasions are reported for Easter in the diocese. At Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, there were 373 communicants. Bishop Morrison officiated at the Holy Communion, and Dean Hare preached. The cathedral, which holds 600 people, was packed, and many were turned away. The offering was $1,450 and the Sunday School reported in its mite-boxes $85.

St. Paul's in Des Moines, the "mother church" of the city, had large congregations at both the Holy Communion and the children's services. St. Mark's had the best Easter in its history, and St. Luke's reports three splendid services, with an offering of $615.

At Trinity, Iowa City, the seat of the state university, there was the largest attendance of many years; 234, with 118 communicants, and an offering of $700. Iowa was favored with perfect Easter weather, clear and warm. The season was a bit too late for Easter lilies; but beautiful white flowers of other kinds crowded the sanctuaries and chancels throughout the diocese.

ALLEN JACOBS

CONNECTICUT

Notes Around the Diocese—St. Paul's, Southington, has passed from mission status to a parish. All Saints', Oakville, has had a very successful mission, conducted by Father Tiedemann, O. H. C., and Father Mayo, O. H. C. Fifty years of service as treasurer of the Berkeley Divinity School is the record of Mr. Charles E. Jackson of Middletown. The trustees presented him with a handsome clock with inscribed plate to mark their appreciation of his services and the occasion. Trinity, Wethersfield, has increased the rector's salary twenty per cent after an every-member canvass. Memorial additions to endowment funds, in the name of Mary A. and Dr. Samuel Hart and Mary W. Bailey Barbour have been given to Grace Church, Old Saybrook. The house in which Mr. Seabury was elected first bishop of Connecticut is in view for an old people's home projected by the diocesan social service commission. Christ Church, Waterbury, has adopted the free pew system. Connecticut raised its quota for the Church War Commission. Bishop Brewster sent out a pastoral for "Humane Sunday." Twenty parishes in the diocese having over 125 communicants and no chapter of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew have been visited by field secretaries and as a result fourteen new senior and two new junior chapters have been started.

JOHN STOCKTON LITTELL.

MAINE

A New Rector Appointed—The Rev. John H. Yates has begun his duties as rector of St. Mark's Church, Waterville. Mr. Yates brings with him a rare experience of twenty months' service in the navy as chaplain upon the U. S. S. Melville, the flagship of Admiral Sims while in active service in European waters.

Rector Returned from the War—The Rev. Victor O. Anderson, rector of St. Mark's Church, Augusta, who has served under the Red Cross in hospitals in France, has returned home, and has resumed his parish activities after an absence of one year.

Ordination in the Cathedral—In the Emmanuel Chapel of the Cathedral Church of St. Luke, Portland, the Rev. Paul Gordon Favor was ordained deacon by Bishop Brewster on April 30. Dean Vernon preached and the candidate was presented by the Rev. Ernest A. Pressey. It is interesting to note that Mr. Favor begins his work in the Church after some years of efficient service in the Congregational Church. His last charge was at Farmington, Maine. He is also a graduate of Dartmouth College and of the Andover Theological Seminary. Mr. Favor has had also a brief military career, which consisted in taking the rigorous training at Camp Zachary Taylor, where he received a commission as chaplain and later he was stationed at Camp Upton. During the past few weeks Mr. Favor has been working under the direction of Dr. Leighton Parks at St. Bartholomew's Church, New York, and for the present he will continue his work there.

English Church News

The Clergy Association—There is always a difficulty about finding an appropriate and not too cumbersome name for any new society. The Federation of Catholic Priests, of which I wrote last week, at least indicates the view-point of its members, even if it leaves one to find out that it is not a Roman society. But the energetic northern clergy who have launched the latest venture have given up the attempt to get the objects into the title, and have called themselves simply the "Clergy Association," a simple title which was curiously enough as yet unappropriated. Their object is to secure a living wage for all clergy, beneficed and unbeneficed. Apparently they do not propose to initiate any new scheme, but to give practical support to the bishops and leaders of the Church in the endeavor which the latter will doubtless make to rearrange the finances of the clergy. They are not afraid to say that the Church is today employing sweated labor in its ministry. They are taking the taunt of the working-man seriously: that the Church can give no lead to the world of labor while it fails to act justly to its own servants—why don't the clergy do something for themselves?

The new movement takes its rise in the northern Diocese of Wakefield. Delegates from every deanery in the diocese met at Huddersfield, and adopted a constitution. But it is not to be a purely diocesan movement: Wakefield desires to give a lead to the whole Church, and make the movement a national one.

The Wrong Kind of Publicity—Clerical poverty being one of the subjects of the day, has been duly dealt with in these notes. The full facts will never be known; clergy, the world over, are sensitive about pleading for themselves and parading their woes. There are, however, exceptions, and the popular press, which does not seriously help the Church, is willing to give publicity to piquant cases. There is one northern priest, whom I will not name, who writes to say that, although he has £400 a year and a house, he cannot afford to buy a pair of boots. An obvious rejoinder could be made by hundreds of his brethren who know what real poverty is. And unfortunately one of them has made his rejoinder through the same medium. This other clergyman writes to say that his stipend is £156, and he has to pay house-rent, which leaves him only £126 to feed and clothe four people. So far, the reproof is just. But he goes on to make the other priest an offer, apparently in all seriousness, as he gives a pen-name, and asks that the reply be made through the newspaper. He offers to exchange livings with him, and pay him £100 a year for the privilege. He proposes to dismiss the servant, and do the housework and laundry with the help of his family. Even if this is a jest, it is a very stupid one. Exchanges of livings require the consents of the bishops and patrons concerned, and anything remotely resembling a money payment as between the two clergymen concerned would make the transaction simoniacal at once.

A Religion for the Ordinary Person—The Rev. A. V. Magee, vicar of St. Mark's, London, has not hitherto figured in these notes, but it is time he was mentioned. He is the brilliant son of one who was the special pride of our Church in the eighties, Archbishop Magee, Archbishop of York. The archbishop was a great preacher, even in that day of preachers. But his son has owed little to the advantage of birth; he has taken his own line, and achieved his present position in his later thirties. That was twelve years ago, and possibly if his church views had been of the safe variety he would have gone much further. But he is not the kind of man to care for such things; he is a strong idealist with a pronounced catholic bent. A lenten sermon, preached at St. Mary's Charing Cross Road, reveals him as one who has a distinct message for the times. Other preachers have been girding at modern superstition; I hear that "table turning" as well as modern dancing have been faithfully dealt with this Lent. But Mr. Magee diagnoses where others denounce. We have the spiritualists we deserve—because the Church of England is so very dull and respectable. The ordinary person, Mr. Magee would say, needs not an ordinary, but an extraordinary religion. The ordinary religion breaks down in time of stress. We have not cultivated what he calls the "romance of the unseen." The air of another world is still wanting in the Anglican Church; we have not taught the people to pray, and both the prophetic and the priestly aspect of religion have been neglected. Mr. Magee contends that the reservation of the Sacrament in church has been proved to give the atmosphere which storm-tossed souls need. Have we created, or even tried to create, this atmosphere of the supernatural? "The marvel to me is not that so many go to Rome, but that so few go."

The Teaching of the Old Testament—Partly perhaps because of the general questioning spirit which the war has produced, with a recrudescence of the old shallow queries which most people thought had been answered for all time, the subject of our attitude to the Old Testament is again being discussed. There are still many people, clergy as well as laity, who are apparently shocked at the statement recently made by the Dean of Lincoln (Dr. Fry) in convocation, that we can no longer accept the early narratives of Genesis as history. So Canon Peter Green writes a timely article in the Guardian, urging that newspaper correspondents and journalists should be helped to acquire a little elementary knowledge. Canon Green is not a "latitudinarian" nor a "modernist," but a very masculine Catholic, who has been particularly successful in dealing with lads and young men. Ignorance rushes into print, and people believe what they see in print. The fault is with the clergy for not giving clear and definite teaching on the Old Testament. He thinks it strange that any educated man should still suppose the question of the literal history of the first part of Genesis to be an open one.

JAMES CAIRNS.

DEAF-MUTE MISSIONARY DIES SUDDENLY IN UTICA

UTICA, N. Y.—The Rev. Harry John Van Allen, missionary to the deaf and dumb, known through the greater part of the state, died suddenly at his home here on April 15. He had conducted services on Sunday in Troy, Schenectady and Albany and retired on Monday night in his usual health. An attack of heart disease, from which he has suffered for some years, occurred early Tuesday morning and brought about sudden death. The Rev. Mr. Van Allen was the only deaf mute clergyman in the service of the Church in the state outside of New York City. He has been missionary to the deaf and dumb in the Diocese of Albany since 1898, and in Central New York since 1901. He took up residence in Utica in 1902.

Harry Van Allen was born in Clayton, New York, May 27, 1866, the son of a lake captain. He lost his speech and hearing as a result of scarlet fever, but acquired the ability to speak. He was educated in the Rome Institute for Deaf Mutes, and afterward at the Gallaudet College in Washington.

He started work as a printer on the Clayton Independent, subsequently following his trade in other places. He was at one time employed as instructor in the Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf at Mt. Airy, and edited the school publications. He studied for the ministry and in 1898 was ordained by Bishop Doane. He was a faithful and diligent missionary, traveling almost continually, ministering often to individuals through the two dioceses as well as to the small groups that gathered in the various cities. Naturally the statistics of such a work can never indicate the tithe of its real value. He was a member of various associations concerned with the education of the deaf, and also of the Holland Society of New York, being directly descended from Pieter Gerritse Van Alen of Yapough, New Jersey. He wrote many magazine articles on historical subjects and a History of the Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf, 1820-1895. He leaves a wife and a son and daughter. The son recently received honorable discharge as sergeant major of the 613th Aero Squadron, U. S. A. The burial office with requiem was said at Grace Church, Utica, at noon on Easter Even.

Apportionment Receipts Are Too Small

The third month of the year shows the following receipts towards the apportionment on the books of the treasurer of the Board of Missions: From parishes, $218,000.47; from individuals, $34,333.33; from Sunday Schools, $2,552.55; from Woman's Auxiliary, $24,588.29; from Junior Auxiliary, $1,747.15; total, $281,221.79. "While this is not as large a sum as we hoped to announce," writes Mr. King, "not nearly so large as needed, we are impressed by the fact that it immediately follows the enormous contributions of last December and shows the greatest earnestness on the part of very many."

Add Another Joy to June

Strawberries are vastly better with Puffed Rice scattered on them.

These grains are so thin, so flimsy, so savory that they just fit in with fruit. And they add what crust adds to a shortcake—a delicious blend.

The ideal summer supper is Puffed Wheat in a bowl of milk.

These grains are toasted whole-wheat bubbles, crisp and flaky, eight times normal size. Every food cell is exploded, so they easily digest.

Crisp and douse with melted butter for hungry children in the afternoon.

Teach girls to use Puffed Rice or Corn Puffs in home candy making. They make candy lighter and give a nut-like taste.

Whole Grains Steam Exploded

Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are whole-grain foods, of which children get too little.

Over 100 million steam explosions are caused in every kernel. Thus every granule of the whole grain is fitted to digest.

Serve them abundantly.

In summer time keep all three kinds on hand.

The Sacrificial Element in Christianity

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have just now read the contribution of Clarentium and venture to place alongside his not too familiar citation of Matthew Arnold's testimony a perhaps even less well known instance of witness, more notable still. I quote from memory, but I believe correctly.

All will accord that Charles Darwin was not only an unbiased truth-seeker, but a man, as those who knew him best testify, of "humble heart." Lady Hope says in an article from her hand in one of our journals some two or three years ago, writing of Darwin's last illness:

"I found him propped up in bed, and was welcomed very cordially. Noticing that he held a Bible in his hands, a finger marking the place he had been reading, I asked, 'What are you reading today?' 'Hebrews, always Hebrews, the royal book.' 'And about what?' 'Jesus Christ, Jesus Christ and His Atonement, what else is there to read about!' Then he asked if I would have a service for his employees in a summer house near by. 'And I will leave the window open, so that I can here you sing.'"

Names Wanted

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The Great Lakes Naval Training Station has been designated as the training camp for the radio branch of the service, and is ready to receive men from other stations throughout the country. Many men have already arrived. The Episcopal camp pastors will appreciate the names of all churchmen going there. Will the clergy kindly notify us as soon as they learn of the transfer of any of their parishioners?

We would appreciate also the names of sailors transferred from sea duty and elsewhere to Great Lakes.

Indians and Civilization

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Having been in Indian work in Alaska nearly twenty years, I naturally read Mr. Stefansson's article lately published in THE CHURCHMAN with considerable interest. The statements made in the article were fair, and embody the opinions of many thinking men who have been more or less familiar with work among native peoples. The writer is free to acknowledge that much harm has been effected by unscientific, sentimental philanthropy. Young people have been taken away from primitive homes without any inquiry as to their ability to make use of an extended education, and have been placed in government and church boarding-schools, and have been kept there under strict supervision for a number of years.

No thought was taken that these young people had come from races where early marriage is the rule, and from parents that are accustomed to a wild outdoor life, where the excitements of hunting and fishing were the everyday program of their life.

They return to their homes. They have learned new tastes. What their fathers liked, they do not. They have been educated away from their old life, but have not been educated enough to compete with the white man in his occupations. The results are frequently truly pitiable.

The criticism of the article revolves about the common, very loose use of the word civilization.

The condition that confronts our country and the Church is this, that native races are going to come into contact with white people of some kind. The white people that seek them, are too frequently, society's outcasts.

The only hope for native races is the Gospel. Wherever the Church has come first, and the work has not been too much interfered with by unchristian influences, there the race has prospered. Wherever the other element came first and sowed its habits, and its desires, the primitive race has suffered.

It is not a question of whether civilization shall be brought to primitive races. It is a question of what kind of civilization shall be brought.

A Lesson in Propaganda

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I have received the following letter from an earnest churchwoman in St. Paul. It seems to me to suggest a valuable method which might profitably be followed in our Church.

GEORGE P. ATWATER.

Akron, Ohio.

The letter follows:

St. Paul, Minnesota.

I have just read your third installment on "The Church and the New Era," in THE CHURCHMAN, and I cannot refrain from expressing to you my appreciation of your articles.

One remark gives point to an idea I have long wished to express. It is in reference to having no church literature to serve you when you are "forced to wait an hour between trains." You further speak of the "Christian Science document" which is omnipresent. I have long wondered why the Church did not do systematic work in keeping her message ever before the public. Several years ago, for reasons which at the time seemed good and sufficient, I became interested in Christian Science and was an earnest worker in that organization for ten years, taking their courses of study required of practitioners, and in various ways came into intimate knowledge of their methods of work. This matter of publicity is the point in hand, and it seems to me the Church can learn a lesson. The General Christian Science Society has a publication committee (generally one man) on a salary of "not less than $4,000 a year." He increases his staff of helpers as he sees fit. Each state has its publication committee, usually a man. The entire church membership in that state is taxed a certain sum to maintain its state committee. A third step is taken by having each church or society have its local publication committee, man or woman, who chooses his own group of helpers, and works for love. These local helpers see to it that each hotel, waiting station, store, boarding-house, jail, factory, public building and what-not, is provided with clean, reasonably up-to-date copies of all the publications of the society. A few years ago a full quota of its publications was maintained on a transcontinental railway system.

Among the Scientists themselves it is considered very "erroneous" not to subscribe to at least the weekly and daily publications of the society. The periodicals for local circulation are usually supplied by the members who pass their own papers (after reading) over to the local committee. At the state annual meetings a map of the whole state used often to be exhibited, showing the localities where Christian Science was not known. Then the nearest society usually undertook to send literature into that benighted region. A very careful system of follow-up is carried on. A certain group make it their business to learn what use is made of the literature left in certain places. I verily believe that Potsdam might learn something in the way of propaganda from these enthusiasts.

But, in all seriousness, I have often thought what could the Anglican Church not do with the whole truth as she possesses it, if by systematic use of a half truth the Scientists have done so much!

The Scientists make their boast that more Episcopalians come to them than any other denomination. * * * *

That New Hymnal

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Permit me to thank my unknown Presbyterian brother, "Clarentium" for writing, and you for printing his able article in this week's issue.

The new hymnal will surely be laid to rest at Detroit. It may be satisfactory to a few wealthy congregations who unfortunately for themselves are led astray by modernist pastors, but to the great majority of churchmen I am glad to say its complexion, indicated by the deliberate omission of Cowper's great hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood," will not only be distasteful but roundly condemned.

I know that the present namby-pamby, silk-gloved mode of preaching eschews the vulgarity of such a thing as "a fountain filled with blood," but if ever such false prophets and their deluded congregations reach the eternal land, which if the Word of God is true may be gravely doubted, they will find themselves to their astonishment very untrained to sing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain * * * who has redeemed us by His blood." "For without the shedding of blood there is no remission."

I have been dwelling during Lent upon the ritual of the five sacrifices of the Jewish Church and I have been appalled at the sentiment they express of God's ire against sin and the present indifference of our civilization in that regard. We have almost lost a consciousness of sin; how many thousands of professing Bible believers are deliberately asserting "there is no sin." Satan has blinded the minds of these people by the god of this world, which is a god of human sufficiency, an outcome of that evolution which has perverted the thinking of the last two generations. One would hope that the complete collapse of our latest phase of civilization would make the philosophers, and the "mixed multitude" who follow their lead, abandon this misunderstood theory.

Let any one turn to the article on Exodus in Hastings' Dictionary of the Bible, which is supposed to be a conservative expression of the results of higher criticism, and if his religious taste has not become vitiated by the excrement of Germanic bibliology he will be astounded to read that an English clergyman whose scholarship gave him an entré into the select company of the contributors to that dictionary should deliberately say, that the Jewish ritual was the concoction of an enthusiastic priest sometime after the destruction of the temple, who imagined what he thought ought to be the ritual and therefore he concluded that was the ritual; and his various pronouncements he introduced with the usual formula, "Thus saith Jehovah."

Why, Sir, that clergyman evidently had not the faintest idea of the extraordinary details of the teaching of those sacrifices and the marvelous divine process of the removal of the detriment of sin as illustrated to the Hebrew nation in the ritual of the Day of Atonement. If your readers would give a few hours to mastering of the teachings of that ritual they would be filled with wonder that the editor of such a dictionary would admit into his pages such inane blasphemy.

The new hymnal is a disappointment. A great opportunity at a very great expense has been wasted. What we want is a book of distinctly evangelical complexion costing not more than seventy-five cents, which would put it within the reach of most congregations; and for those who could not afford, as many a small congregation is unable to do, to purchase a musical edition, let us have a book of words for twenty-five cents. The attempt of the Commission to compel every worshiper to possess a costly music book is foolish!

We are told that it was the object of the commission to provide a book with which all sections of worshipers might be satisfied, but why encumber the book with numerous plain-songs which may be to the taste of some seminaries and moneries, but which can never be used in ordinary congregations.

I forbear to say a great deal more in damnation of this book, feeling certain that the Detroit convention will never authorize it for the use of the Church; and if perchance they should be so misguided we shall find that not a few of us will seek relief elsewhere.

In fine, what must we think of the critical faculty of that commission which would omit Newman's hymn, "Praise to the holiest in the height," which Mr. Gladstone considered the finest hymn ever written?

Reading Matter Need

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Will you please give space to this informal appeal for reading matter for the state reformatory located in Huntingdon, Pennsylvania.

On coming here last January, I at once began to look into the life of the institution. I was told that I was the first rector to do so, and by a canvass at a later date found over ten per cent of the inmates had been baptized in the Church. I shall soon present a large class for confirmation, and then the first nucleus will be formed and the Holy Communion given at regular intervals.

I now plead for all good church people to send me copies of the Sunday papers having the picture section—something that takes the eye at a glance, and McClure's Boys' Companion in order to brighten up the long hours the inmates have to stay in their cells.

I might say the other denominations are not slow with their papers. Even the Christian Science publications get here. I feel when this appeal is read, good church people will help on their part.

Shall We Stand or Fall?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Not long ago one of my people asked why it was that a certain priest at the presentation of the offering, raised the plate above his head. I replied that I did not know, unless it was that he wished to demonstrate to the congregation that its offering was not so heavy but what he could lift it. Or that perhaps he wanted to get it up where God could see it. I have been in attendance upon services where it took two wardens, two vestrymen, an acolyte, the assistant minister, the rector, and a bishop, to get the offering (?) up onto the altar, each in turn taking a pull at it, while the congregation and choir vied one with the other in saying "All things come of Thee O Lord," or "Holy Offerings rich and rare."

That reminds me of a true story:

A number of years ago, at the time when elaborate presentations came in vogue, an elderly priest of the Church was officiating in one of the then "up to date" churches, and at the time of the presentation of the alms, the choir sang with great gusto, the above mentioned, "All Things Come of Thee O Lord." During the performance the old priest stood scowling at the plate, and as the choir finished he turned to the congregation with this remark. "Big fuss to make over forty three cents."

But seriously—is it not about time that we hear again that much neglected offertory sentence: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap?"

And for a season—say until our missionary apportionments are paid—would it not be well in place of standing at the presentation, that jurist and people alike fall low upon their knees with this petition on their lips: God have mercy on our stingy souls!

Books About The War

Personal Stories of the War

ZIGZAGGING. By Isabel Anderson. Litt. D. Houghton, Mifflin Company. Boston. 1918.

THE FLAMING CRUCIBLE, THE FAITH OF THE FIGHTING MEN. By André Fribourg, translated from the French by Arthur B. Maurice. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918.

Mrs. Anderson spent six months in France and Belgium Libre as a Red Cross volunteer, and had experience both in canteen and in hospital service. It was her fortune to be stationed at several different places, some close to the front, and thus she had a rare opportunity to learn by personal contact the conditions in the war zone. She worked and traveled with her ears and eyes open, and with her brain active, and thus was able to glean a great store of information. This information she has put into a record of great charm for the benefit of any that is so fortunate as to read her story.

Let it be said, however, that the gifted author did not go to France to gather material for a book. She went there to work for the soldiers, and work she truly did. Indeed one of the notable features of this narrative is the unconscious revelation of the great contribution of personal service made by the women. She shows that she had herself the spirit of Miss Lansing, who when caught in the German drive, wrote her brother, the Secretary of State, the letter being quoted in this book, these brave words: "We shall not run into danger, and if it comes to us you don't want us to run away from it, but take it as bravely as other people do."

This fine courage was shown by many women in the war zone. One striking incident must be quoted. A Belgian and his daughter had been sent as prisoners to Germany. The daughter's crime was this: At her father's trial for helping Belgians over the border, a Boche officer said to her: "You look rather English; or is it that you remind me of an English woman I have seen." Whereupon this plucky girl replied, "Perhaps I remind you of Miss Cavell."

Mr. Fribourg's experience was of quite a different character. He was a highly educated and cultivated teacher, but as a reservist was promptly called to the colors in 1914, and served as a private at the front for over a year, when serious wounds incapacitated him for any further military service. In fact, he became practically blind, and lost also the senses of smell and taste.

One looks in vain in this book for any account of battles or strategy. Indeed it is often difficult to tell where the author was at the various stages of his fighting career. He deals only with the immediate squad to which he belongs. Nevertheless the book is a thrilling account of the inner feelings which mark the soldier under such terrible conditions as those of the early stages of this awful war.

The author is perfectly frank. He does not attempt to gloss things over in the interests of the glory of war. It is at times a rather gruesome tale of rain and mud and hunger and thirst and exhaustion and mounds and death. And withal it is a wonderful picture of the soul of the French soldier, a soul that Germany never could conquer.

The soldier's soul is beautifully illustrated by the feeling that came over the author with his first wound. He thinks then of what France is, and of his love for his country, and then says, "It is a divine revelation, long ardently desired, that bursts suddenly and simply before my burning eyes, as, lying at the bottom of a miry ditch, my heart swelling with love and cheerfulness, I weep joyously because my blood is flowing on the ground." He who was recently a mighty monarch, and is now an embarrassing fugitive, could hardly appreciate an emotion like that.

No brief review can do justice to this remarkable revelation. The closing story of fading sight, depression, and hopelessness, soon followed by faith built upon the kindness of strangers who guided his faltering footsteps grips the reader. Indeed the whole story strikes deeply into one's feelings, and as one realizes the dreariness of most of the soldier's days, one prays anew that the statesmen now engaged in the task will not stop until they have brought about a condition in which wars shall be no more.

Men, Not Pensioners

THE DISABLED SOLDIER. By Douglas C. McMurtrie. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1919.

Dr. McMurtrie has made a great study during this war of the problem of rehabilitating the wounded and disabled soldier. He is at the head of the Red Cross Institute which has been formed for that purpose. The book reads like a romance. It takes up the history of the treatment of cripples since the dawn of civilization, with especial reference to the returned soldier of previous wars. It presents the new idea of restoring the man to industry, so that instead of being supported by society, he will be a component part of society, in other words a man and not a pensioner. It is a marvel how much has been accomplished already in the warring nations, and the book gives promise that the disabled and crippled soldier may be restored to society, and that he may even occupy a better position in spite of his infirmities. In order to accomplish this the man must be willing to go ahead, and, more important still, society must expect it of him, and his own family must encourage him in the new resolve. It is to create such an atmosphere that this book has been written.

Saviour or Slave-Driver?

THE WHITE EAGLE OF POLAND. By E. F. Benson. George H. Doran Co., New York, 1919.

A Polish member of the Chamber of Deputies in Vienna recently declared that German rule over the Poles was iron-handed oppression. "Dear colleague, you forget that Germany was the power that saved you," replied an Austrian member. "If I fell into the river," retorted the Pole, "and my saviour after pulling me out of the water refused to let me go but constantly repeated 'Now that I have saved your life you must be my slave' then I would cry out to God to save me from my saviour."

"Stop this rescuing," says E. F. Benson, "is the cry of the bleeding heart of Poland."

Mr. Benson is accustomed to the lovely masses of ivy on historic walls in England, and is not the least confused as he examines the mêlée of tangled politics that spreads its poisoned leaves over Poland. By the use of Russian, Austrian, German and Polish documents he traces the German designs on Poland down to their roots and makes a strong clear argument for the pronouncement of the three prime ministers of the Allies at Versailles in June, 1918, when they stipulated that an united and independent Poland with access to the sea was an essential to just peace.

War Fiction

THE DOUGH BOYS. By Patrick MacGill. New York. George H. Doran Company. 1918.

Any one who read Mr. MacGill's quite charming sketches of life at the front with the Tommies in The Brown Brethern, will take the same sort of pleasure in his similar sketches of American troops in The Dough Boys. There is a thread of continuity in the successive chapters in that the adventures center about the same personalities—Burke, the handsome American boy who falsified his age in order to enlist, Sullivan, the strong man of King-arrow, and Stiffy, the cockney. The story is told with a simplicity that is but the more artistic for its disdain of fine writing. The humor is broad but true, the sentiment fine and tender, and the appreciation of fine things as sincere as it is unobtrusive. To our taste no better fiction about the war has been written.

L. G.

A French Nun

SISTER CLARE. By M. Reynes-Monlaur. Translated from the French by M. E. Arndrup. Robert M. McBride and Company. New York. 1918.

Sister Clare, the Franciscan, had spent her sheltered existence wrapped in the holy calm of the contemplative, never descending from the quiet peace of her mountain top long enough even to discharge the practical duties of the convent life. Only Père Jean had shaken his head saying that no soul can be assured of being on the right path that has not suffered. Then came the invasion of Belgium, and the awful day when the Little Sisters fled like frightened gulls before the German army; when Père Jean suffered martyrdom and Sister Clare stood on the Sambre bridge between the German and French fire, and at last the even more sorrowful day when a refugee in Rheims she saw the cathedral burned. But with that day came also the day when she could say:

"I have learned my weakness. I know, too, that God is too good to save us from all suffering. I know that if we let Him do His will with us nothing can strike us without enlarging our growth. I know that He takes our sufferings into His hands and does wonderful, beautiful things with us."

The story is an allegory of France, fiction, but, according to the author, with every word verified by actual experiences. It is told in the quaint style, self-conscious and naive at the same moment, of the lives of the French saints and religious. It is quite evidently a piece of Roman Catholic "publicity," but its spirit is so good that one cannot resent that.

The Charmed American

It is not surprising that the publishers decided to withhold the appearance of this story until the war was over, because they feared its depressing effect upon our own troops as they were embarking for the front. For the tale is realistic after the manner we are accustomed to in French stories of the war. It is gruesome to the last degree, for the author is unsparing in disclosing the horrible sights and experiences which were every day affairs to the poilu at the front.

Francois Xavier was a French immigrant, living in San Francisco with his wife and children, and he had already taken out his first papers for American citizenship at the time the Kaiser rocked the boat. He belonged to the reserve of the famous Iron Division, pre-eminent among the shock divisions of France, and he hesitated but a little while, before finding his way to his beloved native land, and in the face of many difficulties, finally getting a place in the regiment which faced nearly every hard job this terrible war offered to the often hard pressed French army.

It is safe to assert that no surviving soldier of the war went through more hard fighting than this "charmed American." The epithet, by the way, was bestowed upon him because he went unscathed through so many desperate struggles. Indeed, he was almost, if not quite, the only survivor of his original company.

In spite of the bloody details, the story is fascinating, and gives the reader a singularly vivid impression of the hard fighting as the individual soldier bent to his burden. Incidentally one learns a lot of the French slang of the trenches.

L. W. B.

OLD GLORY AND VERDUN. By Elizabeth Frazer. Duffield and Company. 1918.

Another book of well-told war stories. This account of Miss Frazer's experiences abroad is particularly interesting because she gives so much definite information about the work done in hospitals, canteens, and among the children of refugees. There is a vivid description of the citadel of Verdun; another of the bombing of a hospital; and the whole book is radiant with that spirit of steadfast courage and hopeful endeavor which is the great unseen contribution of the men who fight and the women who serve.

M. L. B.

Joseph Pennell

JOSEPH PENNELL'S LIBERTY LOAN POSTER. By Joseph Pennell. J. B. Lippincott Company. Philadelphia and London. 1918.

Judged by the author's previous works, this volume is slight. There is an essay on the relation of the populace to art, and another on the need of the artist's participation in lithography, both written in the author's vivacious manner. There is also an account of his experience in printing the poster. The latter is shown in various stages of mechanical development. It is not a very good example of his art. T. S.

THE REV. PERCIVAL CLARENCE BAILEY was advanced to the priesthood at the Church of the Ascension, Ontonagan, Michigan, by Bishop Harris, on April 23. Mr. Bailey is a graduate of Kenyon (1915) and of the General Seminary (1918). He has spent the greater part of his diocese on Ontonagan, and will continue to serve that community as rector of the parish.

THE REV. EDMUND LEE of China made an interesting address on the progress of the work in China at the meeting of the Missionary Society of the Virginia Theological Seminary on April 1.

THE REV. E. E. HALL was ordained to the priesthood on St. Matthias' Day, February 24, in St. Andrew's Church, Lexington, by Bishop Burton. The large congregation present filled the church. The service was unique in that it was attended by all the ministers of the colored churches of the city, with but one exception. The Rev. Mr. Hall is in charge of St. Andrew's, Lexington, and is missionary to the colored people of the Diocese of Lexington.

SO LIKE HIM

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GUARDIAN:

SIR—As I am now short of staff, being without a lay secretary, I am asking a space in your columns to express the hope that I shall be forgiven if I take at their word a number of kind correspondents who have written to me about my resignation—and make no personal reply to them.

May I also take the opportunity of saying that I am not at present considering my future or making any plans for it? I propose after July 1, when my connection with this diocese is to cease, to vanish for three months and finish some work I have in hand. By the beginning of October I hope to have arranged my future plans and to have an address. Till then I hope no one will make, or expect an answer to, any kind of proposal that I should undertake this or that bit of work.

HOW ZION'S HERALD SEES HIM

THE Right Rev. Dr. Charles Gore, Bishop of Oxford, who has just resigned his episcopate, recently visited this country making addresses on the war—which, by the way, made little favorable impression. He is to devote his time to authorship.

ZION'S HERALD

TOO MUCH "SPOUTING"

AMONG the reasons given by the Bishop of Oxford for his resignation is the desire to have time to study and write a book. None of the bishops, and few of the clergy, nowadays have time to write, because they are so constantly speaking. Bishop Welldon tells a good story against himself in this connection. When he was Dean of Manchester, one of his fellow-passengers in a tram-car was an elderly lady with whom he got into conversation. Presently she said with characteristic Lancashire bluntness, "Dean, I tell you what it is—you spout too much."

A GOOD SUGGESTION

THE pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Minneapolis sets an example which might be followed. He sends out a small clip-sheet, calling the attention of the people of his community to the work of importance of the Church in general and of his own church in particular. Also in his weekly bulletin he incorporates a brief introduction and analysis of his sermon. This indicates an interpretation of the teaching office worthy of note.

THE TREATY OF VERSAILLES

“IT is a good peace,” so Clemenceau is reported to have said. Bismarck made the same remark on his way home from Versailles, so history records, nearly fifty years ago. We see no promise that the present peace will hold for fifty years in Europe.

Neither Bismarck nor Clemenceau got all that they wanted, but they got, each in his turn, “enough to give security to his country.” The Treaty of Frankfort in 1871 made Germany “safe” from the aggressor. The Treaty of Versailles is intended to make France “safe.” If that is what is meant in diplomacy by a good peace, only history can render the verdict on its wisdom. Of late we have been questioning the goodness of the Treaty of Frankfort which placed in the lap of the conqueror all the spoils he saw fit to demand. Alsace and Lorraine proved a bad bargain. We shall be in a position fifty years from now to say whether the peace of Versailles has given the Allies a good bargain. It is idle to argue that Bismarck in 1871 might have reconciled France as he reconciled Austria by a less arrogant peace. We know that he could not have faced the German people if he had imposed upon the conquered foe less rigorous terms than those which he laid before M. Favre, saying “Sign here.” Ranke’s verdict that the war of 1870 was a war to regain what Louis XIV had wrested from Germany was the verdict of every German. So the conqueror in 1871, as the conqueror in 1919 has done, pronounced it a good peace. Only time can test the diplomatic goodness of treaties.

But what shall Christians say about the treaty of peace? Diplomatic goodness and Christian goodness, we have of late come to perceive, may not be identical in form and matter. When we try to scan the terms of the treaty not as Americans or French or English or Italians, but as Christian Americans, Christian English or French or Italians, we confess to feeling bewildered. We are bewildered because we find no promise in the treaty of a new era of peace and good-will on earth. It is like the treaties of peace which the victor in Europe has always forced upon the prostrate foe. The treaty punishes the conquered and seeks to safeguard the interests of the conqueror. The nations leave the peace table, bitter, jealous, some of them with irreconcilable hatred in their hearts. So it has always been. The question is, were Christians foolish in supposing it could be different in this world? Our bewilderment is born of Christian yearnings, hopes fostered by our President’s prophetic utterances and fostered also by the prayers we said that this should be a war to end war. That the peace treaty of 1919 can not end war is our disappointment; militarism is still alive, made necessary by the terms of the peace treaty; the League of Nations is a puny child to carry through the storm zone of hate all the spacious hopes builded upon it by its friends; the garish morning has brought back to our awakening the realities of a world still streaked with good and evil.

But the Christian will go on dreaming, praying, hoping, that one day on earth God may bring together the nations of the world to sign a treaty which can be called the Peace of Jerusalem, the Peace of God—a peace over which brothers may without hypocrisy or sacrilege repeat the Lord’s Prayer.

THE PUNISHMENT

NEVER, as we recall, in history has a proud nation been compelled to pass under so humiliating a yoke as that which the Treaty of Versailles has prepared for the punishment of Germany. She is deprived of her sovereignty; for the next generation or more her sons and daughters must give to the conqueror a heavy portion of the fruits of their toil; they must build ships for a hated foe to sail the seas in; they must see their enemies extend their national boundaries till they include most of the earth that had not already been seized. When we recall the arrogant and braggart Germany of 1914, drunk with ambition, lust and cruelty, it makes one shudder to contemplate the bitterness of the cup which Versailles has pressed to her lips. She must drink it. Judged by standards of earthly justice, Germany deserves her sentence. Perhaps she deserves even a more pitiless one. For had she been the conqueror and we the vanquished, she would have sacked the world and made spiritual serfs of every race. That picture, too, makes one shudder. Germany judged by earthly standards of retributive justice, deserves capital punishment. None of us, perhaps, would have dared trust the fate of the world to a forgiven but not impotent Germany. None of us had he sat at the council of Paris with power to decide the future of Europe would have dared to be more lenient toward the enemy than the Big Four have been. That is the cause of our bewilderment and our disappointment. Must the dealings of nation with nation eternally do violence to the Sermon on the Mount? Would Christ have had us write the treaty of 1919 in the calculating spirit of hate and distrust, or in the chivalrous mood of forgiveness? The supreme problem of the Christian conscience to be dealt with in the twentieth century is, Can love be the rule of conduct? Did Christ mean what He seemed to say? The answer of the past has brought violence and confusion. We must find a better one.

THE CONFERENCE ON LYNCHING

THE National Conference on Lynching, which assembled in New York during the past week, was one of the most Christian and patriotic gatherings that, to our knowledge, has met in the metropolis in many a day. The object of the conference was to make lynching a federal offence, to start a congressional investigation of the subject and one by the Department of Justice, to draft a model state law against the practice, to investigate each individual case of lynching through a trained staff and to carry on a campaign in press, pulpit and pamphlet. The Hon. Charles E. Hughes made a masterful address in Carnegie Hall at the evening session of the conference. He reminded the nation which is so eagerly bent upon errands of international justice that the duty begins at home. Ex-Governor Emmet O'Neal and other southerners made earnest appeals for the arousing of a national sentiment against mob law. We also read that the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, meeting in Cleveland, has passed a resolution asking Congress to enact a bill making lynching a federal offence.

At last, after passing through a disgraceful epoch of mob law, America is to attack this evil which has been a blot upon our good name. The whole nation must shoulder the responsibility for deeds done in any of the states. We commend this cause to the Church. The General Convention may well devote a resolution or two to the subject. The clergy and bishops in the states where lynchings occur should show by public utterance on which side Christian people stand. It is only by public opinion that civilization registers its slow gains. It is no trivial evil which this conference was called to consider. It is a menace that grows by what it feeds on.

But we of the North are mistaken if we think that mob law is a race question, confined to the South. Our own house is not in the best of order. Some of the daily papers in New York City last week went as far as plain English can carry one in encouraging mob law. The plea was that if the Government will not deal with Socialists and agitators "then it is up to our sailors and soldiers to do the business." Mob law was invoked. Soldiers and sailors ought to take the enforcement of justice into their own hands, so ran the argument, when the Government fails to act. Mobs can be the judge of who is a Bolshevik and who is a reputable patriot. Discharged soldiers can mete out punishment where it is needed and protect a government which is not disposed to defend itself. Pretty cheap talk, that! Pretty loose gospel of defense! Mobs are a dangerous kind of explosive to scatter through our cities. Settling wrongs by mob justice can easily grow into a national habit. It never will do so in America, but we must not stultify our moral intelligence by seeming to see no other remedy for anarchy than anarchy itself. We are really a people of unusual self-restraint. Our form of government disciplines us in this virtue.

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

KOREA

THE reports that Japan is getting what she wants at the peace table and is to have a free hand in the Far East is not reassuring to lovers of freedom. But we are not so despondent over the matter as some of our orthodox Republican newspapers appear to be. Not having seen the peace treaty at the present writing, we are not in a position to judge how far the concessions which the Big Three were compelled to make have strings attached to them. The League of Nations may really work after all and Japan's signature may return to plague her imperialistic aims. We must wait to see.

One thing we can be pretty certain of, however—imperialism has about run its length. The stars in their courses fight against it. England, France, Japan and Italy still eagerly offer willing shoulders for carrying the white man's burden (with Japan we must change the figure to the yellow man's burden). Africa, Asia are waiting to be helped toward sweetness and light by the beneficent foreign offices of these diligent empires, not yet weary in well doing. But none of these foreign offices will be compelled to carry the burden long. The reason is not far to seek. An international sentiment is growing. That international sentiment is breeding a conscience which sees national honor and patriotism committed to other interests than trade. Japan may seem to succeed in "wiping out Korea as a moral fact." But Japan cannot wipe out Korea. Japan cannot control China. Poland, Armenia have not been wiped out. Ireland is still Ireland. Nations, like cats, have at least nine lives. So let the little nations take heart.

BISHOP RHINELANDER ON EDUCATION

AT the one hundredth anniversary of the General Theological Seminary Bishop Rhinelander read a significant paper on Education and Dogma. The paper was of a nature to stir thought rather than to compel agreement with the reader's obvious point of view. Bishop Rhinelander made two assertions, true in themselves but of ambiguous import and therefore unconvincing.

He said, first, that there could be no education without dogma. Very true in so far as dogma is merely opinion or conviction and in so far as opinion or conviction must necessarily underlie education either secular or religious, but very untrue if dogma implies unchanging opinion or conviction in regard to disputable fact or detail. Even the man in the street does not object to dogma if interpreted as opinion or conviction supported by evidence. He does, however, suspect dogmatic statement that seems to run counter to common sense or evidence. To him undogmatic education is merely teaching that is constantly reinterpreted in the light of truth.

Bishop Rhinelander also asserted that freedom in education must lie within the influence of dogma as enlightened by the Holy Spirit within the Apostolic Church and as safeguarded by the apostolic ministry. Again, one finds no fault with the principle. Neither did Newman and Manning. They stood on precisely the same ground, following the logic only one step farther—the papacy. One merely hesitates at the bishop's apparent application of the principle. Every one of us agrees that religious education is conditioned by the guidance of the Holy Spirit within the Apostolic Church and by the protection of the apostolic ministry. But what is the Apostolic Church and what are the limits of the apostolic ministry?

For these reasons one is compelled to say that the paper was more interesting than convincing. Possibly an escape from the apparent dilemma would be to lay emphasis on the Holy Spirit rather than on dogma.

BISHOP GORE DESPAIRS

AMERICANS who have talked with Bishop Gore within the past few months have found him deeply depressed by the European situation and especially by the apathy of the Christian conscience since the war. Bishop Gore's attitude has disturbed some buoyant spirits. But is it the function of Christian prophets always to say smooth and hopeful words? We think not. The Bible has given a place to lamentations. Certainly the modern popular "cheer up and boost" theory has its limitations. Only men of shallow mind and heart refuse to see the seamy side of institutions and of life. Sympathy, generally speaking, is with Emerson rather than with Carlyle in that dialogue which took place in the streets of London one night when the American transcendentalist saw only evidences of God while the doughty Scotch prophet saw the machinations of the devil everywhere. But if the devil is there, may it not be wholesome and safe to face him?

In a recent sermon Dr. Gore faces what seems to him to be facts. He said:

Was there ever a moment in the war in which thoughtful men found themselves filled with a profounder anxiety than at this particular moment? And why? Because since the armistice was struck we seem to have looked in vain among the nations of the world for any better spirit than that of the old national individualism. A great many of us knew that it was idle to talk as men did talk in the war, as if the spirit of aggressiveness was limited to Germany. We had the secret treaties, and we knew what they meant. The secret treaties have not been disowned, but they are still effective, and I ask you, cast your eye over the nations, where do you see a spirit larger than the old selfish spirit of claiming as much as you can get? Out of the spirit of claiming as much as you can get there can arise nothing except the universal scramble. . . . It is hard to resist the impression, however you distribute the blame, that the League of Nations is in the greatest peril of becoming an organization of the Allies to keep Germany permanently crushed. That is what is felt, and the signs are at present not visible of a disarmament of any nation except Germany. Witness our own war budget or army budget. Under the terror of hunger and the terror of despair you see what is happening. More and more the League of Nations and the Council of Ten and the Council of Four appear to be identified with the council of the victors.

THE RETURNING ARMY

THERE have been some impressive parades in New York of late but none more thrilling to the American who loves daring and a well set-up soldiery than the parade of the 77th Division—the division that, as General Alexander put it, "went into the wood where Napoleon and Hannibal failed," the Argonne. Some of us recall another parade back in the autumn of 1917 when these same hardy "backwoodsmen from the Bowery and Hester Street and the East Side" were on their way to Camp Upton. A cynical bystander as he watched the queer army stepping down Fifth Avenue remarked, "The Kaiser should worry!" Well, they are back home again and the Kaiser began to worry when that crowd began to pour through the highways of France, and his general staff worried a lot when the 77th reached the Argonne. Not being a militarist journal, THE CHURCHMAN rejoices in the fact that citizens of a democracy without military traditions can, when put to it, raise an army that can meet and help defeat the veterans of Europe.

SOME FACTS ABOUT LYNCHING

I n the four-year period from 1914 to 1918, three hundred and twenty-five Negroes were lynched in the United States and only twenty-eight of these were charged with rape. In 1917, in New York County, the Grand Jury indicted thirty-seven persons for rape in the first degree. This is nine more than the total of Negroes lynched on the charge of rape in the entire United States during the five-year period which includes 1917, and within thirteen of the total number of charges of alleged attacks of every character upon women. In announcing these statistics at the Carnegie Hall mass meeting of the National Conference on Lynching, James Weldon Johnson, field secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people said:

I ask not only black Americans but white Americans, are you not ashamed of lynching? Do you not hang your head in humiliation to think that this is the only civilized country in the world, no, more than that, the only spot on earth where a human being may be tortured with hot irons and then burned alive. The nation is today striving to lead the moral forces of the world in the support of the weak against the strong; well, I'll tell you it can't do it until it conquers and crushes out this monster in its own midst.

A great deal has been said about the atrocities committed during this terrible war by Huns and Turks; but there are millions of intelligent Americans who do not know, who are not concerned with the fact that every year atrocities are committed in this enlightened land that would cause envy in the heart of the most benighted Turk.

THE CALL OF THE DAY

THERE was an old heresy in the industrial world that clergymen, school teachers, college presidents, inventors, physicians and scientists must give their best to the race without thought of reward other than that of honor, fame and the consolation of having served well their fellowmen. No physician, for example, could withhold a medical discovery from the world for the purpose of private exploitation and still maintain an honorable position in his profession. No one argued that only the hope of large financial reward could stimulate these professions to efficient and skilful service. But with the business genius, it is supposed to be different. If he is not to be allowed to get out of his talents all the profit that there is in them, his energy will wane and industry will perish.

But are our business geniuses willing to grant that business is not an honorable calling? Has it lower, more sordid standards than the ministry, medicine and teaching? The new day will not, we think, accept from the man of affairs so low an estimate of his own calling. He too will be required, like some other craftsmen, to give his best just for the joy and the honor of the doing. And we think that industrial genius will thrive by that motive of service as medicine, teaching and the ministry have prospered.

Bishop Williams of Michigan put well the call of the day in a booklet entitled Christianizing the Social Order, issued by the Association Press:

Here is the call of the new social conscience of the day. And it is a call that comes especially to religion and education. It is a call for champions of a new crusade to humanize and Christianize this pagan realm of our civilization, to set up in business and industry standards and ideals that have already been established in education, religion, science, art, and literature; for men and women who even in business, will "seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness" and trust for food, drink, and raiment, who will put the spiritual end of life first and make the material basis subservient to that end. It is such men and women alone who can humanize, socialize, democratize, that is, Christianize, our present system, or else substitute for it a better one.

Religion must inspire the will and conscience. Education must train the body and the mind, give the knowledge and equipment. Religion must furnish the idealists and enthusiasts. Education must make them sane and efficient.

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

Give Ye Them to Eat

And they say unto Him, We have here but five loaves and two fishes. And He said, Bring them hither to me. St. Matthew XIV., 17-18.

I HAVE known men and women who were generous in their joy but stolidly selfish in their sorrow. Let life and laughter abound and they abound with it toward all humanity, but let grief enter the door and they forget that anyone lives except themselves. Not so the Master!

Bad tidings had come to Him. John the Baptist, His close friend and forerunner, had been murdered; murdered in prison at the request of the king's mistress. "And when Jesus heard of it," He with His disciples "departed thence by ship into a desert place apart." As nearly as He could He wanted to be alone.

But He could no more get away from humanity than can you. A "great multitude" followed Him and we are told that though His own heart was aching "He was moved with compassion toward them." And when His disciples urged that He send them away because it was toward evening and they had naught to eat, He said "They need not depart. Give ye them to eat."

There is the first lesson of this miracle. He was all-powerful, but when our Master would help others He chooses His disciples, you and me, for His instruments. And therefore "He commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass and took the five loaves and the two fishes and looking up to heaven He blessed and brake and gave the loaves to His disciples, and the disciples to the multitude."

Get that into your mind. You cannot work without Him and He will not work without you. Now as then when God wants to feed the world He uses a man. He led the Israelites across the wilderness. How? By using Moses. He led them into Canaan and He fought their battles. How? By using Joshua.

You say "I am only one." Yes, and all the work He has ever accomplished for humanity in this world He has accomplished by ones. When He would perfect the locomotive engine He chose George Stephenson, a humble mechanic. When He would buckle His chariot to the lightning to carry glad tidings about the world He used Samuel F. B. Morse to invent the electro-magnetic telegraph. When He would flood the paths of millions of little children in all lands with the light of the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ He called up Robert Raikes to gather together in Gloucester, England, the first Sunday School ever established. And so always. You are only one. Very true, but you are one, and the one He wants to use. He is saying to you as He did to those disciples "Give ye them to eat."

But just here a word of caution, and that also is suggested in our text "They say unto Him, We have here but five loaves and two fishes. And He said, Bring them hither to me." He would use you, but two things are necessary in order that He may. St. Paul realized them both when he cried "This one thing I do!" There they are: concentration—"this one thing"—and consecration—"this one thing." Just what He commands: concentration and consecration.

Five loaves and two fishes to feed a multitude! These were all they had, and what were they among so many? But when they consecrated what they had, though it was indeed very insignificant; when they brought it to Jesus, it was enough.

These words will reach many a mother and many a father whose wish above everything else is that their boy or their girl shall live a true and noble Christian life. Sometimes you grow disheartened. It seems as though the problem of guiding them safely amid a multitude of perils through the formative period of the making of their character was beyond your possibilities. Well, perhaps it is, but not if your own life is one truly consecrated to the highest and the best; not if you have in very deed brought that life to Jesus.

None of us has very much. But there is one thing we can do: we can consecrate what we have, and He will do with it then what we cannot. Possibly one who is poor in material wealth says "What can I do with the few pennies I can save for Him? If I were a millionaire I would build a cathedral; but I am only a plain, homespun working man. I have neither gold nor talent nor learning nor eloquence; just a few loaves and small fishes. And what are they?"

Be of good cheer. Bring them to Jesus, and He who caused the little Jewish captive maid to save from leprosy the mighty Naaman and thus do what all the army of Syria could not do, can use you in all your helplessness to set the bells of heaven chiming for joy.

He never asks us to use more than He has given us. He only asks us to consecrate what we have. You are a ten talent man? Very well. Those ten talents belong to Him. Five talent? Very well. Those five talents are His. Only two? For Him. But notice every steward in that parable had at least one. And the unfaithful servant was condemned not because he failed to have ten like his brother but because he failed to use the one he had.

And moreover that is the way to make your talent increase; for again, remember this: Those loaves and fishes did not increase in the bulk but in the breaking. If you stand still, waiting for your loaves and fishes to multiply you will wait forever; but begin to break and divide and see how rapidly they will increase. Find me a church which does not believe in giving to missions. Its days are numbered as they ought to be; for "there is that giveth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is mete but it tendeth to poverty."

"I believe in supporting the home church," said a skinflint Christian, one of those men who give not according to their means but according to their meanness. And his rector replied, "So do I. So does every sincere disciple of Jesus Christ. But I have found that the men who are most ready in support of the home church are they who are most ready to give to those who haven't any home church." These loaves and fishes increased not in the bulk but in the breaking.

And finally, do not forget that Jesus is always a good paymaster. They took up of the fragments that remained twelve basketsful; one basketful for each disciple. Bring your handful and consecrate it to Him. He will not only use it with which to feed a great multitude; He will accept your handful and He will give you a basketful. Try it and see.

NURSES AND MATRIMONY

BY THE VEN. HUDSON STUCK, D.D.

NOW that by God's providence and the patient valor of civilization the war is done, and the world will have not only leisure, but the most compulsory incentive, to set its house in order again, the Church finds herself with like opportunity and like need. With a year in which to make survey of her shortcomings and prepare careful remedies, the next General Convention should be one of the most important in her history.

If, as I judge, she will arise from such survey resolved to extend and intensify her missionary work as never before, I would like to present to the consideration of those who will institute her reforms one very practical measure. Now that it is recognized that the care of the body must go hand in hand with the care of the soul, that, in the words of the last General Convention, "we must witness to Christ not only by preaching the Gospel but also by concrete and practical illustration of its precepts," and hospitals for the sick have become an indispensable part of Christian work in every missionary jurisdiction, I wish to urge the importance of an order of professed and trained celibate nurses such as the Roman Church uses with admirable effect. I put it thus baldly of purpose.

There is little hazard in the conjecture that any missionary bishop of experience asked to mention the hindrances to his hospital work, would put among the chief of them, troubles with his nurses; and these troubles he would admit, if he were pressed, arose in the main, directly or indirectly, from the desire of the nurses to get married. I have put that baldly, too.

As I look back upon the fourteen years that I have spent in Alaska and run over in my mind the vicissitudes of the several mission stations, I can see that the stream of nurses, coming out under pledge for five years and not hesitating to void that pledge by matrimony whenever they so desired, is responsible for no small part of the fluctuating character of our work. I have heard Bishop Rowe say more than once that it seemed as though he were engaged in importing wives for the white men of Alaska. Going quickly over the record, and forgetting some cases I am sure, I can count up fourteen women, a few of them teachers but most of them nurses, who have given up their work before their term expired in order to be married; some of them fulfilling no more than one year of service. Often it is impossible to supply a place so vacated, and the work lapses for a year.

Moreover, during the period that precedes marriage, during the courtship, the woman is of little use in the work; her mind is elsewhere, she is emotionally disturbed, perhaps inclined to be hysterical, and incapable of her best efforts.

In addition to those who were married, I can recall several women who broke down and had to be sent out, or who left before their time, owing to the disturbances of misplaced affection or some amatory distress or other; while that also may seem a little baldly put, it is literally true; I could weave a periphrasis about it if it were worth while.

Nor is this all; it is perhaps not even the worst of the matter. So long as a woman is even subconsciously a candidate for matrimony so long is she open to attentions from men; so long is she concerned with the effort to make herself socially attractive, concerned with frocks and ribbons; so long also the spirit of jealousy is near the surface, and rivalry and partisanship and ill-will are easily aroused, all to the detriment of her work.

What I have counted up concerns only the interior of Alaska; we in the interior know little about the coast; but from rumors that float over the mountains and down the Yukon from time to time I should say that the hospitals in the coast towns, past and present, could furnish quite as long a list. Only the bishop could make a complete list—and he will never do it. One of the advantages of not being a bishop is that one does not have to be so careful of what one says.

Now I know here is admirable matter of jest for those jestingly inclined; though no humorist I could make much fun of it myself; here also is a fine theme for chivalrous indignation, say from the gallant and eloquent Bishop of Brazil. What! know you not, "Love rules the court, the camp, the grove, And men below and saints above"? Know you not, "It were profanity, and mere inanity To treat as vanity the sway of Love, In no locality or principality Is our mortality its sway above?" Why should Alaska expect to be exempt from so universal a law? Are nurses required to be more or less than human?—and when, in the remote arctic wilderness their demure charms and womanly culture and domestic virtues make deep impress upon the hearts of the sterling frontiersmen, those noblemen of nature, who shall dare to forbid the flood of mutual affection that presently flows by talk about pledges and obligation and duty? I could carry it much further, for it is extremely easy; and like most extremely easy things, quite futile.

These women are brought out to Alaska at great expense for one specific purpose, a purpose incompatible with matrimony. Yet because they have never definitely set matrimony aside—whatever age they have reached—and because they are known not to have definitely set matrimony aside, they become the object of attentions based upon their sex; and by the influence of propinquity, and of that gradual, insidious, undermining of their standpoint which isolation from ordinary society often brings, they are led into amazing marriages; sometimes, by virtue of a violent readjustment, happy, and sometimes not. Meanwhile the work they have come to do falls dead from their nerveless hands, and fresh expense must be incurred in bringing out others to revive it and carry it on—only, it may be, to repeat the occurrence.

Those who know Bishop Rowe will not need to be told that every such case has met with sympathy and kindness at his hands, and no one, I am sure, in his jurisdiction ever asked unavailingly to be relieved of a pledge to remain. But the hindrance to the work is not removed even though a technical breach of faith be avoided.

This is a sober statement of a situation which I know perfectly well is not confined to Alaska, a situation which, I am convinced, constitutes one of the chief drawbacks and hindrances of the Church's missionary work in general. We are using women certainly in greater numbers, and I think in greater proportion, than ever before, and it is likely that both numbers and proportion will increase. I believe that the time has come when for the protection of her own work the Church must set on foot some wide scheme for enrolling trained and cultivated and capable women, the best of their sex, who will consecrate their whole lives to her work, who will renounce the common comforts and consolations of life and let such renunciation be known and proclaimed; who will sink their sex and all that their sex involves in the joy of working for the melioration of mankind, body and soul, and the spread of Christ's kingdom on earth. Is it forbidden me to use the ancient suggestion of "the spouse of Christ"?

We have had such women; it has been my privilege from time to time to write about them and attempt a description of their labours and of the blessing that has crowned those labours: we have such women yet, thank God. Would God that all our women had been such; that all were such now. There is no more beautiful spectacle on earth than the life of a woman so consecrated; there is no more potent influence that can come into play amongst primitive people. But once let the suspicion of ulterior purpose enter, especially into the grossly-inclined mind of just such primitive people, and the spectacle loses its beauty, the influence its power and its compulsion.

Is it only a dream that such an order as I have suggested may be organized on so large a scale that the bishops of domestic and foreign jurisdictions alike can draw upon it; that our hospitals can be staffed from it and our schools furnished with teachers therefrom? Such an order would give new bottom, new stamina, new vigour, new scope to the missionary work of the Church. Is it only a dream? Well, of all days that the world has ever known this is the day of Dreams Come True! With a new marvel every time the telegraph flashes, with the Holy Sepulchre forever rescued from the infidel, with St. Sophia to be a Christian church again, with autocratic government abolished the world over, with Poland rising like the phoenix from her ashes, with the French government this very day resuming its authority over Alsace and Lorraine, with a sober reasonable prospect of the world's disarmament and federation—with the realization of all these wildest dreams of the poets and idealists at one stroke, what shall stay the Church in the realizing of dreams also?

We have inherited a tremendous dislike of vowed and professed celibacy, a dislike not without historical justification. But in giving full way to that dislike and to the prejudice into which it has crystalized we have dropped one of the most trenchant weapons in the armoury of the Church. In my opinion that weapon will have to be re-forged, and resumed at once. I can see no other escape from the matrimonially-inclined missionary nurse.

AWAKENING OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND—V

BY JOHN O'LONDON

NEVER has the Church of England been so thoroughly awake as she is to-day to the fact that her system of training the clergy is defective and inadequate. For a decade we have been talking about reforms and tinkering with the machinery, with very little result.

The war has served to demonstrate how ill equipped many of our clergy are as spiritual teachers and leaders of thought. It is now widely felt that the age for ordination should be raised. The passing of boys without real knowledge, either of life or of men, straight from school or university to a theological college and then into the ministry, is wrong in principle and often ends disastrously both for the individuals and the Church.

It is true that the Church of England has always had her great scholars and her hard working and self-sacrificing parochial clergy; this has been in spite of her system, or lack of system, of preparing the men for their work.

In the general reconstruction of the Church, schemes for the training of ordination candidates are being hammered out on the anvil of experience. I have referred in previous articles to the report of the Archbishops' Committee on the Teaching Office of the Church. The report is almost brutally frank so far as the criticisms of the clergy are concerned, and some of the recommendations are certainly drastic. The committee point out that there is a three-fold accusation in regard to the failure of the Church in the task of giving her message.

First:—The Church is charged with intellectual failure. It is stated that the message of Christianity, at any rate as delivered, is out of touch with the thought and ideas of the time; that the Church is therefore ineffective; that it does not mould or influence public opinion as it has done in past ages.

The second charge is of practical failure:—That the Church has failed to teach successfully her definite creed and her system of devotional life.

The third charge is that of failure in the spirit of fellowship: Teachers have not succeeded in convincing men that Christianity stands for spiritual equality, brotherhood and mutual consideration.

"We feel there is much truth in the charges," says the committee. "The Church has not the influence she ought to have attained in the general life of the country. . . . The Church often fails to give her message effectively, and many of the clergy are deficient in spiritual earnestness, in intellectual capacity and outlook."

This is a hard saying but those who are acquainted with the facts acknowledge the justice of the indictment. "There has been," says the committee, "a tendency to rest too much on the authority of office and to neglect personal experience. Too often the authority of tradition has been emphasized, without a full conception of the living work of the Spirit. . . . The interest of the clergy is often drawn away to questions of secondary importance. They are engrossed in minor matters of Church tradition and do not speak in a real and living manner on great fundamental problems which are exercising the minds of many people at the present day. They are apt to speak in a conventional language which wearies and irritates their hearers."

It is easier to point out defects than to indicate remedies. Here are some of the principal recommendations of the committee in regard to the training of candidates for holy orders.

(1)—That the training for the ministry should be the concern of the Church in its corporate capacity, and should be made one of the first and most essential charges upon its resources.

(2)—That the Church should take more decisive and adequate steps without delay to overcome the financial difficulties which prevent many of the more able and spiritually minded members of the working class from presenting themselves as candidates for ordination.

(3)—That the supervision of the training of the clergy should be entrusted to a body, such as the Central Advisory Council representative of the Church as a whole, and that every institution or hostel accepted for the training of the clergy, should have received the approval of the Council.

(4)—That all theological colleges, even those which are not situated in university towns, should be as closely associated with universities as circumstances admit.

(5)—That care should be taken that every theological student, if possible before his special theological training begins, is acquainted with modern methods of thought, and in particular has acquired some sound knowledge of the views of the universe which modern science presents to us. We think it is the duty of the universities to secure this in the case of all their students.

(6)—The training should include (a) the principles and practice of education; (b) some study of moral, social and economic questions; (c) comparative religion and the philosophy of religion.

(7)—That all candidates for orders should receive a longer and more adequate theological training than has been usual in the past. Graduates need a course lasting at least two years, non-graduates a course lasting at least three years.

During the past twelve months most interesting and promising developments have taken place. As readers of THE CHURCHMAN know, our universities and theological colleges were practically emptied of men owing to the national call for war service, thus the ranks of the clergy have been greatly depleted. To remedy this, to officers and men with a sense of vocation, special facilities for taking holy orders have been offered. A test school was established in France while the war was still in progress and now a large school is being organized in this country. It is a significant fact that over 2,000 volunteers for the ministry have been received. These are being tested as to their capabilities for the ministry. A short course of study has been agreed upon by the archbishops and bishops, and financial help is being given to those who need it while prosecuting their studies.

It is too soon yet to say anything further about this experiment, but those who are best capable of judging are very hopeful. A new type of clergyman will be introduced; men who have graduated in the university, of hard experience and unprecedented self sacrifice; these are men with a message and they know how to deliver it.

PROPOSALS TOWARDS UNITY: SOME OPINIONS

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D.D. I have read the preamble and proposed canon of the Approach Towards Unity, signed by certain bishops and clergy and laity of the Episcopal Church, and by clergy and laity of the Congregational Churches, and I beg to say:—

In the first place I feel compelled to express my profound respect and admiration for the ministers and laymen of the Congregational Churches, who signed the preamble and endorsed the proposed canon. In the light of history their attitude strikes me as being noble and magnanimous. They show themselves to be, to use St. Luke's word, ευγενέτεροι (Acts XVII, II); and we should be glad and grateful to meet them in the same spirit.

The canon provides, that a minister, who has not received episcopal ordination, who is in good standing in his own communion, and who professes the Nicene faith and is of irreproachable character, may, with the advice and consent of the Standing Committee, be confirmed, and ordained to the diaconate and priesthood. To that of course there can be no objection.

The only possible question is; should such a minister, so ordained, be permitted to administer the sacrament of the Holy Communion in congregations, the members of which have not had their Baptism completed by Confirmation? And my reply to this is, that for a hundred years and more before the Revolution the conditions in this country justified that procedure, and I cannot help feeling, that, unless our expressed desire for reunion is unreal, such a procedure, in the present emergency, with regular reports to the bishop, and with the vast possibilities of the progress of the Kingdom involved in it, would violate no Catholic principle of the Church.

The measure is not proposed as a complete solution of the question of reunion, and technical objections can be made to it; but it would be a definite and decisive step towards organic unity. It would "strengthen the will to unity" and weaken the force of mere prejudice, as the signatories say; and it would demonstrate to the world, that we were and are in dead earnest, when we proposed and proclaim the Quadrilateral.

I am glad to express my approval of the proposed canon, although we shall have to amend the language of Article VIII of the constitution before adopting the canon in its present form.

The Rt. Rev. James Wise, D.D.—I have read over the Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity together with the form of a proposed canon with a good deal of care. I am glad to say that I find myself in hearty agreement with practically every word. We have been praying for unity for generations. We have been talking about it for years. This proposal really looks as if we were getting ready to bring the idea out of the clouds and begin to do something for its actual accomplishment. I cannot see where the Church to which we pledge our allegiance is compromising any of the essential truth committed to our care. It may not work out perfectly as at present formulated, any more than the plan for the League of Nations may work after it has been accepted without revision and change that experience alone can teach as being necessary, but the spirit of mutual confidence and trust in one another is plainly manifest in the plan, without which no plan can succeed. I believe we can let that same spirit be the basis for future modifications that may prove necessary.

The Rt. Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston, D.D.—I have yours of March 26 being proof of an article entitled "Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity," which you plan to issue in THE CHURCHMAN in the near future. I have read it carefully, and also the form of proposed canon accompanying it, and am glad indeed, to note the fine spirit in which the proposal is broached, and the clear way in which the canon is drawn, and also the very fine spirit animating the whole thing. You can count on me for my signature to the article and also to do everything I can to carry out its provisions.

The Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D.D.—I have been greatly interested in the "Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity." This seems to me a reasonable and practical plan for making effective some of our aspirations towards church unity. It is surely a challenge to our good faith in putting forth the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral on which these proposals seem based.

The only unity worth striving for or sacrificing anything for is organic unity, something far more valuable than an inter-denominational federation of Churches. And in these proposals we are not asked to sacrifice anything of faith or order that we hold in trust—but only to share it with those willing to receive it. Can we go on hoping for unity and praying for unity if we reject proposals as seemingly safe and sane as these?

The Rt. Rev. Chas. D. Williams, D.D.—I regard the proposed concordat with the Congregational Church as the most promising and practical immediate approach towards church unity which offers at the present time. Certainly if the war forced upon the allied armies unity of command as absolutely essential to victory, the experience of our religious work during the war ought to have convinced the Christian Church of the absolute necessity of the co-ordination and co-operation of our religious forces if organized Christianity is to fulfill its mission,—nay, if it is to survive. Once before, at the last meeting of the House of Bishops, the Congregational body made a generous offer of a similar concordat. They were most rudely repulsed by the House. Probably our commission to the Vatican will have the same experience; though Rome is more diplomatic than we, and perhaps after we have kissed the Pope's toe, we shall be more gently kicked out than were the Congregationalists by our House of Bishops. It is to the credit of certain members of the House that they have renewed negotiations with the Congregationalists, and it is still more a testimony to the Christian spirit of the Congregationalists that, after such a rebuff, they were willing to enter once more into negotiations with us. I earnestly hope and pray that the concordat will receive favorable action from the next General Convention and that the canon proposed will be passed. It is evident from the names attached to the proposal that this is not a partisan matter; in fact, it is neither the high, low, nor broad churchman who makes trouble, but always the hard churchman.

The Very Rev. Charles N. Lathrop.—The concordat drawn up by a number of prominent men of the Congregational and Episcopal Churches is far the most interesting effort toward church unity that I have ever seen. Another remarkable fact is that just at this juncture the Bishop of London, speaking before the Methodists in London and Dr. Weston, the Bishop of Zanzibar, the last word in rigid orthodoxy and advanced churchmanship, have both spoken of unity in the same practical sense, presenting a scheme in many ways parallel. Add these two names to the signatories of the concordat, and every earnest churchman is driven to consider the question most carefully. Must he be an Athanasius against a world that includes Bishop Ingram and Dr. Manning?

In this concordat the Church in its sacramental aspect is amply protected. The Congregational minister is ordained a priest. "The order of ministry is conferred" on one initiated into the Holy Catholic Church by Baptism in "the sense or intention in which it is held in the Universal Church." The minister then goes back to his congregation and at the communion table on the next Sacrament Sunday celebrates the Holy Communion. It is a valid sacrament, for "he represents the Church Universal; and his intention and meaning should be our Lord's intention and meaning as delivered and held by the Catholic Church. To this end such sacramental matter and form should be used as shall exhibit the intention of the Church." Quoting the Catechism: "The Body and Blood of Christ" are there to be "spiritually taken and received by the faithful."

But where are the faithful? The laymen of the Congregational Church know nothing of priesthood or Real Presence. For them the man who stands there is no priest, the table no altar, the Sacrament has no Presence.

Is it quite fair to them? They are given something they do not want and are made responsible for theological implications they do not understand, believe, or desire.

Is it quite right for us who believe that the Real Presence of Jesus Christ is in the Sacrament of Holy Communion after consecration, to plan for that Sacrament to be given to those who do not either teach or believe that Presence? One hopes that these signers will obviate the difficulty when they realize that with one amendment they can make a solid front with the English bishops and with all kinds of churchmen everywhere. This concordat ought to look to the laymen, the body of Congregationalists, not to individual ministers. Let the congregation of any church express its desire to receive the ministrations of a minister ordained to be an Anglican priest, to receive catholic sacraments. Then it is plainly the business of the Episcopal Church to remake itself until it can fulfill that desire.

But this concordat reverses the method. It does not deal with congregations; it deals with individual ministers. And it plainly intends to make them priests. There may be such ministers. The present writers after as wide inquiry as is possible believes such individuals are few and far between. But the important point is that this canon be amended. Let it read, "In case any Christian congregation desires that their minister receive episcopal ordination"—"the bishop of the diocese," etc. There is a platform that not even St. Athanasius could fault.

RELIGION AT THE FRONT

BY A MEMBER OF THE STAFF

"DID religion reach the front?" the chaplain was asked.

"Did it?" he replied. "The most religious moment of my life occurred there one Sunday afternoon after the second big fight our regiment was in. We held a memorial service. The entire regiment turned out—except the cooks—for the colonel asked it. There was no compulsion—we never forced the soldiers in matters of this kind. But the colonel's request was law. They were drawn up in a hollow square, not far behind the front lines. The dead had been buried the night before—I always preferred to hold burials at night, by the way, for the men attended better then. Liked to drop a tear without being seen, I calculated. After the regiment was formed, with the colonel and his staff at the centre of the top line of the square, we opened the service with a hymn. Then I read some collects, and a passage from the Burial Service. Next the colonel gave a short talk of five minutes, taking the men off their feet with a reference to the fellows they had left behind—just over there!

"Then we sang Onward, Christian Soldiers—the men always liked to sing that hymn. After which I gave them a brief five minute sermon. The only sermon in the army that gets anywhere is the five minute one, without introduction or end—just sermon! In conclusion, I told them I was going to call the regiment to attention, and that I wanted every man who felt respect for the memory of his dead comrades to stand at rigid attention for one minute. I pronounced the benediction, and was just going to call 'Attention!' when the colonel interrupted and gave the command in clear, impressive, dramatic tones I have never heard the equal of. The regiment snapped to attention as a man, and then, as I say, occurred the most religious moment I have ever encountered. It was a long minute. The air was vibrating with intense emotion, you could hear the hearts beat with religion. And the regimental adjutant, a great, stalwart, courageous chap—fainted.

"Then we all repeated the Lord's Prayer. And let me tell you something. You and I have both heard the Lord's Prayer repeated. But it is very seldom that we hear it prayed, really prayed. But true prayer fell off the lips of those boys that afternoon."

And as this good, comradely, magnetic chaplain talked, I could imagine that it was not only the occasion, but the man who led that occasion, that was responsible for the feelings aroused. I should have liked to have known what he told those boys in those brief five minutes allotted

CHAPLAIN THOMAS E. SWAN, D.S.C.

Part of whose remarkable experiences with the 125th Infantry, 32nd Division, are described in the accompanying interview to his talk—but those were sacred words only for the initiated to hear.

"Chaplain," I asked, "how did your mail department get along?" The chaplain is the regimental postman, you know.

"The mails had their dramatic moments, as well as everything else," he replied. "I found a man who seemed unable to fit in anywhere, and he became my mail sergeant. And he and I provided those men with their mail wherever and whenever it was humanly possible. I will never forget one day before Fismes. The sergeant came to me and said:

"'Chaplain, there's twenty bags of mail back at the dumps. What shall I do?'

"'Go get it,' I replied, and looked at him real hard.

"Now, we were in the front line trenches, and mail is seldom or never delivered there, for it can't be distributed except with great difficulty, confusion and perhaps needless loss of letters. But we knew what a message from home meant, especially to those men—and they hadn't heard from home in a long time. So, what happened? The mail sergeant worked his way back to the 'dumps,' where the regimental kitchens were; he sorted every bit of that mail into batches for each company, and the next morning for breakfast before daylight every company mess kitchen came forward with a big sack of mail. Every man in the regiment had three, four, five letters from home—and the Boche knew the difference that day! Also, there was one poor devil who got a bad one in the side, and I saw him as he lay there bleeding to death, reading a letter from his wife at home, telling of the arrival of their new baby. He passed off with a real smile on his face. I buried him with the letter in his hand."

Then the chaplain was asked what were some of the most remarkable lessons he found the experience of front line work forced upon him. He pondered a moment.

"Well," he replied, "one of the most impressive things a man with a heart of any sort is bound to notice in the war is the universal way in which the wounded men try to help one another. This is noticeable everywhere, in No Man's Land, in the trenches, in a scrap, in the hospitals and dressing stations—everywhere the chivalric, noble, generous, American impulse to help the other fellow first.

"But, individually, to a chaplain, perhaps the most instructive lesson was the better feeling which the comradeship of the front disseminates between the Churches. We all worked together. The chaplain of our neighboring regiment was a Roman Catholic priest, and he would advise me when he had a 'Protestant'—as he frankly called us—who needed attention or help. Similarly, I always notified him when there was need for his services. In fact, I went even farther: I never visited the front without a pocket full of rosaries, which he had blessed—and the boys all knew he had blessed them, and appreciated it. This spirit was a healthy and satisfying one, and will be one of the pleasantest memories of those of us who come back. Chaplains were chaplains, with important duties to perform, and we hadn't the time to draw too fine distinctions."

This suggested to me that the chaplain had not told me of any of his own thrilling experiences and narrow escapes. A wearer of the Distinguished Service Cross, a supreme favorite among all the men he came into contact with, he was, I knew, a man who "had been there." So I urged him to recall some action that he had taken part in, some vivid scene that stands out above all others in his full recollection of many harrowing events. This set him to thinking a little while. Then it began, the tale of how a brave, good chaplain saved the lives of hundreds of wounded men in an exposed dressing station by almost sacrificing his own.

"It was in the battle round Château Thierry, near the River Ourcq. I had worked my way slowly over to the left of our line towards the middle of the afternoon. We were very busy—had been all day. I ran across the colonel and his intelligence officer—the latter now dead, poor fellow—in a shell hole peering into the maelstrom ahead through a 'scissors instrument,' observation telescope on a tripod, you know. They were troubled. The Germans were playing the very devil with one of our battalions. The former were perched advantageously on a high point, and our men were exposed on the forward slope of the famous Hill 230. The colonel turned to me—they always turn to the chaplain when there's a job to be done nobody else can handle at the time—and said:

"'Chaplain, Matty seems to be in trouble down there. See if you can find out what's the matter.'

"So I set out, working my way forward. On the way, in a gulley behind the hill where we had a forward dressing station, I found an intolerable mess. The Boche, in trying to hit our men on the hill, frequently cleared the brow of the hill and the shells were dropping with entirely too much regularity right into the midst of, or round about, this dressing station. The place was crowded to overflowing, and worse still, no men had been evacuated since early morning. Something had gone wrong with the ambulances. As I entered the building, what greeted me? Excitement, terror, moaning and suffering? Not at all, although there was plenty of reason for all such things. No, they yelled at me as I came in—almost in one voice:

"'Hello, Chaplain, got a cigarette?'

"'Sure!' I replied, for I always carried my pockets full of them, and I proceeded to pass them round. But it made my heart sick. So I determined to work my way up to the major of the battalion ahead and see what could be done. The ambulances must be found, or the whole bunch would be picked off, one by one. I discovered poor Major Matthews—he too is dead now—all in a sweat over his perilous position. It struck him to the heart to see his men in such trouble. I told him about the evacuation station.

"'Good God, Chaplain,' he cried, 'that's been breaking my heart all morning. But what can I do? I can't spare a man to go back to headquarters.' He paused a few minutes, then again: 'Chaplain, you go get the ambulances.'

"That was all: 'Chaplain, you go get the ambulances.' And I went. It was dark by this time, pitch-black dark. I had to guide myself by a radio-light compass, my only aid. The Germans were plowing up the entire district to the rear with high explosive—a nightly stunt. For four long hours I worked my way through this 'slough of despond.' Every time a shell burst in my vicinity, I made directly for its crater, for I knew that was the one spot least likely to be hit on the next shot. After the second shot, then I would try to get out of the neighborhood of both explosions, for the third and subsequent bursts in that region were likely to be scattered near or between the first two. It was dreadfully, dreadfully lonely. First I sang to myself, trying to take my mind off my peril and trying to drown out the noise. My throat got tired, and I tried whistling. This was little relief, and finally, I sat down on the side of a shell hole and cried—cried like a baby. And this really did some good. It seemed somehow to brace me up.

"By midnight I reached our headquarters. At first I was too exhausted to do or say anything. I almost fainted. But after a bit, and a little rest, I recovered. There was scarcely anybody in the office, and the few there were working like fury. I learned that the missing ambulances had gone astray early in the morning because, the major in charge of the ambulance service, by some inexplicable streak of hard luck, had driven right into the German lines and been captured. Nobody at headquarters knew a thing about the peril of the dressing station, and nothing had been done to rectify the mishap.

"I recovered my vitality enough then to go on a search for the regimental surgeon. I found him finally at one o'clock that morning, and was just able to whisper the details of my message to him. Then I collapsed. But I learned the next morning that he had sent up some ambulances at break-neck speed, and cleaned out that station in record time."

Here Chaplain Swan ended his reminiscence. Nor could he be persuaded to talk about another exciting action when he received a gas wound and a citation for the Distinguished Service Cross.

SLEEP ON AND REST

BY C. A. POOLE

SLEEP on brave souls in Flanders Field;
Glad bells of victory have pealed.
Your ashes into poppies turn,
Pure white, blood red, a living urn.
Your deeds have quickened all the world;
And Freedom's sacred flag unfurled
Proclaims that ye can never die
While Truth prevails. So, peaceful lie,
Till He whose cause the foe assailed Shall bid you wake. He has not failed.
Your ringing words plead not in vain,
Your deeds in ours shall live again.
No Croix de Guerre adorns your breast;
Ye bore His Cross. Sleep on and rest.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

CONVENTIONS APPROVE NATION-WIDE CAMPAIGN

Dr. Patton and Other Speakers Present Plan to Dioceses

The Nation-Wide Campaign projected by the Board of Missions is making most satisfactory progress. It is hoped that the subject may be presented at each of the diocesan conventions. Special speakers, at the invitation of the bishop, have already visited many conventions and have met with a gratifying response. Dr. Patton visited the conventions of Pittsburgh, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The Diocese of Massachusetts referred the matter to the bishop and the Standing Committee. New Jersey, Pittsburgh and Pennsylvania appointed campaign committees to organize the diocese and carry out the survey. Southern Ohio appointed a committee with Mr. Mortimer Mathews of Cincinnati as chairman. In Montana, the Hon. Edward C. Day of Helena, chancellor of the diocese, was made chairman of the diocesan committee. Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, New Hampshire, Eastern Oklahoma, Georgia, Texas, and West Texas pledged their support and appointed diocesan committees.

WAR JOB NOT FINISHED

Chaplain Talbot Says Germany Will Soon Take Her Old Place

Major Henry Russell Talbot, senior chaplain of the 7th Army Corps, preaching at the Church of the Heavenly Rest last Sunday said:

"I come home sick at heart. We set out to do a definite thing, and we have not finished the job. You and I may have done our little part, but we have passed the completion of the task to our children and our grandchildren. I may be mistaken, but I believe that a people fight not with arms but with morale, and the German morale has not been really broken. It has been simply stopped for the time being."

Major Talbot said the German people had not lost the spirit which caused them to break out in a war of conquest in 1914. He took it for granted that Germany would speedily and easily resume her place in the world. He said he had found food in the occupied parts of Germany more plentiful and cheaper than in France.

"The second thing which impressed me," he said, "was the great multitude of children. There seemed to be thousands of them, and plenty of men, too, who crowded the streets—men unmaimed and looking as fit as our own."

"Thirdly, I was struck by the attitude of the German people toward us. It was saccharine, sickeningly friendly."

Bishop Brent Discharged from Army

Bishop Brent landed in New York early last week. He has been discharged from the army. He spent the greater part of the week in Washington. DIOCESE OF TENNESSEE ELECTS COADJUTOR

Dr. Troy Beatty of Memphis Chosen at Diocesan Convention

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.—The Rev. Troy Beatty, D.D., was elected bishop coadjutor of the Diocese of Tennessee on the twenty-second ballot at the diocesan convention at Christ Church on May 8.

Dr. Beatty is the rector of Grace Church, Memphis. He was ordained to the diaconate in 1891, and to the priesthood the following year. He has served in parishes in Tennessee and Georgia. He was a member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Atlanta, and deputy to General Convention a number of times. In 1908 he went to England as a delegate to the Pan-Anglican Congress.

Dr. Peters Resigns His Parish

The Rev. John P. Peters, Ph.D., rector of St. Michael's Church, New York, has resigned. Dr. Peters' letter follows:

"I herewith tender my resignation of the rectorship of St. Michael's Church to become effective at such time as the vestry may consider most conducive to the interests of the church.

"I do not resign because of ill health for I am now once more in full enjoyment of good health; nor because of old age for I am two years under the age limit for retirement, and I still feel the strength and the desire for work. I tender my resignation solely in the interests of the church, and after long and careful consideration, because I feel that the church needs new and more vigorous leadership. St. Michael's is entitled to have and I am convinced can secure the most competent and efficient leadership to meet the conditions and the opportunities now opening before it."

At a special meeting of the vestry it was resolved. 1. That the resignation be accepted with sincere regrets; 2. The resignation shall become effective in June, 1919. 3. That Dr. Peters be made rector emeritus of the parish. 4. That the present associate rector, the Rev. Thomas McCandless, be called as rector to the parish to succeed Dr. Peters upon his retirement.

Correspondents Confused

By a slip of the typewriter made in the confusion of going to press a day ahead of time last week (due to the parade of the 77th Division on THE CHURCHMAN press day) the name of the Boston correspondent, the Rev. Charles Chase Wilson, was signed to the report of the centennial of the General Theological Seminary written by the Chicago correspondent, the Rev. Charles L. Street. Mr. Street, who is an alumnus of the "General," came to New York to attend the centennial and kindly consented to cover the proceedings for THE CHURCHMAN.

COMMISSION WELCOMES COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

New England Provincial Social Service Board Issues Strong Statement

The Board of Social Service of the Province of New England at its meeting last week drew up the following statement:

It is the belief of the Provincial Social Service Commission of New England that the moment has arrived, long hoped for by many earnest seekers after a more Christian form of industrial relations, when great numbers of employers, on the one hand, and workmen, on the other, are ready for unmistakable steps toward a co-operative spirit and method in the great task of national production.

The commission welcomes unqualifiedly the widespread recognition by leaders in industrial enterprise of the justice and wisdom of collective bargaining in the adjustment of issues between capital and labor.

It urges upon all people of good-will the support of the principles recognized by organized labor as necessary to the maintenance and development of American standards of living and of life; but it would also seek to secure from the leaders of our great unions of the accredited type a wide measure of tolerance and fraternal spirit toward those large masses of our industrial population who have recently come among us and can only gradually enter into our established system.

The commission wishes very seriously to call to the attention of all responsible leaders of thought and action in New England the fact that several of our most important industries seem at present to be involved with a level of income which is not sufficient to maintain an American home that shall rear American sovereign citizens. The commission is not equipped to reach a sound judgment as to individual and unfortunate and anxious episodes coming out of the general situation, like the present strike at Lawrence; but it does aim to keep before our people the necessity of broad penetrating study of this situation, and of such statesmanlike work in advance of serious difficulty as will bring our New England industrial communities to a condition which shall be to us the cause of neither fear nor shame.

Meanwhile in our judgment it is in a high degree unfortunate that the public authorities of the state have found no way of dealing adequately with the cumulative testimony of responsible persons as to the conduct of the police at Lawrence. We do not undertake to give judgment ourselves upon

LAYMEN'S CAMPAIGN SHOWS REMARKABLE RESULTS

Central New York Parishes Report Large Increase in Attendance

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK—The laymen's campaign to increase church attendance inaugurated during Lent under the leadership of Mr. F. H. Pyke, a successful railroad man and an active Brotherhood worker, shows surprising results. One city parish records a jump from fifty or sixty to one hundred and eighty-five on the first night (which was very stormy). Before the campaign was over, the record of five hundred and fifty was made. A smaller city reports that morning congregations grew from ninety to two hundred and sixty-five with an average of twenty-five at the early Communion. Another parish put emphasis on Wednesday nights and reports a packed church. The Sunday congregations are also reported as the largest in the history of the parish. A men's study class of forty members was conducted. In a parish puts emphasis on thirty communicants, twenty-eight came to the early Communion and the average Sunday night congregation was one hundred and forty-five. Other parishes report "largest Easter attendance," "average of morning congregations increased thirty per cent," "most remarkable Lent we have ever had," "out of seventy-eight communicants, seventy-seven received on Easter," "in this (rural) mission, every communicant received on Easter." Mr. Frank Shelby, of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and the two bishops of the diocese lent their aid and support to this laymen's campaign.

A Word of Caution

Attention has been drawn in the Los Angeles press to the National Episcopal Rectory Association which was founded some years ago under the leadership of the Rev. Baker P. Lee, rector of Christ Church, Los Angeles. The name of this organization is somewhat misleading inasmuch as it has no ecclesiastical backing. The Bishop of Los Angeles has never lent it his support.

THE ROYAL CHAPEL IN COBLENZ, GERMANY

This poster, made available to THE CHURCHMAN through the War Commission, is posted in the hospitals, leave areas, "Y" huts, headquarters, barracks, rest areas and shop windows near Coblenz. The Rev. L. R. S. Ferguson is at present the chaplain in charge of the services in Coblenz. The chapel is in the palace proper. It will seat six hundred exclusive of the organ loft and the royal pew. The organ is a fine toned instrument and makes possible a hearty service with good congregational singing.

this matter, but we submit to a responsible public that such charges of police brutality as have been made in this connection should be fully investigated, in order that the obvious ends of justice shall be conserved.

St. Philips, Brooklyn, Consecrated

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—St. Philip's Church, the new edifice built for the thriving colored parish of which the Rev. N. P. Boyd is priest-in-charge, was consecrated on St. Philip and St. James' Day, May 1, the twentieth anniversary of the founding of the parish. Bishop Burgess, assisted by Archdeacon Webb, officiated. Dr. Coddington, of Grace Church, Syracuse, was the preacher. It was under Dr. Coddington that Mr. Boyd worked after leaving St. Paul's School, Lawrenceville. The ciborium and cruets used for the first time were the gift of the Little Helpers and the choir stalls the gift of the Girls' Friendly in memory of Miss Benson.

Memorial Parish House Given

TYRONE, PENNSYLVANIA—At the Palm Sunday service, the rector of Trinity Church, the Rev. F. T. Cady, announced that a parish house to be built this summer has been presented to the congregation as a memorial to Mrs. Henrietta Clement Wilson by her son, George C. Wilson. Mrs. Wilson was a charter member of the parish and always a loyal and devout parishioner.

51 London Churches Bombed

It has just been announced in London that fifty-one places of worship were struck by bombs during the various raids by German zeppelins and airplanes during the war. Among them were St. Paul's Cathedral, Southwark Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, the City Temple, Chapel Royal, Choir House and the General Assembly Hall, Mile End. The damage generally was limited to roofs or stained glass windows.

Better Methods Needed

In his convention address last week Bishop Lawrence has this to say about the need for better business methods in the Church:

The commission of the General Convention on business methods, of which I am chairman, has a New York office, and is gradually, very gradually, guiding and educating the churches to sounder methods. You have no idea how much this work is needed. Within a few days I have learned of large parishes in this diocese where the financial systems would be condemned by the vestrymen in their own business. Many of our own parish churches are inadequately insured. If, as I believe, Massachusetts stands comparatively well in such things, what must the conditions be in other dioceses.

Twenty-one Lynchings Since Armistice

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People calls attention to the fact that the lynching of Sam McIntyre on April 23, at Forrest City, Arkansas, was the twenty-first lynching to take place in the United States since the signing of the armistice. All twenty-one occurred in southern states. On May 5 and 6 the first national conference on lynching met in New York.

Services Held by Laymen

According to the Boston Transcript the Cathedral Church of St. Paul is to make the experiment of services conducted by laymen. A series will be held on the Fridays of May, at 5 P. M.

Relief Ship Sails

The Newport News, fourth ship which the United States Government has put at the disposal of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, sailed for Constantinople on April 23 with five workers, food, clothing and supplies to be distributed among the starving thousands in the Near East. The cargo of the Newport News is valued at almost $2,000,000. This includes 300 tons of clothing supplies and a large number of refugee garments donated by the American Red Cross. A farewell service, which two hundred persons attended, was held on the forward deck of the Newport News.

UTICA CLERGY DISCUSS CHURCH PUBLICITY

Clerical Union Debates Whether Burning Bush was for Advertising

UTICA, NEW YORK.—"Religious Publicity" was the subject discussed by the Utica Clerical Union at its meeting on Wednesday of Easter Week. A paper was read by the Rev. E. S. Pearce of Rome who has had much success with his methods. "Why doesn't the Church wake up?" he asked. "If a quarter of the people, only, go to church, and the other three quarters stay at home, motor, etc., on Sunday, evidently something is needed. A too common attitude is, 'The people know that we have services, if they do not come it is their own fault.' . . . The burning bush was to attract the attention of Moses. The plagues of Egypt were great publicity features. Christ performed miracles of healing to manifest His power. . . . There is fear among the devout and conservative of vulgarity and garishness. No legitimate method should be held in disrepute. . . . Every parish should have a press representative. Advertising must be paid for or you will not get very far. The usual church notices are read by about 7 persons out of 100."

The paper provoked criticism and discussion. That the miracles of either Old or New Testament were performed for purposes of religious publicity was denied by several. It was suggested that the right religious principle was to let one's light shine and say nothing. A business man was quoted as having concluded that in the long run the best business advertising was obtained through good goods and full values. It was generally agreed, however, that the community is not well enough informed as to what the Episcopal Church stands for, and that there is much need of disseminating definite information.

A Musical Record

TROY, NEW YORK.—On St. Mark's Day the seventy-fifth anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of Holy Cross Church, originally the chapel of the Mary Warren Free Institute, was celebrated. The music sung at the service was almost exclusively composed either especially for Holy Cross or by one of its eminent staff. It will be remembered that Holy Cross first introduced the choral service into the United States, that the Rev. J. Ireland Tucker was rector of the church and school for over fifty years, and that William White Rousseau was associated with him as organist.

When Assistant Secretary of War Kephel came to New York last week to speak at the celebration of the centennial of the General Theological Seminary, he made the journey from New York to Washington in an aeroplane.

DIOCESSES IN CONVENTION PLAN FORWARD-LOOKING PROGRAMS

Clerical Stipends, Increased Effort in Diocesan Missions, Organization of Houses of Churchwomen, Vie for Consideration with Study of Social Responsibility and Nation-Wide Campaign

The Week's Conventions.—It is said that sixty diocesan conventions, usually accompanied by the annual meeting of the women's organizations of the diocese, are being held between the end of April and the first of June. Last week Pennsylvania met in Philadelphia, New Jersey in Atlantic City, Albany at the cathedral in Albany, New Hampshire in Concord, Eastern Oklahoma at Tulsa and Atlanta in All Saints' Church, Atlanta, while the week before Southern Ohio met in Springfield, Arizona in Tucson, West Texas in San Antonio and Montana in Bozeman. Apparently all the conventions were well attended and the spirit of enthusiastic and forward-looking work animated those present.

Interesting Business.—The matter of salaries came up in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. In New Jersey a resolution providing for a minimum clerical wage was made, but the fact that Dr. Patton's address was the order of business, caused the resolution to be ruled out of order. In Pennsylvania the recommendation that $24,500 be raised to apply to stipends less than $1,500 was referred to the council. In New Hampshire the amendment to the constitution admitting women to the convention which came up for ratification (having been passed last year) was defeated. In Albany the chief matter of interest was the question of the new dioceses. The plan for redistributing the counties in northern New York to form three additional dioceses was strongly opposed by those parts of the diocese which would be detached from Albany. It was thought unwise to detach the missionary territory and the weaker portions of the diocese from the strong financial centres. The matter accordingly was referred to a committee to report at the next diocesan convention. Southern Ohio passed a resolution approving of the Proposals Towards Unity between the Congregational and the Episcopal Churches.

Women and Church Legislation.—The question of women on vestries came up at the Atlanta council. It had been discussed at the diocesan conference last autumn, and referred to the rectors. The matter was enthusiastically debated on both sides. The decision was finally against giving this privilege to the women on the grounds that they did not desire it. But there is no doubt, according to THE CHURCHMAN correspondent, about its coming in a few years. The undertone of every discussion is that the women are the backbone of the Church, and that often they would do, in certain parishes, the work now left to the men to do, very much better than the men.

A Notable Resolution.—Atlanta passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Council of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Atlanta desires to make record of its solemn conviction that, while the immediate cause of the world war, now happily ended in the victory of the forces of democracy and liberty, was the greed and ambition of Germany, the underlying source of this and all wars was the failure of the peoples of the world to walk obediently in God's ways; that the proposed League of Nations, the most serious and rational effort yet made by the nations of the world to secure permanent peace, will prove effective in preventing war only in so far as it becomes an expression of brotherhood and justice; that until all injustice be eliminated from governmental and economic systems and until selfish principles cease to dominate the life of the world, there can be no sure escape from the curse of war, international or civil; that the chief obstacle in the way of progress toward just and peaceful conditions is selfish indifference; that it is the duty of all Christian men and women to inform themselves regarding all proposed remedies and reforms in order that they may intelligently apply Christian principles to the world's problems and may find a way to solve them without bloodshed.

Topics That Received Attention.—The subject of diocesan missions received a great deal of attention at several of the diocesan conventions. Atlanta wanted the diocesan board of missions to make a survey of the mountain districts and prosecute the work among the negroes with greater vigor. But, as THE CHURCHMAN correspondent commented, this suggestion brought a smile of sadness to the countenance of each member of the board when they considered how winded they are each year with their tugging to make buckle and tongue meet. Pennsylvania voted a budget of $50,000 for diocesan missions with a new $1,000 item for publicity. In New Hampshire a fund of $10,000 was projected which will act as a nucleus for a fund for mountain missions. West Texas heard of the plan for an evangelistic campaign undertaken by the archdeacon who will travel with an automobile, a canvas tent and a portable altar. New Jersey devoted most of its time to revision of the constitution and canons. Pennsylvania passed a resolution approving the censorship of moving pictures and their further investigation by a diocesan committee. In West Texas it was decided to make the diocesan military academy a state instead of a diocesan school. Eastern Oklahoma agreed to enter into the G. B. R. E. plan in regard to the University of the South.

Speakers and Resolutions.—All the dioceses heard speakers in regard to the Nation-Wide Campaign, and all voted in favor of the campaign except Albany which placed itself on record as of the opinion that a campaign of such magnitude ought not to be undertaken without the sanction and approval of the Church as a whole, as represented in General Convention. Other speakers representing the federal boards of the Church were heard at many conventions. New Hampshire and Southern Ohio were preceded by conferences of the Brotherhood led by Mr. Frank Shelby Montana passed a resolution approving the stand of the President in the peace negotiations.

The Bishops' Addresses.—It is impossible to give more than a bare summary of most of the charges delivered by the bishops to their conventions. Bishop Reese dealt with matters of reconstruction Bishop Atwood emphasized the priestly aspect of the missionary's work. Bishop Matthews discussed various ways in which the organization of the diocese could be improved—clerical stipends, regular offerings, the education of theological students and of the children of the clergy, the limiting of privilege to parishes not contributing to the support of the diocese. Bishop Johnston, retired Bishop of Texas preached over again the same sermon of unity that he preached forty years ago and supplemented it by showing how many things that had then been dreams and visions were in process of realization. Bishop Capers' address was an appeal for larger vision in church work. Bishop McKell reported an excellent condition in his diocese. He dealt at some length with the subject of discipline of the laity which is the canons, he pointed out, has only a few words given to it in contrast to pages in regard to discipline of the clergy. He said that the Episcopal Church carries more in different members than any other organization and that by those who fail to learn who desecrate Sunday and in other ways fail to observe the church laws, the outsider judges the Church.

Bishop Rhinelander Reports Encouraging Conditions.—Bishop Rhinelander mentioned the payment of the full missionary apportionment, the success of the Every Member Campaign, the plan of the Woman's Auxiliary to give $56,000 to the United Offering. He said that for more churches have adopted free pews—St. Mary's, Wayne, St. Mary's, Philadelphia, St. Luke's, Germantown, and St. David's Manyunk. He expressed his confidence in the Pension Fund because it was located in Wall Street—a fact some have criticized. He commended the new hymnal which a committee of the diocese is to distribute in the parishes. (The convention passed a resolution memorializing General Convention to publish a book with words only.) He explained and urged the plan of an executive council of thirty-two, to be composed of clergymen and laymen, to advise him, and to carry out the work of the diocese. This council will work with and through existing agencies, and will undertake important work in the intervals between convention sessions. This action was carried; and many matters during the convention were referred to the body.

Bishop Nelson's Address.—Bishop Nelson's address was given in large part last week. The following sentences on pharisaism and church unity were however not given:

"We must be on our guard against pharisaical spirit in dealing with the question of Christian unity. The chief hindrance to the union of those who truly and sincerely believe in Jesus Christ as the divine Saviour of the world, lies in the fact that many are jealous in guarding their own treasures, when they should be zealous in bestowing them upon others. There is a narrow Anglicanism which cannot find liturgical truth and beauty except between the covers of the Prayer Book. There is a narrow protestantism which will have no fellowship with those who do not share its prejudices. There is a narrow catholicism which cannot believe that any one is a true follower and lover of the Lord Jesus Christ who does not express his faith and worship in its precise terms."

Bishop Faber's Address.—In referring to the peace conference and its many delays, Bishop Faber referred to the strife for coveted booty and said:

"Such, we may say, has ever been Europe's diplomacy; better for us to keep out of it. America wants none of it. But, for better for worse, we could not keep out of it. Being in it, we cannot do other than be true to the end to 'the best traditions of our national history;'—either that, or wash our hands of whatever tragedy may ensue, run away from it all, and make the attempt to live in isolation. The one unthinkable thing would be that with open eyes we give smooth assent to barter and intrigue and plunder, agreeing to a peace that carried the seeds of future wars."

"The Church of our Lord Jesus Christ cannot be the Church of the poor against the rich, nor the Church of the rich against the poor, without forfeiting her charter. Her very existence must be a standing witness to the solidarity of humanity. The problem of a true patriotism today is the realization of a genuine fellowship of men in which shall be conserved the dignity of the individual man, of the lowest as well as the highest. It is an overwhelming problem, and the present machinery of the state cannot work it out. There is no organization I know of which even recognizes that as its task, save one, and that one in theory rather than in practice—the old Church of the centuries. The Church must lay hold of it in dead earnest—or abdicate."

Bishop Faber referred to the possibility of the election of a second bishop, saying he would leave it to the decision of the majority. Nothing, however, was done about the matter.

Special Features and Notable Meetings.

—In PENNSYLVANIA twenty-seven chaplains attended the first service of the convention held at the Church of St. Luke's and the Epiphany and in their vestments, sat together in the choir stalls: the Rev. Messrs Barnett, Booth, Bird, Block, Chapman, Cline, Copeland, Currier, Evans, Gorton, Grabau, Green, Hamlin, Hart, Huckel, Lane, Levis, Montgomery, Mockridge, Stockman, Taylor, Toop, Washburn, Walker, Wright, West, Jefferys. They are to be organized into an association so that their experiences may be saved for and used by the Church. It was an inspiring picture of the part the clergy of the diocese have had in war service.

At the public meeting on the second night in New Hampshire, Chaplains Talbot and Moulton made notable addresses. Chaplain Moulton had ministered in the hospitals, and his point of view in regard to the religious receptivity of the soldiers was therefore more encouraging than that of Chaplain Talbot, whose experience had been in the trenches.

At the Southern Ohio convention, an important feature was the meeting on Monday night when Major Sanborn and the Rev. B. I. Bell spoke. After the meeting the speakers were literally bombarded with questions.

Ordination at Convention.—During the Arizona convention two deacons were advanced to the priesthood—the Rev. F. J. Bloy of Globe and the Rev. Luther B. Moore of Flagstaff. Dr. Pardee of the American Church Building Fund was the preacher. A very different, but interesting, feature of the Arizona convention was the automobile excursion to St. Luke's in the Desert, the latest advance in tubercular work in the diocese, to the state university and to the ancient Mission of San Xavier.

The opening gathering of the New Jersey convention was the dinner at the Hotel Chalfonte. Bishop Matthews was toastmaster, and the speakers were representatives of three of the church weeklies—Bishop Johnson, editor of the Witness; Mr. Clinton R. Woodruff, social service editor of the Living Church, and the associate editor of THE CHURCHMAN. In Atlanta the Churchman's Club gave a dinner, with Bishop Lloyd as guest of honor.

During the West Texas convention Bishop Capers was presented with a set of vestments and a pastoral staff, and a purse of gold was given to the retired bishop, Dr. Johnston. The feature of the week was the celebration of the fifth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Capers, and the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of Bishop Johnston. To mark these events an anniversary dinner was arranged at the St. Anthony Hotel. At the same time the military cross was awarded to the latter's son, the Rev. Mercer G. Johnston. Another interesting occasion at this convention was the evening devoted to the consideration of religious education, when the Rev. W. B. Stevens introduced the subject by an initiation ceremony of the Order of Sir Galahad. Nor was this the only dramatic feature; the students of St. Mary's Hall staged and acted a missionary pageant for the delegates..

Personals.—Miss Thackera, of Fort Defiance, Arizona, announced her coming retirement from active work. Albany elected the Rev. William C. Prout, secretary for the fortieth term. The New Jersey convention announced the appointment of the Rev. Alfred B. Baker, D.D. as the first dean of the pro-cathedral; also the fact that this convention was the fiftieth attended consecutively by the Rev. C. M. Perkins. Bishop Capers has appointed Mr. Oscar J. Fox, organist of St. Mark's, San Antonio, diocesan director of church music. Montana is to have a second archdeacon, the Rev. J. P. Anshutz of Billings who will be known as archdeacon of Eastern Montana.

Diocesan Elections For General Convention.—In PENNSYLVANIA clerical deputies to General Convention were elected as follows: Dr. Tomkins, Dr. Foley, Dr. E. M. Jefferys, Dr. Caley. The alternates are Drs. Bartlett and Mockridge. The lay deputies are Messrs Earle, F. S. Edmonds, A. E. Newbold, G. W. Pepper, and the alternates Messrs. R. D. Brown and A. D. Parker. The Standing Committee remains the same.

In SOUTHERN OHIO the clerical deputies to General Convention: Dean Purves, the Rev. Messrs. Flinchbaugh, Byrer, Nelson. Alternates: the Rev. Messrs. Chauncey, Symons, Powell and Reinheimer. Lay deputies: Messrs. W. O. Frohock, Mortimer Matthews, Gideon C. Wilson and D. H. Sowers. Alternates: Dr. W. Battle, A. W. Schell, Frank J. Jones and E. L. Stephenson. The Standing Committee: the Rev. Messrs. Flinchbaugh, Byrer and Nelson.

Houses of Churchwomen.—In two dioceses—Southern Ohio and West Texas—the primary meeting of the house of churchwomen was held. In New Hampshire a commission was appointed to study the possible creation of a house of churchwomen. In West Texas the W. A. and the G. F. S. met during convention. On Thursday Bishop Capers formally opened the house of churchwomen. The meeting of the G. F. S. was its first annual diocesan meeting. The Southern Ohio house came together after a corporate Communion and was formally pronounced organized by Bishop Reese. Ecclesiastical authority was given the house by the action of the diocesan convention in passing on its constitution and by-laws. Mrs. Mortimer Matthews of Glendale was elected president. The various women's organizations of the diocese, including the Sisterhood of the Transfiguration, were all represented in the house. Two suggestions were made by Bishop Reese to the house: that it open a hall for church students at Oxford, and that it form an "Inasmuch Guild" for mission work to be done by women in the county infirmaries. Committees were formed to investigate both of these matters. The house of churchwomen and the diocesan convention had two joint meetings. The chief outside speaker at the meetings of the house was Miss Eva Corey of Boston.

Annual Meetings of Women's Organizations.—In other dioceses the meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary and the G. F. S. synchronized with that of convention. New Jersey's women made their meeting notable by an increase of their Woman's Auxiliary pledges. In Atlanta the Woman's Auxiliary showed progress and enthusiasm traceable in large measure to the Advent Call. The delegates agreed to follow the bishop's suggestion of raising money for the support of a third diocesan missionary. Bishop Lloyd was present at the Atlanta convention and conducted the quiet hour for the women. In Arizona the Woman's Auxiliary and the G. F. S. met in what was pronounced the best convocation ever held. One day was devoted (exclusive of joint attendance at convention services and gatherings) to W. A. business; the next to G. F. S. business. Thus the delegates could attend the meetings of both organizations.

CHICAGO

The Episcopal Athletic League.—The Episcopal Athletic League of Cook County held a mass meeting in Sumner Hall at the cathedral on May 6 to give out trophies and to discuss plans for the coming summer. Bishop Griswold awarded to the Church of Our Saviour a cup for winning the North Side basketball championship two successive years, and a shield to the cathedral team for winning the league basketball championship last year. Plans were made for a track meet and baseball series this summer, and for increasing the membership of the league before the basketball series this winter.

Death of Mrs. E. E. Wade.—Mrs. E. E. Wade, president of the local assembly of the Daughters of the King and a number of St. Peter's Parish, passed away a short time ago. She was born in London in 1853, married Mr. Wade in Canada in 1876, and came to Chicago in 1892. Shortly after that the Wades identified themselves with St. Peter's Church, where they have been communicants ever since. Mrs. Wade has been actively engaged in the work of St. Peter's Parish. She served first as secretary, then as directress of work, and then as president of the woman's guild. At the time of her death she was diocesan president of the Daughters of the King.

St. Luke's, Evanston.—One of the vestrymen at St. Luke's Church, Evanston, has recently taken several sittings toward the front of the church for the use of strangers. The parish paper, commenting on this, recalls a church in the East which has taken a pew for a similar purpose and named it the "General Pershing Pew" in thanksgiving for the men from the parish who were in the national service. The Sunday evening services which were started at the time of Dr. Stewart's return from France last November have been discontinued until fall. He is now preaching a series of sermons at the Sunday afternoon service, on "Scenes from the Great Forty Days." There were fourteen baptisms at St. Luke's on Easter Even, a confirmation class of thirty-four on Palm Sunday, and seven hundred and twenty-five communions on Easter Day.

Annual Council Meeting of the Brotherhood.—At the annual council meeting of the Chicago diocesan assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew held at the Church Club rooms on April 28 the following officers were elected for the coming year: president, Floyd A. Ferguson; vice-president, H. W. Raymond; secretary, J. S. Stevens; treasurer, Ernest Inglis; chaplain, Rev. C. L. Street. The annual assembly meeting was held at St. Paul's Church on May 14. Chaplain Wilson, who has recently returned from service overseas, was the principal speaker.

Notes.—The Rev. B. I. Bell preached the eleventh annual Hale Memorial Sermon

under the auspices of the Western Theological Seminary at St. Andrew's Church on Sunday evening, May 4. The Rev. Dr. N. H. B. Cassell, president of Liberia College, Monrovia, Liberia, addressed the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary on May 1, and spoke to the Clergy Round Table the diocese at their luncheon on April 1. The Rev. Frank E. Wilson, who has lately returned from service in France where he was chaplain of the 343d Infantry, is now serving on the staff at St. Paul's Church, Kenwood.

Bishop Touret Visits the District.—Bishop Touret of Western Colorado spent two weeks in Salt Lake City and its vicinity attending meetings of the various boards and the corporation. He preached in the cathedral on Palm Sunday, in St. John's on Maundy Thursday and in St. Paul's on Easter. As he is still far from strong after his recent operation, he was unable to visit the distant missions.

Easter.—All the churches having resident clergy report the Easter attendance as being far above the average. In part this was due to the pleasant weather, the two preceding Sundays had been snowy. The offerings at St. John's, Logan, St. John's, Salt Lake City and St. Mark's Hospital Chapel were more than sufficient to pay the apportionment assigned to them. The offerings in the cathedral were the largest in the history of that parish and will cancel the floating indebtedness and provide for some necessary improvements.

Utah Sons of the Revolution.—The annual banquet of the Sons of the American Revolution was held during Easter week. The Utah chapter has the sixth largest enrollment in the country. The president, a Mormon, reports that one Utah family has seven hundred men descended from a revolutionary parent. The following clergy were present at the meeting: Bishop Huntington of Nevada, Bishop Touret of Western Colorado, the Rev. Messrs. E. Lewis, W. W. Fleetwood, J. H. Dennis and H. E. Henriques. The Rev. E. T. Lewis is chaplain.

Nurses Graduate.—The graduating exercises of St. Mark's Training School for Nurses were held in St. Mark's Cathedral May 13. Bishop Touret delivered the diplomas.

Convocation.—The twelfth convocation of Utah was held May 14-15 in St. Paul's Church, Salt Lake City. Besides the regular business, papers were delivered on "The Proposed Canon allowing Episcopal Ordination to Non-Episcopal Ministers," "The Rural Problem in Utah" and "The Clergyman's Reading." The Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting on May 16.

Churches Help Employment Service—All the parish churches of New Orleans have adopted the parish plan of organizing church welcome committees "to get employment for returning soldiers and to look after their spiritual and physical welfare. At a recent meeting of the local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the various rectors of the city churches, it was decided to co-operate with the Bureau for Returning Soldiers and Sailors. Committees for the various Episcopal churches were appointed. Lieutenant Roy C. Burrus, special representative of secretary of War Baker spoke for the War Department and Mr. C. W. Army of New Orleans, chosen to help organize the work in the Southeast also made an address. Employment Sunday on May 4 was observed pretty much throughout the diocese.

Clears Debt on Easter—For the first time in many years, St. James' Church, Zanesville, is free from debt. At the beginning of Lent, the financial obligations of the vestry and church organizations amounted to $3,800, and a vigorous campaign was set in motion the purpose of which was to clear the church's indebtedness by Easter Day. As a result of the campaign, the sum of $4,050 was realized, and the money placed in the Easter offering. It is a significant fact that in spite of the unusual demands of war times, and the frequent calls for money, the offering of St. James' congregation this year was ten times the amount of the usual Easter offering.

COLORADO

Easter in Denver—The brilliant Colorado weather well synchronized with the festal joy of the churches. It is true that the unwonted expense of floral decorations curtailed the usual profuse display—Easter lilies at seventy-five cents a bloom were voted a forbidden luxury, and it proved that the simpler decorations were more artistic and effective. The church celebration culminated in the cathedral. An orchestra supported the well trained choir in rendering the chief parts of Gounod's Messe Solennelle. The Hallelujah Chorus worthily culminated the service of song. The acoustic properties of the cathedral happily convey the softest sound so that it is unnecessary to strain to gain effect and thus to preserve the service from the stigma of performance rather than worship.

Honduras Bishop Visits York—Bishop Dunn of British Honduras was a recent visitor to St. John's parish, York. During his stay there he addressed the congregation on the work of his extensive diocese and his wife spoke to the women of the parish on the same subject later in the day. The rector of St. John's was the speaker at the luncheon at the conclusion of a series of luncheons given by the Chamber of Commerce during their membership campaign. Bishop Dunn was present and spoke calling upon the members of the Chamber of Commerce to widen their horizon so as to include their Central American neighbors.

Progress at St. John's, York—On Sunday, March 30, Bishop Darlington made his annual visitation to this parish and confirmed a class of forty, the largest class presented in many years. The Sunday School lenten offering of St. John's was $572. This exceeded the previous high water mark by nearly $300. At the early service on Easter morning a complete set of chancel books, bound in red morocco, and two sets of Prayer Books and hymnal, bound in black morocco, were dedicated, the gift of the congregation in memory of the late rector, the Rev. Arthur Russell Taylor. St. John's Club, after being closed for nearly two years, was opened on April 1 with a large attendance of men and boys. The interior of the club house has been renovated throughout, and a troop of boy scouts has been organized.

Church Consecrated—The Church of the Redemption was consecrated by Bishop Rhinelander on the Sunday after Easter. The date was the fiftieth anniversary of the founder of the parish, the Rev. George A. Durborow. The present parish was formed by combining the old Redemption and St. Anna's Mission. The Rev. Thomas R. List was made rector emeritus, and the Rev. A. E. Clay was called as rector of the new congregation. The corner-stone of the building was laid in October, 1913. The church has 584 communicants and over five hundred in the Church School. The Rev. Mr. Clay has done a notable work, and the consecration marks progress under his able care.

Greek Archbishop Speaks—At St. Mark's Church on Sunday evening, April 27, the Most Rev. Alexander, Bishop of Rodosta, acting Archbishop of the Greek Church, expressed the hope that union of the Greek and Anglican Churches would speedily follow the treaty of peace. The Rev. W. C. Emhardt, of Newton, who has been most active and interested in the Eastern Church, made an address.

On Monday afternoon at Witherspoon Hall a meeting was held in the interests of Greek nationalism, the restoration of the Church of St. Sophia to Christian worship, and the assurance of religious liberty to the League of Nations. Addresses were made by Bishop Darlington of Harrisburg, Bishop Garland, the Rev. Alexander McColl, the Rev. Dr. Conwell, Rabbi Kroskops, the Rev. Dr. Newman, the Rev. Dr. Delk, Mr. Rufus Jones and Bishop Alexander. The speakers represented many branches of religious life in the city.

Social Service Appeal—The diocesan Social Service Commission, (Mr. Woodruff, chairman, and the Rev. Mr. Lane, secretary) have asked the parishes to approve an eight hour day for women, and to aid in the establishment of a minimum wage commission. They ask that these matters be brought before church people on May 4 and that they be urged to write to members of the Assembly to approve such action in bills now pending.

BALTIMORE

Lent and Easter—The lenten services were excellently attended, especially the noonday services for busy people at St. Paul's and the Church of the Messiah. On Good Friday the Three Hour Service at Grace and St. Peter's, where Bishop DuMoulin gave the addresses, at St. Paul's conducted by the rector, Dr. Kinsolving, and at Christ Church in charge of Canon McComb was attended by great congregations. Many of the churches were crowded on Easter Day and the number of communions made was large.

Christ Church Clergy—The Rev. S. Arthur Huston began his rectorship at Christ Church on Easter Day. His ministry thus far has been spent at Trinity Church, Columbus, Ohio, St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, and St. Mark's Church, Wyoming. The Rev. Dr. Niver has been elected as rector emeritus, and the Rev. Elmer C. Pedrick is to remain as assistant.

Bequests to Church Institutions—Miss Ann C. Perine, who died in March at the age of 100 years, left several bequests to church institutions: $1,000 each to St. Paul's Church, St. Paul's School for Boys, the Church Home and Infirmary, and the Fund for Superannuated and Disabled Clergy, and $2,000 to the Church of the Redeemer.

WASHINGTON

County Meeting—At Christ Church, Rockville, Maryland, in the Diocese of Washington, on April 30 the Woman's Auxiliary in Montgomery County held an all day session, services and meetings. Here the Rev. D. Wellington Curran, general missionary of the diocese, fired the first gun of the Nation-Wide Campaign, which was enthusiastically taken up by those present, and organization effected for its prosecution to success in this region.

This meeting in this county is an annual one instituted some years ago by Mrs. George H. McGrew, who was one of the speakers on April 30. Another was Mrs. Albert L. Mills, president of the diocesan branch of the Auxiliary, who, accompanied by ten or twelve members from Washington, went to the county seat for this session. The large attendance and success was chiefly due to the activity and leadership of Mrs. Rosalie G. Small, of Silver Spring Parish. Every congregation in the county except one was represented by rector and ladies. A movement was organized at this meeting, and taken up by the officers of the diocesan branch to initiate and maintain like meetings and activities in each of the four counties of the diocese, and Mr. Curran and representatives from Washington have already arranged for a similar day at Accokeek, in a remote rural neighborhood, on the borders of Charles and Prince George's Counties, in Southern Maryland.

NEWARK

Buried in Church.—Bishop Stearly conducted the private funeral services on April 30 for the Rev. John S. Miller whose death occurred Thursday in Easter Week, and who, in honor of his rectorship of over thirty years at the House of Prayer, Newark, was buried in a vault prepared directly in front of the altar in the church. The body, in a hermetically sealed coffin, rests with the head toward the altar and the feet toward the chancel rail. A tablet, with an inscription to be chosen, will be placed over the vault.

Rector Commended by Bishop.—The work of the Rev. Otho F. Humphreys as rector of Holy Trinity Church, West Orange, especially in connection with community and welfare movements, was commended by Bishop Lines last week at the meeting of the Archdeaconry of Newark, held in West Orange church. Mr. Humphreys has resigned the rectorship, to take effect next month, and will go with his family to England.

Hospital Fund Started.—In honor of the late Rev. John S. Miller and his service to the Hospital of St. Barnabas, Newark, of which he was for many years a trustee and executive board chairman, a gift of $1,000 was made at the annual meeting of the trustees and guild of the institution, held April 29. The donation was intended as an initial contribution toward a fund of not less than $155,000 for which a campaign will be conducted in the fall. The drive will constitute the first public one for funds ever made by the hospital during its fifty-three years' existence. The campaign has been planned in order to render the institution capable of meeting its expenses, of making necessary repairs and of providing suitable housing accommodations for the Sisters of St. Margaret who have charge of the hospital and for the nurses. The hospital is a charitable institution, with a capacity of 100 and but nine private rooms for pay patients.

Nine nurses, having just completed their training course at the hospital, were presented last week with diplomas by Bishop Lines. Previous to the presentation the bishop read the Florence Nightingale pledge and received the assent of the class. An address was given by Dr. Reazor, rector of St. Mark's Church, West Orange.

Lay Readers' Conference Planned.—A diocesan conference of lay readers has been planned for Memorial Day, to open with the celebration of the Holy Communion in Calvary Church, Summit, followed by a discussion of the subject "Simplicity and Reverence in Reading the Services and Scriptures," led by Archdeacon Mori. The afternoon discussion will be led by Canon Pennock on "Knowing and Teaching the Bible."

BETHLEHEM

Diocesan Convention.—The diocesan convention will meet in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkes-Barre on May 20 and 21. It will be preceded by a mass meeting on the evening of May 19, at which Dr. Mann, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, and Dr. W. C. Sturgis, will be the speakers. On the 20th the rector of the parish, the Rev. Frank W. Sterrett, has planned for a series of conferences related to various diocesan problems and work.

Several notable confirmation classes have been presented to the bishop, among them was a class of thirty-eight at Christ Church, Forest City, the Rev. Jesse A. Ryan, rector. This represented an addition of one-quarter of the present number of communicants in this parish. In St. James Church, Jermy, the Rev. David Pugh Griffiths, rector, a class of thirty-two was presented. St. David's Church, Scranton, the Rev. George A. Harvey, rector, had a class of twenty-six. St. Luke's Church, Scranton, the Rev. R. P. Kreidler, rector, forty-one were presented to Bishop Israel of the Diocese of Erie who acted for the Bishop of Bethlehem. Bishop Israel was formerly rector of St. Luke's Church. He was eagerly welcomed on his visit to the parish.

NEW YORK

The Lusitania Service.—The most notable Lusitania service held in New York on May 7 was that at the cathedral. Dr. Slattery of Grace Church was the preacher. He had this to say about hate:

"Let us think of what these heroes brought to us. The way they were put to death so filled us with horror that we rose above hate. When a man or a nation is indifferent to everything but security, that man or that nation can sink to the level where there is no abhorrence of evil. Merely to descend to personal hatred, in view of the disaster, is exactly as low, exactly as cheap.

"We were all part of the amazed humanity which heard the astounding news of the destruction of the Lusitania. I, for one, shall never forget the quivering shudder which passed through this nation. I cannot recall any words of hatred, but I do recall words of loathing. There was no attempt to repeat the form of slogan which grew up under a somewhat similar crime when the battleship Maine was sunk. The feeling was too deep for vindictive words. It was the sort of feeling which comes to a club when a member is caught cheating and is indignantly cast out. He is not hated. He instantly, by his very act, bars himself from the fellowship of gentlemen. He would prefer to be hated, that his low estate might be met by an equally low manifestation of his accusers' charge.

"This is a distinction which we must preserve. We cannot allow a man or a nation, whatever the former honor attaching thereto, to do foul deeds, and still mingle among the respectable. Mere hatred may spring from jealousy or fear. A righteous scorn can come only from an offended conscience which looks far beyond the things of itself, out into the things of the world. Without bitterness we must ask the nation which sank the Lusitania to repudiate the deed with the same abhorrence which we felt in America the day we mourned our murdered fellow-countrymen. There is no hypocrisy here. In so far as we are sane we demand the like treatment of ourselves. We desire a world-fellowship strong enough to encourage, by all just methods, righteousness in our own nation as well as in the nations of other. We desire a world which is neither blind nor indifferent to evil. We desire a world which frankly abhors it."

Chaplain Returns.—Calvary Church rejoicing in the return of the Rev. R. S. Brown who has been serving overseas as chaplain. Chaplain Brown preached last Sunday morning.

Visiting Preachers.—Last Sunday Bishop Hulsc of Cuba, who is spending little while in the city, preached at the cathedral. Chaplain Henry Russell Talbot preached at the Church of the Heavenly Rest.

C. A. I. L. Dinner.—The annual dinner of the Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor will be held on Monday evening, May 19, at the Synod House.

To Welcome Bishop Brent.—The Church Club is planning a dinner in honor of Bishop Brent on May 20. The dinner will be held at the Waldorf Astoria. Ladies are invited. It is expected that the dinner will be of the greatest interest. Mr. Stephen Baker is chairman of the dinner committee. The Bishop of New York will make the address of welcome, but the entire evening will be given over to Bishop Brent who will tell of his experiences with the A. E. F. Application for seats should be made to the dinner committee at 51 East 56th Street. MARGARETTA MILLER.

BOSTON

Anniversary of the City Mission.—The seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Episcopal City Mission was celebrated with an inspiring service at the cathedral on May 2. A naval band played on the cathedral porch before the service. The massed choirs of the city mission churches led the singing. The cathedral was filled with a congregation representative of the whole diocese. The Rev. F. B. Allen for twenty-seven years superintendent of the city mission delivered an historical address. Bishop Lawrence presided at the ceremonies.

Greek Bishop at the Church of the Advent.—In the interest of the restoration of the Church of St. Sophia, Constantinople, to the rightful Christian owners, a special service was held at the Church of the Advent last Sunday. Bishop Alexander, recently appointed head of the Greek Orthodox Church in America, made a brief address. Greek hymns and Russian anthems were used and at the end of the service a petition was signed and forwarded to President Wilson and Premier Venizelos, asking for the restoration of St. Sophia to Christian worship.

Church School Exhibition at Trinity.—The annual exhibition of Trinity Church School was held at the parish house on Thursday and attracted much interest. The annual meeting of the Parents' Association was held at the same hour and the Rev. J. Moses, superintendent of the school, delivered the address on "The Co-operation of Parents and Teachers."

Elections.—The convention elected the following: Standing Committee, The Rev. Messrs. Foster, Jackson, Fitts and Moul-on, and Messrs. Beale, Minot, Parker and Kellen. For deputies to General Convention, Dr. Mann, Dr. Peabody, Dean Rousmaniere, the Rev. A. W. Moulton and Messrs W. V. Kellen, C. E. Mason, J. G. Minot and P. S. Parker.

Patriotic Thank-offerings—At St. Peter's Church, Bainbridge, on Easter the rector dedicated a Gothic reredos, given as a thank-offering by the parish for the safe return of the nine volunteers from the parish. A fair linen cloth and altar frontal were also presented as thank-offerings by individuals.

Easter Gift to Parish Endowment—The Easter offering of Calvary Church, Utica, contained a $1,000 U. S. bond, the gift of William Trimbe in memory of his wife. It is to be known as the Mrs. William Trimbe Memorial Fund, and the interest is to be used for charity or otherwise at the discretion of the rector. Mr. Trimbe also recently placed a memorial window in the church for his wife who died last summer.

Calvary Church, Utica, gives an interesting account of the manner in which attendance was worked up as well as the result. At the beginning the average Sunday evening attendance was 60, in a parish which had a communicant list of 600. Men were conspicuous by their absence. The choir not infrequently outnumbered the congregation. The first idea was to have an outside speaker, but it was finally concluded that it would be best to give the people an opportunity to get acquainted with their own rector. The service was shortened as the rubrics permit and additional hymns were sung with familiar tunes and all the verses. Especially good anthems were used. There were no other changes. The parish was divided into routes. The time was short and not as much publicity was given as was desirable, nor could the more distant parishioners be reached except through the mails. The lenten list of Thursday night preachers was enclosed in an envelope with the special attendance pledge card. These were directed to each individual in the parish and routed. Thirty-two canvassers met Sunday noon after service on March 2 and after receiving instructions went out in teams of two. That night the attendance took a big jump to 185, although the campaign had not yet begun. During the six Sundays of Lent the average attendance Sunday evenings was 304; the lowest 241; the highest 470. The men have concluded that the results were well worth while, and that next year they will go at it earlier and with more complete plans and preparations.

Results of Laymen's Activity—The results of the church attendance campaign conducted by the laymen of many parishes in the diocese are beginning to be known. Two cases may be cited as fairly typical. At Trinity Church, Elmira (the Rev. H. E. Hubbard, rector) attendance at the morning service on Sunday increased during Lent from 171 on the first Sunday to 355 on Palm Sunday. The lowest Sunday evening attendance was 187 and the largest 642 on the first Sunday of the campaign on which the choir sang "Tribulation," a sacred cantata written by one of the choir, Mr. Gwynn Bement. On the Wednesdays of Lent the parishes of the city united in a noonday service, at which the attendance varied from 269 to 400.

Parish Meeting Well Attended—The Church of the Good Shepherd, Binghamton, has solved the problem of obtaining a goodly number of voters for its annual election, in a simple way, easy of imitation. In addition to the formal election, on Easter Monday evening, there was a program, consisting of addresses by the rector and treasurer, and several musical numbers, followed by dancing, games, and refreshments. About two-thirds of the members of the parish were present.

Chaplain Foreman Returning—A cable message announces that the Rev. H. W. Foreman, chaplain with the 1st Pioneers, and lately with the army of occupation at Ehrenbreitstein has sailed from Brest. Although Mr. Foreman resigned his parish when he went overseas, his place was not filled, and he has been recalled to the rectorship of Emmanuel Parish, Norwich.

Memorial Trinity Church, Syracuse—Last Sunday a memorial window was placed in the west facade of Trinity Church, Syracuse, the gift of Lieutenant W. A. Smith and Ensign E. L. Smith. It was dedicated by the Rev. A. A. Jaynes, rector and the Rev. Robert Hudson, rector emeritus.

WYOMING

The Bishop's Easter—Bishop Thomas has returned to the field, following his trip to New York. On Palm Sunday he held confirmation services in St. Mark's, Cheyenne, confirming the last Cheyenne class presented by the rector, the Rev. S. A. Huston, whose resignation took effect on April 15. On the evening of Palm Sunday the bishop held services in Wheatland, and on Monday ordained to the priesthood the Rev. Howard Rasmus Brinker, at Christ Church, Douglas. Bishop Thomas conducted the Three Hour Service on Good Friday at St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, and confirmed a class there on Easter even. On Easter morning the bishop held services in St. Thomas', Rawlins, returning in the evening to Cheyenne where he preached at an inspiring service, attended by the Knights Templar in a body.

Hospital Enlarged—Through the generosity of Mr. D. E. Skinner of the Elk Ranch Company, St. John's Hospital, Jackson, is undergoing extensive improvement. The operating room is being enlarged, and wings are being added, greatly increasing the capacity of this splendid hospital. The improvement will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000, and is a most valuable addition to the fabric of the institution.

From Wyoming to Denver—In the removal of Mr. and Mrs. E. T. David from Douglas, Wyoming, to Denver, the Church in Wyoming loses two of its most valued members. The Davids have resided in the state for a number of years, and have won an influential position here. Mr. David was the efficient treasurer of Christ Church, Douglas, and Mrs. David, in addition to her parochial work, has served as secretary and treasurer of the Woman's Auxiliary of Wyoming, for the past eight years.

Parish House Planned—Plans are being made for the erection of St. John's Parish House in Powell. The financial campaign is already under way. Powell is one of the towns making up the recently organized rural parish of Park County.

Every Member Canvasses—A very successful Every Member Canvass was recently held in Cheyenne, St. Mark's Church uniting with the Presbyterian Church in the effort. After attending the morning service, the teams were served luncheon in the parish house, and then started forth on their afternoon's labors. The results were most gratifying, along spiritual and material lines. The canvass was preceded by a "religious census" in which teams made up of women from the various churches took part. The teams made a thorough canvass of the town in order to find the church affiliation of every family, and many interesting and valuable facts came to light. St. Peter's Church, Sheridan, has also held an Every Member Canvass, attended with great success, and St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, is planning a similar effort in the near future.

A Y. W. C. A. for Cheyenne—The women of Cheyenne are justly proud of their recent achievement, whereby in little over a week $15,000 was gained by an energetic campaign, for the purpose of establishing a local Y. W. C. A. The necessary amount was oversubscribed, and through the generosity of Judge J. M. Carey a building is now being erected which will be the future home of the Y. W. C. A. The association is to lease the building from Judge Carey on very moderate terms, and the new director, Miss Ramsay, is already in Cheyenne organizing her work. The association will fill a long felt want for the young women now in Cheyenne and those who are coming, and the securing of it is a great step forward in the civic life of Wyoming's capital city.

"Good Roads Day"—On April 22 the men of Glenrock and the adjacent oil fields united in a "Good Roads Day," giving their time and labor to the improvement of the roads in their territory. The workers were refreshed by mince pie and hot coffee, served by the ladies of the Episcopal and Baptist churches in Glenrock.

Convocation to Meet—The twelfth annual convocation of the missionary district of Wyoming will meet in St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, from June 20 to 23 inclusive. Convocation will this year celebrate the tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Thomas.

English Church News

The Ministry of Women.—Good Friday found our well known churches with good congregations, though the first really warm day of the year, after a most inclement spring, tempted people to be out of doors. In London, those who were in search of a new church sensation flocked to St. Botolph's Bishopgate to hear Miss Maude Royden conduct the Three Hours from the pulpit. The Bishop of London had let it be known that the rector was disobeying his express wishes. He wanted to keep London Diocese in line with the rest of the Church on the matter of the ministry of women: the joint-committee of convocation would report on the subject in July, and he would then issue regulations. The bishop somewhat significantly adds that leave would only be given to proved and tested churchwomen.

At the last moment the rector reconsidered his position, and the large number of people who arrived found a notice on the church door stating that the bishop had prohibited the service, and that the order would be obeyed. But some two hundred of the crowd managed to squeeze into the parish hall, where Miss Royden, vested in surplice, conducted the devotion of the Seven Words.

There is no real opposition to the ministrations of women, under regulation, in our churches. It is probable that they will be used very much as laymen are. But the church press agrees that Miss Royden is not helping the cause much; she is at present acting as assistant-minister to Dr. Fort Newton, the pastor of the City Temple, and her connection with the Church of England is therefore very slight.

Freedom in an Autonomous Church.—The archbishop has spoken, but we cannot say causa finita. One of the real interests in this Life and Liberty discussion is that the Archbishop of Canterbury has taken a very decided stand on the general question of liberty, as he has also done in the more prosaic matter of church finance. Copies of the archbishop's speech to the Representative Church Council are being sent out broadcast and the clergy are asked to bring up the subject at their Easter vestry meeting, and pass resolutions. Most vestries will doubtless feel that as the archbishop is the last man in the world to take a side in a controversial issue, and as he would only do it if he could see no other way out, they are bound to take his view that an Enabling Act of Parliament is needed. I cannot inflict on my readers even a resumé of all that is being written in the daily press on the subject, but it has led to an interesting passage of arms between Dr. Temple and the Bishop of Hereford. The latter, as you know, is an out and out supporter of the Establishment, and a great believer in the influence of the Church of England as an established Church. Disestablish it, and Dr. Henson believes it would lose its unique influence on the nation; reform it on the Life and Liberty lines, and we should have "instead of the parish church, the Anglican Church in the parish." Dr. Henson is always a skilled debater, and he attempts to prove his point by showing that the Life and Liberty which the non-conformists, as well as the autonomous branches of the Anglican Church already have, has not made them more successful in solving the problems with which the modern world is confronting the Churches. So he still pleads for a royal commission to investigate and report.

Dr. Temple's Rejoinder.—Dr. Henson accuses Dr. Temple and his friends of actively agitating against the Establishment, and of behaving in an unfilial way towards the Church of England. They are always "exaggerating its defects, dwelling persistently on its anomalies, enlarging on its failures." But Dr. Temple, who has been busy replying to other critics in the columns of the Times, has a shaft ready for Dr. Henson. It is "sheer fiction" to say that under the proposed arrangement the parish church would become simply the Anglican Church in the parish. And the Life and Liberty Movement is not alone in its support of the Enabling Bill; other organizations support it also, besides many churchmen who have not joined any organization. But the sting is decidedly "in the tail" of Dr. Temple's letter: "I cannot see that it is more unfilial to ask that one's mother may be allowed to act as mistress in her own house than to demand that a royal commission should be appointed to inquire into her conduct." It looks as if Dr. Henson had met his match as a debater.

Personals

THE twentieth anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. E. A. Pressey at Trinity Church, Portland, Maine, was celebrated on Sunday, May 4, at Trinity Church. A corporate Communion was held for all the parishioners in the morning, and was largely attended. Mr. Pressey took as his text St. Paul's words: "The things which are seen are temporal; and the things which are unseen are eternal," and showed how the unseen spiritual influences had been at work in the parish. At the close of the evening service, after the congregation had remained in order to sing hymns together, Mr. Edward L. Lincoln presented Mr. Pressey with a purse as a token of appreciation from the parishioners. The congregation then adjourned to the rectory where light refreshments were served.

THE REV. J. HARRY GARNER, recently of the Diocese of West Virginia, has entered upon his duties as rector of the Church of the Advent, Williamston, and St. Martin's, Hamilton, North Carolina.

THE REV. A. C. PEABODY, formerly of Okanogan, Spokane, will take up his duties as rector of St. Paul's Church, Windsor, Vermont, the end of May. Mr. Peabody went to Okanogan direct from the seminary, and has done remarkably effective constructive work both at Okanogan and Omak.

THE REV. HENRY RUSSELL TALBOT, senior chaplain of the Seventh American Arm Corps, and for six years rector of St. David's Church, Portland, has returned to the United States. He had four full years of war, serving in 1915 and 1916 with the 74th division of the French army. He received the Croix de Guerre, with a star, for extreme bravery during the defense of Verdun, when he went out into No Man's Land to minister to the dying.

THE REV. DR. A. A. H. HOUBERT, who has been engaged in mission work in the Diocese of Central New York with headquarters in Utica, has accepted a call to Belmont, Western New York.

THE REV. PHILIP KITTREDGE KEMP, son of Professor J. F. Kemp of Columbia, was ordained to the priesthood Tuesday in Holy Week. Dr. Nichols, of Holy Trinity Church, New York, presented him.

THE REV. W. F. B. JACKSON, who has been assisting at St. Stephen's Church, Providence, Rhode Island, the past five months, has returned to his home in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

THE REV. JOSEPH H. HARVEY has resigned as rector of St. Peter's Parish, Pittsburg, Kansas, to take effect June 1, and has accepted work as assistant at Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, and may be addressed at 1210 Locust street, St. Louis, after that date.

THE REV. F. N. SKINNER has resigned the charge of St. Stephen's Church, Ridgeway, South Carolina, and missions adjacent; and has accepted a call to the rectorship of Trinity Church, Edisto Island, and St. John's Church, John's Island, South Carolina. His address, after May 25, will be Martin's Point, South Carolina.

THE REV. CHARLES W. HAKES, M.D., who has been in charge of the missions at Theresa, Redwood and Alexandria Bay, New York, for the past six months, has been appointed to the charge of Christ Church, Sackets Harbor, where he may be addressed after May 10.

THE REV. BERNARD I. BELL has declined an offer to become church student pastor at the University of Chicago, under the joint auspices of the Diocese of Chicago; and the General Board of Religious Education, because, after investigation, he concluded that the present situation at that university did not justify the Church in expending there the sum of money contemplated.

Canadian Church News

Stowaway Chaplain Returns as Lieutenant Colonel—Canon George Frederick Scott, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Quebec, a poet of wide imperial celebrity and the most distinguished and beloved chaplain of our expeditionary forces is on his way home. He left Canada in September, 1914, with the first division as a practical stowaway on one of the troop ships and returns with the rank of lieutenant colonel and many decorations for bravery and fidelity to duty, bestowed upon him by his King. At the very first call for men on the outbreak of the war, Canon Scott offered his services to the Minister of Militia and Defence, Sir Sam Hughes, but Sir Sam thought the Huns could be subdued without him. Canon Scott held a different view and while not giving much attention to the enemy, just then, his heart was full of an intense desire to do what he could for our own Canadian boys. Without permission or military recognition he took up a position in the great military camp at Valcartier, where the first division of Canadians was mobilized, and ministered to them with a devotion and skill that at once endeared him to the men. When the first and greatest armada that had crossed the Atlantic, up to that time, embarked at the ancient capital of Canada, Scott walked on board and there remained until he was deposited in England. Through the rain, wind and cold of Salisbury Plains during that memorable winter of 1914-15, a winter that none of the men who have survived the horrors of war in France can even now recall without a shudder, Canon Scott "carried on" with the same cheerfulness and spiritual fervor that are such marked features of his disposition. Still the militia department knew him not officially. He was merely tolerated because the men loved him. Under the same negative, uncompensated conditions he entered France and the great war. After Langemarke and St. Julien he wrote home to a friend making light of his work. He declared that up to that time the greatest danger he had encountered was the danger of meeting an officer that had authority to send him home. Eventually he was placed on the "strength" and his position was assured. Beyond that assurance he seemed to care nothing for his rank, so long as he was able to do the work that was the driving power of his life. Ask a returned soldier if he knew this or that chaplain and his answer may or may not be in the affirmative. Ask if he knew Scott and immediately his face lights up and he begins to tell you of some of his exploits. Whether a man enlisted on the Atlantic or Pacific seaboard all claim Scott as their padre. Officers say that Father Scott violated every rule of military discipline and the men say that by all the rules of the game he ought to have been killed a hundred times, so careless was he of his own safety. As time went on and he remained unscathed in the midst of shocking fatalities Canon Scott began to nurse a grievance. Other men could die for their country or suffer the wounds of strife, but he couldn't even contract a headache. It was only in the last weeks of the war that he became a casualty and almost met a soldier's death. Canon Scott has shed luster upon the Canadian Church, yes, upon the whole Church, for in all his work and in all his activities he was first and last the priest engaged in his Master's business. The men knew this and on this firm foundation their respect was built. Lieutenant Colonel Scott had two sons in the war. One made the final offering of a soldier, and the other lost an eye. On his homecoming no hero among the many we are proud to welcome will have a higher or more enduring place in the hearts of our people than this priest, poet, patriot, scholar, lover of men—George Frederick Scott.

A Missionary to Indians and Eskimos—

The Rev. W. G. Walton, for twenty-six years sole missionary among the Eskimos and Indians on the East Coast of Hudson Bay, returns to his headquarters at Fort George, this month. Mr. Walton has spent more than a year in eastern Canada crying aloud to both Church and Government on behalf of his people. Strange to say that wherever he went, bishops and clergy, with few exceptions seemed unmoved by his story and his plans but laymen and government officials eagerly heard him and offered him most ready and practical support. The writer accompanied Mr. Walton to wait on Sir Lomer Gouin, premier of the province of Quebec and Hon. Arthur Meighen, Minister of the Interior of the Dominion, and both thanked him for the information he had furnished them concerning an almost unknown people and country. They promised most heartily to support his request if found practicable,—promises which we shall later see were reduced to the full. Mr. Walton's plea was briefly this: From East Main River in the south to Great Whale River further north some 800 Indians dwell. From Great Whale River to Hudson's Straits a similar number of Eskimos are also to be found on the unwooded snow deserts of the sub-Arctic Circle. When game and fur are plentiful, all is comparatively well with them, but when these fail or disease sweeps through the country their lives are pitiful in the extreme. They are Canadians and have no right to seek redress from any other country. They are engaged in an honorable employment, ministering to the adornment and comfort of the people of Canada. How, therefore, can Canadians refuse relief to their distressed fellow-citizens? They know not their rights and had they known them they are not qualified to set them forth. This was the tenor of his plea. The results need only here be stated.

For temporary relief in time of stress a government grant of $11,000 a year has been made. Tons of clothing, blankets, fishing gear, stores and other articles have already been shipped.

A skilled resident physician and gynecologist has been definitely appointed at an adequate salary to insure reasonable comfort and compensation. An architect's plan for a new hospital, and a grant to cover construction, equipment and medical supplies, have been provided. Trained nurses will be sent forward as soon as the hospital is completed. "Treaty rights" have been recognized and hereafter a small annuity will be paid to each family according to the number of souls. A court of justice will be established—the resident doctor to be commissioned as a police magistrate, with power to appoint his own constables. A grant has been made to carry on through natives under Mr. Walton's supervision, deep sea fishing experiments. This is with a view to increasing the native food supply and ultimately the establishment of a possible national industry. Domesticated reindeer will shortly be introduced at government expense, to feed on the so-called barren lands where less than half a century ago vast herds of wild cariboo roamed at will. These animals will furnish a food reserve for natives and will be a source of clothing and transportation.

Mr. Walton has been commissioned as a game warden of that vast area and will organize his hunters to this end. In view of the foregoing improved conditions it is hoped to save the wanton destruction of migratory fowl during the hatching season.

These are no evasive governmental promises but definite obligations which have already been implemented in part.

The spiritual work that has been done in this out-of-the-way corner of the earth is a source of wonderment to explorers and travelers. Many have been the testimonies of the utter reliability of the natives as guides and helpers, and of the good order that prevails even under great stress. Both Mr. and Mrs. Walton are keenly interested in the translation of the New Testament into the language of the people and they hope soon to have completed their work. Mr. Walton is a musician and artist of considerable gifts as well as a writer of hymns,—all of which has proved a source of strength to him in his lonely work. He requires $5,000 to erect a church at Great Whale River, $3,000 of which is in sight. Were the remainder forthcoming in the next few weeks his cup of happiness and success would be full. It is with the liveliest pleasure he contemplates the telling of the good news he brings and of the opening of a new chapter in the life of his people. No greater romance of missions has been produced in modern times than the full story of this remarkable achievement.

The Proposals Towards Unity

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Having for twenty-seven years said daily the prayer for unity; and recalling the memorial on canon nineteen with the eleven hundred and sixty-five signatories in 1910, and Bishop Brown's fantastic scheme for an interdenominational episcopate, I confess I rubbed my eyes in astonishment when I read the Proposals for an Approach towards Unity recently made, thank God, unofficially. I recalled at once the Stonemen's League, and evident danger of indiscriminate confirmation being given as a "degree." Having great respect for the eminence and sincerity of the dignitaries whose names are appended to the Proposals, I criticize the Proposals with reluctance. But I should regard myself as recreant, were I to let the Proposals pass unnoticed.

The eminent Dr. Sanday has declared reluctantly, that the latest historical research has established more firmly than ever the supremacy of the episcopal theory and that the prospect of a religious reunion at the expense of repudiating the historic episcopate is practically hopeless. That such a proposal should come out at a time when a committee of our bishops is visiting the patriarchs of the Church in the East and West, seems to me most inopportune and can not but fail, when it is known, to create a bad impression whether in Athens, Rome, or Petrograd.

I hereby acknowledge my indebtedness to Professor Williston Walker, who in The Living Church of April 19, so clearly, vividly and frankly describes the "new creation" of these Proposals. I ask the attention of my readers to the words which I have italicized. Professor Walker says: "The Episcopalian abandons any requirement of the Prayer Book or submission to the canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church"; * * * * the Congregationalist receives an additional authority to serve those in Christian things before beyond his reach. What the Episcopalian receives is a satisfaction of his scruples. * * * * The Congregationalist is not asked to change his view of the ministry, or to deny the rightfulness of that previously exercised by him or his ancestors. The Episcopalian yields to him the whole matter of the use of the Prayer Book. Neither side is asked to disclaim its part or repudiate its present convictions; each, however, gives up something important, for the larger good."

Professor Walker has my unbounded thanks for putting the matter so very clearly. Can it be possible that the House of Bishops would give anything but very scant and sorrowful consideration to a proposal analyzed and interpreted as Professor Walker has translated it?

Desire and pray for unity as we may, I do not believe for a moment that our Church will officially sanction or give countenance to any scheme by which the Prayer Book or canons, as they now stand, would, practically, be repudiated. I fail to see how our scruples would be satisfied by such disingenuous action. We may not give up one iota of anything that is really "important" even for the "larger good." On page 411, Journal of the General Convention 1910, is to be found the draft of the report of the committee of the National Council of the Congregational Church of the United States. In this draft the declaration of the Lambeth Conference in 1908 is quoted: "We dare not, in the name of peace, barter away those precious things of which we have been made stewards. Neither can we wish others to be unfaithful to trusts which they hold no less sacred. We must fix our eyes on the Church of the future, which is to be adorned with all the precious things, both theirs and ours. We must constantly desire not compromise, but comprehension, not uniformity but unity."

God forbid that we should have peace or unity at the cost of one single principle. Careful reading of the ordinal shows at once how fantastic and impossible any "hypothetical" ordination would be. To confer priesthood upon the godliest man who did not esteem the dignity as the "treasure" described in the exhortation in the Ordering of Priests, would be a terrible and sacrilegious thing. One such ordination would set at nought our priceless preface to the ordinal. I can picture a sort of dual "priest-minister" so ordained, upon whom, according to the theory and belief of our Church, we had conferred the indelible character of priesthood, celebrating the Holy Eucharist, and at the same time merely officiating as a minister and appearing as only such to those of his congregation who declined to recognize his ministrations as a priest. Ordination by a catholic bishop would make a sort of chameleon of him. To give the power of consecrating the Eucharist, and of absolution in the way suggested by the Proposals seems to me almost too shocking to contemplate.

The proposed canon is carelessly and loosely drawn. That such a canon could ever be enacted by the House of Bishops—our college of apostles—I do not believe possible. We want to tell them now that we have this confidence in them as guardians of the faith and that we know they would not do this monstrous thing.

I write these words with sorrow but with joy.

Roman and Anglican

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I noticed in your paper of March 22, a paragraph in which it was stated that a Jesuit priest, the Rev. Walter Drum, had stated in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, that the proposal of union between the Anglican Church and the Roman Catholic Church is "absurd."

It seems really more absurd that there should be any disunity between those parts of the Christian Church. If any of your readers, Roman Catholic or Anglican, will take the trouble to compare the Holy Communion office in the Prayer Book of the Anglican part of the Church with the office of the Mass in the Roman Catholic Church, he will find that the confession of faith set forth in both offices is the Nicene Creed. One would think that as between two bodies of Christian people professing the same faith there ought to be unity and concord. What is the cause of the discord? It is simply this: that the Roman part of the Church has chosen to compile another additional creed, that known as the Creed of Pius IV in which are set forth twelve additional articles of faith, which are declared to be the Catholic faith out of which there is no salvation. Two of these articles require all Christian people to believe all the decrees of the Council of Trent concerning original sin and justification and all other matters. Another requires all believers to undertake to give no interpretation to any Scripture except in accordance with the unanimous consent of the "Fathers." Pope Pius IV and the fathers of Trent appear to have assumed that all Christian people must be theologians, and unless they are they have no hope of salvation. Poor Paddy after he has dug up his potato patch adjourns into his little library and summons Bridget from the washtub and the children and then proceeds to read to them the Bible, and then takes an excursion through "The Fathers" and proceeds to explain to them how they unanimously interpret what he has read to them. The next day he will take down the volume containing the decrees of the Council of Trent and expound the decrees on original sin and justification and all other matters. This is what the Creed of Pius IV supposes not only Paddy but all Christian men will do but we all know how "absurd" is any such theory of "salvation." Not content with promulgating so false and misleading a creed, under the guidance of Jesuits the Roman part of the Church has by its decree of papal infallibility pronounced in effect that this foolish and absurd "creed" is the utterance of an infallible Pope. It is indeed "absurd" to hope for union with a part of the Church which has erected such unwarrantable barriers between itself and other parts of the Christian Church but our hope is that these barriers being of mere human devising may be suffered to fall into oblivion as they deserve.

Reading Matter Need

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Will you please give space to this informal appeal for reading matter for the state reformatory located in Huntingdon, Pennsylvania.

On coming here last January I at once began to look into the life of the institution. I was told that I was the first rector to do so, and by a canvass at a later date found over ten per cent of the inmates had been baptized in the Church. I shall soon present a large class for confirmation and then the first nucleus will be formed and the Holy Communion given at regular intervals.

I now plead for all good church people to send me copies of the Sunday papers having the picture section—something that takes the eye at a glance, and McLure's Boys' Companion, in order to brighten up the long hours the inmates have to stay in their cells.

I might say the other denominations are not slow with their papers. Even the Christian Science publications get here. I feel when this appeal is read, good church people will help on their part.

Dr. Abbott on the Priestly and Prophetic Offices

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I gladly take advantage of your permission to put before your readers the reason why I think that there is nothing in the principles of the Anglo-Catholic to prevent him from inviting a non-episcopally ordained minister into his pulpit to preach to his congregation. He cannot consistently invite such a minister to administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper because that the Anglo-Catholic regards as a priestly function, and the non-episcopally ordained minister is not a priest. But preaching is not a priestly function and has never been so regarded by the Catholic Church.

The religious worship of the ancient Hebrews was sacrificial. Only an ordained priest could officiate in the conduct of this sacrificial worship. For an unordained person to officiate at the altar was sacrilege. But religious education was furnished not by priests, but by prophets. And the prophets were not priests; they were not ordained; they belonged to no order. Any one who believed that he had a message might deliver it at any time, on any day, in any place. The only condition required was loyalty. Jehovah was the accepted King of Israel. No one could preach disloyalty to the King because that was treason, and treason has been in all countries, in all nations, and in all eras forbidden by law and punishable, generally by death.

Whether the sacrificial service and the priesthood were taken over from Judaism to Christianity is a debatable question which I do not here consider; but there is no question that preaching was taken over from Judaism to Christianity. And there is no question that preaching was no more a priestly act or confined to a priestly order in the primitive Apostolic Church than in the Jewish Church. Jesus Christ was not a priest. Not one of the Twelve Apostles was a priest. The disciples, we are told, when they were scattered abroad by persecution "went everywhere preaching the word." Stephen, the first martyr, was not a priest. Philip, the evangelist, was not a priest. Paul, who claimed to be an apostle and was the most notable preacher of his time, was not a priest. And one of the very last directions in the Bible is a call to all disciples of Jesus Christ to give the message of Christ's gospel. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come."

At what time in the Catholic Church the privilege of the laity to preach the glad tidings was first questioned I do not know, but until well on in the Middle Ages it was not usual for monks and friars to be

The flavor of Coca-Cola is a composite of natural fruits so delicately blended that the palate is unable to distinguish any one of the component parts—the result is a distinctive flavor.

The art of compounding flavors has become a science which requires a lifetime to master. That is why it is so difficult to imitate the distinctive flavor of Coca-Cola.

The slightest deviation from the delicate balance of flavors reveals the imitation. When you ask for Coca-Cola demand the genuine by full name—nicknames encourage substitution.

priests; and in the thirteenth century the work of the preaching friars in England was one of the most notable influences, awakening the consciences of an uneducated people to whom the priests had apparently given very little instruction. The work of the friars was done, Green tells in his History of the English People, "an utter reversal of the older monasticism by seeking personal salvation in effort for the salvation of their fellowmen, by changing the solitary of the cloister for preacher, the monk for the brother friar." They were not only not priests, but they were bitterly opposed by the priests. "The welcome of the townsmen made everywhere for the ill will and opposition of both clergy and monks."

The catholic priest and the protestant minister agree that the protestant minister is not a priest. The protestant minister therefore, has no reason to complain that the catholic priest does not invite him to perform what the catholic priest regards as exclusively priestly functions. But preaching is not and never has been regarded as a priestly function. Ordination is not and never has been regarded as a necessary prerequisite to preaching. If the Anglo-Catholic asks me, Why, then, do Protestants ordain their ministers? I reply, Certainly not because they think that ordination confers on them the right to preach. They welcome Dwight L. Moody and Billy Sunday into their pulpits, and neither Dwight L. Moody nor Billy Sunday has ever been ordained. Probably most Protestants would agree that protestant ordination confers no new spiritual power on the minister; it is simply a solemn and formal acceptance of him after careful inquiry respecting his abilities and character as a person intellectually and spiritually fitted to be a religious teacher of the people.

If both anglo-catholic and protestant ministers would frankly recognize this age-long distinction between the priestly and the prophetic function, and anglo-catholic priests would invite protestant ministers into their pulpits, and protestant ministers would appreciate the fact that the anglo-catholic priest regards the Eucharist as a priestly function and therefore cannot consistently invite the protestant minister to officiate at the altar, a long step would be taken toward better relations between the two, and therefore toward Christian, if not church, unity. It would be a long step because it would be founded on mutual respect for each others' sacred convictions, and would make clear to the general public what is the real union and what is the real difference between the anglo-catholic priest and the protestant minister.

New York City. LYMAN ABBOTT.

From a Congregationalist

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Nominally a Congregationalist but a heart too aware of the shortcomings of Congregationalism to remain silent, I would urge all churchmen to consider carefully the Proposals for an Approach towards Unity before impairing its vitality by general disapproval. It is true that the adoption of such a plan would bring to the Holy Communion many from evangelical churches who are ignorant of its real nificance, that it would permit ministers be ordained into a priesthood whose special efficacy they would be the first to deny, that it would in short give to the Christian Church a unity only outward and parent without the inner spiritual unity necessary to the ideal Church.

I know of no facts that would disprove this unfortunate state of affairs. But from the precedent within your Church itself I lack tolerance towards so-called liberal churches. If diversity of belief on the essential Christian truths be the price to orthodoxy of the proposed initial step toward union, let us not ignore the cost to the "free churches" of their present freedom. Already under the guise of higher criticism and quasi-evolution there has crept into liberalism in many localities doctrines that directly contradict the apostolic faith to which the pilgrim fathers turned with as much reverence as the most conservative churchmen. The atmosphere of religion is so favorable to conservatism at these specious novelties of immature modern thought have not yet gained the prominence and unqualified approval especially in country churches which will obtain in another decade. The truths of original Christianity are rapidly fading out, however, before the glowing rays of humanitarianism, internationalism and religious tolerance. Surely if this process comes complete, these churches will be in an unfortunate way. And its completion cannot be prevented from within, help must come from without.

By the introduction of the conservative influence of the Episcopal Church there will come about a gradual checking of this tendency at present so strong toward neglect of the fundamental principles of Christianity. The emphasis on the ethical, the social, and the evangelical will, I hope, remain vigorous. But recognized as a source of these practical things will again be worshiped centrally our Heavenly Father, our Blessed Lord and the Holy Spirit, our Comforter. At first such preliminary union of denominations will bring confusion and perhaps temporary irreverence, yet I know of no way by which so absolutely imperative a step can be taken better than that of bringing evangelical ministers into contact with the unalterable truths of early Christianity through the Episcopal Church. From these ministers these truths will become disseminated in time among the people whom they serve, and like outworn garments the trivial and purely sectarian names Congregational, Episcopal, Methodist, etc. may eventually be sloughed off, and united on the firm basis of the historic Church we may all bear the name of our Blessed Lord and Father.

HAROLD CHAPMAN BAILEY.

Shall There Be Unity?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

There is a proposed canon favored by some eminent churchmen which will probably be submitted to the next General Convention, looking towards a unity of our Christian Churches. With all due deference to the learned men who have drawn the proposed plan for unity, it seems to me that the proposed canon would nullify itself. In one article of the canon, it is provided that any minister of another denomination seeking ordination in the Episcopal Church, may retain his full membership, communion and allegiance in his own Church, while another article of the canon stipulates that he shall make in writing a declaration whereby he shall solemnly engage to conform to the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Episcopal Church. To hold to a membership, custom or allegiance and at the same time give it up, has many times been attempted, but never yet succeeded. But be that as it may, why try to unite the Churches all in one? A Christian unity we have now. The Pope, the Church of England and all the other Churches acknowledge one head, one Jesus, one Savior and one Lawgiver. Suppose you had a united Church (not a united Christianity, that you have now) recognizing one head, one temporal authority, how long would it be until you would have secessions and sects and withdrawals that would carry us back to just what we have now? Shall we go back for centuries to the time when we did have unity of Churches—for there was but one Church in the beginning—just to reach the condition we now have, of many Churches? As it is now, Christianity is in splendid working condition. The various Churches have never given so much and so freely to the support of missions, for churches and for charities. The men of the world have never manifested a better Christian spirit than now. There is no rivalry save the effort of each Church to widen and broaden its influence and increase its membership, and that is as it should be.

"In my Father's house there are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you." E. SEHON.

RODMAN—On Passion Sunday, April 6th, towards the sunset hour, a lovely Christian went to her Eternal Rest. After a long absence in Alaska, she was spending the winter in New York to see again many old and dear friends.

Harriette Sargent Mason was born in Boston on May 2, 1858. Her happy childhood and youth were passed there and in Europe with her mother, her inseparable friend and companion. In 1883, Mrs. Mason died. Miss Mason then joined her brother, Rev. Charles J. Mason, living with him in Philadelphia and San Francisco. When he married in 1892, she still continued, with occasional long breaks to make her home with his wife and himself. In 1903, however, obeying a strong missionary call, after special training at the original St. Faith's Home, New York, followed by a full course of nursing in the City Hospital on Blackwell's Island (for which she received the city's regular graduate nurse's diploma) and a short residence and service in one of the Henry Street settlement houses, she went, with her missionary friends returning from furlough, the Rev. and Mrs. Jules Prevost, to their station in Alaska at Tanana on the Yukon River.

Her first two years were chiefly devoted to nursing and teaching the Indians, whose affectionate confidence she soon won. But she also made many other new friends, in particular, one who was engaged in fur trading and a general local business, member of a distinguished Kentucky family, William Barbour Rodman. Their first acquaintance soon ripened into a deeper feeling, and on September 20, 1905, at the Memorial Chapel of Our Saviour, in the Indian village of Tanana many of her new white and Indian friends alike being present to witness the auspicious ceremony, Mr. Rodman and Miss Mason were married by their good friend, the noted Alaskan missionary and traveler, Ven. Archdeacon Hudson Stuck. From that day to the last hour, barring their common cares, anxieties and her occasional severe illnesses, their happy married life was an unbroken record of mutual affection and exceptional devotion. For the next ten or eleven years of the stay in Tanana, Mrs. Rodman's cheerful, well-appointed home was for all that bleak region the center of a generous, warm-hearted, gracious hospitality. Beautiful always in face and person, she was equally beautiful in strong, yet gentle character, and the influence of that high-bred Christian gentlewoman must have made a deep and lasting impression on all with whom she came in contact. Indeed in Alaska as "outside," "none knew her but to love her." In 1916 after her worst illness Mr. and Mrs. Rodman finally left Alaska for the East; though later, some special business called him back, for a prolonged stay. During part of his absence she resumed her old home with her brother and his family, with whom through all the years, the close ties of family affection had remained as binding as ever. Early in January, 1919, however, Mrs. Rodman decided to spend those few winter months in New York, so she rented a delightful small apartment on Madison Avenue, where at the end of her days she was thus able to enjoy her renewed friendships. But here, at last yielding to a severe attack of influenza with complications aggravated by previous illness, the Struggle Over! Victory Won! Close Home! like a little child, she peacefully "fell asleep." For one brief week she had lingered. Then on the beautiful Passion Sunday evening God called her.

Wherever Harriette Rodman made friends (which means, wherever she lived) in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Alaska, she will be greatly missed, for no could resist her charming personality, her winning manners, her sterling worth. She died as she had lived, a devoted daughter, a loving wife, an affectionate sister, a loyal friend. Besides her husband and many Rodman relatives she leaves in Boston, two half sisters, Mr. Fitch Edward Oliver, Mrs. Hasket Derby, many nephews and nieces, and her own sister, widow of the late eminent professor of Harvard Law School, Mrs. John Chipman Gray, also her brother and his family, the Rev. Charles J. Mason.

"God rest her gentle soul!
In the calm 'Place of Departed Spirits,' May she await in peace the final triumph of Resurrection, Dawn."

CHARLES J. MASON,
Scarsdale, New York.

IN MEMORIAM
A Birthday Tribute, May 2, 1919

Dear sister, soul released from earth,
To wait with all the spirits freed—
The glorious Resurrection Birth
Which God in Christ for man decreed!

Since thou hast gone from mortal grief—
Where mysteries are all made clear,
We thank God for thy great relief,
However much we miss thee here!

We know not where that "Homeland" is!
We only know that thou art there—"Asleep in Christ" with all of His
Dear children freed from earthly care!

Freed;—as all ransomed souls are free
For endless service, endless praise!
To Him, then, we surrender thee!
While still our human prayer we raise.

That, when his day of life is done
Who lingers in the frozen North:
On whom thy love shone like the sun;
He, too—and we—may venture forth.

Armed with thy faith, thy hope, thy trust;
Through the grave's "gate" and Death's dark door
Into that "Homeland" of the just,
Where loved ones meet, to part no more!

DERING—In loving memory of Brinley S. Dering, who entered into Paradise April 28, 1914. The Lord is gracious, His mercy everlasting.

DIED

HOW—Georgianna, youngest daughter of late Calvin Whiting and Charlotte Atwood, in the eighty-third year of her age, her late residence, 23 Park Avenue. Interment at Providence, Rhode Island.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

THE CHURCHMAN presents its second spring book number. Not all of the books reviewed in these pages are spring books, nor are they written by spring authors, but most of the volumes bear the date 1919. THE CHURCHMAN is increasingly adding to its stock of reviewers names that carry weight with our American reading public. Among the recent additions to our staff of critics, we are glad to announce the name of Dr. Batten of the General Theological Seminary and that of Dr. Roland Greene Usher of Washington University, St. Louis. Initials, with which most of our book reviews are signed, may at times veil too effectually the personality of the reviewer. J. W. S. in Massachusetts generally places the burden of proof on the Rev. John W. Suter, but in CHURCHMAN book reviews the initials are likely to mean the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton. The distinction is important at times, especially if the initials happen to be attached to one of Mr. Suter's own books. THE CHURCHMAN publicly announces that Mr. Suter has never reviewed one of his own books in its columns.

ALICE IN 1919

MANY of those who have to go back a good many years to find their childhood will remember Alice as one of the most delightful companions of the nursery. As she wandered through Wonderland, or passed through the looking glass and explored the strange regions that she found behind, she met many fantastic creatures whose charm lay in their entire inconsequence. They were formed upon no common models, they thought along no orthodox or conventional lines, there was nothing obvious or usual about them. They were not improving, like the heroes and heroines fashioned by Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, or A.L.O.E., or many another almost forgotten saint; but perhaps we liked them none the less on that account. There was the Cheshire Cat, and the White Rabbit, and the Mad Hatter. There was the Aged, Aged Man a-sitting on a Gate. There was the Gryphon who could only say one word, but what a word it was—Hjrkkh. Even a Polc or a Welchman might tremble before that combination. There was the Mock Turtle who wept because he was not a real turtle. There were the Walrus and the Carpenter, and the Oysters who played the part of chorus in a tragedy which, in its poignancy and its completeness, was almost Greek.

Alice was mid-Victorian. Her world, strange as it was, was suggested by the conditions and experiences of her own day. But, if she were living now, she would find a good many people who were fit companions for the Duchess and the Dodo and the White Knight. They are not as interesting, but they are just as queer. They are not as amusing, but they are quite as inconsequential and absurd. One cannot reason with them, nor argue with them. To be angry with them is a mere waste of righteous indignation, and to take them seriously is to invite madness, or at least to run the risk of getting mad. But there is no reason why they should not contribute a little to the joy of life.

Let us begin with the clergyman who has threatened the school board with a lawsuit because the children of a public school which is opposite his house distract his thoughts, and interfere with the writing of his sermons. I should like to hear one of those sermons, though I imagine one would be enough. Perhaps in the same category we should put the bishop—lacking in no sense except the sense of humor—who used to measure the fitness of his confirmation candidates by their size, and who did not hesitate, even at the chancel rail, to pass by those who were not long enough to meet his standard, as a fisherman throws back short lobsters into the sea.

If Alice were here to-day, I am sure that somewhere in her wanderings she would have an interview with an ex-Hun. By an ex-Hun I do not mean of course an ex-pro-German, or even a man who still retains his sympathy for the good things which we used to associate with the Germany of long ago. Hun is a term which has come to have a spiritual meaning rather than a geographical or political one, and the ex-Hun is not really an ex-Hun at all. He was a Hun at heart when he justified the sinking of the Lusitania and sneered at the thesis that cruelty was as abhorrent as a national principle as it would be in a neighborhood quarrel over a back fence. He is a Hun still, though he is running for office on a patriotic platform, or wrapping himself in an American flag and telling all who will listen how he won the war. Both in his arrogance and in his versatility he suggests that mid-Victorian Caterpillar who was so stern with Alice.

"Who are you?" said the Caterpillar. "Explain yourself."

"I can't explain myself, I'm afraid, sir," said Alice, "because I'm not myself, you see."

"I don't see," said the Caterpillar.

"I'm afraid I can't put it more clearly," Alice replied very politely, "for I can't understand it myself to begin with; and being so many different sizes in a day is very confusing."

"It isn't," said the Caterpillar.

"Well, perhaps you haven't found it so yet," said Alice; "but when you have to turn into a chrysalis—you will some day, you know—and then after that into a butterfly, I should think you'll feel it a little queer, won't you?"

"Not a bit," said the Caterpillar.

"Well, perhaps your feelings may be different," said Alice; "all I know is, it would feel very queer to me."

"You," said the Caterpillar, contemptuously; "who are you?"

I do not wonder that Alice did not like him. The time will come—sooner perhaps than many of us can now believe—when dislike of Germany as Germany will be forgotten and outgrown. But insolence and the superman will continue to be odious as long as a gentleman is left upon the earth.

This same Caterpillar reminds us also of that militant person who has recently written a classic letter to the Bishop of New York. He has been shocked almost beyond expression—almost, but alas, not quite—at learning that some services are to be held in the New York cathedral in which some of our separated brethren will take part.

But in regions like this, Alice is more appropriate than any text. Our friend's contention amounts to this—that men like George Adam Smith, and George Matheson, and Alexander MacLaren, etc.—let us give him the full use of those three letters—have no part in the Church of Christ; but if the proper hands are laid on any head, however empty, and attached to whatever an unloving and malicious heart, presto, the Church is there. I confess that I have too much respect for the apostolical succession to stand by, consenting, while it is done to death.

Said the Red Queen—"Take a bone from a dog; what remains?"

Alice considered. "The bone wouldn't remain, of course, if I took it; and the dog wouldn't remain—it would come to bite me; and I'm sure I shouldn't remain."

"Then you think nothing would remain?" said the Red Queen.

"I think that's the answer."

"Wrong, as usual," said the Red Queen; "the dog's temper would remain."

Where there is nothing left but temper, there is not much chance for the advancement of the Church of Christ.

Said Alice presently—"What dreadful nonsense we are talking."

But, if you will let me say so, this article is only nonsense on the surface. For nonsense that goes deeper, there was never a poorer time than 1919.

Personals

THE REV. EDWIN A. K. GRANT was ordained deacon by Bishop Burleson on St. Mark's Day in St. Mary's Church, Mitchell, South Dakota.

THE REV. GEORGE G. MATCHETT has been elected assistant minister of the Church of the Advocate, Philadelphia.

THE REV. JAMES E. BARBOUR, rector of the Church of the Advent, Pawtucket, Rhode Island, is away on a month's leave of absence offered him by the vestry of the parish in sympathy for his recent bereavement in the death of his wife.

CHRIST CHURCH, CLARKSBURG, West Virginia, is rejoicing over the fact that the rector, the Rev. J. T. Carter, is back again. Mr. Carter enlisted as private. After being mustered out in January he served the diocese as archdeacon until his recent return to his parish.

THE REV. J. HARRY GARNER, locum tenens for the past year of Christ Church, Clarksburg, West Virginia, has removed to the Diocese of East Carolina. He will assume charge of Church of the Advent, Williamston, and St. Martin's, Hamilton.

SEVERAL IMPORTANT CHANGES have been made in the Diocese of New Hampshire. The Rev. Austin Herbert Reed, formerly priest in charge of All Saints' Church, Littleton, but more recently curate of Christ Church, Fitchburg, Massachusetts, has returned to the diocese as rector of St. James' Church, Keene. The Rev. David A. Pearson, for the past nine years rector of Christ Church, North Conway, has entered upon the rectorship of St. Thomas' Church, Dover.

MISS ISABEL M. PARKS, after twenty years of devoted service as principal of St. Mary's School, Concord, New Hampshire, has resigned, owing to impaired health. It is believed rest and relief from the burdens of her office will speedily relieve her condition. To her place as principal the trustees have chosen Miss Mary E. Ladd, a former St. Mary's girl, a graduate of Smith College and a student in England and Germany. For the past three years she has worked under Miss Parks at St. Mary's.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, outdid itself this Easter. Its Easter offering of $1,750 cleared off all indebtedness and testified to the fine spirit which prevails in that historic parish.

THE REV. CLARENCE ARTHUR KOPP was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Faber on the second Sunday after Easter in St. Andrew's Church, Livingston, Montana. The candidate was presented by the Rev. S. D. Hooker. Mr. Kopp, who has been in charge of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Missoula, during the time that the Rev. H. S. Gatley has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. war work, is to take charge of St. Andrew's Church, Livingston, on June 1. He will give one Sunday a month to the missions at Emigrant and Gardiner.

THE REV. J. F. PRITCHARD has been asked to take charge of St. Luke's Church, Billings, Montana, until the return of the rector, the Rev. J. P. Anshutz, who is chaplain with the army of occupation in Germany. Mr. Anshutz was badly gassed last autumn, but has fully recovered.

THE REV. LINDLEY H. MILLER of Staten Island, New York, has been appointed by Bishop Page to work in the missionary District of Spokane, and he will take up his duties there within a few months.

DEACONESS AMY GREER THOMPSON has been appointed to the staff of Grace Holy Cross Mission, St. Louis. Deaconess Thompson has resigned her position, which she has filled admirably for five years in Grace Parish, New York, to take up her present duties. Grace-Holy Cross has had an excellent development the past eighteen months under the direction of the Rev. C. R. Taylor.

REGULAR SERVICES were held in St. John's Episcopal Church, North Scranton, Pennsylvania, for the first time since January, when the Rev. Oliver Kingman, recently assigned to the church by Bishop Talbot, administered the Holy Communion at the morning service on May 4.

THE REV. JOHN J. CLOTON has been rector of Christ Parish, Cape Girardeau, Missouri, for over five years, and has had charge of a wide stretch of mission field from Cape Girardeau as a base. He has had peculiar success in introducing the Church into newly-built towns and he has made friends among all sorts and conditions of men. He is now leaving to Missouri to serve under Bishop Burton as general missionary in the Diocese of Lexington.

THE REV. WALTER ARCHBOLD, D.D., who accepted the appointment as dean of the cathedral in Easton, has deferred his coming until July 1. At present the cathedral congregation is worshipping with the congregation of Christ Church.

A FEW NEW BOOKS

THE LADY. By Emily James Putnam. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. 1919.

This is an interesting treatment of a somewhat original theme—studies of certain significant phases of the history of the Lady. The titles of some of the chapters indicate the wide range of history over which Miss Putnam lightly travels—The Greek Lady, The Roman Lady, The Lady Abbess, The Lady of the Renaissance, The Lady of the Salon, The Lady of the Slave States. It is to be commended for meditation to militant suffragettes.

From the Brontë Society

CHARLOTTE BRONTË. 1816-1916. A Centenary Memorial. Prepared by the Brontë Society. Edited by Butler Wood, F. R. S. L. E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 1918.

It seems that there is, and has been for a quarter of a century, a Brontë Society. Their centenary memorial to Charlotte Brontë contains, besides many illustrations, papers by Mrs. Ward, Edmund Gosse, Chesterton, A. C. Benson and others, many of which make very good reading for their own sake as literary criticism, especially Mrs. Ward's generous contribution. The book leaves the reader repentant of his ignorance and eager to go back at once and finish Jane Eyre.

English Villages

THE ENGLISH VILLAGE, A Literary Study. 1750-1850. By Julia Patton, Ph. D. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1919.

When you pause to consider it, you realize that English villages have occupied an important place both in national life and in literature. This little book, rather more observant than critical, shows the development of the village and the changing treatment of it in prose and poetry, whether esthetic, psychological or social.

1918 Oxford Poetry

OXFORD POETRY (1918). Edited by T. W. E., E. F. A. G., and D. L. S. Longmans, Green and Company, New York. 1919.

An anthology of verses produced by Oxonians during the year 1918. Much of it is distinctly above the average of the too-copious verse that finds too-willing publishers in these days of paper shortage. The volume is happily free of war poetry.

Types in English Poetry

FORMATIVE TYPES IN ENGLISH POETRY. The Earl Lectures of 1917. By George Herbert Palmer. Boston. Houghton, Mifflin Company. 1918.

These lectures, delivered in the spring of 1917 by Professor Palmer at the Pacific Theological Seminary in Berkeley, California, are admirable guides for the young student of the great figures of English poetry, of those at least whom Professor Palmer feels exercised a formative influence upon English poetry,—Chaucer, Spencer, Herbert, Pope, Wordsworth, Tennyson, and Browning. There is an abundance of biographical material, but they are more valuable for their sound interpretations of the poet's spiritual message.

BISHOP GREER

WITH the first feeling of our loss sweeping over us, it is impossible to say what we must all long to say about the Bishop of New York. We hoped that he would be well again and give to us once more the counsel upon which we depended. And then suddenly, tonight, the word is flashed that he is dead.

Our thoughts go back to the days when he was rector of Grace Church, Providence. Already he had become an inspiring preacher. He had a message, which he thought out carefully; and he delivered it with fire. Thirty-one years ago he came to New York, breathing into St. Bartholomew's Parish new life, adding to his gift of prophecy the vision of an unbounded opportunity for serving the poor. The parish house on East Forty-second Street became the symbol of his Christlike service to the discouraged and the forlorn.

It was not strange that he should have been sought by the Diocese of New York as its leader. To his swift intelligence was joined a tender interest in the individual. Men knew that he would be a real shepherd of souls. And such he has been through these fifteen years of his bishopric. Contending often against illness he has set us all the example of one who took no thought for his life, and went forward to his duty when the tired body needed rest.

More and more, as the years passed, he strengthened the emphasis which he always put upon the fellowship with Christ. It would have been easy for him to be the mere administrator, lost in the contemplation of the outer fabric of such buildings as the Bronx Church House and the cathedral, snared in the business of bewildering statistics. But as he ascended the years he looked out beyond all these things. In his convention addresses, in his confirmation sermons, in his private talk, he looked across the valleys to the mountain where Christ stood transfigured. It was not a mere loyalty to outward laws and doctrines which shone in his face, but a consuming enthusiasm, a devout love, which told us that his life was hid with Christ in God.

Sometimes people who stood at a distance wondered if the Diocese of New York might not be in need of more active leadership, which should feel no restrictions of age or infirmity. We who stood closer know that what was missing in bristling activity was more than made up by the calm judgment, the long experience, the loving care of one who tried to know us all and who, as he examined our work, thought more of the souls we were helping in hidden places than of the accounts we might make for our year books. We went to him for advice and for deeper help with a conviction that his age was an asset, not a liability. He had not only succeeded, he had suffered. He knew how to make light of our failures if we had really tried; and he was not dazed by any passing good fortune which fell across our path. We somehow knew that he was watching us, and that he cared beyond the words he chanced to speak.

New York has a name for hardness, business alacrity, content with material prosperity. There is another New York which is as tender-hearted as a little child, as unworldly as St. Francis, as eager to know Christ as St. Paul. This greater, finer New York is steadily growing up within the outward semblance of the noisy city, and all who work for this consummation believe in its fulfilment. Towards this noble dream, from first to last, our dear bishop gave his life. We hope and pray that tonight he knows that we understand.

We cannot forget tonight the beloved companion of all his work. She, too, has been gazing at the western light. What she has been to his ministry of love to others no one can measure. What we do know is that she never held him back from any sacrifice, and that, when he saw his brightest beckoning to service, she saw it too, and urged him on to do his work, to the utmost, in the Name of the Master who owns them both.

THE REBUILDING

IT has not been given into our hands as individuals or as Churches to shape the diplomacy upon which the reconstruction of a shattered world now waits. Statesmen, for better or for worse, are the architects of the nations' fortunes. We must accept the building as they have planned it. And we must live in the house they build for us—at least for a little while, until other architects devise other plans.

But we, as individuals and as Churches, have had laid upon us a responsibility heavier than that carried by the statesmen who are mapping the world at this hour. For we must determine the spirit in which men on earth are to live together. Nothing really matters except that. The spirit we create can make any settlement by statesmen work for the glory of God and it can also disrupt and mar the noblest plan that it is possible to devise.

We are in danger now and always of forgetting this commonplace truth. People write and talk about "reconstruction" as if it were a problem solely of statesman-like organization, boundry lines and safeguards. These, indeed, are not unimportant matters. But they are not by any means the essential matters.

Why have not the plans of statesmen, the settlement of class difficulties and race problems worked more felicitously than they have done? Any Christian knows the answer to that question. There has been too much hate, greed, covetousness and jealousy at work. There has been too little love in men's hearts.

The Christian religion knows this and the Churches organized to teach that religion to men know it. The lamentable fact is that the Churches and churchmen are not doing what they might do to drive the truth home to people's minds and hearts.

LOVE'S LABOUR NOT LOST

WHILE the New York convention was, with heat and fervor, discussing the $20,000,000 Nation-Wide Campaign, debating resolutions to lend or deny support, down on Fourth Avenue the Board of Missions was also doing battle over the same issue. About the hour, by the clock, that the editor of the Chronicle, a member of the convention from Poughkeepsie, and the rector of Trinity Church, New York, were good-naturedly linking arms against what seemed the premature launching of the Nation-Wide Campaign, a series of resolutions were being adopted by the Board of Missions. THE CHURCHMAN congratulates everybody upon getting his own way in this momentous matter. If the lion and the lamb can be made to lie down together even for a little while in Synod House, the $20,000,000 campaign will not have been launched in vain. The editor of the Chronicle as he assailed the Board of Missions' policy stood erect by the pew which contained the Trinity delegation. Can it be that the Church is about to witness an important merger?

At any rate these are the resolutions wisely framed and adopted by the Board of Missions:

1—That the Board of Missions ask Dr. Patton (national director of the Nation-Wide Campaign) as soon as the survey shall have been completed, so to tabulate and summarize its results, for the guidance of the board, that the board may present to the General Convention, for its consideration and approval, a statement giving the proposed objectives of the campaign and the proposed budgets, general and diocesan, to be put before the Church.

2—That the Board of Missions in presenting such a statement to the General Convention shall ask the convention to decide what method shall be used in apportioning the budgets, general and diocesan, among the various dioceses and districts of the Church, and shall also ask from the convention such other instructions in regard to the campaign as the convention may think well to give.

3—That a special committee of the board be appointed to act for the board in bringing before the General Convention these and other matters connected with the campaign.

CELESTIAL GLOBES AND OTHER THINGS

FROM time to time items of the momentous peace treaty come leaking out of those 80,000 words that we shall soon be reading. Even the meekest of us with no unseemly delight in vengeance gets a pleasant thrill of satisfaction as he reads that the treasures stolen from China in the form of the Boxer Indemnity are to be returned. The Celestial Globe and the other astronomical treasures must be removed from the burglar's home in Potsdam and returned to the house where they rightfully belong.

There are steadily appearing some real gains in the peace of 1919. For if nations can be convicted and punished for breaking the Eighth Commandment, we are well on our way towards the millennium.

DIVORCE AND WAR

THE Church Family Newspaper of London comments editorially upon the enormous increase of divorce petitions as a sad reminder of the disastrous influence of the war upon social life. The continued absence of the men from their homes and the unnatural excitement of the populace have led to many domestic tragedies. Social workers in England and clergymen have borne witness to the distressing fact that since 1914 there has been a marked change of public opinion regarding divorce and broken marital vows. The divorced woman is no longer looked upon "as one who has broken the law of God. Her remarriage to the man she has chosen in preference to her husband is widely held to have purged her of offence."

So it has always been with war. After the Boer war thousands of soldiers refused to return to their homes and families. Many of them stayed in South Africa; many drifted back to London to become wastrels. These are by-products of war which must be counted in the reckoning of its total cost. During the next generation, one of the most important contributions which sociology can make will be the gathering of accurate statistics on the cost of war. We must see the thing as it is, wrinkles and all.

EDITH CAVELL'S LAST WORDS

EDITH CAVELL'S last letter has been cabled throughout the world this past week as the British nation bore her body in honor and love to its resting place in the churchyard of old Norwich. The stately procession from Belgium into France and across the channel has had riveted upon it the eyes of the whole world. Men everywhere have watched the procession with uncovered heads

• The death of Edith Cavell has become a symbol. Her devotion, her fearlessness, her love of England did not create the symbol. Her name has become the reminder, rather, of what an unchivalrous, debased military government, functioning as a soulless machine, can do without shame. It is the baseness of her tormentors, as well as her own fineness of soul, that has brought fame to this English nurse.

But would Edith Cavell be quite happy to see her friends, her countrymen and lovers emphasizing today, as her portion of fame, the baseness of those who put her to death and quite forgetting to do honor to the spirit of her parting injunctions? Some words which this English woman spoke and wrote during the last hours of her imprisonment were very significant, very wonderful words. One of them was written to her nurses at the Ecole Belge d'Infirmières Diplômées, in Brussels. It ran thus: "Beware of uncharitable speech." Readers of our daily papers are familiar with the letter. But nearly every newspaper which printed that Christian injunction violated its spirit in their editorial encomium upon the writer.

We shall honor Edith Cavell's memory best by employing during the coming months the spirit of her beautiful counsels.

THE FIFTH BIRTHDAY OF THE CHALLENGE

WORD has come across the water of the passing of the fifth birthday of our English contemporary, the Challenge. The Challenge is one of the few religious journals which contains religion. Its tone is always Christian and constructive. During the war it dared to brave the fire-eaters and since the armistice it has done its bit towards healing the wounds which war has made in the body of Christendom. "The object of the Challenge," to quote the editor's words, "is to apply to all the problems, national and international, with which this generation is faced, the principles of thought and action preached and practised by Jesus Christ." It has been so far successful in attaining its object as to make the reader feel that in the patriotism of the Challenge a power higher than the state is speaking. THE CHURCHMAN offers its good wishes and congratulations.

WOMAN'S GIFT

IN his address to the graduating class of the New York Training School for Deaconesses last week, Dean Fosbroke made a point which feminists as a rule refuse to concede, the denial of which constitutes the theme of Mr. W. L. George's recent book. Dean Fosbroke finds a fundamental intellectual difference between the sexes. He admits that possibly woman's rare power of intuition may have been developed at the expense of her power of logical reasoning through man's stupidity. He even admits that logic may become an aptly used tool in woman's hands now that liberty to use it has been granted her. But the dean believes that God who has guided history to His own ends, has overruled man's stupidity and developed woman's intuition for the great good of the world.

The dean looks for woman's greatest contribution to the life of the race along intellectual rather than along practical lines. The release of their powers through the increase of economic and social liberty, is considered by most women, he said, a call to service. But it is through the mind rather than by the hand that he feels women are best fitted to serve. Women are supposed to be non-creative. But, said the dean, their creative work is of a different order from that of man. For example, the best biographies have been written by women, because their power of discernment pierced deep and revealed their subjects. For the same reason, he added, women are inimitable letter-writers. Their gift is with tender sympathy and by revealing intuition to invest the particular instance and the particular case with meaning and a warm significance. He also pointed out the correlative danger—that of failing to see the relation of the particular to the general, the consequences of the individual action in the larger event.

AN AWE-INSPIRING SYMBOL

DR. ORCHARD, who as most churchmen know is minister of the King's Weigh House Church, has won by his deeply spiritual utterances the ear of English churchmen. In dealing with the obstacles to Christian union he has recently uttered a word which gives Christians something to meditate upon: "When any one is ordained I want to see the bishop there, the priest there, and brought up out of the congregation some servant girl or 'bus driver, to lay his hands on the candidate's head." There is nothing humorous or irreverent about that assertion. It is a very solemn utterance and it fills one with awe. Has it always occurred to the custodians of the faith that they are answerable to the servant and the 'bus driver for the stewardship of their sacred office? The humblest servant in the Kingdom of God is a steward too of the faith. It would be well for the priest to remember that he is answerable for the conduct of his office to the most lowly layman.

ONE SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM

WE observe in reading parish leaflets that some rectors have hit upon a solution of the problem of how to make the lessons intelligible. The rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Akron, Ohio, publishes a summary of both lessons each week in the leaflet. The following extract is taken from the service leaflet of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, for the third Sunday after Easter.

FIRST LESSON—JOB 14

A POET'S DREAM: BEYOND FACT AND FEAR TO HOPE.

Job portrays how weak and doomed to death man is; his destiny sadder than that of even a tree, which blossoms again, while man's extinction in death is eternal. At this low ebb of despair Job with a spiritual revulsion launches a magnificent intuition, expressed as a passionate desire—he will hear the call of God in the grave and be able to answer it, he will live again. "God will have a desire to the work of His hands." Though this momentary hope passes and once again the universal fate of death over-clouds his vision, yet he has given utterance to a new imaginative expectation as he stood seeing with spiritual eyes, another life beyond the grave.

SECOND LESSON—MARK 16:9-18.

THE DREAM FULFILLED

St. Mark gives a short summary of Christ's appearances. He then recounts His command to carry the tidings of His Incarnation and Resurrection to all the world promising a share in the resurrected life to all believers. It is the fulfilment in history of Job's dream.

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

The Most Dramatic Chapter in the Bible

Then Paul stretched forth his hand and answered for himself.—Acts XXVI—1.

WE ARE in Caesarea, one of the Roman royal cities of Judea. Festus, the governor, who has been recently appointed by Nero, is pacing the floor of his palace in anxious thought, for there has arisen in his administration a vexing case.

There is a little old Jew by the name of Paul who has been in prison for two years, placed there by Felix, Festus' predecessor in office. He has had some difficulty with his countrymen about a strange and novel religion, concerning a certain Galilean, whom Pilate crucified some years ago, but whom he declares is still alive. Festus, this bluff but well-meaning pagan from Rome, knows very little of the religious merits of the case and cares less.

But just here there comes to him a bit of good fortune. A messenger arrives bringing a letter from Agrippa, a king of a portion of Palestine, stating that he accompanied by his sister Bernice and several of the court are about to pay him a visit, and since he is a Jew, as Festus is not, perhaps he can suggest a way out of the difficulty. He will have this little old fanatic defend himself before the king.

Now the curtain rises on the scene. In that magnificent court of justice was there ever a greater contrast! There in the centre of the platform sits Festus, the governor; on one side of him Agrippa, the dissolute king, and next to him his sister, Bernice, beautiful as she is vile and vile as she is beautiful; Bernice, his sister, whom well founded rumor declares to be at the same time something more than a sister; and on the other side of Festus the city of Caesarea's four-hundred, and the members of Agrippa's court, magistrates and military officers—a great crowd.

Now all is ready and the command is given "Bring the prisoner in." The buzz of conversation ceases. We hear the clanking of chains. Every eye is turned toward the open door, and there comes forward, led by his Roman guard, a little bent old man. His face is pale with the years of his imprisonment. He walks slowly, and no wonder that he is broken; for this man has a history behind him which might make any man tremble in his gait. For more than twenty years he has been hounded from city to city for preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. He has been whipped. He has been beaten with rods. He has been stoned. Once he was compelled to fight with wild beasts at Ephesus. He has been shipwrecked, and he has spent a night and a day clinging to a spar in the sea. No wonder he is bent and walks with halting step.

And there he stands; his hands manacled and bound together by a long clanking chain; his left wrist fastened to that of the Roman soldier who is his keeper. There he stands fettered.

No! In all that assembly he is the only man who is free! There he stands; Paul before Agrippa! No! Agrippa and Festus and all that mighty company before Paul. They are to be tried today; not he. Though they know it not, before this day's sun shall have gone down, it shall be shown that they are the bondsmen and he the king. "Then Agrippa said unto Paul: 'Thou art permitted to speak for thyself.'" That is all that Christianity asks—a chance to speak for itself. The best argument on behalf of Christianity is—Christianity.

But as he proceeds, Festus can bear it no longer, and he cries out with a loud voice: "Paul, thou art beside thyself. Much learning doth make thee mad." And Paul answers: "I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness. For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely; for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner." And now, pointing his finger straight at the king he cries: "King Agrippa, thou who art a Jew, sitting in judgment over another Jew, believest thou the prophets? I know that thou believest!"

And Agrippa does not answer, he only sneers—and that is the easiest thing in the world to do when a man cannot answer and the weakest. He says: "Why Paul with these few words"—for that is the preferable translation, accepted today by all scholars—"with these few words persuadest thou Me to be a Christian?" And he spells "me" with a capital M and "thou" with a very little t. "Thou? Converted by a sunbeam! Proclaiming a vision! Thou would'st try on Me thy short method with a Jew?' Thou in a trice persuadest Me to be a Christian! Me! with slaves at my feet! With all this wealth and all this luxury! Me!—Oh no!" And a laugh goes round the royal circle.

But look! the little bent old man is erect now. His earnestness has banished the prison pallor from his face, and his eye is lit with flame. He has time for only one more word, for already the assembly is beginning to break up; time for just one parting blessing. And what shall that blessing be; the very best thing which he can wish for yonder great man clothed in purple and dazzling with jewels? It is that he may become such as he. Poor? No! Rich? Despised? No! Beloved of God? Uncrowned? No! A crown waiting for him, incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away.

And so, lifting his manacled hands while the chains rattle, he cries, "I would to God that not only thou, but all that hear me this day, were not only almost, but altogether, such as I am—except these bonds."

Well, the years have gone by and history has written its verdict between these two men; the one tricky, a time server, living for the things which are seen and which pass away; the other, following the vision; seeking first of all not the temporal but the eternal; reality, honesty, kindness, character, nobility in the name of Jesus Christ. The years have gone by, and history has written her verdict. Who was right, and who was wrong? Who honors Agrippa, the man living for himself, or remembers him now? Who does not honor Paul, the man living as "seeing Him who is invisible"? In that great assembly on that great day which was the bondsman and which the king?

My idea of success is personal freedom. Freedom from everything, from money, from poverty, from ease and anxiety, from all the material accidents. To keep a kind of republic of spirit, that's what I call success.—Edith Wharton.

BY HOSPITALITY

BY THE VERY REV. GEORGE HODGES, D.D.

"BY kindness," St. Paul said, making a list of the means and methods of an effective ministry.

When Samuel Barnett was asked how he gathered so many people at St. Jude's, Whitechapel, and kept them so industriously occupied in the furtherance of religion and civilization, he answered, "By hospitality," meaning the same thing. "St. Jude's and Toynbee Hall and the Exhibition are all built on my wife's tea-table."

The wife tells the story in Canon Barnett, His Life, Work and Friends (John Murray, London, 2 vols.) It is her story as well as his; her life, work and friends, as well as his. When they published a book on Practical Socialism the title-page said, "by Samuel and Henrietta Barnett." "Each essay," they noted in the introduction, "is signed by the writer, but in either case they represent our common thought, as all that has been done represents our common work." When the admirers of Toynbee Hall desired to give some sort of visible expression to their admiration they employed Sir Hubert von Herkomer to paint on the same canvas the portraits of Mrs. Barnett and her husband. There is a picture of the picture in the biography, with Mr. Asquith making the presentation speech. "The inclusion of Mrs. Barnett," it was said on that occasion, "has made the portrait a doubly interesting event, and, indeed, no presentation to Canon Barnett could have been complete unless it included his wife, for in all his work for the poor, and in the great enterprise known as Toynbee Hall, where the workingman rubs shoulders with the Oxford and Cambridge graduates at lectures, classes and social evenings, she has been his inspiration and his partner." Mrs. Barnett has wisely followed in this book the advice of those who counselled her to make it not only a biography but an autobiography. She has given an intimate account of their united life.

This is done with the frankness, the intimacy, and the understanding of the value of detail which is common in good novels, but lacking in many excellent biographies. Take for example the description of Mr. Barnett as Mrs. Barnett first saw him. He was a curate in a London parish, she was an enthusiastic young lady of wealth and privilege who was doing social work in the parish as a friend and disciple of Miss Octavia Hill. He was twenty-seven years of age, she was nineteen, and prejudiced against curates. "He dressed very badly, generally obtaining his clothes by employing out-of-work tailors in the district. He always wore a tall silk hat which, as he had purchased by post, never fitted, and so was usually tilted over his forehead or rammed on at the back of his head. His umbrella was a by-word, and he always bought his black cotton gloves two or three sizes too large. He approved of wearing a flannel shirt and united it to a white collar with a black silk ready-made tie."

Or take this passage from a letter written in vacation by Mr. Barnett to his mother. They are in Egypt, and he has been describing at some length and much seriousness the temple at Aboo Simbel. "I think," he adds, "I might have told you more about the temple, but just at that passage my wife, who is in splendid health, came in and has been with me ever since. She has opened and shut the windows, begun and ended three philosophical, two artistic, and four moral discussions. She has also ruffled my hair, dragged me back in my chair, and done something to my face which seemed to be like a concentration of flies' feet on one spot. My mind is somewhat distracted. Flies are the curse of Egypt. They swarm, and they have a loving, trustful way of settling on one." To this Mrs. Barnett adds: "Dear mother, I only kissed him, for he is such a dear!"

These two delightful persons undertook the charge of a forlorn parish in the worst part of London. The war has given a new interpretation to such adjectives, and we recognize them as descriptions of the first-line trenches, where every good soldier desires to be. Mr. and Mrs. Barnett understood this very well. They had no desire for ease and comfort and idle peace behind the front. They preferred difficulty and danger, being assured that militant opportunity would be found in the same neighborhood. Thus they settled in Whitechapel, in the Parish of St. Jude. The parish was "covered with a network of courts and alleys," and crowded with mean and dirty houses. Some of the parishioners were dock laborers, some were beggars, some were thieves. The church had long been empty and disused. On the first Sunday, "six or seven old women, all expecting doles for attending, made the congregation." For more than a year, the vicar preached to empty benches. It seemed impossible to make any impression upon the surrounding ignorance and sin and blank indifference.

This situation, Mr. and Mrs. Barnett met and slowly overcame by the help of reinforcements. This was their characteristic contribution to the problem of the East End of London; they brought people over from the West End. At first, musicians; the very best, artists of great fame, who for no reward except the joy of giving pleasure sang and played for the people of St. Jude's. Then lecturers, teachers, men of leadership in science, in literature, in politics, the most interesting and distinguished people in London. There they met the inhabitants of Whitechapel, saw how they lived, heard what they thought, and early learned that there are all sorts of people, even in the slums. East and West met in little, curiously assorted groups around Mrs. Barnett's tea-table. After a while, Mr. and Mrs. Barnett went up to Oxford and met a group of scholars, and made the proposal out of which came Toynbee Hall, and the great and increasing company of social settlements. "You can't understand the problems of poverty," they said, "by reading about it in books. You must come and live among the poor."

When these Oxford men came, and Cambridge men after them, they found themselves under the influence of four potent forces. One was Reform, which was the business in which Mr. and Mrs. Barnett were naturally engaged in a district which was in imperative and tragic need of reform; positive and constructive reform, never failing to suggest at least two good things to do in the place of one bad thing to be undone. Another was Organization; Mr. Barnett had an astonishing ability for it; his clubs and classes and devices for making the most of unpromising people, and methods for bringing every sort of promise into fulfillment, fill pages and pages, and make the book an encyclopaedia of social service. A third was Religion; symbolized by St. Jude's Church standing next to Toynbee Hall, with its sequence of new, unconventional, adventurous and reverent services and sermons. The fourth was Hospitality; a genius which the vicar and his wife had in common for getting people together, especially different people, such as conservatives and liberals, believers and disbelievers, rich and poor, saints and sinners, under the friendliest conditions, in a way to understand each other, around Mrs. Barnett's tea-table.

THE SHAPING OF SEMINARY EDUCATION

BY THE REV. DICKINSON S. MILLER

ANY large business has department-managers and a general manager. It is the duty of the general manager to co-ordinate the work of the departments and see that they contribute duly to the general result. In the case of manufacture it is his duty to see that the departments, each producing some part or some feature of the product, produces it duly. The educational process in the higher institution of learning—seminary or university—has department-managers but no general management; at least in the same sense and degree. The professor manages his own department, for the most part, except where, for example, in a required curriculum, the time allotted to his subject is fixed by the whole faculty, etc. In a large institution the professors of the department or the chief officer of the department may be considered the department-manager, though still the individual professor has largely the control of his work.

The dean or president in this system, though he does exercise a general management in his sphere, does not undertake to exercise a general management of the educational process in the sense above indicated. He neither controls nor knows just what goes on in the classroom. He knows the professor, and that tells him something. He may interrogate or draw out the student, and that tells him more. Still the student cannot make the report of a trained inspector; his reports are useful but fragmentary; the students are too many for all to report. Curiously enough, the only party who can have a complete survey of the educational process is the student himself. He does have such a survey under a required course, he sees the inside of every classroom, and has complete opportunity to observe the methods of every professor; while under an elective system he may see the inside of at least some of the chief staple courses of the institution. But he, the only party who has the opportunity for oversight, is the party least qualified to exercise it.

None the less the object of a theological college is to educate the students; to combine and to shape its agencies to that one aim. How can it know that it combines and shapes them to the very best effect, without waste and without shortage, if there is nowhere a responsible oversight of the whole process?

How shall this oversight be gained? Shall the president or dean begin to visit the classrooms as an inspector in the manner of visiting committees of alumni or trustees? But a cross-section of a course of instruction cannot tell what the course is. The inspector cannot come often enough to form a just idea. And there are other difficulties.

Shall the president or dean systematically interrogate the student? Very well; but, clearly, he is going to a source of information not wholly adequate.

The autonomy of departments, the elbow-room of the professor, is a vital and invaluable fact in our seminary or college economy. To interpose and curtail this liberty would strike at the responsibility of the professor for the instruction he gives. The sense of this responsibility we need to heighten, not diminish.

How then shall oversight be secured? If we look closely at large business establishments, we find that no such interference is essential to oversight. The general manager does not come into the office of the department-manager and watch him at work, any more than he or the department-manager finds it the best method to stand over the individual workman and watch his motions, at least in a developed business. It would tend to disconcert or irritate. How then essentially does the large business co-ordinate and control? How does it exercise oversight? By watching the product. Thus, in one manufactory, representatives of all departments will meet on Monday morning and go searchingly over the recent output (not always finished output, but sometimes unfinished) and trace defects or inferiorities to the department to which they were due. Thus again, to take an example as remote as possible from the other, in a New York newspaper there will be on Monday afternoon, in some cases every day, a conference of all the editors for a similar purpose. And so on indefinitely, in different types of well-conducted business.

Circumstances have placed the seminary and the college at a great remove from this system. Their process of manufacture, that is, of education, consists merely of a sum of courses, credited to a student when he has passed the respective examinations. But their goal is none the less the production of a duly educated man.

Is there not here an opportunity that the seminary may seize, and in seizing take a great step forward toward its goal? May it not fix attention on the product; on the student himself and the question whether he has received or is receiving what the institution can give him, measured by the standard of a prepared priest and minister? A scrutiny of the product does give an oversight of the whole process. The different courses, shut off, as far as the professor is concerned, from the knowledge of each other, are united in the product, upon which each has, or should have, bestowed its contribution and left its mark.

The broadest way of determining what education is given is by examination. But such examinations will not be in the unit of instruction called a course; they will examine a man's qualifications to take the diploma, to be deemed educated for the priesthood; and earlier, if you will, and if feasible, to pass into a higher class, or to take a further standing. They will test the finished or the partly finished product. That is, the examinations, which could be superadded to the course-system, would be in type like the university examinations at Oxford and Cambridge. The gain in such a method is that it enables us to ask, and fix our attention on the question, what a man should become before he takes our diploma. The honors-tests at Columbia and elsewhere show us again in a more departmental form a type of the thing intended. The Harvard Medical and Divinity Schools, in addition to the course-system, have now general examinations for their degrees, and one of their professors has declared it now generally admitted that the course-system has broken down; broken down, that is, as an adequate means of education. Is not a department-meeting in a university more apt to ask itself, "Should we not offer a course on so-and-so?" because it lies within the area of its subject and has not been given, than to ask, "Are we doing what our subject can do toward the equipment of an educated man?" The elective system, as embodied in the course-system, in spite of the merits of both, has at least tended to departmentalism and to an irresponsibility for the resulting education. This has been its deepest defect.

In other words, do we not need an examination of the education of the student to ascertain how far and how thoroughly it has proceeded? This examination may cover whatever topics are deemed most suitable and essential for it and need not be limited to the subjects of the formal courses already taken. Besides formal examination, never a wholly satisfying method, but always indispensable, there are other means. At certain high schools, perhaps in many, the students are considered individually in faculty-meeting and on their qualities, aptitudes, progress, the teachers exchange impressions. This is done in at least one seminary and is practicable in any institution of limited size. In a large business the department-manager makes reports. Professors make reports by numerals or letters, but could they not make them also in a large institution by brief characterization and would not that suggest and kindle in the professor a greater analytic interest in the individual? Such practices again direct attention to what the education is giving him and consequently (this is my chief point) to what the education should give him. All this is little or nothing till we settle that. It becomes something when we have settled that.

The proposal, then, is that by examination for the degree, and also by observation and discussion (or report), we shall fix attention on the total education the students are getting.

Since the above was written and presented before an educational group I find that the main feature of the plan here outlined has just been instituted by Union Theological Seminary, recommended for Amherst College by its president in his annual report just issued, and adopted (incompletely) by the Harvard Faculty of Arts and Sciences. A comforting token that the need is real and the remedy not altogether visionary.

BISHOP LAWRENCE ON THE PENSION FUND

I AM extremely sorry that a slight and persistent temperature in conspiracy with a doctor keeps me from the meeting, for I count a meeting of the trustees my first duty. However, you have my report; and my absence gives me an opportunity to write certain things in an informal way which I probably should not have said were I with you.

Two or three facts stand out clear and gratifying, assuring us that the body of the Church is solidly behind the Church Pension Fund.

There will, as I say in my report, flow into our treasury this year from the parishes throughout the Church over $600,000 in assessments: over 95 per cent of a possible 100 per cent. That these thousands of streams should sweep in without appeal to the emotions, even before the Church has begun to realize the beneficent results of the system, is evidence that the same motive which led the Church to give so generously to the Accrued Liability Fund obtains today, that is, a determination to lift the clergy out of the class aided by charity, and to make impossible the dependence of our aged clergy and their widows upon the unconditioned judgment or prejudice of any board of trustees. The system is a system; it has its disadvantages, but being based on exact actuarial work, upon certain recognized principles which the trustees have no power to override, it gives confidence that those who pay into the system will receive what the system promises them.

When we consider the situation of the Church only five years ago, when the trustees of the General Clergy Relief Fund, with a practically empty treasury, were appealing pathetically to the Church in behalf of the aged clergy and their widows, and contrast it with the quiet and systematic way in which the assessments have poured in, we are amazed. Even in this, the first full year of the Church Pension Fund, the amount distributed by us exceeds that formerly distributed by the General Clergy Relief Fund; and our outgo will steadily increase.

I mention this vigorous support of the system by the Church in order that you as trustees may appreciate it; for there have been from time to time statements in letters and the press which might lead us to think otherwise.

The sudden change from the charity to the exact contributory pension system naturally creates a great wrench.

We are publishing this week the report of the president of the Church Pension Fund, which appears in the form of a letter to the trustees in the first annual report of that fund, just issued, because it not only gives an impressive account of the success of the great fund, but answers certain criticisms which have appeared upon the administration of the Church's pension system.—Editor.

The universities and colleges of this country are beginning to feel it through the change of method of the Carnegie Foundation from the free pension to the contributory pension system, as seen by Dr. Pritchett's interesting article in this month's Atlantic (December). It is very difficult for those accustomed to the one to adjust themselves to the other. The system seems hard, commercial and lacking in charity, just as education in self-help comes hard to the child who has always received freely. To me it is very remarkable that there has not been more misunderstanding and opposition. This I think is due to the thorough education that the Church received during the seven years before the system went into effect.

Again, it is natural that in a system which is technical at some points and in a campaign for a great fund with its publicity literature distributed to hundreds of thousands, a number of people should have misunderstood certain features, and some of the clergy should have been disappointed in not receiving what they expected. We have full sympathy with them; most of those to whom we explain the situation (and we gladly explain it and talk over personal instances with anybody who will turn to us), are satisfied that the misunderstanding was theirs. Some are not. It is probably impossible to convince everybody.

We have got to assume also that there will be cases of extreme hardship and what seems to those who have not all the facts in hand some cases of apparent-injustice. These occur under the most generous pension system. Retired officers of the United States army and navy or their widows are occasionally found in most pathetic conditions. The opportunity for personal helpfulness and generous kindness is not obliterated by pension systems.

What hurts me, however, is that now and again the statement is made by my brethren of the clergy—only very occasionally by a layman—that the administrators of the Church Pension Fund have deceived the Church, that they have refused to appropriate annuities to legitimate beneficiaries, that they have gotten the funds by deliberate misstatements, that they ought to return the money to the givers. Were such statements made by irresponsible persons I should not mention them. They are very serious statements to be made by men in position about us and our administration of a great fund.

From its inception eight years ago I have been familiar with every step in the creation and administration of the Church Pension Fund. I talked personally and explained the system to those who gave probably three-quarters and more of the $8,700,000. I know what I said and why they gave. I either wrote or personally inspected and approved every word of the literature of our educational and campaign periods. I have advised or decided every question of any possible moment that has passed through this office. I have signed every check, thousands of them, that has ever left this office, whether for the payment of bills or of the monthly or quarterly grants to the beneficiaries. This I have done in order that the beneficiaries may be assured that I am personally interested in the details of the office and in their welfare. It has been a real pleasure to me.

In assuming responsibility for these things, I want to add what it is unnecessary to add, that the secretary and every member of the executive committee have approached every subject and claim, every personal question, with a desire and determination to do that which was right; and their decisions have often been against their own personal wishes and sympathies.

There are difficult questions, such for instance as definitions of permanent disability, of active ministry, etc., and there always will be in a system where the personal equation enters. In the work of the best actuaries, in the principles and rules of the system, in the report to the Insurance Department of the State of New York, and in the character of the trustees, the Church has the assurance that while there may be differences in judgment and occasionally misunderstandings, the trust is being administered honestly, wisely and for the benefit only of the aged or disabled clergy, and the widows and orphans of clergy.

DR. PETERS AND ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH

THE resignation of Dr. Peters from the rectorship of St. Michael's Church, marks an epoch in the history of that venerable parish and of the Church on the West Side of New York City in whose social and political, as well as moral and religious upbuilding, St. Michael's during the twenty-six years of his rectorship, no less than in the thirty-five in which the parish was infused with the great spirit of his father, has borne so great a part.

St. Michael's has a story of fascinating interest. No living man knows this story better than he who is now leaving work in that parish for other tasks in which his versatile genius may be of yet greater service. When the first St. Michael's was consecrated in 1807, the West Side was well described by the name it then bore, Blooming Dale, and that church stood between St. Mark's in the Bowery and St. John's, Yonkers. It grew with the city, changing its mode of parish life with its changing surroundings but always with a spirit of singularly unselffish service, of which for the last ninety-eight years Dr. Peters, his father and his grandfather before him, have been the embodiment and the inspiration. To their initiative and to the church's fostering many missions, since become parishes and charitable undertakings, owe their planting and early growth. Among these are St. Mary's, Manhattanville; St. Andrew's, Harlem; All Angel's, St. Timothy's, the Church of the Archangel, and, far afield, Trinity Church in Portland, Oregon. Institutions through which the diocese now does much of its work had their origin here, the Protestant City Mission Society, the House of Mercy, St. Barnabas House, the Sheltering Arms, the Infant Asylum, among them; while for its own neighborhood St. Michael's has been largely instrumental in organizing the Bloomingdale Clinic and Bloomingdale Free Library, the District Nurse Association and the Neighborhood Social and Industrial Club. It had also no small part in fostering the perplexed first years of St. Mary's Sisterhood—but that is another story. The greater part of this sowing of Christian seed belongs to the long rectorship of the father, but the son and his congregation have been true to the tradition in which both were bred and it is hard to think of one without the other.

Yet the encouragement of this more than parochial outlook and the fostering of the spiritual life of parishioners in confirmation classes that always left rich memories, in sermons that shrank from no boldness of utterance and in sympathetically wise personal counsels, are far from comprising all that St. Michael's owes to the rector to whom it is bidding reluctant farewell. He has made his parishioners, men and women, realize in more than usual measure the responsibilities of moral leadership in social and political affairs. An election sermon each year, reviving a good old New England tradition, has helped to high ideals of citizenship; the parish house was made the centre for Good Government Club B from which and its fellows grew the Citizens' Union for effective protest against boss-rule and ring-rule in New York. The epic "Amsterdam Track Fight," waged by this club and St. Michael's from 1897 to 1899 and carried to final victory in 1907, will not soon pass from honored memory. More immediately personal to Dr. Peters were the formation and successful conduct of the Committee of One Hundred to enforce the transfer rights of the people on the street cars, of the Independent Club in the interest of watchful citizenship, and above all, of the Committee of Fourteen, which assailed and at last overcame the awful abuse of the excise laws for the profit of commercialized vice.

Such a multitude of good works might well have engrossed and even exhausted the powers of any one man, though he had, or knew how to find ready helpers at need. Dr. Peters never seemed to neglect any of them. Yet they were but a part, and for many they may not have seemed even the most significant part of his work, as they have regarded what he has done in these years for biblical interpretation and archeological research. When Dr. Peters, then in his thirty-ninth year, came to aid his father at St. Michael's in 1891, he had already won high distinction as the discoverer of records of unanticipated antiquity in Babylonia, the cradle of eastern civilization. Already when a student at Yale he had felt the urgent need for intelligent Bible study, of a more scientific knowledge of Hebrew and kindred languages than was then usual. To this, after his ordination in 1876, he first devoted himself, here and in Germany, ministering the while, and in large measure founding the American Church in Dresden and tirelessly promoting Semitic studies in American universities. His zeal and abilities so impressed churchmen as temperamentally dissociated as Bishop Seymour and the future Bishop Brooks that in 1884 a chair of Old Testament Language was created for him at the Philadelphia Divinity School, supplemented in 1885 by a like chair in the University of Pennsylvania. Already his contagious enthusiasm had secured funds for Babylonian research and in 1888 under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania he had undertaken those genially guided excavations at Nippur, memorable for the unearthing of inscriptions which carried history at a leap back for 2000 years. This work Dr. Peters continued to direct till 1895 and published a

JOHN P.
PETERS,
PH.D., D.D.

lively and learned account of it in 1897. Meantime he had published his first book on the Bible, Scriptures, Hebrew and Christian.

Throughout his whole rectorship, biblical and archeological studies continued an ever treasured avocation. In this he sought the change of occupation which seemed the only rest accorded his ever active mind. In conversation it has needed only the suggestion of an inquiring interest to open the overflowing treasury of his learning. Correspondents have found him always ready with fruitful suggestion and have often regretted that his whole mind might not be given to problems which few seemed so likely to solve, or help solve, as he. But, though such studies could be but an avocation for the rector of a large city parish, yet The Old Testament and the New Scholarship, Early Hebrew Story and The Religion of the Hebrews attest alike learning and originality in its use. Nor should Modern Christianity and Jesus Christ and the Old Commandments be forgotten, while for old New Yorkers, the Annals of St. Michael's gave most genial expression to a store of precious memories, an admirable parish history, but, as was in this case inevitable, a great deal more besides.

To what work Dr. Peters will now turn is not yet told. He has resigned, he says, not because of ill health or of old age, but that St. Michael's may have a new and more vigorous leadership. He feels this is "in the interest of the church." He means St. Michael's. But many who have seen his tireless energy at work will feel that his words bear a larger significance, that it is, indeed, "in the interest of the Church," the whole Church, that Dr. Peters, now in his sixty-seventh year, should have no hindrance of parochial care, but, as truly a rector emeritus, should have full scope to make his learning in the largest possible measure an honor to the Church and a heritage for scholars to come.

GEO. GORDON KING RESIGNS AS MISSIONARY TREASURER

Board of Missions at May Meeting Endorses Campaign Plans

The first matter of importance to come before the Board of Missions at its May meeting held in New York last week, was the resignation of Mr. George Gordon King as treasurer of the board. Mr. King's reason for retirement from this office which he has held with conspicuous success for ten years, is that although "still strong" he is "tired" and does not "look to the continuation of such vast responsibility with contentment or with the hope of keeping up with the work." He believes that "the work needs another mind." Mr. King's resignation was considered in conference with him by a committee of three, and upon their recommendation was accepted, to take effect next October. Mr. King succeeded Mr. George C. Thomas as treasurer ten years ago.

GEORGE GORDON
KING

Who resigns after ten years as treasurer of the Board of Missions

Before presenting his resignation Mr. King made his report. $494,205.65 has been received since January. It is difficult to make comparison with last year; but it is to be noted that while one-third of the year has gone, only one-fourth of the apportionment has been paid.

The second important matter was the adoption of a recommendation of the executive committee, authorizing the creation of a bureau for work among immigrants, and provision for the salary of a secretary and the expenses of his office.

Another big subject before the board was the report of the committee, of which the Bishop of Bethlehem is chairman, to consider the questions presented to the board at its February meeting by the executive committee of the continental domestic missionary bishops. The Bishop of South Dakota, secretary of the bishops' committee, was present to present a budget.

Bishop Talbot's report was heartily adopted. It approved the principle of a common budget for continental domestic missionary work, pointed out the fact that the Nation-Wide Campaign commits the board to this policy, and recommended that the bishops continue their annual meetings and that the board work in close harmony with the council of domestic missionary bishops.

Another very important question for the consideration of the board was the report of the joint committee of the Board of Missions, the General Board of Religious Education, and the Joint Commission on Social Service on the proposed canon to provide for an executive board of the General Convention. After most thorough consideration, the board adopted a resolution expressing its approval of the principle of an executive board of the General Convention and requested that a canon embodying such principle be presented to the General Convention. It further asked that the joint committee be continued and instructed to give wide publicity to the proposed canon and cause it to be presented to the General Convention.

The question which seemed of paramount importance to all the members of the board at this time was the progress of the Nation-Wide Campaign. The Rev. Robert W. Patton, D.D., who had been appointed by the board as director of the campaign, made a report, which was adopted in full.

In this report Dr. Patton emphasized the fact that the Nation-Wide Campaign was the logical application of the "mission for missions" and every member convass plans and that education and prayer went hand in hand with the raising of money. He also announced the training school for the campaign to be held from June 4 to 6 in Chicago. Following Dr. Patton's report, Bishop Rhinelander's recommendation that the budget and plans of the Nation-Wide Campaign be laid before General Convention, was adopted. Dr. Patton said: "Never, at least since my official connection with the Board of Missions, has anything of an unusual sort proposed by the board received such enthusiastic support. Seventy-seven bishops in the United States have already formally promised their cooperation. Besides the letters from the bishops, many letters have been received from the clergy and laymen, and from devoted women of the Church, expressing in many cases great enthusiasm."

The board sent an expression of greeting and sympathy to Bishop Greer in his illness.

At the last General Convention a helpful conference was held between the board and the foreign bishops. It was considered of such importance that it was decided to make it a triennial affair. The board will, therefore, meet in Detroit on October 2, when, if possible, a conference between the board and the continental domestic missionary bishops will be held, followed by a similar conference with the foreign bishops on October 3, the regular meeting of the executive committee to be held on October 4, and the board meeting on October 6 and 7.

THE BISHOP OF NEW YORK DIES AFTER OPERATION

Funeral to Be Held Friday at the Cathedral

The Rt. Rev. David Hummell Greer, D.D., LL.D., S.T.D., died at 6.16 p. m. at St. Luke's Hospital, in the City of New York, on Monday, May 19, in his seventy-sixth year. A week ago the bishop was operated upon for some intestinal trouble, but until yesterday no grave anxiety was felt over his condition. He apparently was making a good recovery. During the meeting of the convention in Synod House last week, messages came from time to time to the convention from the bishop's bedside. It was not until Monday afternoon that the news spread through the city that the universally beloved Bishop of New York was dying. As he lapsed into a coma late in the afternoon, prayers for him were being said in the chapel of St. Luke's Hospital and in St. Columba's Chapel in the cathedral.

Bishop Greer's funeral will be held on Friday of this week in the cathedral at eleven o'clock. The service will be conducted by Bishop Lines, Bishop Burch, Bishop Lloyd, Bishop Francis, and Dean Robbins. It is not known whether the presiding bishop can attend. The Standing Committee of the Diocese of New York, the trustees of the cathedral, representatives from various city organizations of which the late bishop was a member, the clergy of the diocese and visiting bishops from neighboring dioceses will be in the procession. The various Protestant Churches in the city and the Roman Catholic Church have been invited to be represented in the cortege of honor.

The interment will be in the cathedral crypt.

Mrs. Greer, who has been dangerously ill for many weeks, was in too weak a condition on Tuesday to be told of the bishop's death. Four children survive the bishop, William A. Greer, a member of the governing committee of the New York Stock Exchange; Lawrence Greer, who practices law in the City of New York; Mrs. Thomas S. McLane and Miss Jean Greer.

Bishop Lawrence Recovering

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, May 20.—Bishop Lawrence's physicians report that the bishop is making a satisfactory recovery from the major operation to which he submitted on May 13. The operation was performed by Dr. Franklin G. Balch of Clarendon Street at the Massachusetts General Hospital.

Dean Hodges Growing Weaker

HOLDERNESSE, NEW HAMPSHIRE, May 20.—Dean Hodges, who is desperately ill at his summer home here, is reported to be steadily growing weaker. The dean is in great pain, but is conscious. There seems but small hope of his recovery.

POPE REFUSES, GREEKS ACCEPT INVITATION TO WORLD CONFERENCE

Members of Faith and Order Commission Find Bishops of Orthodox Church Ready to Accept Invitation to World Conference

A dispatch from Rome to the daily press published last Sunday states that the Pope has received the envoys of the Commission on World Conference, Bishops Anderson, Vincent and Weller, Dr. Parsons and Dr. Rogers; and that he announced to them that it was not possible for the Roman Catholic Church to take part in the World Conference, for the reason, as stated by Cardinal Gasparri, that the unity of the Church, in the opinion of Rome, can only occur by all returning to the Roman Catholic Church. The Pope is said to have added that he by no means disapproved of the participation in the conference of those not united to the chair of St. Peter, but on the contrary he earnestly desires and prays that those who take part in it may, by the grace of God, see the light and reunite with the visible head of the Church, by whom they will be received with open arms.

The following dispatches to the National Herald, the New York Greek daily, describe the visit of the members of the commission which is visiting the prelates of the European Churches. Except for Bishop Vincent's letter to THE CHURCHMAN, published on April 19, these are the only direct accounts of the experiences of the members of the commission.

ATHENS, April 9.—On Sunday there was an official reception of the members of the American ecclesiastical deputation at the metropolitan palace. The Archbishop of Chicago expressed to the metropolitan the very deep joy with which he set foot on the soil of the holy East, where was born the Saviour of the world. Then he announced that the Episcopal Church was endeavoring to hasten the coming of the day for calling together the World Conference of the Churches to discuss matters relating to the future cooperation and union of the Churches on the basis of the word of the Gospel of the one flock and one shepherd. The Episcopal Church, he concluded, considers it the greatest honor that the lot has fallen to it to invite the Orthodox Church to the World Conference of the Churches.

The Metropolitan Meletios, replying to this official invitation, declared that the Greek Orthodox Church had no objection to receiving the proposal of the friendly Church of the Episcopalians. If, he said, this proposal had been submitted to us four years ago, we would have replied that we were occupied in the accomplishment of another national duty, namely, that of the sacrifice of the shepherds for their flocks. But after the emancipation of its unredeemed children, the Orthodox Church will continue its ancient task, following the lines drawn by the seven Ecumenical Councils and without departing from the least of them. On this basis we accept the invitation to participate in the conference.

ATHENS, April 10.—An official dinner was tendered at the metropolitan palace in honor of the American Church deputation. At the dinner were seated the bishops of the synod, the Hon. Diomedes, Mayor of Athens, and other officials. The Metropolitan Meletios proposed a toast in honor of the Reverend Anderson, Bishop of Chicago, and of the other bishops. The metropolitan extolled the lofty ideals which had induced the distinguished American clergy to undertake the journey to Athens.

The Reverend Anderson, in replying, thanked the metropolitan. "We are happy," he said, "to celebrate your emancipation. Believe me that, finding ourselves in Athens, we consider that we find ourselves in our own country. Your ideals are identical with ours, we admire the staunch belief in freedom which you have preserved and we pray earnestly for the union of all the Greek countries with Greece."

ATHENS, April 11.—The members of the American Church deputation conferred a long time with the Metropolitan of Athens and the other bishops of the synod. The distinguished American clergy will depart from Athens for Alexandria and thence will visit Damascus, Jerusalem, Constantinople, Sophia and Belgrade.

At the invitation of the metropolitan, the American clergy attended the service of the hymn to the Virgin in the metropolitan cathedral.

PARIS, April 15.—Yesterday the locum tenens of the patriarchate, Metropolitan Dorotheos, granted to a distinguished American correspondent and to me an exclusive interview. The American correspondent asked His Holiness how far the undisguisedly more imperialistic and anti-Hellenic government which uses every means to frustrate the desires of unredeemed Hellenism, is dangerous to the entire Hellenic question. To this question, the acting patriarch replied, "We have absolute confidence in the representatives of America, France and England, who will recognize to the utmost our rights. The Italian Government," he continued, "is really very censurable, having reached the point of using Catholicism to arouse demands for St. Sophia."

"Do you think that the union of all the Churches is possible?" asked the American correspondent.

"Not only do I consider such a union possible," replied the Metropolitan of Broussa, "but I also think that it is befitting for the Orthodox Church to labor in behalf of this union, by calling a pan-ecumenical synod which by mutual understanding, will accomplish the word of the Gospel, 'one flock under one shepherd.' After the League of Nations," he continued, "is established, we must labor for the accomplishment of the League of the Church which will be an indispensable supplement of the former. I am especially grateful," he added, "for the attitude of the Anglican Episcopal Church, as well as of the American Churches, of whose sympathy we have so many palpable proofs."

ATHENS, May 1.—The Archbishop of Chicago, being received at a special session of the patriarchal synod, invited officially the patriarchate to participate in the Church World Conference. The American archbishop had sent beforehand a written invitation to the patriarchate, containing the statement that the decisions of the conference will not be binding and explaining that the conference will be occupied only with the examination of different questions contributing to the achievement of the union of the different Churches. The letter urged strongly that the separated Churches will not be able to encounter efficiently the organized forces of anti-Christianity. In order that the desired result may be accomplished, says the American invitation, the cooperation of the Orthodox Mother Church is essential, which gave for Christianity thousands of martyrs for so many ages. We come, the letter adds, from a country where the Churches flourish, but where nevertheless these is a chaotic religious condition. We invite therefore the Orthodox Church to take part in the conference and to shed forth its light to the whole of Christendom.

WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE LEAGUE REORGANIZED

Maintains Coffee Vans, Ice Water Fountains and Lunch Wagons

The organization formerly known as the Woman's Auxiliary to the Church Temperance Society, was recently incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, as the Churchwomen's Temperance League. Under its former title it was organized in 1891 at the suggestion of the late Dr. Huntington, who felt the need of enlisting the aid of churchwomen in the promotion of temperance, and suggested the establishment of counter-attractions to the saloons. The work of providing wholesome meals for working men through its lunch wagon service was accordingly initiated. The lunch wagon speedily became popular. During the first year 356,618 ten cent meals were served in the wagons. Later a number of iced water fountains in various sections of the city were established. The auxiliary next initiated the coachmen's coffee van service for coachmen in attendance at private entertainments; to this was added a special emergency coffee van service for firemen on duty at protracted fires. On many occasions during the winter months, the coffee van has rendered a like service to car conductors and motormen in the neighborhood of Brooklyn Bridge. The street cleaning commissioner called upon the auxiliary for the use of the coffee van for the snow shovellers, and "thanked the society for its unique charity." Its coffee van has been placed at the service of the police when strikes have kept them on duty for many extra hours.

In 1911 the opportunity came to do a real service for the men employed on the steamship piers in the Chelsea District. These men, because of the conditions and irregularity of their hours of employment were practically driven into saloons for shelter. The outcome of this was the leasing of premises opposite the American Line Pier as the "Longshoremen's Rest." A notice was posted along the docks bearing the invitation:—"All 'longshoremen will be welcome. Make yourselves at home, and bring your pipes with you." They came with alacrity. Moreover, they put up a neat bronze tablet to the memory of Matthew Maher, the 'longshoreman who had spoken up for his fellow workers, and whose letter, written with much difficulty, had resulted in the opening of the rest.

The work which the Woman's Auxiliary initiated will be carried forward and extended under its new name of the Churchwomen's Temperance League.

DEAN CARRINGTON ACCEPTS ST. MARY'S, KNOXVILLE

KNOXVILLE, ILLINOIS.—The Rev. Francis L. Carrington, LL.D., dean of St. Mary's College, Dallas, Texas, has been elected rector of St. Mary's School, at Knoxville, Illinois, and will be installed at the commencement this spring. At this time the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the school will be celebrated. This news will be welcomed by a large body of churchwomen in the Middle West who are graduates of St. Mary's. Dean Carrington is admirably fitted for his new work. He received his education at Clifton College, and Queen's College, Oxford. For five years he has been in charge of St. Mary's College in Texas, which under his leadership has won a unique place among the educational institutions of the Southwest. He was president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Dallas, chairman of the Diocesan Board of Missions, and senior examining chaplain. Mrs. Carrington is the daughter of the late Hon. A. R. Diekey, sometime minister of Justice in the Canadian Government of Ottawa, and a member of the Victorian Order of Nurses.

Dr. Leffingwell, founder of the school, and its rector during its long history, writes as follows to the alumnae, and the friends of the school:

"In the good providence of God all the elements for securing the prosperity and permanence of the school seem to be provided. The splendid school property stands unincumbered; the crisis brought about by the world war and the world-wide epidemic is past; an approved and successful school manager has been secured, and an emergency fund is on hand to meet a possible deficit. I know that you will rejoice with me that conditions are so encouraging at the opening of this new era for our school."

Lawrence Infant Mortality Misrepresented TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

As you have published in your paper statements that are untrue, I am sure you will allow me to correct them. The death rate of children in Lawrence, Massachusetts, was given at 173 per thousand. There is no record given at the Board of Health of so high a death rate. The record of the last ten years have been 111 and 119 per thousand. I will not trouble you to correct other statements in the same article but will allow the readers to judge for themselves, knowing that the truth of actual figures has been disregarded.

Death of Overbrook Rector

The Rev. William R. Turner, rector for ten years of St. Paul's Church, Overbrook, died after a severe operation for throat trouble on May 2 at the Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Mr. Turner was born in Rochester, England, in 1880. He was a graduate of an English college. Bishop Howe, of Central Pennsylvania, ordained him to the priesthood in 1887. From 1888 to 1895 he was assistant at Grace Church, Baltimore. From 1897 to 1905 he was rector of St. Michael's and All Angels' in Washington. In 1897 Mr. Turner was called to St. Paul's Church, Overbrook, and was rector there for ten years. The burial service was held at Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, on May 5.

Asked to Use Individual Cup

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—A letter has been sent to the clergy of Minnesota by the State Department of Health, asking that all the churches adopt the individual communion cup. The churches that will have to consider the request most carefully are the Lutheran and the Episcopal.

DEAN AND MRS. LADD HOLD JOINT PREACHING MISSION

Conferences in St. Louis in Holy Week Attract Attention

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—A "preaching mission" of a unique character was carried on during Holy Week here by Dean Ladd of the Berkeley Divinity School, jointly with Mrs. Ladd. Dean Ladd, on the invitation of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, gave the noonday addresses at the cathedral, and also held mission services each evening, beginning with Palm Sunday and ending with Good Friday. On Good Friday he also preached at the Three Hour Service. The evening addresses, which were all based upon incidents in the events of Holy Week, dealt with the social implications of the Gospel; the first, on the evening of Palm Sunday, being taken from the text "Who is this?" from the Palm Sunday narrative, was entitled "The Enquiring Spirit." The others attempted to give a constructive answer to such questions as "Is Modern Business consistent with Christianity?", "Are we a Christian Nation?", "Can Christianity dispense with the Church?", "Shall the Churches remain divided?". In each case these questions were related with some saying or event of the gospel narrative for Holy Week.

During the week Mrs. Ladd also spoke along the same lines. One afternoon she spoke in the cathedral to a congregation of social workers, many of them not regular churchgoers, urging them to come inside and help the Church to fulfill its task rather than to remain outside and merely criticize. Another afternoon she spoke to the women of St. Peter's Church, of which Dr. Phillips is rector. She also addressed about 600 ladies at the monthly meeting of the St. Louis Wednesday Club on the subject of the British Labor Party, quoting to them Bishop Brent's description of its program as "the greatest religious utterance of the war." But perhaps the most interesting, as it was the most unusual part of her work, was a series of three conferences on "Christian Ideals of Womanhood," delivered at a private house to about forty women of what might be described as the typical society type. The three headings of the conferences were "Woman in the Modern World," in which various aspects of the life of society, the home, sex education and so on, were touched upon; "Woman in Industry"; and "Woman in the Church," in which Mrs. Ladd sketched out some schemes for making a more effective use of the "woman power" of the Church. These conferences caused a good deal of talk and attracted very considerable comment from the press, as having been held in what the Post-Dispatch called the "strongholds of conservatism" and as having made an impression on people not usually greatly stirred by the Church.

Indeed, the widespread interest evoked by these talks of both Dean and Mrs. Ladd, delivered as they were entirely in the spirit of Holy Week and yet with a close practical application to the problems of the modern world, is an encouraging sign of the eagerness with which the people are waiting for inspiration and guidance from the Church as to their social duty.

FEDERAL COUNCIL URGES RADICAL SOCIAL REFORM

Cleveland Session Passes Resolutions Interpreting Christian Democracy

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The following important resolutions were adopted by the Federal Council of Churches in special session here on May 6-8:

I. SOCIAL SERVICE

Facing the social issues involved in reconstruction, we affirm, as Christian Churches, our belief:

1. That the teachings of Jesus are those of essential democracy and express themselves through brotherhood and the co-operation of all groups. We deplore class struggle and declare against all class domination, whether of capital or labor. Sympathizing with labor's desire for a better day and an equitable share in the profits and management of industry, we stand for orderly and progressive social reconstruction instead of revolution by violence.

2. That an ordered and constructive democracy in industry is as necessary as political democracy and that collective bargaining and the sharing of shop control and management are inevitable steps in its attainment.

3. That the first charge upon industry should be that of a wage sufficient to support an American standard of living. To that end we advocate the guarantee of a minimum wage, the control of unemployment through government labor exchanges, public works, land settlement, social insurance, and experimentation in profit sharing and cooperative ownership.

4. We recognize that women played no small part in the winning of the war. We believe that they should have full political and economic equality with equal pay for equal work, and a maximum eight hour day. We declare for the abolition of night work, by women, and the abolition of child labor; and for the provision of adequate safe-guards to insure the moral as well as the physical health of the mothers and children of the race.

II. NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL

Resolved, That we urge the incorporation at an early date into the covenant of the League of Nations of a clause guaranteeing freedom of religious belief.

Resolved, That we urge the incorporation at an early date into the covenant of the League of Nations a clause guaranteeing equality of race treatment, understanding by this equal treatment in respect of the law and its administration in the case of aliens lawfully within the territory of the government concerned.

Resolved, That the Federal Council memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact a federal law for the suppression of lynching and in every way to use its authority to remove from American society this disgraceful evil.

WHEREAS, Ample testimony has reached America in regard to a state of famine over wide areas in India, affecting vitally the welfare and shortening the lives of multitudes of Indian people, including large numbers of Christians, which the resources of missions in India and of the home boards are entirely inadequate to meet, and WHEREAS, The Churches of America have taken a large part in securing funds for the American Red Cross, and these funds have been used in the past in relief of distress from famine as well as for war relief, be it

Resolved, That the Federal Council appeal in behalf of the Christian churches of America to the American Red Cross to make a generous appropriation in relief of the great distress and in support of life so seriously threatened by the famine now prevailing in large parts of India, and be it further

Resolved, That the committee of reference and counsel be urged in conjunction with the Federal Council to proceed to make a public appeal to the Christian people of America in behalf of this cause.

Resolved, That the Federal Council express its hearty approval of the action of the general committee on army and navy chaplains, as endorsed by the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, in urging upon the War Department by a letter addressed to the Secretary of War under date of March 3, 1919, that in plans for the reorganization of the army adequate provision be made for a chaplain corps in harmony with the general practice of the army, and for promotion of chaplains on more just terms than at present.

WHEREAS, War-time and constitutional prohibition having been adopted, we appeal to the Congress of the United States to enact proper laws for their effective enforcement. We appeal to all public officials to fearlessly enforce the laws that have been or may be enacted and pledge them our hearty support in the enforcement of their duties.

Resolved, That the Churches be urged to take vigorous measures to resist the attempt which is being made in many states for legalizing admission fees to motion pictures and to baseball games on Sunday.

The Rev. G. E. Shipler in California

THE REV. GUY EMERY SHIPLER, the managing and news editor of THE CHURCHMAN, is now in Los Angeles, California, where he is recovering from the nervous exhaustion brought on by a severe attack of influenza contracted in London last winter. Mr. Shipler hopes to return to New York early in the summer.

Two Clergymen Die

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS. — The Rev. Reuben Kidner, assistant minister of Trinity Church, died on Friday morning at the Massachusetts General Hospital. He was stricken about two weeks ago and his right side paralyzed. Mr. Kidner was born in Bristol, England, in 1848. He graduated from Harvard in 1875 and the Cambridge Theological School in 1878. Mr. Kidner was vicar of the Church of the Ascension for four years and since 1882 has been connected with Trinity Church.

PORTLAND, CONNECTICUT.—The Rev. Dr. Oliver H. Raftery, for thirty-three years rector of Trinity Church, died here on May 17 at the age of sixty-five. He was an alumnus of Trinity College and Berkeley Divinity School. He was archdeacon of Middlesex.

NOTABLE INTERCHURCH MEETINGS IN CLEVELAND

Editorial Council of Religious Press Formed by Federal Council

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Two meetings of national importance have taken place here within the last fortnight, the Interchurch World Movement of North America, and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Both meetings brought together the ablest members of many religious bodies of Protestantism; both made notable contributions to the plan of solution of many problems that we are face to face with, in these days of reconstruction.

The first meeting was attended by more than five hundred delegates, and the latter by more than three hundred. The sessions of each lasted through three days.

The Interchurch Committee on Findings reported among other things: "We are convinced that the spirit of life, and of common service, which is now abroad among the Churches needs for its expression, and for its use, such an instrumentality as the Interchurch World Movement provides. The movement is a cooperative effort of the missionary, educational, and other benevolent agencies of the evangelical Churches of the United States and Canada, to serve unitedly, their common present tasks, and to secure the necessary resources of men and money and power, required for these tasks. It is a spiritual undertaking of survey, education, and inspiration. It is not an ecclesiastical movement nor an effort at organic union. It will not disturb the autonomy or interfere with the administration of any Church or board. It has a definite mission. It does not assume responsibility or authority in questions of church or missionary policy."

There are four main features expressed in the Interchurch Movement, first, a united survey of the world to appraise the needs of each community and region, and to put the task of the world in clear light and proportion; second, a united budget to be made on the basis of the world's survey; third, a united appeal during a given number of days in 1920, to the 50,000,000 Protestants of America, to underwrite the united budget for the year ahead; fourth, a united program for work.

Among those who met with the Federal Council were the Rev. Drs. Tomkins, Boynton, North, Anthony, Tippey and McFarland, and Dr. Robert E. Speer. There were also representatives of the Federation of the French Protestant Churches, the Belgian Missionary Church, the Federation of Swiss Protestant Churches and the Italian Waldensian Churches.

Among the notable sessions of the council was a mass meeting held in Gray's Armory and addressed by Dr. Robert E. Speer of the Presbyterian Board of Missions. Speaking of the League of Nations, Dr. Speer said: "We have to have some agency of international relationship to deal with the flat and unavoidable facts of existing world relationship and entanglements. It is religious to face facts, and it is irreligious for men to shut their eyes

BISHOP KINSMAN RESIGNS DIOCESE, BISHOP GUERRY DEMANDS DEMOCRACY

Tennessee Has Protracted Balloting for Coadjutor, Washington and Harrisburg Admit Women to Vestry Franchise, South Carolina Adopts Unity League, Dioceses Improve Financial Methods

Sixteen Dioceses Hold Conventions.—

—Last week the following dioceses held their conventions: Western Massachusetts in Worcester, New York in New York City, Harrisburg in Shamokin, Delaware in Seaford, South Carolina in Prince George Winyah, Georgetown, Washington at Rock Creek Church, Ohio in Cleveland, Michigan in Flint, Alabama in Selma, East Carolina in Washington, North Carolina. The week before, Oklahoma met in Shawnee, New Mexico in El Paso, Georgia in Augusta, Louisiana in New Orleans, Tennessee in Nashville, and on April 23 Mexware at the coming General Convention in October. As the resignation of a bishop has to be made to the House of Bishops, which will not until then be in session, I can not earlier carry my purpose into effect.

"I have never been able easily to adapt myself to the varied conditions of a bishop's work, and have only kept in good health by giving up many things which I should naturally wish to do. Moreover, my family responsibilities make it difficult for me to live in Delaware. For these reasons alone, I should probably be justified in asking to be relieved of my jurisdiction at this time; but there are deep reasons which make it unnecessary for me to weigh these lesser considerations. These have nothing to do with the diocese or special conditions of my work, but have reference to my attitude toward principles and policies of the Church at large.

"I am conscious of an increasing lack of sympathy with various dominant tendencies in our work, and can no longer give that vigorous and whole-hearted service to which the diocese and the Church are entitled. That being the case, I can only serve you by making way for some one else who can; and this I willingly and gladly do. The careful statement of the reasons to which I have referred will naturally be made in my letter of resignation addressed to the presiding bishop. Until that has been sent, I can have nothing further to say on this subject; nor is anyone authorized to speak for me.

"The one duty now clear to me is that of giving up my work. I have been reluctant to reach this conclusion; but having reached it, I am putting it into effect as expeditiously as possible."

Gives Books and Vestments to Diocese.

—The bishop then explained that serious illness in his family had made it necessary for him to go up to his summer home in Maine before the convention met. He gave directions, also, for handing over to the diocese his books, vestments and the oil paintings of the Delaware bishops in his possession. Then he continued:

"Friends are asking about my own plans for the future. I have none for more than a few months ahead. Family duties will keep me at my home in Maine for the rest of the year. During that time I have to make certain decisions in regard to which I can not act hastily. I have been more than deliberate in reaching the decision to give up my work; and I can not be hurried into premature determination of questions which, though not of special importance to others, are nevertheless of vital importance to myself."

Quotes Former Convention Address.—

"As a last message to the convention I can say nothing that more fully represents the things that I should chiefly wish to have remembered, than to repeat the closing words of my first charge, delivered in 1911:

"Delaware's diocesan existence began as a means of sharing in that General Convention held in Wilmington, which assured to the Protestant Episcopal Church its position as an ecclesiastical body in intention wholly loyal to the faith and practice of the universal Church, which assured to it its present position of vantage for taking an important part in the development of Christendom; which gave to it a chance for promoting unity by showing its conception that unity is at the outset a unity of faith. Oneness in faith comes from oneness of faith; and to that one faith of the gospels and of the fathers of our own Church made its position clear at a memorable council in 1786. There was in those first days a dim sense of the necessity of loyalty to the one faith as a necessary means of promoting that unity of faith which shall express itself in the bond of peace; and I call on you, as Delaware churchmen, to make this sense of loyalty more clear and more forceful, to live up to your birthright as loyal defenders of that faith, which is nothing but the expression of entire loyalty to the person and claims of our Lord Himself. I charge you to entire loyalty to that fundamental conviction: 'Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God,' which is the substance of the Church's creed, revealed to the faithful not by flesh and blood but by the Father which is in heaven, as the kind of faith which forms the rock on which alone our Lord can build His Church, against which the gates of hell shall never be able to prevail."

Ecclesiastical Matters in Hands of Standing Committee.—The diocese with expressions of profound regret and affection, relieved him of all active duty and made provision for the continuance of his salary until October.

Tennessee Elects Coadjutor.—Another matter of interest, announced in last week's CHURCHMAN, was the election in Tennessee of Dr. Troy Beatty as coadjutor. Bishop Gailor had asked the convention either for a suffragan or for a coadjutor. It responded promptly with the decision for a coadjutor. The election followed a special celebration of the Holy Communion. The balloting showed that many names were in the minds of the convention members. Dr. Henry D. Phillips ran the closest second, but at the twenty-first ballot withdrew his name and then proposed that the election of Dr. Beatty be unanimous. Dr. Beatty is an Alabaman by birth, and received his education at Sewanee.

Washington and Harrisburg Extend Franchise to Women.—Three dioceses voted larger power to the women. Michigan made provision for a house of churchwomen. Harrisburg and Washington voted to give women the franchise in parochial elections in any parish where they so desired. A curious condition obtains in Washington because of the fact that the diocese is situated in two states which makes legislative action so slow that it was decided to petition Congress and the Maryland legislature for power to grant this franchise.

South Carolina Adopts Bishop's Unity Plan.—In South Carolina Bishop Guerry

ico met in Nopala, Hidalgo; the reports of these conventions reached THE CHURCHMAN after last week's issue had gone to press.

Bishop Kinsman Resigns His Diocese.—

The event in connection with the week's conventions that has caused most comment is the announcement by Bishop Kinsman of Delaware that he expects to present his resignation next October to the House of Bishops. It has long been known that the bishop was in poor health. That however is not the reason he assigns in his communication to the diocese which was read by the chancellor of the diocese at Seaford last Wednesday.

Bishop Kinsman's Message to Delaware.

—The bishop said:

"Brethren of the clergy and of the laity: My one duty at this time is to announce to you my intention to resign my jurisdiction of the Diocese of Dela-presented a most interesting proposal for a league for church unity, the outcome of his experiences with the A. E. F. last year. The draft was written in France and revised in Germany. The council adopted the league.

The League for Church Unity.—The following is the draft of the League for Church Unity:

The great war just ended, having forced upon our attention with a new power of realization the evils of a divided Christendom, we, the members of the Christian Churches of the world recognizing and accepting our baptism as the basis of a common membership in Christ, do hereby organize ourselves into a League to be known and called "The League for Church Unity,"—and do adopt as our motto these words of Christ: "That they all may be one, as Thou Father art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." (St. John 17:21.)

a. We believe that Christ prayed not only for the spiritual oneness of all believers in Him, but also for the visible and organic unity of His Church.

b. Believing as we do, that a period of preparation and education must precede any formal declaration of a basis of unity, our aim is to arouse the Christian conscience of the world regarding the evils of division, and to convert Christians themselves to the imperative needs of a united Church, as the divinely appointed means of winning the world for Christ. With this end in view, we record here our faith in the ultimate fulfillment of Christ's prayer for unity, and as His disciples we hereby pledge ourselves to pray and labor for this end.

c. By becoming members of this league we do not wish to be understood as advocating any doctrinal platform, or scheme of re-union. We only desire at this time to give corporate expression to our willingness to work for the realization of Christ's prayer for organic unity.

d. We favor all forms of active cooperation and confederation between Christian Churches, which have as their definite and ultimate aim the visible and organic unity of Christ's Church.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

a. We recommend that the members of this league shall wear a simple and inexpensive badge of the following design. (Design to be adopted later).

b. We recommend that Thursday night in Holy Week, or the eve of Good Friday, being the night on which Our Lord offered His prayer for unity, be observed by all members of this league as a time for special supplication and prayer with such appropriate services as to each Church concerned shall seem most fitting. It is also hoped that prayer centers may be formed in the different Churches which shall meet regularly to pray and work for the visible reunion of Christendom.

c. Every member of the league is requested to sign a membership card, giving his or her full Christian name and address, the Church or denomination to which they belong, together with such other information as may be of value to the league. These cards shall be filed for record in some central office, according to the Churches or denominations represented, and when a sufficient number of signatures have been obtained to show the attitude of any particular Church or denomination towards the question of organic unity, then a full report with statistics shall be furnished to the duly constituted authorities of each Church represented in the league.

The Bishop's Comments on the League.—In explanation of his plan, Bishop Guerry said:

"If the proposal I have made possesses any merit, it consists in the fact that it does not aim as yet at laying down any doctrinal scheme or platform of reunion. One who joins the league is committed to nothing more than to work for the principles and ideal for which Christ prayed. . . . The result of such a movement would be largely educational and preparatory to more definite and practical schemes of reunion which must follow later. As I see it, we are in great danger at this time of assuming that our laity and clergy desire church unity.

"Many of them both without and within the Church speak of it as a dream. So far as they are concerned the question is largely an academic one. Add to this that the great body of Christians in the Churches have as yet no very clear idea of what is meant by organic unity, or what the discussion is all about, or what the definite end in view is to be, and any one familiar with the situation must at once realize that not very much is going to be accomplished until we have converted the man in the pew to the imperative need of a re-united Church. . . .

"The time is opportune. The war has driven home upon the consciences and hearts of men with telling force the awful tragedy and weakness of a divided Church. I fear that more harm than good may be done if we attempt at this critical stage to set on foot certain doubtful experiments in church unity which have recently been proposed, until we have thoroughly prepared the soil for the planting."

The Nation-Wide and Other Campaigns.

The conventions all heard speakers who put forward the needs and the plans of the Nation-Wide Campaign. So far as the reports that have come to THE CHURCHMAN show, all the conventions endorsed the campaign—and most of them appointed committees to take up at once the matter of the survey and diocesan organization. The very interesting report of the committee on country church and rural life in South Carolina tied up directly to the Nation-Wide Campaign, proposing that the program reported be adopted as the diocesan plan to be presented as part of the campaign. In New York, the Board of Missions was debating the campaign down town at the same time that the convention was debating it up town. At first a resolution was carried asking that the campaign be put before the General Convention. Later, in response to an eloquent address by Dr. Freeman of Minneapolis, and another by Dr. Stires, the convention rescinded its action and approved the campaign. Dr. Stires said "It is a sign of life and vitality in the Board of Missions when someone begins to be frightened. For it is very true that never yet was anything worth while attempted that someone did not get frightened about it."

The campaign for the Sewanee endowment was presented at most of the southern conventions, and committees to support it were created. Louisiana, South and East Carolina manifested especial interest in this matter. Another matter to come before several of the conventions was the Proposals towards Unity with the Congregationalists. Western Massachusetts, New York and Michigan, in response to recommendations from their bishops, passed resolutions in favor of the proposals or resolutions recommending the proposals to the careful consideration of General Convention.

Elected Bishop Coadjutor of Tennessee at the Convention

Bishop Greer Unable to Attend His Convention.—Bishop Greer was unable to preside at his convention at Synod House, New York, because he had been forced to undergo an operation at St. Luke's Hospital the day before. In response to his request for more assistance in the discharge of his episcopal duties, the convention made a grant of $4,000 in order to employ other bishops to take visitations, thinking this a wiser course at present than to elect another suffragan. A resolution pledging the sympathy and assistance of the convention to the Russian Church was passed. A diocesan scholarship at St. Stephen's College was founded. Committees on publicity and another on literature (to place church literature in hotels, churches, railway trains, etc.) were established. During the closing hours of the convention, word came to Bishop Burch, who was presiding, from THE CHURCHMAN office that Bishop Lawrence had just undergone a major operation and was seriously ill. Prayers were immediately offered for the bishop's recovery and a resolution of sympathy was adopted by the convention to be sent to Bishop Lawrence.

Michigan Salaries to be $1,500 and Rectory.—The most important action of the Michigan convention was the passing of the resolution whereby "the stipend of the clergy, whether married or single, in the diocese shall be not less than $1,500 and a dwelling."

Financial Gains.—In spite of the war and the high cost of living, the financial reports of the dioceses were very encouraging. Washington reported that the high prices farmers are receiving had actually resulted in an increase in the rector's salary in several of the rural parishes. Washington also reported that for the first time in its history, the apportionment had been not only paid, but overpaid. Washington increased its apportionment for diocesan missions. Finally Washington appointed a committee to look into the insurance of the various churches and see that the policies were satisfactory. Western Massachusetts appointed a committee to give close supervision to parish trust funds. Another interesting committee appointed by that diocese was one on church building and decoration. Tennessee, feeling that a new era of missionary progressiveness is dawning, declined to allow certain properties to be sold, feeling that there would be need of all the land in the possession of the Church in the days to come. South Carolina reported the best financial condition in its history. Invested funds yielded an average of 6 3-4 per cent at average cost of less than 1-4 of 1 per cent.

Oklahoma Asks to Become Single Diocese.—The most interesting matter that came up at the Oklahoma convention was the memorial to General Convention asking that Eastern Oklahoma and Oklahoma be again united in a single district. Bishop Thurston of Eastern Oklahoma presided at the convention.

New Mexico Pioneer Work Done.—Bishop Howden, in his report showing the excellent condition of New Mexico, said that the district was already looking forward to the time when it might become a diocese. The Rev. C. S. McClellan, whose center of missionary activity is at Marfa, Texas, has the distinction of covering the largest field in the entire Church—a field of 15,000 square miles. The bishop described how the women at the San Juan Indian Mission had coped magnificently with the influenza epidemic. He said that not only had they nursed the Indians, but when their patients died they had dug the graves with their own hands. Louisiana brought out the amazing fact that the burials in the diocese had doubled during the past year because of the epidemic.

Other Items of Interest.—Several conventions changed their time of meeting to January. Michigan reported the second largest church club in the country. A curious situation arose in the Michigan convention when the dean of the cathedral refused to make a pledge towards the sum of $7,000 which was being raised for a city missionary in Detroit, saying he could not pledge without consulting the vestry, this by instructions received from the vestry. The bishop and St. John's Church offered to make up the amount, but the cathedral vestry "got wind" of the fact that it was being accused of parochialism, and was able to give different instructions to its delegates and the dean.

The Laity Take Hold.—Louisiana formed a league of laymen who are to be responsible for the needed diocesan funds. These men will interest themselves in the missionary work, there will be no assessments, but the league will canvass the diocese for the funds. The laity took matters into their hands in Georgia also, when Mr. J. A. Davis led a discussion that resulted in the appointment of a committee to look into the matter of church attendance.

In Regard to Church Membership.—Pittsburgh had presented to it a very careful report on church statistics. It accordingly decided to memorialize General Convention to direct changes in the parochial report as follows: (1) Omit the heading or term "Baptized persons, total number in congregation," substituting new headings "Church Members, Last Reported", "Present Number", and a sub-heading: "Gains: Baptisms", "Received Otherwise", "Received by Transfer", "Re-affiliated", and a sub-heading "Losses: Loss by Death", "Loss by Transfer", "Loss by Withdrawal". Also to define the term "church member" as used for statistical and governmental purposes as including all persons who having been received by baptism into this Church remain in allegiance therewith, and also all other persons who, having been baptized otherwise, have subsequently been received into this Church and remain affiliated therewith. And finally, to provide for the issuance of a certificate of voluntary withdrawal from or non-affiliation with, a particular parish, and to make provision for the re-affiliation with another parish.

The Mexican Convocation.—Probably no more interesting or enthusiastic convention was held anywhere than that which amazed the little town of Nopala, Hidalgo when the bishop, clergy and delegates arrived on April 23. This was the first convention held out of Mexico City in fourteen years. Thirteen clergy and twelve lay delegates, considered a very large number, were present. Bishop Aves was in the chancel at the opening service, but in respect to governmental regulations, took no part in the service. The bishop expressed great hope of the growth of the Church in Mexico, and predicted the modification of laws which are now restricting the work. Archdeacon Salinas reported having visited all parts of the field except Jalisco. The final act of the convention was to pass resolutions of confidence in and loyalty towards Bishop Aves.

Bishop Guerry Defines Christian Democracy.—In his address to the South Carolina convention, Bishop Guerry had a great deal to say on the subject of Christian democracy: "Something should be done to arouse the Church," he said "to become in deed and in reality a true family of God, the house of God for all people irrespective of class or race. It is one thing to put forth the claim that we are a Catholic Church, and quote another thing to endeavor to live up to so tremendous a claim. The immediately practical and vital task before us is to apply this principle of democracy and catholicity to our own Church, and to conditions as they exist here and now. Is there anything in this period of reconstruction that we can do to bring the Church into more vital and sympathetic touch with the age in which we live?"

The First Step is to Extend Parochial Franchise to Women.—The bishop offered several things in answer to this question. "If we are really in earnest," he said, "about applying the principle of democracy to the Church we ought to begin by extending the franchise to women at our parish meetings. While our diocesan canon leaves the right of women to vote at annual parish meetings optional with each individual parish or mission, yet, as the history of the canon shows, the change was made conferring the franchise upon women in the interest of justice and of greater efficiency in the affairs of the Church. It was felt that as the women were the principal workers in the parish, and among the most interested members and supporters of the Church, they should be entitled to representation in the annual Easter Monday parish meetings.

"A Church which withholds the franchise from its women is certainly an anachronism. When we consider what the women in England and in this country have done to help win the war, I do not see how we can longer withhold from them a voice in the affairs of the Church. England, since the war, has given the franchise to her women, and it is only a question of a few years when the United States will do the same, not by separate states, but as a national amendment to the Constitution. When that day comes, parishes and churches which still continue the outworn custom of allowing only male members to vote at parish meetings, will have to face the charge that the Church in a democratic age is less democratic than the state,—a contradiction which it would be hard to justify or explain."

The Democracy of Baptism.—The more earnestly we seek to bring the Church into vital relation with the age, continued Bishop Guerry, the more apparent does it become that we have fallen from the ancient idea of a great spiritual brotherhood. The ancient Church emphasized the fundamental membership of all in the one family by stress on baptism, allowing even lay baptism, which the bishop emphasized is still considered valid. Lay baptism is important to consider, said Bishop Guerry, not only in relation to the democracy of the Church but in relation to church unity.

Baptism as a Basis for Unity.—"If baptism," he continued, "by whosoever administered, with water, in the name of the Trinity, makes one a member of the Catholic Church, then it follows from this that all baptized Christians by whatever name they are called are organically one in Christ. They are members of the One Body, the original and Catholic Church, which Christ Himself founded, and which is in the world today. However Christians may divide themselves into groups or sep-rate themselves from visible communion with the historic Church, yet it is well to remember here that underneath all our divisions and differences, there is this underlying and undeniable fact of organic unity in Christ by baptism. If I should sit down with my nonconformist friend, to discuss differences of faith and order, I should first of all begin by telling him that we were, by virtue of our baptism, members of the same Church. In a true sense, not only fellow Christians, but fellow-Catholics. The question at issue, therefore, between us, is not whether I am in the true Church, and he on the outside,—we are both on the inside. As between baptized Christians there is no outside and inside."

Baptism and the Holy Communion.—"Now," he continued, "if it be true that all Christians are members by baptism of the one Body of Christ, then it seems to me that we who hold and teach this view ought to act upon it more generally than we do, and give it concrete and practical application. Acting on this principle, it has been my custom in this diocese, as you know, to invite our denominational brethren to receive the Holy Communion with us. I do so for two reasons:—first, because in a very real sense, I am the bishop of all the people in any community,—whether they recognize my claim to be a catholic bishop, or not. Therefore these separated members of Christ's flock are my sheep, for whose spiritual welfare under God I am responsible, to the extent of my ability and opportunity to serve them. The administration by me of the Sacrament of Life to these baptized members of Christ's Church, is at least a partial, though imperfect recognition of the catholic principle laid down in the order for the consecration of a bishop, whereby I was made, not a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but a 'bishop of the Church of God.' Second: I invite all baptized Christians to commune with us, not on the basis of their sectarianism, but as children of the Church, though not in full communion with their spiritual mother.

"The more I am lead to study the problem of church unity, the more I am convinced that the approach to organic unity must be sacramental, rather than doctrinal. When I was in England I took occasion to call upon the Archbishop of Canterbury to thank him for his judgment in the now famous Kikuyu controversy.

The Kikuyu Controversy.—Bishop Guerry then reviewed the circumstances of the Kikuyu controversy and told of his visit to the archbishop at Lambeth.

"When I met the archbishop at Lambeth, I told him I wanted to thank him for the position he had taken—that in the midst of the dreadful war in which we were then engaged, when men needed more than ever to be reminded of their one-ness in Christ, it had been a great encouragement to me in extending the invitation to our American sailors and soldiers to receive the Holy Communion at our altars to know that I had the sanction of his great office and godly judgment. But while theoretically we hold to the view that baptism constitutes the basis of our membership in the Church, some how we have been afraid to act on the principle, or to appeal to it as of any practical value. What I would like to see the Church do at its next General Convention would be to re-affirm and make its own the decision of the archbishop's court. Not that we stand in need of precedents, or have to look to Canterbury for our authority,—we have only to apply a principle that the Church has held from the beginning, and make it applicable to present day conditions. I am satisfied that as a Church we are occupying a most inconsistent position in going before the world as the Church of the Reconciliation,—as the acknowledged leader in the movement for church unity, when we have not the faith or the vision to live up to the very principles of catholicity which we ask others to accept."

Bishop Gailor Discusses the Effect of War on Religion.—Bishop Gailor in his convention address said: "At this convention, the first we have had since the cessation of hostilities in the great war, it is right, that we should offer our formal thanksgiving to God for the great mercies which He has vouchsafed to our nation: That we should record our gratitude and pride for the courage, the heroism and the efficiency of our American soldiers and sailors and that we should take to heart the lessons which the war has taught. And the most obvious and natural of these lessons, it seems to me, is the fact that the average man, in time of privation and peril, cares nothing for theory and little for motive, if only he gets the benefit of kindness and sympathy and service. What a hungry man wants is food. What a wounded man wants is attention. What any suffering man craves is sympathy and help. It makes little difference to him whether the person giving it is a Christian or an unbeliever. He loves the hand that ministers to his needs, and he is intolerant of any criticism that seems to reflect in any way upon his benefactor—as to his opinions or beliefs, religious or otherwise; and you cannot blame him.

Religious Differences Count for Little on Battlefield.—"Therefore, in hours of great stress and anguish on the battlefields we are told, religious differences counted for nothing. Indeed amazing tales are related of the way in which chaplains ministered to the wounded. I heard the ex-governor of a neighboring state declare in a public address that 'Over there we can see Methodist ministers using the Episcopal Prayer Book, and Episcopal ministers counting their beads and Jewish chaplains administering all the rites of the Catholic Church,' and the speaker went on to say, 'This shows how utterly trivial and unimportant' these sectarian differences are. Some of our own chaplains have seemed, in a measure at least, to approve this description of conditions at the front.

"But this is not a new question for Christian men to answer. . . . The implication is, that a kind heart, and generous deeds are the sole criteria of a life that 'is in the right.' But Christianity has contended for nineteen hundred years against this mistaken view of life. Our Lord said to the young ruler, who thought that he had kept all of the Ten Commandments 'One think thou lackest.' 'Christianity is not an organization intended to lighten the work of the police or to make the working man comfortable. It claims to be the one true interpretation of existence in space and time; it claims to give the genuine eternal values of all transitory experience, and to satisfy the thirst of the human heart, which can only be satisfied when it has found the God who made us for Himself' (Dr. Inge).

Christianity is Not Mere Kindness.

"As Christian, as thoughtful men, we cannot acquiesce in the statement that a man's ideals of life count for nothing; that a kind disposition or courage on the battlefield covers all the defects of human character; that what a man believes concerning God and Christ is a matter of indifference; and that the creeds of Christendom are of negligible value because there has been no revelation of God's truth.

"As Christians, who believe that God has revealed His will and nature in the life and character of Jesus Christ, we must maintain His standard and try to live by His law; and for us churchmen that means that the Church of Christ, founded by Christ, is an organized army for the spread of His truth and blessing to the world, and an army implies fixed principles and obedience to law. As the Rev. R. J. Campbell says, in speaking of the convictions which forced him three years ago to leave the most famous nonconformist pulpit in England to take orders in the English Church, 'We can no more have Christianity without the Church than we can have life without embodiment in such a world as ours'; and 'I tried my best to meet this difficulty (to relate religion to life in its entirety) by preaching the sacramental use of all life—but it did not satisfy me. More and more I felt the need of a spiritual environment wherein that idea was authoritatively recognized and expressed.' That environment he found in the historic Church.

The Religion of the Historic Church.

"So, my bretheren, there have been kind men and good men, of all religions and of no professed religion, but there has been only One in all history who has kindled in the hearts of millions the love for God and man of millions, who have not been moved by kindly impulse or sentimental emotion—but who have voluntarily labored and denied themselves and suffered, saying 'The love of Christ constraineth us,' 'We live, yet not we, but Christ liveth in us.'

"Therefore we shall not be frightened out of our convictions by those who tell us that the war has effaced all religious differences; and we shall not talk about the reconstruction of the Church of God, as if the history of the Church for eighteen centuries had been a mere experiment in religion without any divine sanction."

Other Episcopal Charges.—It is impossible to give more than a summary of the subjects treated by most of the bishops. In Oklahoma, Bishop Thurston laid stress on the splendid foundations built by the late Bishop Brooke. Bishop Reese in Georgia occupied his address largely with diocesan problems. Bishop Aves devoted his charge to a consideration of church unity. Bishop Williams in Michigan had much to say about the proposed concordat with the Congregationalists, enlarging upon the statement in regard to this matter made by him recently in THE CHURCHMAN. Bishop Greer, whose address was read by Bishop Burch, also laid much stress on the proposed concordat. Bishop Leonard called upon the clergy and the laity for a more open-minded attitude. Bishop Harding in Washington dealt with national and international issues. He emphasized the need of the spirit of Christ animating the government of the world. He spoke of the imperative need of Americanizing the aliens in this country, and especially of the importance of the establishment of an immigrant bureau by the Church.

Bishop Davies on the Meaning of Liberty—Bishop Davies in an address that bore the marks of his experiences in France, defined the meaning of the liberty for which we have fought. Liberty for the body, he said, is the first necessity, and to this end the League of Nations will tend. In regard to the curtailment of national liberties, he said: "I believe most heartily in nationalism . . . but I do not believe in America ueber alles! I want universal justice and love and righteousness and peace."

The Remedy for Bolshevism—"As to the menacing wave of anarchy and Bolshevism," he continued, "it seems very clear that we must first make very sure that there is no social injustice, no unfair exploiting of labor, no wicked luxury existing side by side with unnecessary want. We must see that wages are adequate, and time of labor so apportioned as to make life worth living. We must try to establish freedom from foul air, dangerous conditions, unrelieved monotony, brutal bullying, bribery and corruption. We must go on making Liberty Loans, and our securities must be public parks, playgrounds, proper places of entertainment and refreshment, good music and good art. We must try to see that every free man lives in a decent home; that little children have freedom to grow and be healthy and love and laugh; that the criminal is freed from senseless torture and possesses the possibility of reform; and that the poor prostitute is freed from her awful slavery of body and soul."

Liberty Through Truth—The liberty of the minds of men must be attained through truth, and so Bishop Davies stressed the importance of education, and especially the primary necessity of improving our Church Schools and making them a training ground for Christian citizenship. Respect for law, thoroughness, economy, should there be inculcated. Finally the bishop dwelt on the liberty of the soul.

Bishop Darst on the New Day—Bishop Darst, also, spoke upon the responsibilities of the after-war period. "Movements which a few years ago were confined to back streets and dingy upper rooms, he said, now sweep along the broad thoroughfares of the world. . . . Perhaps these new movements might have been directed to nobler purposes if organized Christianity had given a little more of its thought and time and life to those back streets and dingy upper rooms during that period when those slowly forming movements were still capable of being directed toward helpful and constructive ends." He used the Church of Russia as an example of failure to direct a people, and warned us by the picture of Russia today. "Let us not be satisfied with small, impotent and indifferent" response to opportunity while "the ringing challenge of the times is calling for the best of our labor and thought and devotion."

Provincial Legislative Power—The most important part of Bishop Darlington's address was his discussion of the position taken by the first and second provinces that the synods should be given legislative powers. He favored rather the substitution of biennial for triennial sessions of General Convention, with the meetings of provincial synods in the alternate year. Harrisburg took action approving of this position taken by the bishop. Bishop Darlington contended that if differing canons in regard to ordinations, matrimony, trial of clergy, rights of vestrymen, etc., should be enacted in the various provinces, the unity of the American Church would be imperiled. He found it much better to adhere to our organization on the lines of the federal and state government and pointed out that the same men who drafted the Constitution, drafted the constitution and canons of the American Church. He closed by calling for seriousness of purpose on the part of the delegates to General Convention, especially in view of the Prayer Book revision which would be decided at Detroit this October.

Holy Week and Easter on the Rhine—

The Church's observance of Holy Week and Easter began with the services of Palm Sunday. We could not get palms for the congregation, but we had palms for the altar. During Holy Week the Holy Eucharist was celebrated every morning except Good Friday and Holy Saturday. Vespers and an address every evening except Saturday. The Three Hour Service for Good Friday was announced with considerable misgiving as to the outcome, but it was a revelation to all of us when you consider Good Friday is not a holiday in the army. Officers, soldiers and welfare workers were coming and going during the entire service. At one time forty-eight were present and at no time during the service was there less than twenty.

Easter—Easter was one never to be forgotten by those who worshiped in the Church of the Royal Palace, overlooking the historic Rhine. The day began with the Holy Eucharist. This service was well attended, when one considers that seven o'clock is the breakfast hour in the army. At eight o'clock there was a second Eucharist, with Bishop Bratton celebrant. At nine-thirty Morning Prayer was said, with Chaplain E. P. Easterbrook, associate senior chaplain of the Third Army, as preacher, and, literally, scores were turned away unable to gain admittance. A third Communion service was held at ten-thirty. We are used to surprises, but this service was the greatest of all. It was held in the chapel, as the church is used by the German congregation. The chapel and vestibule were crowded. How and with what force our democracy was emphasized as rail after rail was filled and emptied, all grades and ranks mixed together.

The Church of the Royal Palace—The Church of the Royal Palace, of which a picture appeared in last week's CHURCHMAN, is a beautiful piece of architecture, within the palace proper. It was erected in 1768 by Clemens Wenceslaus, the Elector of Trier. It has been for years the military church of the city. The last great military service of the Germans was held in it in 1914, while the general staff was located in Coblenz. We had it very beautifully decorated for the Easter services with palms, ferns and cut flowers. It may be that some one at home would like to send us funds for the purchase of flowers to be placed on the altar as a memorial.

Vicar of Holy Trinity Resigns.—The Rev. James V. Chalmers, for twenty-one years vicar of the Church of the Holy Trinity in the Parish of St. James', has resigned from that important post, his resignation to take effect September 1. This is a matter of widespread interest, not only because Mr. Chalmers is such a well-known figure in the life of the city and has done such a remarkable work on the East Side, but also because of the notable church of which he has been the only vicar.

The Church of the Holy Trinity in the Parish of St. James' took its name from the original Church of the Holy Trinity, corner of Madison avenue and 42nd Street, which united with St. James' twenty-four years ago. About that time Miss Serena Rhinelander decided to build the group of beautiful buildings on East 88th Street, between First and Second Avenues, which she later presented to St. James' Church as a centre of religious and social work. This enterprise superseded St. James' Mission, then being conducted on East 83rd Street. A part of the proceeds of the sale of the old Holy Trinity property was set aside by the vestry of St. James' as an endowment for the new Holy Trinity. The buildings, which are one of the architectural sights of the city, consist of church, morning chapel, parish house and vicarage. They were erected by Miss Rhinelander on land which was a part of the farm and country seat of her grandfather, William Rhinelander, and are a memorial for her grandfather and her father. The windows are filled with beautiful glass and are memorials for different members of the Rhinelander family. In the initiation and development of this great enterprise Mr. William Rhinelander Stewart, her nephew, was a moving and directing spirit.

During Mr. Chalmers' long vicarship he has built up a great parish and congregation. He has presented 2,250 for confirmation, and more than 2,000 have been baptized. The church now numbers upwards of 1,100 communicants and has a Sunday School of 1,000. In addition, Mr. Chalmers has ministered to the whole neighborhood in a most helpful and unselfish way.

Mr. Chalmers has been one of the prominent leaders in the movement for national prohibition, and is at present president of the Church Temperance Society.

Sisters of St. Margaret for Trinity Mission House—The Sisters of the Community of St. Margaret are to take charge of the work of Trinity Mission House in connection with Trinity Church, commencing in the early autumn. A great work among the people in the downtown district is carried on from this centre. Although the character of the population has changed, the opportunity and need for work in this region is as great as it ever was. After many years of devoted labor at Trinity Mission House the Sisters of St. Mary have felt compelled to lay down this work as their whole strength is needed for teaching and in the other work of the community itself.

OREGON

Easter.—According to reports the attendance at the Portland churches on Easter was above the average. The offering at All Saints' is to be used for the support of another French orphan, the second this congregation has undertaken to care for.

St. Mary's, Eugene, for the first time in its history, raised its apportionment for general missions, credit for which is largely due to the Auxiliary, whose members, under the leadership of Mrs. E. A. Thurston, made a personal canvass of the parish. The rector, the Rev. F. G. Jennings, has been appointed scout commissioner for Lane County. Two "fatherless children of France" have been adopted—a boy by the woman's guild and a girl by the altar guild.

Two Missions.—The last week in March Archdeacon Chambers and the general missionary, the Rev. John D. Rice, conducted a mission at Marshfield, introducing to the congregation of Emmanuel Church the new rector, the Rev. Harlan Bailey. A nine days' program of services beginning with Palm Sunday was arranged at St. Stephen's, Newport, by the Rev. H. E. Bush, who also has charge of St. John's, Toledo. These places are about a hundred miles from Portland. The Rev. Mr. Bush, aided by Mr. Bowers of the Coast Guards, has organized a troop of boy scouts.

WEST VIRGINIA

St. Matthew's, Wheeling—Bishop Gravatt visited this parish on Palm Sunday and confirmed a class. Owing to a severe cold he was unable to preach but delivered a helpful address to the candidates. The annual diocesan council will meet here Wednesday, May 28. This meeting has been arranged out of the regular order in honor of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of St. Matthew's Parish. Elaborate plans are being formulated for the centennial, and the occasion will be a notable one for the Church in West Virginia. A special thank-offering was taken on Easter Day in order that the parish might enter upon the festivities of the centennial free of debt. About twelve thousand dollars was received in this offering.

Home for Homeless Boys—The bishop of the diocese is desirous of establishing a home for homeless boys within the diocese. At a recent meeting of the Men's Club of Trinity Church, Huntington, the bishop's appeal met with an agreement to raise $5,000. This sum is to be paid in yearly instalments of $1,000 each for five years.

IDAHO

Bishop Page Returns to Idaho.—Bishop Page of Spokane has taken hold of the work in this district, pending the appointment of a bishop as successor to the late Bishop Funsten. Twenty-six years ago, he was rector of the Church at Coeur d'Alene, and it was with much interest, both to the people and to himself, that he was able to return to old associations and to recall the days of long ago. He also visited Wallace. The present rector of St. Luke's, Coeur d'Alene, is the Rev. J. A. Hiatt.

The Moscow Parish.—St. Mark's Church, Moscow, has as its rector, the Rev. W. H. Bridge, formerly of Cranbrook. Congregations have considerably increased and the Easter attendance of communicants exceeded that of previous years. The Rev. W. H. Bridge is planning to take a church in Edinburgh, Scotland, for his summer vacation. Bishop Page has visited recently, among other places, Boise City, Nampa, Caldwell, Payette, Weiser and the Snake Valley work.

IOWA

Church to be Consecrated.—St. Paul's, Council Bluffs, will be consecrated the Sunday after Ascension, June 1, the heavy burden of debt having been entirely raised.

Plans In a University Town.—At Trinity, Iowa City, plans are being made for a parish house, to be built in the near future. The rector, the Rev. Paul B. James, and his people, realize more than ever the need of such a building; not only because the Sunday School has more than doubled its attendance within five months, but because also of the growing importance of the work among the state university students. Church students at the university have formed a permanent organization, "The Morrison Society," named in honor of the bishop. Mr. Willis Nutting is president, and the Rev. Paul B. James honorary president. The society has voted to apply for recognition as a unit of the National Student Council of the Church. Twenty-nine faculty members and about one hundred students of the university have declared themselves as attached to or preferring the Episcopal Church.

City Mission Work to be Developed.—The Detroit archdeaconry had a good session at Christ Church, Detroit, on April 28. A budget was read which is to be presented to the board of managers of diocesan missions at the convention which meets in Flint next month. Heretofore the budget had asked only for $1,700 which seems very insignificant for missionary work in a city of almost one million people. The proposed budget calls for $9,500. With this increase it is hoped to take better care of the missionary work already started in Detroit and to start new work. A mission should be planted in a growing suburb. Within the last three years 40,000 Negroes have migrated to Detroit. There is one colored parish in the city. A new work in the western section is proposed.

A most interesting report was presented by a sub-committee of the diocesan social service committee showing a crying need for the ministrations of the Church in local prisons, hospitals and public charitable institutions. The report strongly recommended that an expert social worker be employed by the Diocese of Michigan as a social service secretary in Detroit.

G. F. S. in Detroit.—The work being done in Detroit by the Girls' Friendly Society is booming. On one of the down town parks a most attractive room is fitted as a "girls' centre," run by the Girls' Patriotic League. A telephone connection is listed under Girls' Friendly Society and Miss E. Thistle Green is in charge each day as a G. F. S. secretary. Here girls may come at any time for rest or to meet friends and at noon a good luncheon is served for twenty-five cents.

The society is fitting up a home in a central residential section of the city. This lodge will open next month and will give twenty-four girls rooms and board and give meals to other girls living in the neighborhood at a comparatively small cost.

In connection with the Michigan Holiday House on beautiful Pine Lake, a new rest cottage is almost completed to take the place of the one which burned two years ago.

It will be of interest to members of the society to hear that the famous Detroit Arts and Craft Theatre has been secured for G. F. S. headquarters at the time of the General Convention. In connection with the use of the theatre the Junior Auxiliary is planning some biblical plays.

At Grace Church, Grand Rapids.—Grace Church, Grand Rapids, had a wonderful Holy Week and Easter. On Palm Sunday the church and parish house, opened together, could not hold, by several hundred, the people who came to hear the choir sing the cantata, "The Darkest Hour." On Maundy Thursday there was a very large corporate Communion of the women of the parish with an inspiring address by Dr. Pierce of Kenyon. At the Three Hour Service there was a total attendance of seven hundred people including many men. The Easter Services were arranged according to a new plan that commends itself to your correspondent. There were celebrations of the Holy Communion at 6, 8, and 9:30, with music at each, followed by Morning Prayer at 11.

The offering asked for was $1,200. The amount received exceeded $1,300. A mystery play, The Power of His Resurrection, was given by the Church School at the boys' and girls' Easter service in the afternoon. The children's mite box offering amounted to $763.46, the largest on record in the parish. Thirty persons have been baptized since Easter Even.

The rector, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, spent the week, April 6 to 13, in Toledo as lenten preacher at Trinity Church. On Passion Sunday Dean DeWitt of the Western Theological Seminary preached an earnest sermon calling on young men to respond to the serious need for priests.

The first Easter in St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral with the new dean, the Rev. Leslie F. Potter, at the altar, was delightful. There were large congregations at all services, even at 5:30 A. M. The Easter offering amounted to $1,342.46, of which $500 is to be used for important repairs, $500 for the support of Camp Roger, the parish recreation park at Lake Boswick, and the balance to be applied on the endowment fund.

SPOKANE

Convocation Plans.—The annual convocation will be held at All Saint's Cathedral, Spokane, on May 20 to 22. On the Monday preceding there will be an open conference of the clergy and delegates on the subject of church music. The annual ban-et takes place on the Tuesday evening. The Girl's Friendly Society holds its meeting on Wednesday, and the Woman's Auxiliary on Thursday.

New Cathedral Not a Luxury.—All Saint's Cathedral, Spokane, is planning for a new cathedral, which is not a luxury, but an absolute necessity to keep pace with the growing work. Dean Hicks is securing the active support of many of the prominent people of the city. Donations from friends in all parts of the country will be gratefully received.

at Yakima.—The outlook at Yakima has never better or brighter than now. The work under the leadership of the Rev. J. Mynard is very promising, past debts being almost wiped out. Plans are being made for the future, which should result in definite advancement. Bishop Page officiated Easter evening.

New Church for St. John's.—The building of St. John's Church, Spokane, is in a somewhat dangerous condition, and the people had to have their services in the basement. The location of the church has not been in its favor. Bishop Page has secured a new location, upon which there is an excellent building, which is being used as a rectory, and a church is to be built under the leadership of the vicar, the Rev. M. J. Stevens.

Two Wardens Keep Services Going.—Bishop Page held Easter services at Ellensburg, the rector of which church is serving in France. Judge R. B. Kaufmann, junior warden, has been taking the services and Mr. Cameron, junior warden, has had charge of the Sunday School. It is a healthy sign when the two wardens can take hold and keep the work going satisfactorily while their rector is serving overseas.

WESTERN COLORADO

The Annual Convocation.—The district will meet in annual convocation on May 23 at Grand Junction. The sessions will continue over the following Sunday and will cover routine business, consideration of the place of the Church in the life of the West, religious education, missions and auxiliary matters. On Sunday morning the annual convocation sermon will be preached by the Rev. Mr. Barr of Steamboat Springs. Bishop Touret is arranging for large representation of the laity of the district at the various sessions of convocation.

New Men for the District.—Bishop Touret is confidently expecting that several strong men who have been in active service both in the fighting forces and in Red Cross and other activities in France will be in the clerical forces of the district in a very far distant time. Meantime the work is being covered as well as can be. The Rev. W. M. Ford of Montrose is taking care temporarily of six places of work at Montrose, Ouray, and Gunnison Counties. Charles E. Rice, at Durango is in charge of the missions in the southern section of the district. The northern counties are covered by the Rev. Messrs. Philip Nelson at Meeker and George D. Barr at Steamboat Springs. The Rev. John W. Barker at Telluride, Edwin Johnson at Glenwood Springs, H. D. Wilson in Delta County, and Philip A. Easley at Grand Junction complete the present staff of the clergy. As more men become available a policy of increasing concentration will doubtless be possible along with a more extended ministry to outlying parts of the country where the Church is little or seldom seen. The field is large and promising and the call is imperious.

HUGH D. WILSON, JR.

MONTANA

Roundup Mission.—At a recent visit, in Roundup Bishop Faber formally opened the new church house of Calvary Mission, the Rev. Ralph F. Blanning, missionary-in-charge. The building was designed by Bishop Faber to serve as a meeting place for the various activities of the mission. It has a chancel which can be screened off with folding doors. The altar which is of Oregon fir was made in Eureka and presented to the mission by Mr. C. A. Weil of the Eureka Lumber Co.

The furniture was provided by the guild, and the brasses for the altar were given by the bishop. The building is free from debt.

Roundup is a city of some four or five thousand people, and is the centre of an important farming region, as well as a prosperous coal mining industry. There is a good prospect for church growth.

Returning From War Work.—The Rev. H. S. Gatley, of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Missoula, who for some months past has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. work with the returning troops, expects to return to his parish about June 1. The Rev. C. A. Kopp who has had charge of the work in Missoula during Mr. Gatley's absence has been appointed as minister-in-charge of St. Andrew's Parish, Livingston, where he will enter upon his duties June 1.

The Church of the Incarnation, Great Falls, which has been without a rector for several months has at last secured the services of the Rev. Christopher Keller.

The Rev. Charles H. Linley, who was given a leave of absence by the vestry of Christ Church, Kalispell, to take charge of his brother's work in Christ Church, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, while the latter was in the army, expects to return to Kalispell about June 1. The Rev. J. W. Heyward has been locum tenens in Kalispell during Mr. Linley's absence. S. A. HOOKER.

ASHEVILLE

Convocation Meets.—The Easter meeting of the Convocation of Morgantown was held in Grace Church, Morgantown, the Rev. George Hilton, rector, April 23-25, inclusive. The opening sermon was preached by the bishop of the district. While not a largely attended meeting, yet those present entered most heartily and interestedly into the various discussions and evidenced an awakened desire to do all within their power to push forward the Kingdom within the district. The sermon on the second evening was preached by the new archdeacon whose ministry of twenty-four years has been devoted to the upbuilding of the Church in North Carolina. The sermon emphasized the necessity of an awakened spirit so as to assure the boys from "overseas" that those who remained at home had also seen the "White Christ," and could also speak in "their tongues" the wonderful works of God.

Chapel Consecrated.—The crowning service of the Convocation was the consecration of St. Margaret's Chapel which was started in 1902 by the late Archdeacon Hughson in an upper room of a dilapidated house. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Charles C. Edmunds, of the General Theological Seminary, and was one of those good wholesome teaching sermons which are not always heard upon such occasions. The church building is complete in its appointments.

Rector Returns to Tryon.—The Church of the Holy Cross, Tryon, has recalled its former rector, the Rev. H. N. Bowne, who is now at all Souls', Biltmore. Tryon is so wonderfully situated in the isothermal belt, just at the foot of a range of seven mountain peaks, that it has become a most attractive place for winter tourists from the North and West. During the past season more than thirty states were represented.

Gastonia.—St. Mark's Church, Gastonia, which has been without a rector for some months, but has been ministered to by that zealous missionary, the dean of Morgantown, the Rev. Edmund N. Joyner, has called a rector whose acceptance is earnestly longed for. The Gastonia parish has a great work to do, and under the leadership of a wise, aggressive rector, will no doubt become one of the leading parishes in the district. JNO. H. GRIFFITH.

NEW MEXICO

Large Confirmations.—Bishop Howden is now making his spring visitations and reports gratifying increase for the Church in several places. The class of fifty-one recently presented in St. Clement's, El Paso, gives this, the leading parish of the district, seventy-three confirmed since the first of the year, with prospect of another class in June. On Easter evening the new rector of St. John's, Albuquerque, presented twenty-six persons, and the number confirmed at the Church of The Holy Faith, Santa Fe, was larger than for several years. It will take the bishop until July to finish his itinerary.

Easter.—On Easter Day some churches turned away people for whom there was not sufficient seating capacity. Special Easter services for commanderies of Knights Templar were arranged in Santa Fe, Albuquerque, and El Paso with gratifying attendance.

Notes.—St. Clement's, El Paso, has just provided the rector with a new rectory which he is occupying. Since Mr. Brown's resignation for the sake of a chaplaincy in the army Silver City has been without a rector. One of the university professors, Dr. Donald McFayden supplied for Easter.

War Commission Helps—The War Commission of the Church have helped the congregation of St. John's, Albuquerque, to procure for the use of the rector a new automobile, with which he visits, beside his own parish and stations, many of the tubercular army men of whom there are several hundreds in the local hospitals.

Convocation—Convocation met in El Paso May 6, 7, and 8. The parish celebrated its fiftieth anniversary at this time as well as the bishop's fifth anniversary of consecration. WALTER S. TROWBRIDGE.

MICHIGAN CITY

Trinity Parish Diamond Jubilee.—A meeting of the parish council of Trinity Church, Fort Wayne was held on April 29, and plans were made for the celebration of the diamond jubilee of the parish.

The council recommended to the vestry that the raising of $7,500 in government bonds as a parish endowment be considered.

MINNESOTA

Atmosphere of Prosperity.—Splendid congregations, large numbers of communicants and generous Easter offerings marked the Easter services in Minnesota. In many of the parishes and missions the reports show that Easter, 1919, was an epoch marking date in every department of the Church's life. In a number of cases where Easter congregations and numbers of communicants were small last year, the increase in 1919 was remarkable. Throughout the whole diocese there is an atmosphere of prosperity.

Memorial Service.—The various British societies in both Minneapolis and St. Paul united at St. Mark's, Minneapolis, on Sunday, April 27, in a "Memorial Service for Britain's Million Dead." The capacity of the church was taxed to its utmost, the musical part of the service was under the direction of Mr. Stanley R. Avery, organist and choirmaster of St. Mark's. The sermon was preached by Dr. Freeman.

Dr. Stewart at the Church Club.—"From Château Thierry to the Argonne" was the subject of Dr. George Craig Stewart's address to the members of the Minnesota Church Club on Wednesday, April 30. Just a year ago Dr. Stewart addressed the same club on the subject, "The Challenge of the Hour." FREDERICK D. TYNER.

CUBA

Calvario Mission, Spanish Speaking.—The congregations at this mission on Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Easter Day were far larger than they have been for a number of years. Owing to the fact that the priest-in-charge, the Rev. Pablo Muñoz had been suffering from a seriously wounded hand, the services were taken by the Rev. H. B. Gibbons, the rector of the Cathedral Schools and canon of the cathedral.

Holy Trinity Cathedral.—Rarely has the Easter congregation equaled that of this year. The attendance at the two early services, one in Spanish, conducted by the dean, was very large, but that at the late service at which the bishop was the celebrant and the preacher, quite filled the church. The offering also, of about $911, was surpassed only by that at the opening service in the church, when it was about $1,100.

A Unique Service.—At the morning service, and the Three Hours Service there were the usual large congregations at the cathedral. These services were conducted by the bishop and the dean.

At night the service was that of the Holy Fire, which is conducted in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem. Mr. John Hakim, a member of the Orthodox Greek Church, and of the Patriarchate of Moscow, came to Cuba a short time ago for the purpose of ministering to Greek speaking residents. It was with the consent of Bishop Hulse that he held this service in the cathedral.

A previous notice sent out to the Syrians and Armenians in Havana and its suburbs brought out an enormous congregation. A few members of the cathedral congregation, and a few Cubans drawn by curiosity, were present, but almost the entire congregation was composed of Greek speaking people. And a more reverent, decorous, or devout people could not be imagined.

Although the daily papers of the city announced the services as a Mass, it was not of that nature. Nor was it of the nature of a requiem, but rather a sort of memorial office, consisting of prayers, chants, and readings, probably from the Scriptures, together with processions, and the use of incense. The congregation was composed mostly of men, with a few women and children. Almost all were dressed in black. The only postures in the service were those of standing and kneeling. There was no sitting. In the midst of the choir of the church was placed, before the beginning of the service, a table with its length across the middle passage. This was covered with a red cloth, and upon it were placed two tall candles, lit, amidst a great profusion of flowers. On the altar was lying a sort of pillow heavily embroidered with what seemed to be a representation of the Body of Christ.

Exactly at eight o'clock Mr. Hakim entered the church passing into the sanctuary, carrying in his hands the book of offices, raised so high as to appear like a shield for his eyes. Standing with his face to the altar he began the service. Four laymen formed the choir.

The service seemed to consist of a series of meditations interspersed with prayers and extremely long portions of the psalms intoned. None of the laymen participants officiating in the service was vested; but the chief minister wore a carmine coloured cassock, under a similarly coloured apron heavily embroidered, and a carmine cope.

A layman acting as thurifer entered the sanctuary part way through the service with incense and censed the altar, the pillow, the minister, the table and the choir. Then the minister lifted the sacred pillow on high, laid it on the table in the midst of the flowers and under the gleaming of the two lights. Then he and the members of the choir marched about the table still intoning the service, in solemn procession proceeded to the entrance of the church, and back again, still intoning the words of the service, while the fragrance of the incense filled the great spaces of the nave of the cathedral. Returning to the chancel the pillow was replaced on the altar, and shortly afterward the service concluded. Meantime just before the procession, two other laymen entered the church bearing many candles, which they distributed to the congregation. The lights were communicated each to the other until the entire great church was all ablaze with a glory of light. When one of the Greeks was offering a candle to a Cuban who was a member of the Roman Church the Cuban refused the candle, and the Greek replied, "Do not fear to take the candle, for we are just as Catholic as you are." W. W. STEEL.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Meeting of Central Deanery.—On Thursday, April 24, the clergy of the central deanery of South Dakota met at Mitchell with Bishops Burleson and Remington. The day was given over to discussions of many subjects of importance including adult Bible class work and home department work. The rural dean, Mr. Anthony, read a paper which he had prepared on baptism which is to be one of a series dealing with church teaching to be put into the hands of communicants for instruction, especially those in rural communities far from an Episcopal church. Dean Woodruff of Sioux Falls gave a splendid review of the last book written by Walter Rauschenbusch, A Theology of the Social Gospel.

On Friday in St. Mary's Church, Mitchell the bishop ordained to the diaconate the Rev. E. A. K. Grant, LL.D., a former Presbyterian minister. The sermon was preached by Dean Woodruff of Sioux Falls, and the Rev. Mr. Pigion of Huron, and the Rev. Mr. Anthony of Mitchell joined in the laying on of hands also with Bishop Remington. The two bishops spoke at the luncheon of the Mitchell Faculty on Thursday noon and again at the parish supper of St. Mary's Church on Thursday evening.

State Sunday School Convention.—Sioux Falls—On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, May 6, 7, and 8 the state Sunday School convention was held at Sioux Falls. One of the members of the executive committee of this interdenominational association is the Rev. E. W. Pigion of Grace Church, Huron. One of the chief speakers who addressed the gathering each evening was the Rev. George Craig Stearns of Evanston, Illinois.

Appointments of Bishop Remington.—Bishop Remington has been engaged to make the principal address at the Memorial Day exercises in Watertown for which great preparations are being made. He will also to preach the baccalaureate sermon at the two state colleges this year, the University of South Dakota in Vermillion, and the South Dakota State College in Brookings. PAUL ROBERT

The Inspiration of the Cross.—A Holy Week sermon by the Bishop of London will have an out-of-date sound when this appears, but as he took occasion to work out the theme of the Cross as applied to our very up-to-date needs, his suggestions are well worth reproducing. We have "enlured the Cross, for the joy set before us"; it was worth while. Our men would have indeed died in vain, "if we are going back to the old selfish world, the old game of gain and grab, domestic bitterness between class and class, nineteen-and-a-half hours of drink in London again, and the disgraceful scenes which we have had in Central London from a moral point of view during the war." We must now preach brotherhood, and act on it; give every child a chance, and not grudge the extra taxation for the housing of our poorer brethren. This is the real test of the Christianity of the richer classes of England. We must re-evangelize England, and not behave like the elder brother in the parable. When the bishop was in the Salonika country he challenged the men to renounce their habit of spending their Sundays with a newspaper and a glass of beer. He promised them that they would find things different in the old parish church when they came home; they would have a warm welcome, and services which they could understand. But he told of one who came home and said "I found the old church as dull as ever." If this is so, we were losing the only chance we should ever have. If they find the Church to be the "most loving brotherhood the world has ever seen" (this is an old phrase of the bishop's, which has become a classic quotation), we might "gather in by handfuls these splendid brothers."

Suggestions for Brotherhood.—"Do you mind," said the bishop, "being turned out of your pew, if you have one, for some one who has come for the first time?" We might like a long service ourselves, but if shorter ones are needed for those who have not yet learned to love their church, we ought to give way. People have been complaining to him about the leaving out of a psalm, or the shortening of the lessons. The service in use at the Church of the Annunciation, where the bishop was preaching, pleased him very much. These services were organized by the Church Army, to which organization he paid a generous tribute. There was nothing in the service, he declared, which was not scriptural, or true to the Church of England. The bishops "are perfectly ready to sanction any service like this; we have to be more adaptable."

Resignations—and Speculation.—It is often said that the way to ensure that anybody shall not be promoted to a high post is to discuss his claims in print. The Bishops of Chester and of Chichester resign as from May 1, and the Bishop of Oxford on July 1. The temptation to discuss probabilities is proving too much for some of our writers, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Lloyd George will not be turned against them by this indiscretion. It is scarcely likely, however, that he sees THE CHURCHMAN, so I am not prejudicing his chances by recording that Dr. Burrows, Bishop of Truro, is being named for both Chichester and Oxford. For my part, I should be inclined to think that Dr. Paget, Bishop of Stepney, would be a possible choice for Oxford; his brother was Dr. Gore's predecessor, and many churchmen have felt that Dr. Paget has been left too long as suffragan of Stepney. The other Burroughs, with a different spelling, Canon E. A. Burroughs, is also marked out for bigger things, but he is still young, and his time may not be yet.

New President for the E. C. U.—An excellent choice has been made for the leadership of the English Church Union. Mr. Justice Phillimore, as he used to be known, now Lord Phillimore, is just the type of layman to keep the Union on steady and safe lines, and will never be false to its principles. His legal knowledge, and especially his familiarity with ecclesiastical law, will be especially valuable. Meantime Lord Halifax has come to the golden evening of his days, and has just been receiving the congratulations of his many friends on his golden wedding day.

A Peace Celebration in Trafalgar Square. That energetic and popular preacher, the Rev. H. R. L. Sheppard, vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, is almost in despair about the official difficulties which prevent his planning a very natural function when the day for celebrating peace arrives. His church, as traveled Americans know, faces that spot which is the most central one in the British Empire, Trafalgar Square. Mr. Sheppard foresees that all well-known churches will be filled on Peace Day, his own included. But he wants something bigger, a great united service in the Square itself. He points out that some of the regrettable scenes on that spot during Armistice Week might have been prevented if there had been massed bands and hymn singing. Almost any kind of political meeting is permitted in the square, but any public expression of religion is at present prohibited there. "Nothing but lack of imagination," he declares, "stands in the way, and we are living in an age when men are coming to suspect that lack of imagination has been the source of most of our difficulties in the past."

Church and State.—A voluminous correspondence is still going on in the Times on the reform proposals. The writers are for the most part critical, as is to be expected; opposition generally voices itself pretty strongly in the only way possible. The Bishop of Hereford is still doing his utmost. A nonconformist starts a new objection, of which more is likely to be heard, viz., that Dr. Temple's scheme deliberately excludes nonconformists from all share in the life of the Church, and that this will have the effect of perpetuating the position of 1662, and of making reunion impossible. Dr. Temple has not replied, possibly because he has intervened so often already. It shows how far prejudice can go. For although nonconformists are not to vote for church councils, the very object of having a deliberative assembly with legal powers is to make it possible for the Church to allow this very thing, if its electorate so desires, and to enter into schemes of union of a vital kind. How could Parliament do this for the Church? As things are at present, any scheme of reunion would almost immediately find itself pulled up short by parliamentary and legal obstacles.

Jamaican Negro Finds a Mission

In the congregation at Guantanamo, Cuba, there was sometime ago a licensed lay-reader, a Jamaican Negro, named J. T. Parris. Mr. Parris removed to a distant sugar plantation where he and a number of his friends, churchmen all, gathered in a house at one end of the village and began holding meetings. They met at certain hours, and they sang the hymns of the Church, and they said all the prayers they could remember, and those were many. In the course of time a little chapel, seating about seventy people, was fitted up in a very churchly manner. This led to the regular visitations of a priest. Finally the time arrived for the visitation of the bishop. Greatly to his surprise, there was a most beautiful service, not only the usual canticles being sung and well sung, but even the versicles and responses. Seven children were baptized, and seven persons presented for confirmation, which represented the first fruits of the work at this place.

To Study Church Music

Plans have been completed for the Summer School of Church Music, to be held July 8-18, at Racine College. This, the second year of the conference, finds both Dean Lutkin of Northwestern University, and Canon Douglas again on the staff. Dean Lutkin will take up the study of the new church hymnal, considering the tunes as to their artistic and practical value. A second course will consist of a close analytical study of the standard anthems, as to their essential musical worth, and their usefulness in the church service. A conference will be organized with the object of discussing at length the everyday problems of organists and choirmasters, especially those of the Mid-West. Canon Douglas will have charge of the instruction in plain song. This course offers an unusual opportunity to study the music of the Middle Ages, on which modern music is based. Members of the music conference will be organized for drill in a choir, which will be trained in the principle both of plain-song and Anglican music.

As last year, the Summer School of Church Music will be held in connection with the Conference for Church Workers, and registration ($5.00) for one entitles members to instruction and privileges of the other. The association of the two organizations gives scope for inspiring demonstrations of community hymn singing.

Clerical Salaries

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I was delighted to see in the May 3 CHURCHMAN an article on "Larger Salaries for the Clergy," and to know also that your correspondent for the Diocese of Pittsburgh reports that Bishop Whitehead vigorously urges larger salaries in his diocese. In 1913 Bishop Lawrence appointed a committee of laymen from Massachusetts to do what they could for the increase in clergymen's salaries here, and I was secretary of that committee for five years. I was forced to resign from this committee last year on account of other more pressing work, but was very glad of an opportunity to take part in helping to eradicate what really is an evil. It seems to me that a plan of publicity with committees of live laymen in all the dioceses would have a simple task in raising the average salary throughout the country several hundred dollars. The low salaries which are paid our clergy is something which everybody knows. What people are waiting for is a proper plan, or in many cases just a mere suggestion. The raising of eight and three-quarters millions for the Pension Fund is an example which could well be quoted. Everyone who contributed to that immediately recognized the need of a pension system which was occasioned by the evil of small and inadequate salaries. The Pension Fund, however, is not a solution to the inadequate salaries, but could be pointed to successfully as an example to which all good laymen and women readily contributed when convinced of its necessity.

Could not THE CHURCHMAN continue the campaign to increase salaries so that thinking people in all the dioceses and missionary districts will respond to it? Many excellent suggestions will doubtless come to you from various parts of the country, and different methods could be adapted to the needs of different localities.

No Tunes for Communion Service

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

After purchasing the new hymnal our organist and I seem to have come upon what in political circles is known as a "joker." We were prejudiced in favor of the hymnal before obtaining a sample copy because we understood it would aid in establishing congregational singing, not only in the hymns but also in the musical portions of the service. Our examination of this sample (a cursory one I must confess) revealed characteristics suggesting adverse criticism, but the book contained not only a good body of hymns but also simple music for what seemed all the services. When, however, we now come to look for music for a simple celebration of Holy Communion we find absolutely nothing. Why a congregation should need to have in hand music for the psalm at the consecration of a church and nothing for what is generally conceded to be the normal service of a Christian church on every Lord's Day is difficult to understand. The "joker" idea was suggested by finding in each copy an advertisement of "Companion Books to the New Hymnal." Evidently the committee intends that in order to place in the hands of the congregation music for the whole service on the Lord's Day it shall be necessary to secure a second book. To some parishes, who have strained themselves in order to purchase hymn books for their congregation, this presents a financial difficulty, but even where money is of no concern two books add to the inconvenience. Moreover, if two books are necessary why cumber the hymnal with any chant tunes at all. Or if only a few necessary ones are intended to be included, why is the office of Holy Communion deemed unnecessary? If this letter should come to the notice of any member of the committee perhaps others beside myself would welcome an explanation.

An Analogy and a Question

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

We have carefully read the proposed canon regarding a possible union of the Congregational and Episcopal Churches and the comments thereon as published in THE CHURCHMAN. As near as we can make out a Congregational minister may by complying with practically the same conditions as are imposed by the Episcopal Church upon its own candidates, become an Episcopal rector without interfering in any way with his status as a Congregational minister, just as any one who may be a Mason can become a Pythian by taking certain obligations and passing through certain ceremonies without interfering in any way with his status as a Mason.

But, what about the Congregational laymen? Will they be invited to the Episcopal Communion or must they first be confirmed by an Episcopal bishop? And the Episcopal laymen; will they feel at liberty to partake of a Congregational Communion or not?

We should be pleased to see something in the columns of THE CHURCHMAN regarding these questions. E. F. BLISS.

Congregational Bishops

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The bold proposition of Samuel C. Fish (in your issue of May 3) for Congregational bishops, I believe to be a practical one. The suggestion, however, of having bishops will come as a shock to most Congregationalists; and they must be left to construe according to their own conscience, which is a very high and pure conscience, the kind of authority which inheres in their new bishops; for in their conception the words bishop and priest—the episcopos and presbyter of the New Testament—are synonymous, and, in their own view, they already have the episcopate. They will probably, wish their new bishops to have some specific supervision, broader than their "home missionary superintendents" now have; but further nothing more than the personal authority of preëminent character and ability. Such ecclesiastical freedom in regard to the episcopate is historic; and if the laymen of the Episcopal and Presbyterian or Congregational churches are to be the ones ultimately to decide this whole question of unity, for in any church will find an obstacle in ecclesiastical theories. "We preach Christ and Him crucified."

It may be remarked that the Moravians who have the apostolic succession in their bishops, combine Presbyterianism, Congregationalism and Episcopacy in their system which is worthy of study.

The First Step

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

If we sincerely desire church union, submit that the first step of approach should be made toward Methodism. The Methodists were the last to separate from the Church, and this for no doctrinal cleavage but largely for indifference to spiritual ideals which Methodism stresses and to which our Church has now awakened.

While union with other Protestants presents difficult and delicate questions of co-ordination in faith and order, these would scarcely be raised with Methodists who accept the Thirty-seven Articles of Religion and have an episcopal form of church government. The proposed plan of joint ordinations and consecrations could be carried out with no sacrifice of dignity, a deviation from the present custom of either Church. The Methodists use practically the same form that we do in administering baptism and Holy Communion, and while other Protestants sit at Communion Methodists come to the altar and kneel.

The Methodists are the largest Protestant body in the country, and are well represented where our Church is weak or non-existent. We are continually losing members to various bodies more or less hostile to our Church, because we have no local congregation. If such could receive the sacraments from the Methodist clergy, thousands could be retained in the communion of the Church who are now completely lost.

The Methodists would probably not object to confirmation if we insist on it, and who will deny that many of our clergy and laity would profit by conversion?

By combining the names of the two bodies, we should have the Methodist Episcopal Church, which, while not entirely satisfactory to all of us, would be considered by many a decided improvement over our present title. E. W. AVERILL.

Old Testament Lessons

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The present discussion, whether to read lessons from the Old Testament as a part of public worship, is an encouraging sign lay 24, 1919

a more intelligent estimate and use of the Old Testament indicating advance beyond indiscriminate approval and reverence for whatsoever is found in the Bible. What is needed is not disuse, but more discerning use of these writings. The Old Testament is of permanent value and use as a record of God's gradual, progressive revelations made through man, showing the prolonged process, and stages of growth by which the world was prepared for the further revelation made by "God manifest in the flesh." Knowledge of these preparatory revelations helps to apprehend and to appreciate the Gospel. But it does not follow that the public reading of all these preparatory and partial conceptions of God and of his truth are profitable to a miscellaneous congregation, specially if they are not accompanied by comment or explanation. In announcing such a lesson a very few well chosen words indicating the time, circumstances and purpose of the passage about to be read would enable hearers to listen more intelligently and more attentively. This is specially true of readings from the minor prophets; the times and circumstances in which they wrote were so diverse, the meaning and purpose of an abruptly announced, and disconnected passage are so obscure that the average hearer cannot promptly bring his mind into an attitude of intelligent receptivity. The need of some such introduction is recognized, and is partially supplied by the brief summary of contents given at the head of each chapter in the King James version and at the top of the pages in the revised version. Such brief preface might be profitable to the reader also, resulting in a more interested and more interesting reading of the lesson. Some public readings of the Bible suggest that the reader has misapprehended the meaning of Habakkuk's words—"that he may run that readeth." The doing of what is here suggested has called forth appreciation from those who sit to listen. It violates no rubric, but does conform to St. Paul's general rubric—"let all things be done unto edifying." J. DEWOLF PERRY.

Dean Hart and the Hymnal

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Your venerable correspondent from Denver criticizes with characteristic vigor the new hymnal, and especially condemns it because of the omission of Cowper's hymn—"poor, melancholy Cowper"—"There is a fountain filled with blood." Is it allowable to say a word in vindication of the hymnal commission's action in this regard? It seems so strange that any thoughtful person knowing his Bible should admire and use this—and indeed many a hymn—lacking in rhetorical beauty as well as scriptural accuracy. As to Cowper's hymn, its statements are not true. There is no fountain filled with blood. The fountains of Scripture are "fountains of living water." The promise in Zechariah is of a fountain for separation from uncleanness, which immediately reminds us of the "sprinkling" of those who came to be cleansed, finding its reality in "the blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than that of Abel." There is nowhere in Scripture any "plunging" beneath a flood of gore. The figure is too violent, as well as unscriptural. It is inaccurate, too, for such a plunge would not result in cleansing, whereas "sprinkling" was a sacrament, an outward sign of an inward grace. Then, notwithstanding the first verse, the dying thief was, after all, washed and forgiven without plunging, but by the look of faith. And the author of the hymn recognizes this himself, for in the third verse he declares:—"E'er since by faith, I saw the stream," etc. Indeed, is not the figure revolting, of material blood forever flowing from the Saviour's side, in which sinners are to be bathed? Do we not dishonor the dear Lord's Sacrifice, the virtue of which was the laying down of His life of which the blood was the symbol? "No man taketh it from Me. I lay it down of Myself." The true sentiment is better expressed in another hymn:—"A heart that's sprinkled with the blood, so freely shed for me." Thus, "the Blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." "If we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

There is another hymn open to severe criticism, which, to my great regret, has been retained in the new hymnal:—"Am I a soldier of the Cross?" However suitable to private meditation, what could be more absurd than a congregation of intelligent people asking themselves questions in mixed metaphor, and getting no answer for three verses? Then comes "Sure I must fight," etc., which is not unlike the undignified "O say" which begins our Star Spangled Banner. And whoever "sailed through bloody seas?" And, lastly, who can sing "seize it with their eye" without having unworshipful thoughts? Is this bad grammar? or a miserable pun? or a great achievement accomplished by a single eye?

The hymnal commission has sought to elevate the taste and increase the worshiping spirit of our people. But I submit that omissions of popular but unworthy hymns would vastly improve all hymnals, new and old.

Your correspondent evidently did not carefully study his index, for Newman's hymn, "Praise to the Holiest," is not omitted from the new hymnal. It is Number 259.

CORTLANDT WHITEHEAD.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Dean Hart's usual regard for precise statement is not evident in his recent letter to THE CHURCHMAN on the subject of the new hymnal. If it were true that the hymnal minimizes the heinousness of sin or the atoning sacrifice of our Lord on the Cross all churchmen would share Dean Hart's objection. But when the good dean pours out the vials of his wrath because of the omission of one hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood," and assumes that its omission vitiates the complexion of the book, one is tempted to inquire: "Has Dean Hart really examined the hymnal?" That question would seem to be answered in the negative by referring to hymn 259, "Praise to the Holiest in the Height," which the dean states is not included in the book. Moreover, hymns built on the doctrine of the Atonement form one of the conspicuous features of the new hymnal, and, with all respect to Cowper and Dean Hart, most of them treat the sublime subject with more nobility than the poet does in the lines:

"There is a fountain filled with blood
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins
And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

Dean Hart would bar the plainsong tunes. With two or three exceptions, so would I, if my personal taste were the only factors. But if the new hymnal is for general church use it must not fail to provide for that growing list of churches where plainsong is on trial and increasingly appreciated.

The dean quite properly desires "a book of distinctly evangelical complexion costing not more than seventy-five cents." Such a book is already announced, and is to consist of 103 hymns selected from the complete hymnal, and published not at seventy-five cents but at twenty-five cents. Both the complete book and the selection from it are to be supplied with music. This is the most notable step toward congregational singing yet taken by the Church, and should do much to take away the well merited reproach that the Episcopal Church does its singing vicariously through its choirs.

It would be interesting to see some valid objections to the hymnal. So far, none that has appeared in print is worthy of serious rebuttal.

The admirers of Dean Hart, and their name is legion, will be grateful to him, in this age of curious religious thinking, for his stand on the doctrine of the Atonement. Some of them will regret that he thought it necessary, after an obviously loose examination, to bring the new hymnal into the discussion.

WALTER HENRY HALL.

Columbia University, New York.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Dean Hart, in his letter appearing in this week's CHURCHMAN, seems to have passed judgment upon the new hymnal after a rather cursory examination of its contents. While it is quite true that the hymn "There is a fountain filled with blood," has been omitted, it is also true that the splendid ancient hymn "Vexilla Regis" is included; and it contains the stanza "There whilst He hung, His sacred side By soldier's spear was opened wide, To cleanse us in the precious flood of water mingled with His blood." We find also, in hymn 162, "Blest through endless ages Be the precious stream, Which from sin and sorrow Doth the world redeem!" These two hymns, at least, and many more, I fancy, have not "become vitiated by the excrement of Germanic bibliography."

But the dean's last paragraph puzzles me. When he asks the question: "What must we think of the critical faculty of that commission which would omit Newman's hymn, 'Praise to the Holiest in the Height'?" is he propounding a hypothetical question, or has he missed hymn 259 of the new collection, with Dykes' setting "Gerontius"?

WAR AND ITS AFTERMATH, STUDIES OF SOME INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS

Problems of the Aftermath

IT is not clear why this valuable collection of papers by Clarence W. Barron is called War Finance (Houghton Mifflin); for while there are several articles on financial subjects, there is much about other matters. However, books and children have to have some sort of names, and this title is at least as appropriate as The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.

Mr. Barron certainly has had rare opportunities for observing; indeed he adds to his title "as viewed from the roof of the world in Switzerland." It is plain from some statements and from many allusions that the author has been admitted to some secrets not known to the world at large, and most of which he does not divulge even now.

From his high perch he has seen much, and with his keen ear he has heard much, and here he offers the result to any one that will read. The book contains much important information which it is hoped will be heeded by those directing the forces of reconstruction. Ex-President Eliot has often characterized his work: "Your style is always vivid, and usually somewhat jolting like a corduroy road; but your sentiments and opinions almost always commend themselves to my judgment."

There are numerous passages of epigrammatic quality, like this: "South Germany can produce a Dr. Muchlon, but Prussia cannot." The writer is bold in expressing his convictions, as in holding the government responsible for widespread damage by the blundering management of the railroads; and by making Lincoln Steffens the author of "a large part of the bedevilment in both countries"—Mexico and Russia. He attributes to Steffens the securing of Trotzky's release by the British who detained him at Halifax. But it is an obvious inference that the Bolshevik's release was actually procured by our State Department.

In Lessons of the War and The Peace Conference, (by Oreste Ferrara, Professor of Public Law at the National University of Havana. Authorized translation from the Spanish by Leopold Grahame. Harper and Brothers) Professor Ferrara shows himself to be well informed about the salient features of European history, and of the relations past and present of the nations of the eastern continent. He goes to the past to gather its lessons for the present, and has presented the result of his studies in an attractive and illuminating treatise.

The author first traces the history of German policy, and shows from the ambition of that state and its continuous aggressive power the necessity for the allied and victorious powers to leave Germany capable of prosperity, but reduced in military strength so that there will be from Prussia no further menace to the world's peace. He discusses the many other complicated questions which must be settled, and offers wise counsel in regard to their solution.

There is a chapter on the timely subject the League of Nations. Unlike some enthusiasts in America, the Cuban professor is alive to the dangers of a league, but nevertheless feels that the conditions of the times demand such a venture.

A Society of States (by W. J. S. Stallybrass, M. A. (Oxon.), Fellow and Vice-Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford, of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law. E. P. Dutton).

The problem considered in this book is the effect of a league of nations upon the sovereignty, independence and equality of the states which enter into the combination.

The book comprises a brief treatment of these subjects, and then adds a series of appendices, the longest of which contains a series of extracts from speeches of President Wilson. In the first appendix the author brings out what he deems to be new, the analogy between the proposed league and the framing of the American Constitution.

That analogy is suggestive and may well serve as a warning. The problem at the beginning was to induce the states to surrender enough of their sovereignty to make an effective nation. Before that surrender was adequate America was bathed in the blood of a four years' struggle at arms. If a league of nations is to accomplish what its advocates desire, the component nations must yield more of their sovereignty than most of them yet seem to realize. And it must be borne in mind that the nations of the world are not as homogeneous as the thirteen American colonies, and their interests are far more divergent.

Pan-American Propaganda

UNDERSTANDING SOUTH AMERICA (by C. S. Cooper, Doran) is an excellent book. It is well written and illustrated and presents Latin America in an altogether pleasing light. It neither overstates the attractions of the lands and their inhabitants as does the eulogistic Dr. Zahm in his volumes, nor is it pessimistic—Mr. Cooper unlike Harry Franck can see a silver lining to the clouds which overhang the Andes. In these days when so many books on this subject are being brought out it is quite impossible to consider each new one on its merits. The volume before us for example differs from what one might call its neighbors in form rather than in substance. It does not give any really new information, but what it does give is presented in an original way and illustrated by interesting pictures apparently made from kodaks taken by the author. On the whole it is one of the best books on the subject that has appeared of late.

It is hard to see why a writer of so much experience as Mr. Verrill should have added this last apologia for Latin America to his already well known list of books—Getting Together with Latin America (By A. Hyatt Verrill. Dutton). It is only four years since Dodd Mead brought out his South and Central American Trade Conditions, and the difference between the book and this book is not great enough to justify increasing the burden imposed upon the retailer. Of the two the 1911 book is the better and yet we are so glad to have the subject given a wide airing that we hope this volume will have a large circulation. In the interests of both business and constitutional government the more Mr. Verrill writes the better—only one cannot help feeling that his energies are being dissipated.

Three French Prize Books

CIVILIZATION (by Dr. George Duhamel, Century) is a piece of the most finished French literature, one of the few real war classics. It is written with profound sympathy, the biting irony of the title throwing into strong relief the beauty and completeness of the human lives that are the victims of what we call civilization. There is in it exalted heroism like that of the early Christians, there is the wistful bravery of women, and there are stories of officialdom. In an extraordinary way it gives the whole range of the war. The author was the surgeon of an ambulance unit at the front, and these are, most of them, stories of wounded soldiers, the men whom he knew, and perhaps the strongest thing about them is their lack of bitterness, for through all his experience he kept his poise. One of the most remarkable of the sketches "Lieutenant Dauche" is a penetrating study of vicarious suffering. "Love and Ponceau" with its humor and simplicity is a delightful picture of marriage. It should be classed as a remarkable volume of short stories rather than as a war book.

Why it should have won a prize is the question raised by the first three chapters of The Flame That is France (by Henry Malherbe, Century.) The imaginary conversations with Love, Memory and Death, figures which should have been august with the majesty of war, are worthy of a college sophomore. But the fragments which follow, hardly more than jottings from a note-book, all the record of personal experience, have a beauty that is amazing and the early chapters are forgotten in the wistful heroism which was the effect of war upon a sensitive poetic temperament.

Bourru, Soldier of France (by Jean Des Vignes Rouges, Dutton) is more obvious than the other two books. He is the usual peasant soldier, honest, plodding devoted, not a distinctive individual but a type, going through the war in a typical way, and it is the war as we commonly imagine it, without the personal accent of vivid observation.

A Scholarly Treatise on the League

THE SOCIETY OF NATIONS. By T. J. Lawrence, LL. D. Oxford University Press, New York. 1919.

This little book has been written for the general reader by one of the most important authorities on international law, a great scholar and a man who has had broad experience in affairs as well. He has attempted here to deal with the great question of the growth of society, to give a short sketch of the historical growth of international law, and then to deal with the war in its relation to the League of Nations. He goes on to consider the question of reconstruction and its relation to international law. He thinks the present moment the most favorable for internationalism history has yet seen, and while he does not believe that all virtues alleged for the League of Nations are necessarily true, he takes an extremely hopeful view of the situation, and feels that the best expedient that can be adopted is some such league of nations as is proposed. The book can be confidently recommended to those who have differed from what has been written on the League of Nations because it was lacking in scholarly basis or because it was too idealistic.

The French State

HOW FRANCE IS GOVERNED. By Raymond Poincaré, Robert M. McBride, New York. 1919.

This is a manual of French government written by the president of the French Republic before he attained his present high position. It describes very briefly the various formal divisions of the French state, the various principles of government and association as the French understand them. It will be a useful work for teachers, and a useful reference book for those who are in a hurry. Needless to say, its lightest words must be carefully considered. It comes as near itself to being an authoritative treatise as any book, large or small, can. Among other features, it provides a brief historical survey of the various institutions discussed. It is distinguished by that clarity which the French know so well how to attain.

R. G. U.

Growth, Not Handcuffs

AMERICA AMONG THE NATIONS. By H. H. Powers. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1919.

The reviewer must admit that, when reading this unusually interesting book, he was much prejudiced against it at the outset by the remark of the author that "With all deference for those who are engaged in the important task of historical research, the writer ventures to doubt whether their labors will seriously modify the data for historical judgments. . . . But knowledge is one thing and interpretation another. Interpretation can never keep pace with knowledge. . . . Interpretations require continual revision. It is to this task that the author ventures his slight contribution." At least Mr. Powers has the virtue of consistency, as the numerous errors of historical fact and judgment abundantly show (see pages 23, 46, 47, 88, 113, 293, 324).

But it is not as an authoritative historical treatise that this book has its value. Its appeal is along an entirely different line of thought and that line is the statement and interpretation of the present position of the United States as a world power, with the factors of transcendent importance that must determine its policy if it is to benefit in the future by both sound statesmanship and real success. In brief, Mr. Powers has the great merit that he looks upon things as they are, not necessarily as we would have them to be. Of all times this is the one in which Americans must face facts. We are standing at the crossroads of nationalism and so-called internationalism. The present choice is one that will effect for good or ill the future of this country for generations to come.

The author's viewpoint is well illustrated by the statement: "The writer has very little faith in our power to institute vital relations of helpfulness between nations by formal agreement. For thirty years Italy was in agreement with Germany and Austria, yet when the crisis came she took the other side. Why? Because she was on the other side all the time. Historic conditions had created between herself and Austria a relation of antagonism which no formal league could remove. This war has been a continuous revelation of the inability of formal agreements to modify the actualities of historic evolution." And again, "It is equally preposterous to assume that the nations can be united for the very practical and perplexing purpose of maintaining the world's peace, on an assumption of equality and universal eligibility. If such a league is to succeed, some nations must be left out. Nations must grow together, not be handcuffed together, and only a union of those that have developed a cohesion of vital tissue can give the slightest promise of permanence or usefulness."

There probably would be no more valuable mental exercise for the average American citizen than a careful reading of this book in conjunction with an equally careful rereading of President Wilson's speeches on the League of Nations both at Boston and at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. Two opposing policies are given and between these policies for good or ill, whether they will or no, the American people must decide. Needless to say, the reviewer believes that Mr. Powers has by far the better of the argument. But he must also raise the question as to just how much more valuable this book would have been had its author been as scholarly and thorough in his knowledge of history as he is in his knowledge of present-day events and problems.

Leadership

THE WORLD WAR AND LEADERSHIP IN A DEMOCRACY. By Richard T. Ely. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1918.

This is a very interesting and valuable book by Dr. Ely, who is so able to write on all great questions of economics and politics; who has proved himself so able a leader in thought in a democracy. The book is full of personal experiences and first-hand impressions in Germany covering a period of many years. But the book is most important in its discussion of the foundations, the ideals and the practice of leadership in public life. The leader must be sound of body and trained in mind and Dr. Ely thinks our American universities admirable for the training of leaders. But he does not think that some of our present political methods such as primary elections and the initiative and referendum make for good leadership. The whole book is intensely timely in these days of threatened Bolshevik ideas when those to whom the world has a right to look for policies that will stem its devastating tide seem to be giving such wavering leadership. Dr. Ely's book closes with a charming and suggestive chapter on "Six Lamps of Social Progress" which he says are: Unity in Diversity, the Idea of Service, The Leadership of the Wise and Good, Liberty, Equality of Opportunity and Fraternity. These are six lamps of architecture which will build up a better world.

Alsace-Lorraine

ALSACE-LORRAINE SINCE 1870. By Barry Cerf. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1919.

This little book on Alsace-Lorraine is an attempt to give a scholarly view of the history of the two provinces, and in particular to deal with their treatment under German rule. There has been a genuine attempt to collect opinions as well as facts, and the opinions in this book are perhaps more interesting to those who are anxious to find out something about history than the facts. It frankly espouses the most extreme claims of Alsace-Lorraine, although it is by no means an intemperate book.

When Mr. Elihu Root was Secretary of War he told the War College that the practical qualities in a soldier were more important than a knowledge of theory. The author seems to be of the same opinion and addresses himself to what Robbie Burns would call the "man within." The manual is official and authoritative and its fifty brief messages on Observation, Precision, Foresight, Respect, Self-Control, Judgment, and Decision and kindred qualities are remarkably replete with excellent ideas not only for the soldier but for all men who would wear the shoulder straps of honorable success in any calling.

Courage

COURAGE. By Jeannette Marks. The Woman's Press, New York. 1919.

Courage, the essence of the art of living, never had more abundant and particular illustration under striking circumstances than during the war. Miss Marks believes normal times also need courage and of a very high order. To her,—and she is not far wrong either,—the lack of self-control, of a healthy mind, of a resolute and happy heart, comes from the neglect of those strong affirmations which are the essentials of victory in living. Ideas being as deadly as shrapnel, let us have the right kind of ideas, says she. For, "no matter what happens, minds can be kept cheerful, appetites keen, laughter ready, thoughts kindly, hearts warm, when courage is in command of the whole personality." Our thoughts must fight for us, not against us; it is time for not a few of us to make a house cleaning of ideas, thoughts and habits, through mental hygiene and sanitation, which will end in the summary ejection of flabbiness, silliness, false ideals of useless and bad habits.

Miss Marks' philosophy is concentrated into one short phrase, originally the rallying cry of Captain Orville Anderson to his men as they charged the enemy—"Let's go in smiling!" R. P. K.

War and Religion

RELIGION AND THE WAR. By E. Hershey Sneath, Ph.D. Yale University Press, New Haven. 1919.

This collection comprising ten essays is not of great value so far as they are intended to throw light upon fundamental questions relating to war and religion. None of the writers except Dr. Bacon has really plowed deep into the lower stratas of human experience as that experience is determined by the content of religion. It is, perhaps, too early to look for great contributions in this direction but in the decades that are just ahead of us, there must come some real interpretative work from Christian scholars, bearing upon the whole problem of war and a Christian civilization.

What Is the Y. M. C. A. Doing?

MORALS AND MORALE. By Luther H. Gulick. Introduction by Raymond B. Fosdick. Association Press, New York. 1919.

Dr. Gulick had the opportunity before his death of studying at first hand the work that is being done for the soldiers of the American Expeditionary Force, for the maintenance of their morale. There is of course a very close relationship between morals and morale. What is the Y. M. C. A. doing, and why? This book is an answer to that question. It deals quite extensively with the vice problem which has been associated with all armies and then shows how our Government at the outset of this present war took a decided stand for the protection of the individual soldier. There had been policing methods and careful medical treatment, but in addition to these there must be a better scheme of introducing positive forces for good. The aggressive work of the "Y" and kindred organizations is described in some detail, and one is delighted to know how much is being done to bring our boys home unharmed. The book is probably not intended for promiscuous reading, but is full of information for those who ought to know.

International Administration

EXPERIMENTS IN INTERNATIONAL ADMINISTRATION. By Francis Bowes Sayre, S.J.D. Harper and Brothers, New York. 1919.

Mr. Sayre has written a useful and timely book. It is a useful treatise because there is a brief treatment of nearly every important effort for the international regulation of permanent conditions which concern two or more states. We find a clear and adequate explanation of the origin, powers, and operation of such bodies as the Universal Postal Union, the European Danube Commission, Moroccan International Police, the International Sugar Commission, and many others.

The book is timely in view of its evident purpose. The author was not composing historical treatise, but making a study of certain institutions in order to ascertain the cause of their success or failure. He aims therefore to furnish information of great value to those engaged on the difficult task of organizing an effective League of Nations.

Mr. Sayre shows that most of the attempts to regulate and control the affairs of nations by an international body have failed. He deduces three causes of failure: virtual impotence of the executive organ; unimportance of object and consequent indifference of member states; and impossibility of conditions at the outset. To the careful reader of this book it seems quite possible to reduce the three causes to one and that is the unwillingness of a nation to yield its proper sovereign power. There is clearly danger in the surrender of authority, and yet it is done by individual and by states, and it always must be done. And yet it is a delicate problem sometime to say how much and what part of proper national authority is to be handed over to an international tribunal. The difficulty is seen in the hopeless divergence between the President and a considerable part of the United States Senate.

It should be added that Mr. Sayre's book shows evidence of wide research and the skilful handling of the vast material.

Mexico

MEXICO TODAY AND TOMORROW. By E. D. Trowbridge. The Macmillan Company New York. 1919.

This is an excellent book and far superior to most of the volumes that have appeared on the subject in the last few years. The author writes well and displays a breadth of view that is refreshing. The following description of Porfirio Diaz shows Mr. Trowbridge's penetration and conciseness: "A man born of the people, he had contempt for the people, . . . knowing his people, he built up for them a paternal form of government which felt of its own weight; a great man in force in decision, in organization, he fell short of greatness in his failure to recognize the inherent weakness of the system he developed, . . . a patriot in desiring the development of the riches of the country, he failed to realize that no development can be real where the mass of the people fail to move forward. . . ."

May 24, 1919

The author is also to be commended for his avoidance of those popular but shallow prejudices which have done so much towards creating the bad feeling which exists between our countrymen and the Mexicans. He is fair to the Roman Church! He even escapes the common fallacy of thinking that the golden age would have begun if Huerta had only been recognized. "The majority of Americans resident in Mexico," he writes, "are of this opinion—even many Mexicans have assumed that if Huerta had received the moral backing of the United States opposition would have ended, and political, social and industrial affairs would have gone on as before. A careful examination of the situation does not seem to justify this view. Those on the ground who support this theory start with the assumption that the Mexican people knew nothing of self-government, and will consequently accept any authority that is supported by arms. . . ."

So excellent is the book and so conducive to instructing our citizens about Mexico in the way that they need to be instructed, both in the interests of truth and international comity, that we hope Mr. Trowbridge's volume may have a wide circulation.

Farm and Village Life

THE FARMER AND THE NEW DAY. By Kenyon L. Butterfield. The Macmillan Company, New York. 1919.

THE LITTLE TOWN, ESPECIALLY IN ITS RURAL RELATIONSHIP. By Harlan Paul Douglas. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1919.

Two books of great value. Every one at all interested in the betterment of humanity will find them most inspiring and helpful in every way. Both books are similar in plan, beginning with a quite complete survey of the past and present conditions of farm and village life. President Butterfield shows how farmers have always suffered from lack of cooperation, and offers a plan of reconstruction of the whole business of farming, a plan far more comprehensive than any yet instituted locally by the Grange, farmers clubs, or the National Secretary of Agriculture. Even if only one farmer in every township would study the appendix of President Butterfield's book a great change would soon be seen in community life. Mr. Douglas' last chapter "The Town's Program," is most fascinating, with its account of Coopersburg, Pennsylvania, a little town of seven hundred and fifty persons, and the wonderful transformation that it experienced from its "program."

Altruism

ALTRUISM, ITS NATURE AND VARIETIES. By George Herbut Palmer. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1919.

This study of altruism by Professor Palmer is lucid, interesting and charming reading. One always says that of Professor Palmer's books. The author intends to be untechnical in his portrayal of the different aspects of the unselfish life. He succeeds. In mutuality is depicted the highest stage of altruism and the author leads the reader up the gradual ascent of doctrine until in true Socratic fashion he is made to acknowledge the truth he has always seemed to know.

SPRING FICTION INCLUDING NOVELS
BY CONRAD, WALPOLE AND BENNETT*A Reading Play*WITHOUT THE WALLS. By Katrina Trask.
The Macmillan Co., New York. 1919.

Mrs. Trask in this new play has projected a very beautiful love story against the background of the Crucifixion in such a way as to bring into high relief the eternal theme to which she has devoted so much of her writing: "When a man loves, he is always near to God." The story of a Pharisee's daughter and a Roman centurion moves with directness and simplicity to a climax falling on the day of the Crucifixion and is written with rare insight into the dominant prejudices and passions of the day and with a sure and refreshing knowledge of the moods and the life of the Jew and the Roman in Jerusalem. Through the light banter of household servants and the graceful songs of dancing girls, through the story of the struggle between love and fixed tradition, through the passages which touch the fundamentals of philosophy and religion, Mrs. Trask has opened a glimpse of real motives and moods of characters living in a great hour. With fine self-restraint—a restraint matching that of the gospel narratives—the scene of the play on a hill without the walls near Golgotha where a Pharisee, a Greek philosopher and a Roman courtier with the lover watch and listen to the report of Jesus' dying words, gives vivid portrayal of the effect of Calvary upon the mind of outsiders. The telling interest and power of this scene rest in the fact that Mrs. Trask has succeeded in giving us with dramatic force the reaction of the minds of men who knew about Jesus but did not know Him, without thrusting into their minds the instinctive thoughts of Christians who think backward to the Crucifixion through the history of its effect upon thought and civilization.

In its range of emotions, in its charm of expression, in the freshness of interest and the sense of abundant life which breathe through both incident and discussion the book gives Mrs. Trask at her very best and evidences the remarkable creative spirit which long illness and severe suffering have only served to make young and dauntless.

Pure RomanceTHE ARROW OF GOLD. By Joseph Conrad.
Doubleday, Page and Company, New York. 1919.

The great romancer, Joseph Conrad, has spun many a web whose warp was the sea and whose woof was love but none of finer texture than The Arrow of Gold. All the coarser, the earthly and material elements have been dropped; it is spun of the gossamer of the spirit. The scene is laid in the souls of two highly sensitive and utterly lonely people. Marseilles and the Carlist revolution serve as a chance background. The fantastic pretensions of the loyalists, the carnival spirit of Marseilles, the motley group of Parisians and Spaniards, Jacobins and relics of the American confederacy, peasants and pretenders, create an atmosphere in which the fantasmagoria of the love of Dona Rita and Monsieur George fits. Yet the story the novel unfolds is not in the slightest degree affected by Carlist defeat or victory. Even the sea adventures of Monsieur George are never described. It is their effect on his taut nerves that make them necessary as the warp of the tale. Never has Henry James with more meticulous relentlessness laid bare the interplay of soul on soul, than has Conrad exhibited the pursuit of the fugitive boy from the arrow of gold hurled after him by the seductive Rita.

But the reviewer's task is hopeless. Conrad can't be described nor can his characters be analyzed in a paragraph. The romanticist will read and understand and thank the muses for Conrad's art. The prosaic had far better be satisfied to leave The Arrow of Gold where Monsieur George abandoned it—at the bottom of the sea.

An African StoryTHE CRESCENT MOON. By Francis Bret Young. E. P. Dutton and Company, New York.

A story of Africa at the beginning of the war, written with considerable ability by a medical officer in the British service. But it is more than a novel; it is meant to make Europeans feel the horror of Africa at its very worst, in order that the difficulties of explorers, administrators and missionaries may be realized, and it contains also a ghastly description of the most vicious German management of the natives. The highest commendation that can be given the author is the simple statement of his success in telling so frightful a story without falling into rhodomontade. But strong nerves are needed in reading this book.

One certainly feels, however, that Dr. Young has gone too far in killing off every single character except the heroine, and that his villain is a little too diabolic to be creditable. And certainly no missionary society ever turned loose so miraculously inefficient a worker as is here depicted at great length. But the portrait of the heroine is beautifully drawn, an innocent girl, carried into the midst of unutterable physical and moral mire, who comes out spotless at the end.

Arnold Bennett AgainTHE ROLL-CALL. By Arnold Bennett.
George H. Doran Company, New York. 1919.

Arnold Bennett should stick to the Four Towns if he is going to write a novel which depends largely for its possibility upon local color and the effect of environment. No one could be influenced by the Bursleyized London and Paris which are supposed to play such a large part in evolving an architectural genius out of the crude provincial material of his hero,

May 24, 1919

George Cannon. We are told a great deal about his growth and development but it is as unconvincing as Mrs. Humphry Ward's assurances that her characters are brilliant conversationalists—with the conversation always left out. George does not inevitably forge ahead. We are amazed at the periodic statement of his achievements. All the other characters have an over-accented artificiality which checks any reality of action so that at the end of the book when we reach August, 1914, the war seems merely the climax arranged by a too clever novelist. The Paper Cap

THE PAPER CAP. By Amelia E. Barr. Appleton and Company, New York. 1918.

The title of this book is filled with the ritual of labor and the romance of symbolism for the paper cap was the emblem adopted nearly a century ago in the early days of the struggle of labor for the Reform Bill in England. The book is as full of interest as the title. The social and industrial conditions of picturesque rural towns where sweet maidens and honest youth and charming grandmothers and stubborn though sterling grandfathers, all with their passions and dreams are busy working out their immediate interests while unconsciously through them democracy is working greater ends for the freedom of labor and the readjustment of industrial conditions, are skillfully presented to the imagination of the reader who is interested, pleased and in the end understands why the author dedicated The Paper Cap to Mr. Samuel Gompers. Another Hugh Walpole Novel

THE SECRET CITY. By Hugh Walpole. George H. Doran Company, New York. 1919.

"In each man's heart there is a secret city and before its altars the true prayers are offered" an old Russian proverb which is not only the theme of this novel, but seems, to an Englishman, to be the clue to the present situation in Russia. The story centers in the life of one family living in Petrograd during the first revolution, when the czar was deposed. It is scarcely a sequel to The Dark Forest, as it is complete in itself, but it is supposed to be written, in the first person, by Durward the same half detached English observer, and Semyonov, the doctor, appears again a baleful influence in the background. Behind all the action of the book we feel Russia, not as a country, but as a breathing of mysterious forces, mystic, brutal and incalculable. The people seem a race of idealists turned cynics because of the futile individualism of their ideals. Each man sedulously tending the fire on the altar of his own secret city, hoping by its blaze to set the world on fire, ignoring the altars of his neighbors, which act as backfires, flame quenching flame, and then among the ashes they are all seized by a sort of divine frenzy, with its inevitable accompaniment of bloodshed, for it is easier to kill than it is to convert.

France, a Hundred Years Ago

JACQUOU THE REBEL. By Eugene le Roy. E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 1919.

Those who feel that the world moves slowly should read this story of the con-

"You're Afraid!"

"I AIN'T afraid."

"You are."

"I ain't."

"You are."

What would have happened next if you were a boy? A frightful mix-up. With the calm unreasonableness of youth these two boys fought without even knowing each other—just as you have fought many a time—just because you couldn't help it.

MARK TWAIN

25 Volumes—Novels. Boys' Stories. Humor. Essays. Travel. History.

No wonder our soldiers and sailors like Mark Twain best. No wonder the boys at Annapolis told Secretary Daniels that they would rather have Mark Twain than any one else. To them, as to you, Mark Twain is the spirit of undying youth—the spirit of real Americanism—for he who came out of that loafing—out-at-elbows—down-at-the-heels Mississippi town—he has passed on to the world the glory of our inspiring Americanism—the serious purpose that underlies our laughter—for to Mark Twain humor is only incidental—and he has made eternal the springs of its youth and enthusiasm.

Take Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer by the hand and go back to your own boyhood.

A Big Human Soul

Perhaps you think you have read a good deal of Mark Twain. Are you sure? Have you read all the novels? Have you read all the short stories? Have you read all the brilliant fighting essays?—all the humorous ones and the historical ones?

Think of it—25 volumes filled with the laughter and the tears and the fighting that made Mark Twain so wonderful. He was a bountiful giver of joy and humor. He was yet much more, for, while he laughed with the world, his lonely spirit struggled with the sadness of human life, and sought to find the key. Beneath the laughter is a big human soul, a big philosopher.

Low Price Sale Must Stop

Mark Twain wanted every one in America to own a set of his books. So one of the last things he asked was that we make a set at so low a price that every one might own it. He said: "Don't make fine editions. Don't make editions to sell for $200 and $300 and $1,000. Make good books, books good to look at and easy to read, and make their price low." So we have made this set. And up to now we have been able to sell it at this low price. Rising costs make it impossible to continue the sale of Mark Twain at a low price. New editions will cost very much more than this Author's National Edition. But now the price must go up. You must act at once. You must sign and mail the coupon now. If you want a set at a popular price, do not delay. This edition will soon be withdrawn, and then you will pay considerably more for your Mark Twain.

The last of the edition is in sight. There will never again be a set of Mark Twain at the present price. Now is your opportunity to save money. Now is the time to send the coupon to get your Mark Twain.

dition of the peasants in France only one hundred years ago. In comparison, its worst conditions of today seem a different order of life on an immeasurably higher scale. The simple sincerity and closeness to nature with which it is treated give a charm even to the grim tragedy of the life of the boy who is the hero of the book.

to indisputable facts. We have to go on, in loyalty to the men who sleep beneath the poppies in Flanders' fields. But it is a tragic thing that religion has to be left out of the covenant, and we have a constitution of the world, with no provision for religious liberty."

Relative to the social work of the Church and community relation, the council declared the next ten years should see the Protestant and Roman communions working together with the Greek and Hebrew peoples in social effort.

A resolution was adopted urging enactment and strict enforcement of laws to carry the prohibition amendment to the federal constitution.

Methods by which the Church can aid in the solution of industrial problems were suggested by Colonel Raymond Robins, Bishop Fallows of Chicago, and Bishop McConnell of Denver.

The Rev. Dr. Tomkins of Philadelphia favored evangelistic campaigns, but that each pastor should do his own evangelistic work in his own church.

After the council had voted to admit the editors of the religious press to membership, the editors represented at the meeting, organized "The Editorial Council of the Religious Press." It is planned to take into this organization, editors of the entire religious press of America, having a combined circulation of 34,000,000 copies weekly and monthly.

OBITUARY

BENNETT—May 14, 1919, at Children's Seashore House, Atlantic City, New Jersey. William Henry Bennett, M. D., Founder and President of St. Christopher's Hospital for Children, Philadelphia, Pa., President of the Seaside House for Invalid Women, Atlantic City, New Jersey; President of the Children's Seashore House, and its Physician-in-Charge for forty-seven years.

He has fought a good fight. He has been an heroic benefactor of men and of every form of suffering and helplessness; a great organizer, and with all so modest and unobtrusive. He has been the good Physician and helped the souls as well as the bodies of the multitudes of the host to whom he has ministered. He surely has won his crown. May he rest in peace.

A FRIEND.

THE REVEREND TALIAFERRO FRANKLIN CASKEY, D.D.

The realization of the end of all earthly association with one whose intimate friendship was enjoyed for over half a century brings with it a shock that numbs the adequate expression of our sorrow. We long for another word, another look, another touch. There was something in the personality of Dr. Caskey that gave one the impression of inherent strength, reserved force and an assertive positiveness. His genial happy and kind disposition endeared him to all who knew him. He was born near Fort Black, Darke County, Ohio, August 28, 1838. He graduated from Yale College with the class of 1865, and completing later his theological course at Union Seminary, New York, was ordained in 1868.

He had scarcely begun his ministry when he was called to Trinity Church, Williamsport. Here he built a costly stone church. Failing health compelled him to take a sea voyage. Returning in more vigorous health he accepted a call to the rectorship of St. John's, Dresden, Germany, which at that time had no building and a small congregation. In less than two years after he had again crossed the ocean, funds were collected and a beautiful stone church was erected, to which later was added a stone rectory. After eighteen years of successful labor he returned as Rector Emeritus, receiving from St. John's College, Annapolis, the degree of Doctor of Divinity. For a short time he was able to take duty and was rector of the Church of the Holy Comforter, Baltimore; St. Mark's, Danville, Illinois; and St. John's, Barrytown, New York, and Christ Church, East Norwalk, Connecticut. Here he ministered until failing strength made it necessary for him to entirely cease from all work. In his own home at Southport, he peacefully fell asleep on Easter Tuesday.

We thus briefly sketch a life that made itself a history of patient work and enduring ardor. His example will be remembered and appealed to, and his thoughts, his spirit and his courage will continue to be the inspiration of all who knew him.

"There was the door to which I found no key; There was the veil through which I could not see;

Some little talk awhile of me and Thee
There was—and then no more of Thee and me."

TURNER—Entered into Life Eternal at Philadelphia May 2nd, 1919, Rev. William R. Turner, beloved husband of Theresa Lawrence Turner.

Burial services were conducted by Bishop Garland and Rev. Charles Shreiner at Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia. Interment at Harrisburg, Pa. Rev. Mr. Turner was born in Rochester, England, April 3, 1860, ordained a Priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church by Bishop De Wolf Howe of the Diocese of Central Pennsylvania in 1887. From 1888 to 1895 he was Assistant Rector of Grace Church, Baltimore, Md. For two years assistant to Dr. Randolph H. McKim at Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C. In 1897 he became Rector of St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Washington, where he remained eight years. He came to the Diocese of Pennsylvania in 1907 and was Rector of Memorial Church of St. Paul, Overbrook, for ten years.

Mr. Turner was regarded as one of the forceful speakers among Philadelphia Clergy men. Wherever he went he took with him high ideals of life and service, and gave himself unsparringly to his ministry. His was a radiant personality and the impression he made on all who knew him was indelible.

"A brave, true, loyal man, and a faithful witness of the Gospel of Our Lord Jesus Christ."

A National Church Weekly

Third Edition

The New Hymnal

with both Words and Music

The Second Edition of 100,000 copies has not yet been published, but the remarkable demand for the NEW HYMNAL has caused the Church Hymnal Corporation (Acting for the Joint Commission of the General Convention) to arrange for a Third Edition of 250,000 copies.

In an effort to assist the apparently universal desire for congregational singing,—the psychological effect of which is so far-reaching,—and in order that all parishes may feel able to secure THE NEW HYMNAL, the following terms are offered:—

Price to Churches $1.05 a copy and carrying charges.

5% with order.

5% upon delivery.

10% monthly thereafter for nine months.

These terms apply to orders of 100 copies and upward received directly. Small parishes may secure the benefit of these terms by placing orders through their Diocesan Committee on the Church Pension Fund.

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS

Training for Authorship

How to write, what to write, and where to sell.

Cultivate your mind. Develop your literary gifts. Master the art of self-expression. Make your spare time profitable. Turn your ideas into dollars.

Courses in Short-Story Writing, Versification, Journalism, Play Writing, Photoplay Writing, etc., taught personally by Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, for many years editor of Lippincott's Magazine, and a staff of literary experts. Constructive criticism. Frank, honest, helpful advice. Real teaching.

One pupil has received over $5,000 for stories and articles written mostly in spare time—"play work," he calls it. Another pupil received over $1,000 before completing her first course. Another, a busy wife and mother, is averaging over $75 a week from photoplay writing alone.

There is no other institution or agency doing so much for writers, young or old. The universities recognize this, for over one hundred members of the English faculties of higher institutions are studying in our Literary Department. The editors recognize it, for they are constantly recommending our courses.

We publish The Writer's Library. We also publish The Writer's Monthly, especially valuable for its full reports of the literary market. Besides our teaching service, we offer a manuscript criticism service.

RUSSIA'S PRICELESS TREASURES

BOOK-LOVERS are wondering what has become of the wonderful Imperial Library at Petrograd during the upheaval in Russia. The literary treasures in the library include the Codex Sinaiticus—that remarkable fourth century book containing almost the whole of the New Testament in Greek. The volume was bought by Tischendorf at the convent of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai and is priceless. There are only two other similar books known —the Codex Alexandrensis in the British Museum and the Codex Vaticanus in Rome.

FATHER FIGGIS

NO account of Figgis would be complete that ignored his sense of humour. Like many others similarly placed he was constantly besought by elderly ladies anxious for spiritual advice. He was, I have heard, a good, though occasionally surprising, spiritual director; and he attached importance to this side of his duties. Once, after a morning when a succession of such visitors had prevented an eagerly desired visit to the British Museum, he defended himself. "Prigs would say that I waste my time. Yet old women have souls like more interesting people!" A pause. "But why were they made so incredibly dull?" And all his friends rejoiced in the story of one who travelled with him when newly habited in the Mirfield garb. An old Irish woman, seeing him so attired, flopped down on the platform at Paddington. "Your blessing, Father." Figgis replied, "God bless us all, my good woman. Get up."

Figgis' untidiness was triumphant and unashamed. It was the source of innumerable stories, some true, some doubtless apocryphal. To see him, a guest in your house, preparing a sermon in his bedroom, was agonising. He would be writing on the back of an old envelope with a scrubby pencil-end. A cigarette would be burning itself out in the soap-dish. A collar would be propping open the Christian Year. A fountain-pen, which had refused to write because ink oozed everywhere save through the nib, would have left ample signs of its presence on the tablecloth and would be literally marking the place in the latest novel (its back broken), from which Figgis intended to quote. The story is probably a malicious invention which tells of the Bishop's wife who complained that whenever he came to the Palace she had to raise the wages of the housemaid who waited upon him. But word certainly went round at Cambridge that you must never stay as his guest for more than one night in Mirfield. Before you arrived the housekeeper made the bed; on succeeding nights according to the rules of the house the duty fell to your host. He who had once tried to sleep on a bed that Figgis had made arose with an enhanced understanding of the possibilities of mediæval torture. The Challenge.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS

WE publish this week the third and last of the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell's series on certain reconstruction problems. The much delayed article bearing Dean Ladd's name is part of his inaugural address which awakened warm interest at the time of its delivery. Henry Bradford Washburn, Jr., who writes on fishing, is THE CHURCHMAN's youngest contributor, having not yet passed his ninth birthday.
It is pleasant to record that during the year we have had among our contributors three generations of the Washburn family.

CLINTON ROGERS WOODRUFF, after twenty-five years' service as secretary of the National Municipal League, has resigned from that important post. He was elected at the first meeting held in New York City and has served continuously ever since. He gives as his reason for retirement the fact that this movement for higher municipal standards and democratic city government has developed to a point where the duties require more time than it is possible for him to give.

THE REV. BARRETT P. TYLER, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, New Jersey, has been called to Trinity Church, Chicago. Mr. Tyler was chaplain of the 325th Infantry in France, and was wounded. He made a great impression in Chicago as noonday preacher at the Majestic Theatre in Holy Week.

THE REV. HENRY LUBECK, LL.D., after a sojourn in California of six months and a half, is returning to New York to keep several engagements in and near the city. During his residence on the Pacific coast Dr. Lubeck delivered many lectures, sermons and addresses in San Diego, Coronado, Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, Montecito and San Francisco. In one of these places he conducted a preaching mission. Several urgent requests have been made him to take up permanent work in California, and he is now seriously considering some of these. His appointments for this summer in the East include one Sunday at St. Andrew's Dune Church, Southampton, Long Island; six Sundays at the Church of the Transfiguration, Norfolk, Connecticut, and nine Sundays in Grace Church, New York City.

THE REV. HENRY K. SHERRILL has been elected rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Boston, to succeed the Rev. Reginald Heber Howe. Mr. Sherrill, who was for three years assistant to Dr. Mann at Trinity Church and later chaplain of Base Hospital No. 6, has accepted and will assume his new duties in the autumn.

THE REV. WALTER WILLIAMS, for the past eighteen months assistant minister at St. James' Church, Richmond, Virginia, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Emmanuel Church, Harrisonburg, and will begin his ministry there the first week in June. His address will be 660 South Main Street, Harrisonburg, Virginia.

THE REV. EARLE WENTWORTH HUCKEL will become assistant minister in Calvary Church, Germantown, Philadelphia, on June 1. His address will be The Rectory, 318 Manheim Street, Germantown, Philadelphia.

THE REV. HENRY SMART, B.D., assistant rector at Zion and St. Timothy's Church, New York, received the degree of doctor in divinity (in course) from University of King's College, Windsor, Nova Scotia, at the commencement exercises on May 8.

THE REV. A. A. MCCALLUM, who has been in France for eighteen months as chaplain of the 149th Field Artillery, has returned and taken up his parish work at St. Elizabeth's Church, Glencoe, Illinois.

THE REV. ROYAL K. TUCKER, formerly chaplain captain of the 102 Ammunition Train, 27th Division, A. E. F., has taken the locum tenency of St. James' Church, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, for the summer.

THE REV. CHARLES EDWIN HILL, who for the past two years has been doing post graduate work at Columbia University and the General Theological Seminary, has accepted a position as assistant at Trinity Chapel, New York. Since last autumn he has assisted at the Sunday services, but on October 1 will be added to the regular staff.

THE REV. WILLIAM LAWRENCE WOOD, of the Diocese of Western Massachusetts, chaplain of Bellevue Hospital Unit, No. 1, A. E. F., recently returned from France, has undertaken temporarily the care of the missions at Santa Paula and Fillmore in the Diocese of Los Angeles, made vacant by the resignation of the Rev. A. J. G. Dowie.

THE REV. BENJAMIN T. TREGO, from the Diocese of Albany, has taken charge of St. Clement's Mission, Huntington Park, a growing suburb of Los Angeles.

THE REV. WILLIS P. GERHART, of St. Elmo, Tennessee, began his duties as rector of St. John's Church, Charleston, South Carolina, on May 11. Mr. Gerhart succeeds the Rev. G. Croft Williams.

MISS GRACE McCULLOUGH, of Calvary Church, Ashland, Kentucky, who has been over seas engaged in Red Cross service, returned during April.

A MEETING OF THE EXAMINING CHAPLAINS of the Diocese of Lexington was held recently, at which Mr. Ira D. Lang, candidate for holy orders, now in charge of the work at Bellevue-Dayton, was examined for the diaconate; and the Rev. W. B. Dern, deacon, formerly general missionary of the diocese, for the priesthood.

ALL COMMUNICATIONS intended for the secretary of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Lexington should be addressed to the Venerable F. B. Wentworth, Winchester, Kentucky.

THE REV. WILLIAM H. JONES, chaplain 135 Field Artillery, A. E. F., has reached home, and resumed his duties as rector of Trinity Church, Warren, Pennsylvania.

THE REV. WILLIAM E. VAN DYKE, who was in France under the Y. M. C. A., has returned to his parish. St. Luke's, Smethport, Pennsylvania. The locum tenens, the Rev. Elijah H. Edson, who was presented a purse of gold amounting to $500 as a token of appreciation for his very efficient work from the members of St. Luke's and friends and Red Cross workers of Smethport, has become civilian chaplain at Camp Lee.

THE REV. HARRY L. TAYLOR, Ph.D., rector of Trinity Church, Erie, has returned after his leave of absence in Florida and resumed charge on the first Sunday in May.

THE REV. CLAUDE C. THOMSON, the locum tenens, has been appointed by Bishop Israel, minister-in-charge of Holy Cross Church, North East, Pennsylvania.

THE REV. RICHARD E. BALDWIN has taken charge of the work at Brookville, Pennsylvania.

THE REV. FREDERICK WELHAM is minister-in-charge of St. Andrew's Parish, Clearfield, Pennsylvania.

THE REV. W. A. RENDER, who has for some years been in charge of the missions at Trumansburg and Interlaken, New York, has resigned, and will remove from the Diocese of Central New York.

THE REV. CYRIL HARRIS, late in army work and formerly holding a similar position in the University of Michigan, has been made student pastor at Cornell University through the efforts of the General Board of Religious Education. Under normal conditions he will find not less than 600 students affiliated with the Church.

THE REV. THATCHER KIMBALL of Epiphany Church, Dorchester, Massachusetts retains the services of a woman who visits the homes of his parish for the express purpose of helping parents to guide the religious education of their children. This worker also holds classes for small groups and is recognized by the parish as specializing in the spiritual development of home life.

THE REV. S. U. MITMAN, D. D. resigned as field secretary of the Province of Washington. Dr. Mitman has contributed to the teacher training and church Sunday School development of the province. He continues his work as professor of Religious Education at the Philadelphia Divinity School, and has accepted the position of warden of Leonard Hall, which is to become the preliminary training school for Bishop Talbot's candidates for the ministry.

THE REV. GEORGE LONG, the executive secretary of the Province of the Mid-West has an unique work. He is the first administrative officer in the Church to be elected and paid by a synod. Through him the Mid-West will attempt the interesting experiment of having one officer through whom all missionary educational and social service work in the province will be unified. He is a member of all commissions and committees. They have the privilege of requesting from him such executive work as calling meetings and carrying out, from an administrative point of view, the programs and plans which committees and commissions determine. He will know the personnel of the province, discover those men who are equipped to make special contributions in missions, education and social service and direct their energies so that the efforts will count in provincial life.

THE REV. MALCOLM TAYLOR, chairman of the Board of Education of the Province of New England, in his own parish, St. Thomas' Church, Taunton, Massachusetts, has retained Mr. J. Franklin Hawkes, one of the high school teachers as lay educational assistant to the rector. Mr. Hawkes is the son of a clergyman, and deeply interested in religious educational work from the lay teacher's point of view. He has revealed a rare capacity to interest and hold boys. The educational planning and administration of the parish will be largely in his hands.

THE REV. DAVID VINCENT GRAY has given up his work at St. Mark's, Pittsburgh, and has become priest in charge of St. Andrews's, New Kensington, Pennsylvania. He is already at work in his new field of labor.

"How Do You Do, Mr. Riley?"

"'Onct when I was ist a little girl'—only four years old—mother and I were down town and I saw you not far away. I broke away from mother, ran up to you, and said 'how do you do, Mr. Riley?' I shall never forget the wonderful smile on your face when you turned, and saw me, a tiny little tot. You bowed and spoke to me as though I were a queen, and when I told you I knew 'most all of your child rhymes and enjoyed them very much you were as pleased as if some man of letters had complimented you. That, Mr. Riley, is one of my finest memories."

So wrote a grown-up little girl to James Whitcomb Riley.

Are you giving your children the precious memories of those beautiful poems? Will your children be able to say—"My mother read me Riley when I was a child—and the 'Raggedy Man' and 'Little Orphant Annie' have rejoiced and comforted me all the days of my life?"

James

has passed on—and the grown-up world mourns. In the hearts of the little children is a void that cannot be filled—but that can be forgotten by the reading and re-reading of those simple and childlike poems.

No more does Uncle Sam's postman stagger under the weight of 10,000 letters—the tribute of the children of the world to their Uncle Sydney (James Whitcomb Riley) on his birthday. Riley has passed on, but his work lives. You can read it to your children—and enrich their lives and yours for all times.

Those of us who missed things in childhood—missed learning to ride or to swim—feel that there is a lack that can never be made up. Even more is this so with things of the spirit. The child whose imagination has been enriched by the beauty and charm of Riley, carries a treasure to old age—a treasure hard to get later on.

From the little girl who said she felt all alone without him to the President of the United States, who pays him tribute, Riley is in all hearts—big and little.

Now at a Specially Reduced Price

The heirs of James Whitcomb Riley came to us, as the publishers of Mark Twain, and said that they would be glad to reduce their royalty so that we could place his works in the homes of all those who love him. So we are able to make this complete set of all Riley's works, beautifully illustrated by Howard Chandler Christy and others—at a very low price—for the present.

THE BISHOP OF NEW YORK

THE Bishop of New York is more than a bishop of an American diocese. He is permitted by the privilege of his office to be a conspicuous citizen of the nation. The whole American people claim him for a servant. They are eager to trust and follow him; but if he disappoint them, they forget him and go their way. His office opens opportunity, it does not win him distinction.

The lavish testimony of affection for Bishop Greer which followed the announcement of his death is very instructive. It would have amazed him, we think, but it would have made him very happy to know that people had all along, during the quiet years of his episcopate, understood and valued him for what he most desired to be—a Christian. When the news ran through the city that our bishop was dead, the Christian instinct leaped unerringly to the right word of eulogy. People said the praise he most wished to have earned. There were more glittering things that might have been counted to his honor, but it is a dangerous sign when men take for granted that a public servant is a Christian and forget to phrase in their gratitude and grief just what the winning grace of it has meant to them. So it was, we say, instructive that people far and wide spoke of the beloved Bishop of New York as a Christian, and then paused as having said the final and meaningful word.

A bishop's office can be a simpler thing than we sometimes make it to appear. We think that Bishop Greer taught us that. Apparently it never occurred to him that he was a conspicuous person. But it weighed heavily upon his conscience that he was a responsible person, responsible to his Church and his Lord and Master Jesus Christ. What men expected of him did not trouble him overmuch. But he did sorely want to understand and do the thing that his Master expected of him. We think that it must have been this which made him seem so simple and so humble always.

As the years of bitterness engendered by the war recede in the background, and as Christians become able to examine, without too passionate and personal a reference, what the war has meant, we think that the American Church will be very proud to remember how the bishop of our largest diocese carried himself through those febrile years of the horrible conflict. Bishop Greer was too humble-minded to think that he might not be wrong in his opinion of a Christian's part in war. There are individualists who shout their opinion the louder when they find that theirs is the only voice. But the bishop, with the steadfast loyalty of the saints, refused to violate his Christian instinct by joining in the chorus of those who shouted their hate on the street corners and from the housetops cried out their convictions "of the one way out." Loyal Christians find in the gospels many lights to guide them. These lights do not always illumine converging roads to one clear duty. It was natural that Bishop Greer should have read the Master's words about forgiveness, loving one's enemies and turning the other cheek, and have been puzzled and saddened by what he saw around him. At the great meeting in Madison Square Garden when Major Whittlesey, the hero of the lost battalion, said, "You don't find men in the trenches hating the Germans. If I met the Kaiser I should offer him a cigarette," Bishop Greer turned to some one sitting next him on the platform with the remark: "If I had said that they would have hissed me." The Gospel's appealing message of love, ringing clear as a silver bell, left our bishop with a troubled conscience throughout the war. He looked at the wickedness and growing hate, stunned and mystified. His attitude troubled some earnest Christians who saw in the heat of righteous indignation their shining duty; but we wonder if we shall not some day, all of us, see that the bishop's perplexity over the war came from thoughts of the heart deeper than those of many of his brothers, equally sincere, who saw singly and with the crowd.

We recall his saying in the midst of the war, "I am amazed to know that there is so much wickedness in the world." That was not the naïve confession of one who had lived securely above the currents of evil and cruelty in life. The wickedness which stunned him was a new wickedness which the war was revealing, a wickedness not in the heart of men, for he trusted men, but in the heart of civilization. How a thing that looked and spoke so fair could go so wrong was an enigma that perplexed and saddened him. It is not greatly to our credit that the perplexity of that problem did not lead many more among us to ask whether organized Christianity had not in receiving the world's subsidy made a tragic surrender of loyalty to its Master.

We may well be happy that during those years of hate and fear, Bishop Greer uttered no word which need cause him regret today as he sees in the radiant love of the Christ how much a heart of love means in the Kingdom of Heaven. That is all that matters now.

CHURCH UNITY AND ROME

THE report which has for some weeks been unofficially circulated in our daily papers has now been confirmed—the Roman Catholic Church will not take part in the World Conference. Cardinal Gasparri stated the reason: "The unity of the Church, in the opinion of Rome, can only occur by all returning to the Roman Catholic Church." The Pope is said to have added that he by no means disapproved of the participation in the conference of those not united with the chair of St. Peter, but on the contrary he earnestly desired and prayed that those who take part in it may, by the grace of God, see the light and reunite with the visible head of the Church, by whom they will be received with open arms.

The envoys of the commission, Bishops Anderson,

Weller and Vincent, Dr. Parsons and Dr. Rogers, have performed the duty entrusted to the commission by the General Convention,—to bring about a conference for the consideration of questions touching faith and order and to ask all Christian communions throughout the world which confess our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour to unite with us in arranging for and conducting such a conference.

The Roman Church is such a communion. It has been asked to take part in the conference. It has refused to do so. But it desires that those who may take part in the conference may see the light and return to the open arms of the mother Church. For these kind wishes, much thanks!

Undoubtedly, in the years that are to come, we shall journey to Rome again and even again, and we shall be told, as often as we journey thither, what we long ago knew, that there is only one way by which Rome can approach the question of unity—the submission of alien communions. It is well for Christendom that Rome is obdurate and is not wise enough to make concessions. Were she more flexible, more statesmanlike, some fine day she might by a winsome show of yielding entice Anglicanism back into her motherly arms. That would be a tragic event for Christendom.

No peace with Rome until Rome is no longer Rome! THE CHURCHMAN has no tears nor regrets over the Vatican's polite "No." It is, indeed, hard for us to write upon this matter except with our tongue in our cheek.

MAZZINI'S PRINCIPLE OF UNITY

WHEN we see in the various Churches of Christendom evidences of a common conception of spiritual liberty, we shall begin to dream dreams of a united Christendom, but not before.

Few men loved liberty or hated militarism more than did Mazzini, but when he was urged to attend the peace conference at Lucerne, he refused to go, for he argued that peace could not become the law of human society until that society had passed through a conflict which should establish life and association on the foundation of justice and liberty. He concluded with these words:

Duty points the way to the object we should seek: that is, the triumph of the moral law, and the suppression of whatever stands in the way of its fulfillment; the reconstitution of Europe; the sovereignty of the free and equal associated nations; aid from all to all for the emancipation of those who are oppressed, for the relief of those who suffer, and for the education, the independence, the armament of all.

This object—why not say it?—is a last great holy crusade, a battle of Marathon in the service of Europe for the triumph of the principle of progress over the principle of inertia and reaction.

Mazzini was right. To have bound together feudal nations in a league with democratic peoples when they shared no community of interest in human liberty would only have shackled the processes by which liberty is attained. Only free states can become partners in a democratic enterprise. The war has taught us how impossible it is to have a world safe for democratic, non-militaristic peoples while feudal wolves are at large among the nations. Imagine, for example, a league of nations to enforce peace with William Hohenzollern or Bismarck at the table! Leagues and unions without a common spirit are doomed to be fruitless. Our hope in the League of Nations today rests entirely upon the success of the democratic impulse governing the great nations of the world. Without that common impulse, no league can bind peoples together for the pursuit of a beneficent purpose.

Mazzini, as the event proved, was wise in not attending the conference at Lucerne. It would have been only a waste of his precious hours. Italy, struggling to shake off her chains and stumbling forward into national liberty, could not link arms with the Austrian tyrant in the pursuit of justice and liberty. It would have been hypocrisy for any two nations in Europe at that time to use the same words to describe their purpose, for they shared no purpose. No artificial bonds could bring them into political unity.

Is Christendom as a whole ready today for Christian unity? We see no evidence of such preparedness. Certain Churches will need to pass through a revolution as radical as that which has of late swept through Europe before unity would be a blessing rather than a menace to Christianity. We think that the war has helped us to see wherein to look for unity in religion. It will never come and would not be worth having even if by cleverness we could encompass the end, until the Churches acquire a larger measure of the spiritual freedom that is in Christ Jesus. In His freedom there is unity. The Episcopal Church will not make concessions to Rome. Why need we do so? The road on which we shall travel towards unity is in quite another direction.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

A LEAGUE THAT WILL SAVE

THE announcement of Mr. Henry P. Davison, president of the American Red Cross, that a league of Red Cross societies has been established with headquarters in Geneva, stirs the imagination. Its aim is so beneficent, so practical of such common sense that one wonders why we needed the war to set it shining in our hearts.

The objects of the society are to promote in every country of the world a voluntary, national Red Cross organization, having as its purpose the improvement of health, the prevention of disease and the mitigation of suffering, and to promote the welfare of mankind by furnishing the medium of knowledge to prevent disease and to treat it and to spur properly constituted agencies to swift and efficient work. What we hope to accomplish might be put under three heads: to develop everywhere a greater sense of responsibility toward mankind; to distribute throughout the world scientific knowledge on the same basis to all, and to provide a sure method of cooperation and coordination in meeting international disasters.

Isn't it cruel and stupid and disgraceful that any large portion of the human race should possess the knowledge and the material resources with which to prevent plagues and famines among other portions of the race and yet should sit idly by and do nothing? Of course something has been done—after the famine and the plague are in full swing, we send relief. But that is a stupid way for intelligent people to conduct their affairs.

The league of Red Cross societies proposes to use both the intelligence and the material resources of the civilized world to prevent disease throughout the world.

THE UNITED OFFERING MINIMUM WAGE

EVERYTHING that is being said about the inadequacy of the clergyman's stipend could be said with equal justice about the inadequacy of the woman worker's salary, and this besides: the superannuated deaconess or parish visitor has no Pension Fund.

A salary standard has been set for the foreign missionary; she receives a stipend ranging from $600 to $1100 according to her length of service. A standard of training has also been set for her. The degree of professional excellence which characterizes the work of women in the foreign missions of the Church is sufficient proof of the wisdom of insistence by the Board of Missions on these standards. But in the domestic field where appointment is made by the bishop, this is not the case. Rumor has it that one deaconess in the southern mountains is living on $250 a year. The records at the Church Missions House show that there are many United Offering workers who receive between $300 and $400 a year. The conference committee of the Woman's Auxiliary is trying to insist upon the same standard of training and of salary at least for those women appointed under the United Offering for work in this country as obtains for those in the foreign missions service. They have set $600 a year as the minimum wage. This will improve the condition of many missionaries. But it is a grave question whether the Woman's Auxiliary should go on record as tolerating even $600 as a minimum wage.

LEXINGTON FARMERS AND PROHIBITION

MOST of us had settled down into the conviction that prohibition, by the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution, had made its fight and won. By due process of law the country had made known its will and that will was to be made effective. But apparently such is not the case. The opponents of national prohibition are writing and speaking as if the law can be made a dead letter without first taking it from the statute books. First labor is being encouraged to say "no beer, no work." People who like to smoke an after-dinner cigar are being made the targets of "propaganda" to induce them to think that it is their turn next. The other day we received a comely little envelope filled with an enticing invitation to attend a great mass meeting to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York, in behalf of a movement to kill the eighteenth amendment. The invitation opened with this moral falsetto: "By the presence of its best and most representative citizens, let New York show the country in no uncertain way, that it stands now, and will forever stand, for those things for which the soldiers of the American Revolution fought. One hundred and forty-four years ago the Lexington farmers fired the shot that was heard round the world."

How the scions of our ancient stock ought to flock to the Garden when they hear that ringing call! The hypocrisy of this agitation against prohibition is blushingly evident. The liquor interests are not interested in a long fight to repeal the eighteenth amendment. They are not willing to wait ten or fifteen years to wipe out the amendment. What they aim to do is to make it a dead letter. They are urging people to defy the law. Decent citizens can take only one position. Obey the law until it is repealed. The country has voted to try national prohibition. It will be tried. It would be well to heed the warning which Bishop Lawrence gave in his recent convention address:

Timid and conservative people are shaking in their shoes at the sound of Bolshevism and lawlessness. They insist that the laws must be observed and that those who disobey or evade them are dangerous characters. Some of us who are not Bolsheviks will soon have a chance to test that out. Soon the execution of war prohibition and later of constitutional prohibition will begin. The question will then be not that of temperance, but of loyalty. . . . The point is, are we going to obey the laws or not? Are we going consciously to evade the law or not? Are we going to be lawless or loyal? No man who breaks the law in order to have a drink can complain if a brick goes through his window some riotous evening.

THE WIDOW'S MITE

UNTIL civilization can so order its government that law will prevent notorious crooks and swindlers from playing upon the ignorance of people by inducing them to invest their small or large savings in bogus stocks and securities, there ought to be a widespread campaign of education to teach people the danger of getting 200% return on their investments. Just now the oil sharks are filching the savings of all sorts and conditions of men. The daily papers are full of the scandal. The mails are stuffed to breaking with "literature" tempting fools to grow rich. We heard recently of a widow who sold her mite of gilt edge bonds to make a plunge in one of these "sure" speculations.

Some day when our national and state governments find time to look after some important matters, a way will be devised to put behind the bars the thieves who peddle out stock that never was or never will be worth anything. Meanwhile civic organizations, church clubs, women's clubs and similar educational institutions might well attempt to give elementary instruction in "what not to buy."

STARVING

"I TELL you that Americans could not sleep nights—the right kind of Americans—if they knew the misery of Europe in its savage reality." These are the words of the president of the American Red Cross on his recent return from Europe. The heart-sickening fact is that people don't care. The war has hardened us. It has paralyzed the imagination. Russia is starving, but if the blockade can break Bolshevism, most people are quite willing to let Russia starve. We are all keenly alert to the barbarism and cruelties and atrocities of war; but there is a new kind of war, more cruel, more unchivalrous, more deadly than any war of high explosives. It is the blockade. Quietly block the channels of import; sit by and wait. In months the children and women, the old, and finally the strong will drop in the streets. The country is conquered. The civilized world is willing to conquer Russia thus. And we are the people who wept salt tears for generations over Kenyon's Siberia. What mockery! What food for cynicism! America has left the world to the statesmen who sit in Paris and they have for our hunger of faith given us stones.

BY THE REV. GEORGE THOMAS DOWLING, D.D.

How It Feels to Be Seventy

The days of our years are three score years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be four score years yet is their strength but labor and sorrow for it is soon cut off and we fly away. Psalm XC.—10.

THE first reflection which comes to an active man standing within two days of the dead line, born June 2, 1849, is that this text is not true. It is not a statement of fact; it was never intended to be. It is just poetry. These words are a part of a song; a beautiful song, a sacred song to remind us of the brevity of life, a worshipful and appealing song, but just a song, to be interpreted with the same poetic license as any other bit of poetry.

It never has been true in the sense in which it is usually accepted. And since it was written human life has been greatly lengthened. Dr. H. F. Biggar, physician to John D. Rockefeller, states that only three centuries ago the average period of life was less than twenty years. Now it is more than forty.

Today, where is the old lady in her cap sitting in the corner with her knitting? Gone, and in her place there stands the chairman of the Civilization Committee of the Bullfrogtown Woman's Club. And where is the "old man?" Gone, and in his place "the elderly gentleman," with better teeth than he ever had before, thanks to the modern dentist; with new eyes, thanks to the modern optician, and if he chanced to have "no hair on the top of his head, the place where the hair ought to grow," a toupee makes him actually handsome. Where is Shakespeare's old man of the "seven ages"; "sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans everything?" Have you seen him lately? He certainly is not walking under your hat.

Here is an interesting fact:—On his eighty-second birthday an eminent lawyer of New York City who at eighty-five years of age is still famous for his genial wisdom and wit, delivered a speech. He eulogized the words of this text as literature, but held up to derision poor old David for ever having written it. He more than intimated that "the sweet singer of Israel" never would have thought of dying at so youthful an age as three score years and ten if he had not been too indulgent with wine, women and song. "As for David's character," he exclaimed, smiling broadly and lifting his hands as though in despair, "Well! David certainly lived the life."

Now it is true that the psalmist did not always live as he might have lived; and it is from his own writings we learn the fact, and of his repentance and forgiveness. But something else is also true: He never wrote these words and the Scriptures nowhere intimate that he did. Indeed, if the tradition be correct which in our Bibles is prefixed to this psalm, it was written by Moses, who had so little idea of its being literally expounded that when he himself reached the dead line of seventy he simply stepped over it and went on with his work, entirely forgetting to die until he was one hundred and twenty years old; and even then he died young, for "his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated."

What does all this teach? Except in case of accident or untimely disease there isn't any dead line for the man who refuses to be dead. The jumping off place? Yes, for those who choose to jump; but the writer of this Saturday Night Sermon has the honor to announce that he isn't dead and he isn't going to jump, though he is going on a vacation from these scribbles for the next three months. Yet he intends to preach every Sunday as usual. After an experience of three score years and ten filled to overflowing with blessings and glad surprises, he was never happier in his life.

And now my good people who have been feeling "old" because of the popular misinterpretation of this text, isn't this good philosophy? Would it not be good for you? Take down from your shelves the biographies and realize in what good company we are; we "old fellows" who refuse to be old.

The world owes a lot to our crowd. Why if every man had had his head chopped off at seventy, do you know what humanity would have lost? To begin with, they would have lost the Ten Commandments, for Moses handed them down when he was long past eighty. And coming to more recent times they would have lost Faust, for Goethe was eighty-three when he completed that. They would have lost Crossing the Bar. Tennyson was over eighty when he wrote that, his swan-song. And when he read it to his son, his son said, "Father, that will stand as your masterpiece," and it does. William Ewart Gladstone won one of his greatest political victories after he was eighty and he was prime minister of England. John Wesley at eighty-eight preached almost every day and carried on his shoulders the care of all the churches. What would the Allies have done without Kitchener, or Foch or Joffre or Clemenceau? All of these have their foot near the dead line or both feet across it.

It is true that for us the ship is nearer port than it was. It may be almost there. And we must begin to slow down a bit and take in some sail. But youth is not alone a matter of years. It is a matter of inward conditions, of your attitude toward life, of spiritual vitality, of world wide interest, of some kind of work, and of joy in that work. The only man who is old is the man who has stopped growing. The mortal must be kept alive by the immortal inside, and in God's name I tell you that it can be.

Here then is my last wish for you as I bid you good-bye for a little time. May you have a happy summer, and many more. And when the hour shall come for you to cast anchor may you have lived long, dying young. When Sir Beerbohm Tree responded to a toast at a dinner given him at Harvard University shortly before his death he said: "Whom the gods love die young, because whom the gods love never grow old." Good-bye.

NON PILATUS SOLUS

BY RICHARD JAMES

OH Pilate, for your weakness we condemn you;
You yielded up the Christ when hard beset;
You found no fault, yet feared the mob's displeasure.
We loathe your sin and shame—and yet—and yet

I wonder if my guilt is not the greater
When in temptation I the Master fail,
And by my sins inflict wounds far more grievous
Than those of piercing thorn, and spear, and nail.

A DIOCESE WITH A PROGRAM

BY PAUL J. BRINDEL

A FEW years ago jokes about Kansas were quite the vogue. Whether they were about John Brown, prohibition, woman's suffrage, cyclones or sunflowers, they were sure to get a laugh.

The Church in Kansas, however, never shared in the fun making. Wealthy churchmen in the East grew hardened to appeals for Prayer Books, hymnals, altars, money and everything needed to establish a little known Church in a strange country just emerging from primitive frontier life. A diocese Kansas finally became but a missionary district it remained in actuality.

Then just as in 1916 when Kansas women helped to upset the nation's calculations by disobeying their husbands and voting for Mr. Wilson, the Diocese of Kansas surprised the Church. "Kansas had a larger percentage of communicants in attendance at its diocesan convention than any other diocese," was the news that came out of Topeka last May following the fifty-ninth annual convention, at which over 500 communicants registered, two-thirds of them from out of town.

"That's all right, but they won't come back next year," said many, especially bishops.

But they were wrong, for the attendance at the sixtieth annual convention in Grace Cathedral, Topeka, May 18-21, was as great as the total number of communicants in the diocese. Of course they were not all churchmen, two-thirds of them were not, but that is just another item to the credit of Bishop Wise, who in addition to sending a personal invitation to 1,000 communicants in the diocese, also invited by letter every Topeka minister, and on the Sunday morning the convention opened had a quarter of a page invitation in the Topeka Capitol headed: "Get Acquainted with the Episcopal Church."

For a week before the convention opened advance stories in the Topeka and Kansas City newspapers and throughout Kansas called attention to the choice program of speakers Bishop Wise had arranged. No wonder then that 2,700 persons attended the four Sunday services to hear the Rev. Francis S. White explain the Nation-Wide Campaign and to hear the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, the Rev. Dr. Gardner, of the Board of Religious Education, and the Rev. H. Percy Silver, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York. Or that 500 of them returned twice for two special evening services to hear the same speakers and Chaplain Evan Alexander Edwards of the ill-fated 35th Division explain the Argonne slaughter and to learn how to sing from the new church hymnal from Dr. Lutkin, dean of the School of Music, Northwestern University.

Daily convention addresses that were well attended by outsiders were Mr. Frank Shelby's talks on the

Bishop Wise has been singularly successful in making his diocesan convention popular and useful Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the church publicity talks by Paul J. Brindel, Charles Haynes, the Rev. Joseph H. Harvey, the Rev. Carl W. Nau, and the Rev. Chester Wood of the diocesan publicity committee.

The best part of it is that these large conventions in just two years have made Kansas really a diocese—one that the entire Church can well be proud of. For while the Church nationally was losing over ten thousand communicants in 1918, Kansas in the ten months the churches were open gave Bishop Wise a six per cent increase to report in his annual message.

But the laymen of the diocese were not satisfied. In his convention address Bishop Wise asked for individual pledges towards $6,000 to give the diocese the services of Senior Chaplain Otis E. Gray, of the 89th Division, as diocesan missionary especially for work among the returning soldiers; a business administrator; an educational secretary; and a $500 advertising and social fund for the use of the rectors in the towns where our state schools are located. Half of the sum was subscribed during the convention, and then V. H. Branch of Wichita, chairman of the committee, announced that the total is to be $10,000 instead of $6,000. This sum will be available for church extension work besides the annual assessment for diocesan missions, which has been more than tripled during the last two years.

Kansas did not stop with providing for herself, however. The convention voted to extend the operations of the bureau of diocesan publicity and advertising created last year, so that the clergy of the entire Church may have some expert on church publicity and advertising to consult until the General Convention can create a national bureau. Because the Rev. Carl W. Nau by systematic advertising was able to report a communicant increase of 26 per cent in "The Little Red Church on the Corner," as he trademarked St. Andrew's Church in Emporia, the new Kansas advertising bureau which is called the Diocesan Publicity League adopted an eight-point program which half of the Kansas clergy have agreed to follow during the coming year. 1—Sale of church periodicals in every parish; an annual tag day for yearly subscriptions; the placing on file in every public library and public reading room at least one current church publication. 2—Weekly newspaper advertisements of a propaganda nature, explaining and featuring the Church and not an individual, copy to be furnished by the Publicity League and to be paid for by the profits from the weekly sale of periodicals and the annual tag day. 3—Display of church art posters in prominent windows, hotel lobbies, etc., and a prize poster contest among high school students. 4—An annual high school essay contest on Henry VIII and the Church, the winning essay to be published in local newspapers. 5—Exhibition and sale of etchings of famous Anglican cathedrals and the gift of several to the local public library and high school. 6—Gift of several popular books explaining the history, doctrine and teachings of the Anglican Church. 7—An annual mission with aggressive advertising and thorough parish organization. 8—A church attendance campaign with weekly check of attendance and utmost care to see that tracts and other church literature is handed each stranger who attends the services.

MY SUMMER CHRISTMAS TREE

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY

A WONDERFUL tree for my Christmas I've found,
I am sure it is eighty feet high,
Its roots reach down under my ferns in the ground,
And its top like a plume in the sky.
Its branches are hung with the daintiest nests,
And tiny eggs speckled and blue,
And robins are there with the reddest of breasts,
And meadow larks sing, and orioles swing.
Would you like me to send it to you?

The marvelous thing are the glorious lights
That shine on my beautiful tree,
Its candles are stars, through the long summer nights
They glimmer and twinkle at me.
When the sun goes to sleep in the lake's foamy bed,

And the moon boat swings up to my view,
Then the night hangs its candles all glowing and red,
They flash out for me on my wonderful tree.
Would you like me to send it to you?

My hammock sways under this evergreen tree,
With its soft lacy branches and bars,
And the nests and the birds and the sparkle I see
Of its circles of radiant stars.
The baby birds stir in the riot of song
And the eggs are so speckled and blue.
And the waters shine through as the lake lirts along,
And jenny wrens chase with the chipmunks a race
By my Christmas tree. What shall I do?
Would you like me to send it to you?

FISHING: WHAT A BOY THINKS

BY HENRY BRADFORD WASHBURN, JR.

FISHING is a very bad habit when out of season. You should not fish to much because the fish are disturbed and move from place to place; they get scared and won't bite. I have fished to eat. It is not good to fish for fun and after you have got a great many fish to throw them away or give them to the cat. God never intended them to be thrown away, he expects them to swim around and chase their tails.

I think the law that specifies a special time of the year for fishing is very good. I have never liked to take the hook out of the fish's mouth, it makes me feel bad and I know that the fish don't like it. They make a little grone and are off to the happy hunting ground.

Big brook trout are usually found under stones in brooks deep in the forest. They vary in size from about six inches to two feet, they are white and black on the bottom and black with red spots on the top. The best time to catch trout is in the early morning around seven or eight. I caught a thirteen incher at eight one morning. Another time is in the evening about an hour after the sun has gone down. At these times the fish are awake and moving around and make a side spring for the first fly they see on the water.

To bait trout it is all ways best to use an imitation fly. For early morning and night use white miller. If you want to fish in the late morning or afternoon, use brown hackle or parmachene bell.

It is all ways best to stand at least ten feet from the water. I have always had good luck with a steel rod. The best store to get them at is Abacrombi and Fich, Madison Ave. and 45th St. Most people think that children living in a city have no chance to fish. That is not true because I have caught a lot of tommy cod off the 79th St. dock, New York. If you want to do this, solder a bell onto the end of a strong piece of wire, on the other end a screw. Fasten this on the dock by means of the screw. Have about a hundred feet of line with about three hooks on the end of the line with a sinker. Tie the loose end of the line to the wire and throw the line into the water. When the fish bite the bell will ring. Give the line a quick jerk and pull the fish off and rebait. Use sand worms for bait. If you don't want to trouble to make this outfit you can buy it for about two dollars.

DR. PARKS' TRIBUTE TO BISHOP GREER

It is a deep regret to me that I am not permitted to join with you in the services of this day and speak a few words concerning one who was the dear friend of many of us and the beloved bishop of us all.

Of Bishop Greer's activities when rector of this parish, I have had the privilege of speaking more than once. Of his administration of the diocese others better fitted than I will doubtless speak at length in due time.

It is of the man that I would say a few words. Bishop Greer was an unusual character inasmuch as he combined harmoniously apparently irreconcilable contrarieties. He was a practical idealist, a brilliant preacher and a wise and far-seeing administrator. He was a mystic and a rationalist. He was a man of indefatigable industry and of a gentle and affectionate nature. We have all known men who possessed some of these qualities to a high degree, but I know of no man in my generation who has combined so many dissimilar qualities. But apart from his natural gifts there was the gift of grace. He had what the Romans called genuine piety, that is love and reverence for his father and mother, the influence of which continued to the end of his life. He was a simple and devout Christian. However far modern opinion and discoveries of the laws of the universe affected his mode of thought, there always remained the simple faith of the disciple of Jesus Christ. Almost from the beginning of his ministry he was called upon to minister to men and women of wealth and he appreciated both the responsibility and opportunity of the right use of the goods of this world.

He had a most profound and loving sympathy with the poor. It is not improbable that advantage was taken of his kindness by unworthy people, but that is a small matter when we remember what he did for the sick and the unfortunate. It may be said of him, almost more than of any one we have known, that "He never turned his face away from any poor man," and yet he avoided the snare which has been made the reproach of the Church, of pauperizing the poor and relieving their immediate necessities without regard to the ultimate effect upon their character. St. Bartholomew's Parish House is the monument to his conception of Christian charity. It is a home where opportunity is offered for the development of character without regard to racial or sectarian divisions. He was more than the president of the various organizations, he was the friend not only of the workers but of the members of the various clubs.

Dr. Parks, who is confined to his room while recovering from an operation, sent the following letter to be read to his parishioners in St. Bartholomew's Church in the City of New York on the Sunday following Bishop Greer's death. The Churchman asked permission of Dr. Parks to publish the letter in this issue.

His relation with his brethren of the clergy was ideal. While the rector of Grace Church, Providence, he was the right-hand man of the bishop and was consulted by the younger clergy as perhaps no bishop has ever been consulted. In all my long friendship with him, which extends over forty years, I can recall no word ever spoken by him of a brother clergyman except in praise and admiration. Where this was not possible he studiously kept silent and what was true of his relation to the clergy was true also of his relation to the laity. He was a Christian man. He avoided as far as possible all ecclesiastical phraseology and was entirely free from affectation. He won the hearts of those who knew him by his genuine and sympathetic manhood. Loyal and devoted to his own Church, he had a just appreciation of the divers ways in which God is speaking to mankind through His Son. He indulged in no fantastic dreams of church unity but entered into practical fellowship with our sister Churches. His true catholicity of spirit was recognized by the Roman Catholic Church when, on the death of Archbishop Corrigan, he was asked to act as one of the pallbearers. There is perhaps no other instance in history where the Protestant minister has been asked to take part in the burial of a Roman Catholic priest. One of his last official acts was to invite to the pulpit of the cathedral brethren of many names.

His has been a long and prosperous career; he sought no office and declined no responsibility, he labored more abundantly than us all and died as he would have wished, working to the very last. In the midst of our sorrow we are glad to know that he enjoyed that which should accompany old age: "Honor, love, obedience, troops of friends." All our lives have been enriched by his influence and we thank God for his good example.

THE BROOKLYN BRIDGE AT NIGHT

BY UNA HUNT

LIKE skeleton mountains eaten by frost
Etched on the sky with fantastic line,
Lawful and varied as crystallized forms,
Splendid with towers stand allied towns;
Airy as cobweb the bridge flung between,
Remote as a cloud spanning the river;
The meteor path of the tramway's flight
As shining like jacinth across the sky
Vibrant and eager they flash on their way,
With trails of flame on the waters below
Star splashed by the lights of the cities.

THE CHURCH'S TASK IN THE NEW AGE

BY THE VERY REV. WILLIAM PALMER LADD

WE are living today at the beginning, perhaps, of another great age in the life of the Church. How shall we relate our hopes for this new age to the Christian tradition of the centuries past?

From the early period we can and must revive something of that passion for brotherhood and fellowship which characterized the first Christian communities. We must recover, too, the unity of organization which was the necessary embodiment of that spirit of brotherhood and fellowship. We must conquer our unchristian sectarian rivalries and divisions and exemplify in ourselves the Christian principle of neighborly love before we can ever advance to large conquests against the powers of evil in the world without.

We shall not underestimate our inheritance from the modern period. We shall hope to retain its respect for conscience, its appreciation of the worth of the individual and of the subjective elements in religion, its zeal for truth.

But today are we not looking for some larger conception of religion than that which has prevailed so widely since the days of Luther and Calvin? In the Church as in the nation the need is for something more uplifting and compelling than even the best form of individualism. We seek the conversion of individuals, yes; but how impotent is the converted individual in an unconverted society! Individual penitence, yes; but a collection of penitent individuals will never make a regenerate society and what we really need is whole nations, cities, communities, churches, penitent, and doing works meet for repentance.

And so we are brought back, are we not? to face the task which confronted the mediaeval Church, and to desire nothing less than the redemption of society itself. Recognizing that individual redemption can become effective only in a redeemed social order, our ambition must be to win acceptance of the Gospel by society no less than by the individual. We shall desire to bring our religion to bear on all the social activities of the modern world, and to labor for a new politics, a new trade, a new industry, a new art, literature, and science, permeated through and through with the Christian ideal. The mediaeval Church grievously failed; and this was in part, certainly, for the reason that it never frankly faced its task. We, too, may fail; but at least we can frankly avow our purpose, and can set ourselves consciously, and, if we will, with devotion and hope, to the task of building up here on this earth in our own time a veritable Kingdom of God.

If we turn our mind to the political sphere, we must need see in the present international situation an inspiring challenge to Christian effort. Our country has come to a moment of extraordinary opportunity. The thoughtful Christian believer cannot doubt that God has chosen our people as truly as he chose the Israelites of old for a work of peculiar service to the nations of the world. "We fight," says President Wilson, "without rancor and without selfish object, seeking nothing for ourselves but what we shall wish to share with all free peoples." We know this to be true; our motives are pure. We are free from many of the age-long prejudices which afflict peoples less young than ourselves. Our resources in money and in other sorts of wealth are immeasurable, and for the most part untouched by the war. We are, in fact, in a position to work effectively for a peace settlement on the principles of charity no less than justice, and for an era of good-will following peace. National animosities and rivalries have been beyond measure sharpened and embittered by the war; they will not quickly subside. On the other hand, friendships have been formed and tested and deepened. We face a day of decision. Are we to build our new national and international politics on the friendship and go on to greater friendships, or on the rivalries and go on to a round of unending rivalry? It is a question. But there ought to be no question as to the Church's mind, and as to the side on which the whole impact of its influence should be brought to bear. Nor can there be any doubt that the influence which the Christian Church could exert would be decisive, and fruitful of enormous good.

Our people have made sacrifices during the war for our allies. We have done it in order to win the war. But when the danger is past, and enthusiasm dies down, what shall we do? How about the restoration of shattered towns and devastated provinces? How about the feeding of hungry friends and enemies? How about the war debts of the nations which fought for our liberties long before we entered the war? Shall our rich fortunate country come to the rescue as a Christian brother and bear all it can of the common burden, or shall we hug our wealth and draw back into a selfish national indifference to the misfortunes of the old world? What shall the Church do to inspire the nation to great adventures in helpfulness, to a chivalrous spirit adequate to the needs of humanity? This is our day of decision. It is a time, certainly, for the Church to revive all its traditions, and they are many and glorious, which identify it with works of friendliness and reconciliation and unification, a time to cultivate that pure religion which is so potent a force in destroying the barriers between nations which ignorance and indifference, sloth, pride, and prejudice so readily and effectively build.

Again, consider what it might mean to win the acceptance of Christian principles in trade. It is a truism to say that trade as carried on now is war. Conducted under rules, to be sure, and with some regard to public opinion, as all warfare is, with a certain mercy to the non-combatant and to those who are put hors de combat, but in general ruled only by expediency, essentially unfeeling, giving its rewards now to the strongest, now to the possessing and privileged.

In the present crisis all governments have in an unprecedented way undertaken the supervision of trade and finances, and regulated them for the common good. But after the war what? The world will be poorer by many billions. There will be a demand for capitalistic effort, and a rush for trade advantage. There will be a temptation to foster monopolies, to favor the few at the expense of the many, and to indulge in new forms of corporate selfishness. It must be the part of the Church to help in the creation of a new standard of business ethics superior to the old. The Church must press home Plato's question "What is justice?" And it must not be put off with an answer which conforms to existing convention, but does not satisfy conscience, nor fit the realities of life. Business can doubtless be so organized that its rewards shall go less generally than now to the shrewd and merciless, and more often to the generous and public-spirited, and conditions can be secured that will make of a business career an opportunity for altruistic service as promising as the Christian ministry itself. The time may even come when there will be many like St. Francis to love poverty more than wealth, and to feel that in having nothing they are yet possessing all things.

Time fails for an exercise of the imagination on the application in detail of Christian principles to the many realms of social activity, to industry and art, literature, philosophy, and education. Industrial problems will certainly press for solution after the war. The situation will not be met by improvement of conditions merely. There must be a new order. The desire of the worker for a self-respecting freedom, for a fair financial return for his labor, for the opportunity to exercise individuality and the creative impulse in his work, is likely to grow more urgent. The clergy, if they are ever to make this Church a Church of the whole people and not the Church of a class, simply must become the champions of other interests than those of the wealthy and privileged. They must give the Church some worthy share in the furtherance of the coming industrial democracy. Art to be Christian must cease to be merely the plaything of the rich; it must be, as it was in the Middle Ages, of the people and for the people; the Church has no more honorable tradition than that it has been the patron of the arts and the promoter of civilization and culture. Literature, philosophy, and education can under the touch of the Gospel receive an access of life, and gain a new dignity and usefulness as they take their place in the new order, the Kingdom of God.

DO WE MEAN BUSINESS?

BY THE REV. BERNARD IDDINGS BELL

IN this last of three articles in which we seek to set forth some of the greatest needs of the Episcopal Church in the days that are upon us, at least as they have appeared to us in our observation of and work among over 4,000 church young men and 80,000 odd other young men at Great Lakes, the intention is to speak of the greatest lack of all. If all the things which we have mentioned—and others, too,—in the previous articles were accomplished; if we had determined to create church unity within our own communion, on broad, inclusive lines, that we might without shame summon others to attempted reunion; if we had set about a rational training for the ministry, designed to make priests and pastors instead of scholars; if the Lord's Supper had become again what the Master intended it to be, our chief act of comradeship with one another and comradeship with Him, and our Prayer Book had been reasonably changed according to the suggestions of the revision commission; if we had assumed in earnest the great burden of missionary extension in our own country, which has so long been overlooked by us in our admirable endeavor to save all the rest of the planet; and if our fathers in convention had furnished us with a clarion cry to duty in substituting the golden rule for the rule of gold in industry and politics and business; and if all the other similar needs, seen by others from their angles more clearly than they have been seen by us, had been met; there would still remain one thing needful to be done without which all these others would be but superficial and insufficient.

Of all the reasons given here by men for not becoming affiliated with organized Christianity the most common seems to be the impression that we Christians are playing at religion, that we do not mean what we say, that our devotion to our Lord is sentimental and of the surface merely, that our ways are no different from those of the no-church and semi-pagan peoples round about us—that our business ethics is no higher, our feeling of industrial brotherhood no more vital, our kindness and helpfulness hardly more manifest, our tendencies to pettiness, vanity, ostentation no less apparent, our worry and mental distress just as great, our lives no more inspiring, and our sense of service without hope of reward no more impressive.

In other words, the ordinary "gob" is of the opinion that church religion means little or nothing more than a conventional attachment to respectable sentimentality. He faults us not for having standards too high for him to reach but for having standards too miserably low, lower than the common standards of the free brotherhood of the service itself. He cannot for the life of him see why he should tie up with an influence which is therefore not merely of no inspiration to him but also a positively disintegrating and deteriorating spiritual force. Often when I have finished talking to him, I repeat an old story and say, "Look here, Jack. Is this what you mean? There was once a little bunch of boys in a Sunday School class. Their teacher, a dear young thing, told them all the joys of heaven one morning and wound up by asking those who wished to go to heaven to stand up. All of them did but Jimmy. The teacher was grieved and she asked him if he didn't really want to go. He looked at the rest of the boys and said, 'No, thank you. Not with that crowd.' Is that the way you feel?" And they usually grinned and said that was about it.

These were not, either, the boys who were flippant and no good and vicious in life and anxious to make excuses. They were real men, sometimes old Brotherhood boys, a couple of ex-vestrymen, a shrewd young attorney with a positive spiritual genius, and any number of honest searchers for God and the truth.

Of course, one may become indignant and deny the righteousness of their indictment. One may point to innumerable brilliantly spiritual men and women who quietly, with the Church's inspiration, are living and thinking nobly and self-sacrificingly. This most of the fellows are willing to acknowledge; but they maintain that these men are what they are despite the Church, and that the whole body is composed overwhelmingly of people who do not count religiously and do not wish to count, people who go to Church to have their ears tickled and their prejudices catered to by "popular preachers," or to show themselves in the spiritual halls of the wealthy and respectable, or to sooth their consciences and cover up their selfishness, or to buy their way to heaven, as they have bought their way to this world's happiness, with wealth and patronage; people who will not tolerate any real preaching of Christ's stern law of sacrifice, who do not wish to be made to feel uncomfortable, who love to hear of hell on earth in China but not of hell on earth in their own town's slums, who admire stained glass windows with etherealized pictures of saints who would have shocked them dead if they had ever met them in real life, lovers of the respectable, the conventional, the easy, and the comfortable. That is the Church as an organization, that is the majority of us church members as they appear to most of the men we have met in camp.

It is absolutely imperative that this general impression be dealt with. It cannot be argued with or successfully denounced. The boys just smile and go on believing it. It must be dissipated. This can be done in only one way, namely by admitting that it is so, crying Miserere nobis, Domine, with real meaning in our hearts, and cleaning house in our own souls. When we do that, the boys will say, "These birds aren't the goofs we thought they were," and they will admire us and help us cleanse the Church of its terrible "matter-of-factness."

Let it be further understood that we are not being faulted for any petty lapses from old fashioned morality. There is no feeling in the breasts of the men from service that we ought to conform ourselves to any petty Puritanism, to deny ourselves enjoyment of the beautiful universe that God has made. It is not for the petty things we do which we ought not that we are faulted. It is for the great things we leave undone which we should do. We live, or pretend to in Holy Church, close to Jesus. We pray to Him. We receive His touches in baptism, in confirmation, in marriage, in absolution, and most of all in the Supper of His foundation. Then we should be trying to be like Him, trying to manifest certain characteristics which appeal to the man in service as he thinks about Jesus,—and I have found he does so think quite more than one might suppose. It is these qualities which the service man looks for in us. It is these qualities he says he does not find in us. What are they?

FIRST, simplicity and directness. These fellows have found themselves stripped of much that we deem necessary in life, and have found freedom in that lack. Our civilian life looks cluttered-up to them. Jesus never was cluttered-up with things that didn't matter. Surely, they say, His followers ought to be like that. But look at them. See how complicated are their lives, what slaves they are to troublesome little conventionalities. See their foolishly great houses, their unnecessarily complicated homes, their fussiness. Jesus is sublime in His simplicity.

SECOND, His forgetfulness of Himself. He did not seem to care whether folks followed Him or not. He went right on. He was bigger than life around Him. He was serene because He never thought of Himself. But look at these Christians, yelling because they aren't appreciated, silly before applause, sore before denunciation, trimming for popular approval, even judging their own churches by the sized crowds they get or the much money they collect, thinking of themselves all the time.

THIRD, His kindliness. The only people He ever denounced were hypocrites. Bad people, prostitutes and drunks and such, He liked and gave them a lift. But look at church people. Who ever heard of their denouncing hypocrites, especially if well-heeled? No, indeed; but just hear them yell at the bums, the down and outs, the women of the streets, the folks that need a friendly boost more than a kick in the ribs. Why, even His enemies He loved. That's more than the usual soldier or sailor can do, but He does admire Christ for being big enough to do it. He reads in his papers, however, how prominent clergy bid us love our allies and hate the Germans, and he says, "Well, what's the use of a Church then? Do not even we publicans and sinners the same?"

FOURTH, His poverty. He had not where to lay His head. He gave up heaven just to help folks along. He deserved a lot. He was worth a lot. But He would not take anything. These church people, they are different. They grab all they can, the same as other folks. They take all that they are worth from society, and if they can get some more they raise no objections. There is not the least doubt that the sensual, luxurious lives of many Christian people, and those often the ones most prominent in the Church's councils, have alienated multitudes of our men. It would help a good deal if we regarded men occasionally as "leading laymen" who rode in street cars and day coaches and whose wives did their own work. "A fat chance for that," says the sailorman.

Let us not judge the young fellow who says the sort of thing we have put down here too harshly. Let us lay the root of judgment at our own hearts. In some respects our critics exaggerate. But in the essence of the thing they are right. Two things are wrong with us in this matter of sincerity. We have not seen Jesus vividly enough. We have not realized that discipleship means trying till it hurts to be like Him, to rise with His help, to something approaching His own sublime humanity.

We need a great mission of repentance and dedication. To start consideration we suggest that there be, first of all, retreats in every diocese the coming summer, for the clergy, to which they shall be summoned by their bishops so strongly that they will neither dare nor care to stay away. There, in conference, after a couple of days of silent prayer and meditation upon our Lord's sublime humanity, let counsel be taken as to how to initiate similar conferences in every parish. And let the cry at the bottom of it all be, not an appeal to our wonderful historic episcopate or anything of that sort,—which should be assumed more and talked about less,—not a rejoicing in our wonderful Church—but a cry, "We have sinned against heaven and in Thy sight and are no more worthy to be called Thy sons."

In this fundamental respect the less that General Convention does by making commissions and resolutions and such like things, the better. This reform must come from the hearts of the people with spontaneity and reality.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

PRESIDENT WILSON CABLES TRIBUTE TO BISHOP GREER

Memorial Services Held in Many Churches for Late Diocesan

On Sunday tribute was paid to the work and character of Bishop Greer not only in the churches of Greater New York but in many other dioceses. There has been a remarkable outpouring of affection and expressions of esteem for the dead bishop.

The bishop's family received telegrams of sympathy from all over the world.

President Wilson cabled from Paris: "Please accept Mrs. Wilson's and my assurance of heartfelt sympathy in the death of your distinguished husband who will be sadly missed both by the community and the nation."

Bishop Lawrence telegraphed: "Love and deepest sympathy for you all. Of all the bishops he was my best and very closest friend, always loyal, simple and true."

Premier Venizelos of Greece cabled: "Please accept my sympathy in which the whole Greek nation joins for the great loss suffered by your Church and all Christianity by the death of Bishop Greer."

Judge Mulqueen in opening court the day after the bishop's death paid the following tribute to the bishop: "Before we call the calendar today I think the court should take notice of the funeral of the late Bishop Greer, of this city."

"Bishop Greer was not only a good churchman and a good American but a loyal worker and a good friend of this court. He cooperated with us on many occasions in our efforts to improve the conditions for those who were unfortunate enough to be brought here and was kind enough to express publicly his approval of the work done here. We could always look to him for help in proper directions."

Mrs. Greer Very Weak

Mrs. Greer continues in an exceedingly weak condition. Her family feared to tell her of the bishop's death until the afternoon following the funeral. She was quite conscious and bore the news with her usual fortitude.

Archdeacon Stuck Honored

FORT YUKON, ALASKA.—In recognition of his ascent of Denali (Mt. McKinley), the Ven. Hudson Stuck, Archdeacon of the Yukon, has been awarded the Back Grant by the Royal Geographic Society of England. The Back Grant is an honorary membership in the society, and is granted only to Arctic explorers who have achieved some noteworthy accomplishments. Sir George Back, a noted English explorer, during the early years of the eighteenth century made extensive explorations in the Arctic regions and on his return to England gave the benefit of his discoveries to the newly organized Royal Geographic Society. The award of the Back Grant and medal to Archdeacon Stuck follows the plan for which Sir George Back endowed the society.

FORD CARS SHOULD SOLVE PROBLEM OF LOW STIPENDS

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT. How the shortage of clergy could be materially aided by a judicious use of Ford cars was the theme of the address made by the Rev. L. I. Belden, rector of St. Thomas's Church at the Easter meeting of the Hartford archdeaconry held at St. Monica's Church here recently. It is notorious, he said, that two or three contiguous parishes unblushingly look for the services of a man for each separately when one man with an automobile could perfectly well handle them all. Such an arrangement, he continued, would also be a godsend to the clergy themselves. Not one small parish in fifty today is able to pay a living stipend. Three of them together can. Few small parishes offer sufficient scope to tax a man's normal efforts. Three combined would be as much as a man should attempt. A strong plea was made that such a step might be adopted as a diocesan policy.

Presbyterians Plan Central Council

According to a dispatch from St. Louis dated May 22, the proposal of William Jennings Bryan at the Presbyterian Assembly that a council of five clergymen to serve as a mouthpiece of the Presbyterian Church during the time between assemblies, was referred to the commission to report at the 1920 assembly of the Presbyterians. This assembly will meet in Philadelphia in May 1920. Commissioners have declared that this step would be a move toward the creation of bishops. It resembles in some ways the proposal that is to be made to General Convention next October that an executive committee of General Convention be created to carry forward the work of the Church between conventions.

Truck Knocks Down Bishop Osborne

SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.—Bishop Osborne, now resident in this city, was the subject of a very uncomfortable accident on the evening of May 16. Leaving St. John's Hall on his way home from a lecture given by Mr. Gardner Tucker of the G. B. R. E., he was knocked down by a commercial auto truck, driven rapidly in the dark. Being picked up unconscious, he was taken to the Savannah Hospital, where he remained some days. He is at present not able to walk or stand through the bruises and strain he received.

Dean Hodges Stronger

HOLDERNESSE, NEW HAMPSHIRE, May 26.—Dean Hodges has rallied and is stronger today than he was a week ago. The dean seems to have wonderful recuperative powers.

BISHOP'S BODY BURIED IN CATHEDRAL CRYPT

Ministers of Many Communions Follow Bishop Greer's Bier

For twenty-four hours preceding the funeral the body of Bishop Greer lay in state between two of the great gray stone pillars in the ambulatory in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine behind the high altar. Four tall funeral lights illuminated the bronze coffin which faced the Chapel of St. Martin of Tours. On the coffin lay a large clump of violets and the academic hoods with which the bishop had been honored by American universities. The guard of honor was composed of members of the Laymen's Club of the cathedral. On Friday morning the casket was taken into the cathedral, where it was placed in the choir to await the service. The great church was packed to the doors and crowds stood outside long before the service; men and women from every walk in life were there to pay respect to New York's greatly beloved bishop. The service was simple, as Bishop Greer would have had it; but it was stately and impressive. Hundreds of clergymen marched in procession from old Synod Hall and took their places in the chancel. Bishops from neighboring dioceses, the Standing Committee, trustees of the cathedral and representatives from nearly every communion in New York were in the procession.

Conspicuous in the procession were the most Rev. Alexander Nemolovsky, new Archbishop of America for the Holy Russian Orthodox Church, and the Rt. Rev. Alexander, new bishop of the Greek Church for America. In their strikingly brilliant robes they marched together. Their vestments were of white satin, wrought with gold, but on their heads they wore the sombre black bonnet-shaped head gear of the priest of the Eastern Orthodox Church. Four priests of the Eastern Orthodox Church, also in striking vestments, marched just ahead of the clergy of the Episcopal Church. They were Archpriests Turkevich, Popoff and Snegirell, of the Russian Church, and the Rev. Father Lazarus, of the Greek Church. In the procession was Rabbi Joseph Silverman, of Temple-Emmanuel representing Jewry.

The hymns were Bishop Greer's favorite ones, "The strife is o'er" and "My faith looks up to Thee" and "For all the Saints." Noble's anthem "Souls of the Righteous" was sung. Bishop Francis read the sentences. Dean Robbins read the lesson. The creed and prayers were recited by Bishop Lines. The committal was shared by Bishop Lloyd, Bishop Brent and Bishop Burch.

After the committal the casket was borne to the crypt accompanied by the cathedral clergy, the honorary pall bearers and the attending bishops. The tomb of the late bishop is at the right of that of the late Dean Grosvenor.

HEALING MISSION HELD BY ENGLISH LAYMAN

James Moore Hickson Revived Ministry of Healing in English Church

Very quietly, without publicity, but with results that would make eagerly sought copy if the newspapermen once got hold of it, a mission of healing is being conducted in some of the cities of the East by James Moore Hickson, a layman of the Church of England.

Dr. Manning has arranged for Mr. Hickson to be at Trinity Chapel, Twenty-Fifth Street just west of Broadway, every morning for three weeks beginning May 26 from ten o'clock until twelve. On Monday Mr. Hickson spoke at a meeting at Trinity Chapel and on Tuesday at a meeting at Grace Church.

Shortly before Easter Mr. Hickson landed in Boston. He came without definite plan to spend some months in the United States, impelled to undertake this mission by a strong sense of direction from the Holy Spirit. Having landed in Boston, he went to service at the cathedral and there to his surprise he found his friend, the Archdeacon of Worcester, preaching. Mr. Grieg introduced Mr. Hickson to Dean Rousmaniere.

For a month Mr. Hickson has been in Boston where he has spoken at many gatherings, and explained the purpose of his mission, to restore in the Anglican Church the ministry of healing. During this time considerably over a hundred people have sought out Mr. Hickson, people with physical, mental and spiritual ills, and he has healed them. Mr. Hickson is now in New York City where he is speaking to small groups of people in the various parishes and ministering to those who come to him for healing.

Mr. Hickson's method of healing is sacramental. Kneeling beside the sufferer, he brings to his mind the great fact of our Lord's presence. Then he lays his hands upon the sufferer and heals him. He uses neither psycho-therapy nor suggestion. These tools, he says, like physic or the surgeon's knife, have their proper uses in the hands of the psycho-analysts and physicians. The gift of sacramental healing, on the other hand, he contends, is the birth-right of the Church. This ministry, he feels, has been neglected since the fifth century. Its renewal will go far, in his estimation, towards revivifying the Church and increasing its influence.

Two heresies Mr. Hickson and his fellow-healers aim to counteract. The first is within the Church, the heresy to quote Mr. Hickson, of considering sickness a good thing sent to us from God to develop our spiritual life. The second heresy is that at the root of Christian Science and other isms, of denying evil. The material body is to be neither ignored nor wilfully neglected.

But the healing of the body is only the first step, in Mr. Hickson's teaching, towards the release of spiritual power. The great truth he emphasizes is the primary necessity of realizing the potent presence of Christ in our daily lives. "If we know that He is right here with us, no ill and no fear can stay with us," says Mr. Hickson.

Christ stands ready to heal if we will only keep the door open for Him to enter. The Church must unbar the door and keep it wide.

For this reason the most marked effect of Mr. Hickson's ministry is a revival of the prayer life, a deepening of spiritual consciousness and a deep calm and joy. There are remarkable cures recorded, from organic diseases, but the characteristic heritage of the mission of healing seems to be a release of spiritual power.

Mr. Hickson is not unknown to the American Church—some years ago the Rev. Henry Wilson of the Society of the Nazarene visited him in England. The members of this society have since then been familiar with his work. Born in Australia some fifty years ago, Mr. Hickson has practised the ministry of healing from the time he was fourteen years of age. For the past eighteen years he has devoted himself exclusively to this ministry.

Mr. Hickson expects to visit several other cities in the East after he leaves New York. He has promised to return to Boston before sailing. He hopes to spend several months in Belgium and France ministering to the inhabitants of the devastated regions and in mid-winter to go to India. In 1921 he hopes to conduct a great healing mission in the Holy Land.

"My purpose," Mr. Hickson said to THE CHURCHMAN representative, "is to establish a chain of healing missions around the world. I wish to establish prayer groups who, together with the prayer groups already established in England, will daily pray for the sick on our prayer lists."

Several prayer groups have already been formed in this country. Members of a group make their communion on the second Sunday of the month with special intention and pray daily for the people on the list assigned to them. Where the members of a group are not members of the Anglican Church, the first provision is modified to suit their church customs.

Death of Connecticut Layman

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT—Henry E. Rees died at his home here on May 8. The funeral services were held at Trinity Church on May 10. For twenty-two years Mr. Rees was the head of Trinity Sunday School. Not less than 2000 boys and girls have come under his direct care. Mr. Rees possessed all the fine qualities that make for abiding friendship. People of every rank and walk in life recognized the sincerity and disinterestedness of his affection.

Northfield Celebrates Fortieth Anniversary

Northfield will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of its founding during the commencement period, May 31 to June 3. It was in 1879 that D. L. Moody first established a school where girls without means could receive a good education under strong Christian influence. During the twenty years that William R. Moody, son of the founder, has been in charge of the school, the school has trebled its influence and equipment.

AT ANNUAL DINNER, C. A. I. L. HEARS OF BISHOP'S DEATH

Encouraging Reports Presented to Church Labor Association

On Monday, May 19, when the Church Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor assembled in Synod House, New York, for the annual meeting and dinner, the members did not know that Bishop Greer was dying. But half an hour after the meeting was called to order, a messenger brought word of the bishop's death. Bishop Burch and Dean Robbins accordingly left.

The Rev. Floyd M. Leach took the chair vacated by the suffragan bishop. The officers of the society were all reelected. Before leaving, Dean Robbins, scheduled as the first speaker, spoke briefly on the Church and the new age. He said that although the damage to the organism of society due to the war could not be measured, yet in our new found unity great hope lay. "There is one body in Church and in labor, and instead of competition governing life, cooperation is to be established," he said. "The old philosophy of the Church, as well as of labor, expressed in the doctrine of acquisition, has given way during the war to a new philosophy."

Miss Mary Frank of the city public library urged C. A. I. L. to champion the improvement of the library situation. Hugh Frayne of the A. F. of L. spoke on the economic remedy for Bolshevism and Colonel McIntyre had some interesting statistics to present upon the influence of drunkenness on labor.

Resolutions were passed on Christianity and Bolshevism, the labor war, equal pay for equal work, employees' share in industry and the library situation.

Interspersed among the addresses, the annual reports were made by the committee chairmen. The legislative committee, according to the report of Miss Lily F. Foster of Saint Agnes' Chapel, did some strenuous work during the last session of the legislature. Excelsior Council No. 90 appealed to C. A. I. L. to help pass the Lockwood-Fearon bill to increase by ten per cent the salaries of state civil service employees receiving less than $1400 a year. The legislative committee investigated the matter thoroughly and found that 8,198 men and women in the state service received less than $700 a year. Believing that the public is best served when its employees are not underpaid, and that the reasonable increase requested was in the interest of the general good, C. A. I. L. bent its energies to the end that the bill should become a law. In spite of considerable opposition the bill finally passed both houses without a dissenting vote, and was signed by the governor.

Dr. Annie S. Daniel, chairman of the tenement house committee, reported that conditions seemed worse than last year. The streets dirty due to lack of labor and the harbor strike. Houses and rooms overcrowded; practically no new houses built for two years, and the old ones dirty and out of repair. Rents have been raised, wages are higher, but not as high as the cost of living.

The meeting was closed by Miss Keyser.

VISIT TO EAST A SUCCESS, WRITES BISHOP ANDERSON

Head of Commission Describes Experiences in Letter

Under date of April 11, Bishop Anderson writes to Bishop Griswold from Athens the following account of the experiences of the members of the Commission on Faith and Order in Greece:

"I dropped you a hurried line at Geneva and now for another which must be written also at galloping speed. Arriving at Rome we learned that arrangements had been made to take us from Italy to Greece on a French armoured cruiser. This was through the kindness of our ambassador in Paris and Rome. It took two days in Rome for the formalities of having our passports viséd, etc., and then to Taranto, just inside the heel of Italy. The road goes through miles and miles of olive and fig orchards. The olive trees are twisted, gnarled and knotted into every conceivable shape, but are all fruit bearing.

"We reached Taranto Friday and went on board the d'Entrecarteau Sunday afternoon. This boat had been doing war duty for over two years, had narrowly escaped being torpedoed and looked the worse for its gallant service. The captain received us with great courtesy and showed us many kindnesses en route.

"On Monday we went up the Gulf of Corinth under a glorious blue sky, with snow capped mountains on both sides. One could recognize Parnassus, Olympia, Algea. It was the land of Homer's Odyssey and brought back to my mind things which I supposed I had forgotten. Reached Itra about 6:30 p. m. It is a little village of sun-baked mud brick houses, some of them covered with white stucco. It has been a French and English military base.

"Next morning we were driven, through the kindness of the French commandant, over the mountains to the railway station at Bralo. The distance is thirty-four miles. Rising from the gulf the road ascends through miles of olive groves, succeeded by vineyards terraced up the mountain sides, until the scrub pine and the region of snow are reached. The road represents the triumph of engineering. The scenery is equal to the Rockies in Montana. We lunched with the French officers at the military camp in Bralo and took train to Athens, one hundred and ten miles away, which occupied ten hours.

"The week at Athens has been very busy. We called on the metropolitan, who inquired about you, and he was kind enough to map out a program for us while in Athens. He escorted us personally to Mars Hill where he read us St. Paul's speech in Greek. Then to the stadium, then to a litany service in the cathedral at which he preached, and made generous reference to our presence. The cathedral was crowded, all standing, and the service was an hour and a half long.

"On Saturday morning we met the Holy Synod. I made an address and presented our formal invitation. He replied in a very hopeful and complimentary speech. This is only a gossip letter and I reserve to a later time a full account of all that happened. I need only say here that our invitation has been formally accepted by the synod. Saturday afternoon we were escorted to the Acropolis by a professor of archaeology. Sunday morning I celebrated the Holy Communion in the English Church while the rest of our party attended the Holy Mysteries at the Greek cathedral.

"Monday was the festival of the Annunciation in the Greek calendar and also Independence Day. There was a great function in the cathedral; the king was present; officers of state, members of diplomatic corps, and ourselves. We wore cope and mitre. The metropolitan had a gorgeous cloth of gold cope and a crown shaped mitre. Everybody appeared clothed in the symbol of his rank and office. It was a great affair. Monday night we dined with the metropolitan in company with several bishops, and several men of position and affairs. It was a fine gathering. At the close of the dinner the metropolitan read a statement, and proposed health and success to our mission, and it fell to me to reply.

"This concluded our special work, but we have been obliged to wait four days for a boat. We cannot get a boat to Egypt, so we are going to Constantinople tomorrow on a little Italian boat, stopping at Smyrna four days. It is slow traveling, but is the best that can be done.

"I am greatly impressed with the great interest which is taken in our mission by the press and the people, and we are constantly being urged to spend weeks in Siberia, Roumania and Bulgaria. We hope to take in Serbia at least. It all depends on whether lines of communication either by land or by water are available."

From Constantinople, dated April 19, the following was written:

"I can only put a few words in this note for reasons which I shall explain later. From Athens we took Italian steamer Montenegro to Samaria. There two and a half days. Called on the metropolitan and breakfasted with him the following day. Then on to Constantinople, through the Aegean, in sight of the Iliad, through the Dardanelles, past Gallipoli, and through the Sea of Marmora; called on the patriarch yesterday. We meet the synod of Constantinople on Tuesday a. m., and the Armenian Tuesday p. m. Attended Good Friday services at English Church. Go there 8 a. m. Easter and then at 10:30 a. m. to Greek cathedral. Our visit a success so far."

Bishop Anderson is expected home early in June.

TURKS DESTROY FOOD, ARMENIANS STARVING

Relief Committee's Agents Report Terrible Conditions in Caucasus

Continuing their persecution of the Armenian refugees in the Caucasus, even after the signing of the armistice, it is reported that the Turks have destroyed large quantities of food, with the deliberate intention of creating a famine. As a result, at least 330,000 of the refugees in that region are starving.

In a letter to the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, Harrison A. Maynard, who is in charge of the administration of its relief funds in the Caucasus, says:

"The Caucasus is a devastated land, the people in misery. On their withdrawal from this region, following the armistice—mark that, following the armistice—the Turks destroyed property and carried away great quantities of food stuffs. Other quantities, which they could not carry away, they destroyed, with the stated purpose of creating a famine in Armenia.

"Previous harsh government, anarchy and the devastation caused by the war have left the people found here, especially the refugees, in a truly awful state. With my own eyes I have seen people eating the flesh of a horse's corpse, the entrails of sheep, the clotted blood from a slaughterhouse and other things. The city of Alexandropol is trying to feed 26,000. Once a day it gives them a soup composed as follows: eight pounds of wheat and twenty seven pounds of meat and bones cooked in plenty of water. This amount is divided amongst 200 people. Each person receives less than three ounces of solid food in about half a teacup of water. They are slowly starving to death. Would that you could visit our orphanages in which we keep 2,500 orphans, and see their rosy cheeks and hear their noise, and then visit the orphanages which the native people try to support. The children are dull and lifeless because of underfeeding. There are some five or six thousand of them whom we must take over if they are to be saved.

"The conservative estimate of the British Intelligence department, with which we are in closest touch, estimates that there are 330,000 people here in great need."

Thirty-eight Dioceses Commend Campaign

It is announced that to date, thirty-eight dioceses through their conventions have commended and endorsed the Nation-Wide Campaign. Plans for the conference in Chicago from June 4 to June 7 are being actively carried forward. It is expected that as a result a strong national committee will be ready to conduct the campaign in all parts of the country.

Negro Mission Work in Need

CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA.—Archdeacon Baskerville has issued a statement that funds are needed for urgent mission work among the negroes. Lack of money has hampered the industrial work in the mission schools. It is absolutely necessary to have sufficient funds at the end of the school year, May 31, to meet the payroll.

NEW HOBART PRESIDENT IS MAN OF VIGOR AND ENERGY

After Establishing Manila University,
He Served with Army in France

Editorial Correspondence By Guy Emery Shipley

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.—Already I can hear the short, snappy Hobart yell sending its staccato greetings of welcome along the shores of Seneca Lake when Dr. Murray Bartlett, who has just accepted the presidency of the college sets foot on the campus. And I predict that those yells will increase in joyous enthusiasm as the boys come to know the man who is to guide the destiny of the old college for what one may well hope will be many years.

Yesterday when I heard that Murray Bartlett had just sent along his acceptance of the election, I hurried over to Pasadena to see him. As we drove along through the roads and streets, between the great splashes of color which have a tendency to intoxicate an easterner in California at this season, I was not at all sure that I was in a fit mood to interview the new president. The street curbs of Pasadena and the lawns of the magnificent places were spread thick with roses and giant geraniums and millions of other innumerable varieties of flowers. In the midst of all this fragrant beauty I found Dr. Bartlett's home, where he came two years ago for a rest, and to regain his health impaired by years in the Philippines.

My first impression on seeing Dr. Bartlett, as he showed me into his sunny study and a comfortable chair, was one of distinct shock, combined with a delightful sense of his gracious welcome.

I had had in my memory a vivid picture of Murray Bartlett. Back in 1900 when I was first learning the mysteries of a newspaper office as a cub reporter in Rochester, New York, Dr. Bartlett was rector of St. Paul's Church in that city. I saw him many times in his church, but more often on the street, and it was in this latter setting that I remembered him. Everyone who saw him in those days was impressed by the speed with which his tall, straight figure moved along the thoroughfares of Rochester, marking him with the spirit of youth and tremendous energy.

True to the instinct of not taking into account the passage of the years when one thinks of those one has known in the past, I had quite forgotten the meaning of the nineteen years which had intervened since I last saw Dr. Bartlett. As he reached out his hand in warm welcome I am sure that my words faltered a bit as I said, "Dr. Bartlett?" For I was looking at a man whose hair was perfectly white and who was old.

It was only after a few minutes that I became conscious of an illusion. Murray Bartlett not only is not old; he is filled with the same vigor which was so characteristic of his work in Rochester and rich in the same gift for enthusiasm. It speaks in his genial, restless eyes, in the vibrant tones of his voice, in his every motion. There are lines in his face which were not there when I saw him last, but there is also youth. I do not know what turned his hair so white, but I am sure that it was something other than the passage of time.

One gets the impression that it is difficult for Dr. Bartlett to be idle. I smiled a bit when he said that he had been here in California two years resting, for he has just returned from France, after thirteen months as an honorary chaplain with the Eighteenth Regiment, U. S. Infantry, and later, after the armistice, as assistant to the chaplain of the First Division in charge of educational work.

"Don't say that I was decorated," he urged, "for I wasn't. The paper was mistaken in saying that."

But he admitted that he had been cited twice. He was in the thick of the fighting at St. Mihiel, the Argonne and the second battle of the Marne, and while near Soissons he was wounded in the head, and spent ten weeks in a hospital. All this has been during these two years while he has been "resting"!

I came to the conclusion that, counting out the white hair, my picture formed nineteen years ago was still quite exact.

Altogether Dr. Bartlett was in the Philippines for eleven years. After several years' service as dean of the cathedral in Manila, he became the first president and the real founder of the University of the Philippines, a government institution similar in many ways to our state universities in the United States. The development of our high school system in the Philippines naturally led to the need of institutions of higher learning, and Dr. Bartlett was chosen by the Government as the man best fitted to undertake the building up of the first modern university in the Islands. His success is a matter of record. When he left at the end of five years the University of the Philippines had a list of twelve hundred students.

I asked Dr. Bartlett whether there were any particular problems which he would face in taking up his work at Hobart.

"It goes without saying," he replied, "that there is always a plentiful supply of problems connected with the administration of any educational institution. But I shall hope to help solve the problem of an increased endowment for Hobart for the payment of better salaries to the faculty. It is very much better for an institution like Hobart to have a plentiful number of professorships than one professor to four or five instructors."

It will be no part of the new president's policy to attempt to make Hobart into a large college. "Two hundred students would be the ideal number it seems to me," he said. "But there are two very definite things which I shall hope to undertake. I shall want to do some teaching myself. I think the president of a college keeps in more intimate touch with his students if they know him in the classroom, and he naturally has a keener understanding of the work of the faculty if he is a part of that body, as well as an administrator. Perhaps I shall have only an elective course for seniors, but I shall want at least that."

I gathered that such a course would probably be in Dr. Bartlett's chosen field of teaching, some phase of social philosophy. The reference to this led to a discussion of what the new president consid-

FAMOUS SCOTCH PREACHER VISITS UNITED STATES

Dr. Kelman of Edinburgh Sees Unsuspected Spiritual Reserves

Admiral Sims and the four thousand American soldiers whom the Mauretania recently landed in New York City were not the only ones to receive the glad hand of many friendly Americans, according to The Congregationalist. It has been extended frequently during the last three weeks to Dr. John Kelman, pastor of St. George's Church in Edinburgh. It was stretched out to him first at Harvard University where he preached for several Sundays, while two weeks before it was the turn of Yale University to welcome one who has crossed the Atlantic to give the Lyman Beecher lectures on preaching—an honor conferred upon men from overseas only occasionally during the long history of this famous lectureship.

Dr. Kelman has just completed twenty-two years of pastoral labors in Edinburgh, the larger fraction of which has been given to St. George's Church. He carries the entire responsibility for the large parish. Out of it went during the four years of the war no less than 300 of its sturdiest men. Dr. Kelman himself was with the army on the firing lines for six months.

Asked with regard to spiritual gains accruing from the war, Dr. Kelman expressed himself hopefully, for he is confident that the unsuspected reserves of idealism and heroism brought to the surface in multitudes of soldiers during the war will not vanish into thin air. It is for the Church and the ministry to conserve this fund of idealism, to interpret it aright and to put it at work in helping to solve the tremendous problems of the modern world.

Dr. Kelman went from New Haven to fulfil lecturing appointments at Delaware University, Ohio, and De Pauw University, Indiana, and sails on his return journey this month.

ers a special need at Hobart. Picking up the latest catalogue of the college, Dr. Bartlett read from the prospectus a sentence which has long expressed the purpose of Hobart College, "to do its part in creating a well-rounded capacity for citizenship."

"The small college, it seems to me, has a special opportunity in these days. The purpose of Hobart emphasized in the statement I have just read, is to create effective citizenship. Probably the sentence has been there for a good many years, but it takes on a new meaning now, and it has to be interpreted in a new way. I shall want to do all that is possible to give to Hobart students an understanding of the social problems of our time. I am convinced that the real menace to our American ideals of citizenship is Bolshevism in one form or another."

The new president will probably be inaugurated at commencement in June, and in common with many a Hobart alumnus I shall envy the students who are to have a part in the life of the campus, the classroom and the old house on South Main street under the new regime.

CLERGY ARE URGED TO UPHOLD PENSION STANDARD

Trustees Explain Reasons for Making No Exceptions in Fund Rules

The following statement has been sent to the clergy throughout the country. It is signed by Bishop Lawrence, Bishop Greer, Dr. Stires, Samuel Mather, J. P. Morgan, Wm. Fellowes Morgan, Charles A. Peabody, Monell Sayre and William H. Truesdale as members of the executive committee of the Church Pension Fund. The statement follows:

Many life insurance companies report to their policyholders from time to time on matters of common and vital interest. The Church Pension Fund is in essence a mutual life insurance company. You are a policyholder and we are the trustees of your property.

We are sure, therefore, that you will be interested in the first annual report which goes to you under another cover. You will note the total assets; you will note also the heavy liabilities and the various accounts. Of great interest, too, is the fact that during the first fiscal year of twenty-two months 98.6 per cent. of the total assessments have been paid. You will be gratified to see the long list of those who are already receiving pensions.

These results have come largely, we believe, because the laymen as well as the clergy of the Church have confidence in and are glad to support a pension system which, by its trusts and the insistence of its rules, protects those for whom the money has been paid in.

The great wreckage of pension systems has been due largely to the fact that the administrators have in the kindness of their hearts yielded to the demand for exceptions and have thereby created precedents which have gradually broken down the systems and have used up the money upon those for whom the money was not paid in. You will, we are sure, insist that your trustees administer the fund with such faithfulness that the system will be firmly upheld and that the monies which have been paid in for the parochial and missionary clergy, their widows and orphans, be in the treasury when the time comes that they rightly call for it.

Men of even the clearest head and best judgment are sometimes moved to ask or even demand that an exception be made for a certain case, without realizing (as they would if they were administrators of the fund) that the making of that exception would create a precedent which, if recognized, might cost millions of dollars. We trustees are moved by a similar sympathy, but as trustees we must be honest and see that the funds go to the persons for whom we hold them in trust. The principles and rules, the actuarial figures, and the 7½ per cent. assessments are all bound up together and no one of them can be safely altered except after some years of experience and further study. A sudden change would either weaken the security of your pension or compel your parish to pay a higher rate of assessment than 7½ per cent.

We assume, therefore, that you will continue to support your trustees in adhering inflexibly to the rules, and we suggest that if at any time, especially in your diocesan convention, action in connection with the Church Pension Fund be proposed, you make sure that it will not weaken the security of your pension and that of the other parochial and missionary clergy, their widows and orphans, for whom the fund is receiving and holding the monies paid in. This done, the Church can best carry out her work of assuring support for her clergy in old age, their widows and orphans.

Mission Releases Diocesan Appropriation

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.—At the recent meeting of the diocesan board of missions a most encouraging thing happened. Milledgeville is a town with two schools and a hospital for the insane. The Church there reported last year only thirty-eight members. A number of these are non-contributors. Nevertheless, a representative from that parish stated to the Board of Missions that they would undertake to raise $1000 and furnish a rectory, if the board could give them a suitable man and pay the rest of his salary. The board immediately arranged to furnish them $700 this year; and they agreed to release $100 of that appropriation next year and still another hundred the next year.

Bewails Loss of Chaplain

The following has been received from a Columbus newspaper: "On Saturday the Columbus Barracks lost one of its most popular officers—a man whose esteem has extended from the post commander to the rawest recruit—when Chaplain Holt of Niles, Michigan, received his discharge, after eight months service at the post. On two days notice Chaplain Holt left his parish and reported to the chaplain's school at Camp Zachary Taylor on July 12, 1918. He was commissioned late in August and came at once to Columbus Barracks where he has since remained.

"He was instrumental in getting the company commanders together and instituting a series of company dances, which Captain Manseau, morale officer, says, 'have done more to raise the morale of the men than any one thing.' It was Holt who originated the letter which is now accompanying every man's discharge and which is mailed to the pastor of his church, after passing through the personnel office and receiving the addresses of the boy's home church and pastor. The idea was at once taken up at Washington and nationalized. Chaplain Holt, with Mrs. Holt, will return to his parish in Niles."

Sendai Mission Saved from Fire

On March 2 part of Sendai, Japan, was swept by fire. The wind was blowing a gale and a thousand houses were destroyed before the conflagration could be checked. The fence and gate of our compound were burned, but the buildings, training school, kindergarten and missionaries' residence were saved. In sending word of the calamity, Deaconess Newbold writes, "We are pretty limp after what we have been through, but the students—bless them—are beginning their exams today."

WOMEN ON MISSIONS BOARD FAVORED IN 40 DIOCESES

Conference Committee Proposes to Set United Offering Minimum Salary

The conference committee of the Woman's Auxiliary has issued a report of the action taken by the diocesan branches in regard to the provision in the proposed national constitution for the Auxiliary to have eight women elected as members of the Board of Missions. It will be recalled that the board in February, 1917, directed this conference committee to ascertain the opinion in regard to this matter. A very large majority of the replies are strongly in favor of having women on the board. Forty dioceses approve, ten disapprove, three are divided, two uncertain, one wishes postponement and thirty have not been heard from.

The conference committee is also recommending the standardization of training and of salary for women appointed to the domestic field under the United Offering—special training, a health certificate, a salary of not less than $600 a year. (This may be paid in part by the bishop and in part from the United Offering, but the United Offering is not to contribute toward any salary that falls below the minimum.) The resolution states that those who are supported by the United Offering should set a standard and develop in the Church a body of workers who are distinctive on account of their excellence.

Rector Chosen Baseball Umpire

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK. The Rev. Dr. Karl Schwartz, rector of the Church of the Saviour, is to act as umpire at the opening game played by the Syracuse team on Memorial Day. Dr. Schwartz was a baseball star in his Syracuse college days, and in his letter of acceptance says, "Because of my real love for a clean game of baseball, I am willing to accept the honor as umpire on Memorial Day. I am one of many in Syracuse who decry the fact that the city must do without a big brand of ball this summer, but like all good sportsmen I accept the half loaf and will do everything possible to aid in the promotion of clean sport for Syracuse."

Bishop Huntington Memorial Fund

It is proposed in connection with the centennial observance of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the late Bishop Huntington of Central New York to establish a memorial fund. The income of this fund will be paid to the Misses Huntington during their lives, afterward it will be used for missionary or other diocesan work under the direction of the bishop. Mr. J. Francis Day, president of the Utica Trust and Deposit Co., has been designated as treasurer and contributions are to be forwarded to him.

Summer Conference for Texas

A summer conference is being planned to meet at Port Lavaca, Diocese of West Texas, during the month of July when the general topics of missions, social service, religious education and church music will be discussed.

DIOCESAN CONVENTIONS MANIFEST INTEREST IN VARIETY OF PROBLEMS

Twenty-two Conventions Are Held, Los Angeles to Have Coadjutor, Clerical Salaries Are Improved in Many Dioceses, Bishops Discuss the Responsibilities of New Era

Twenty-two Conventions—Last week the diocesan conventions were as follows: Erie in the city of Erie, Long Island at the cathedral in Garden City, Salina in the city of Salina, Virginia in Winchester, Iowa in Davenport, Newark in the city of Newark, Connecticut in New Haven, Rhode Island in Edgewood, Bethlehem in Wilkes-Barre, Missouri in St. Louis, Kansas in Topeka, Maine in Portland, Michigan City in Marion, North Carolina in Raleigh, Florida in Jacksonville; while the week before Dallas met in the city of Dallas, Sacramento in the city of Sacramento, Springfield in Champaign, Arkansas in Little Rock, North Texas in Abilene, Utah in Salt Lake City and Los Angeles in the city of Los Angeles. The full report of the Los Angeles convention has not yet reached the office of THE CHURCHMAN, nor have the reports of the Spokane, Oregon, Western Colorado and San Joaquin conventions come in, although these conventions have been held. It is interesting to note in the reports of the conventions both this week and last week that a number of the dioceses are taking steps toward changing the date of the diocesan convention to January to conform with the fiscal year. Washington, North Texas, Rhode Island and Arkansas are among these.

Women's Simultaneous Meetings—As is usual in many dioceses, the Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting synchronously with the diocesan convention in Springfield, Arkansas, North Texas, Iowa, and Michigan City. Girls' Friendly and Daughters of the King conferences were held in some of these dioceses in conjunction with the Woman's Auxiliary meeting.

Coadjutors—Los Angeles is to have a coadjutor. Bishop Johnson made this request in his address to the convention on the ground of the expansion of the work in the diocese. It is the purpose of the bishop to retain jurisdiction over the various diocesan institutions for philanthropic and educational purposes and also over the education of postulants and candidates for holy orders and to commit the rest of the work to the bishop coadjutor. In accordance with his request the Standing Committee was authorized to obtain the consent of the bishops and Standing Committees.

Bishop Talbot repeated his request of two years ago at the Bethlehem convention and asked for a coadjutor. The population of the diocese, he said, was increasing by leaps and bounds. Although he is in his seventy-first year, he is still blessed with sound health, but, he said, "I cannot be unmindful of the fact that both for the more efficient development and enlargement of the work and for the continuation of my health and strength, the time has come to provide me, as soon as practicable, with some form of episcopal assistance."

The bishop said he had not pressed his request because of the war. He suggested that the salary for a second bishop be included in the needs presented in the budget for the Nation-Wide Campaign.

Bishop Cheshire Offers His Resignation—Bishop Cheshire surprised his convention (North Carolina) by offering to retire. It is his wish, he said, to continue his service as long as possible, but, he continued, "I have observed that as men grow old, they often fail to realize their infirmities and cases have been known when eminent clergymen, bishops, as well as presbyters, unconscious of what has been plain to all others, have held on to positions whose duties they were no longer able adequately to perform." The bishop is entering upon his seventieth year. He asked the convention to discuss the matter sitting as a committee of the whole. The convention acceded to his request, and passed an enthusiastic resolution of confidence and loyalty asking the bishop to continue in his work.

It will be recalled that Bishop Cheshire was to have celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his consecration last October, but the celebration was prevented by the influenza. On the last night of the convention, accordingly, a special service of thanksgiving was held at which time the bishop read the address he had prepared for the autumn.

Twenty-five Years a Bishop—When the bishop was consecrated to the diocese, which then included the District of Asheville, there were 64 clergymen in the diocese; 125 parishes and missions; 5,180 communicants; and that year (1893) the sum of $52,727 was contributed for all church purposes. At the time of his consecration there were within the territory of the present diocese 48 clergymen, 78 parishes and missions, and 3,750 communicants. There are now 64 clergymen, 116 parishes and missions, and 8,564 communicants, an increase of 33½ per cent. in the clergy, 50 per cent. in the number of parishes and missions, and 140 per cent. in communicants. During his episcopate the bishop has ordained 54 deacons and 42 priests; he has confirmed 12,071 persons, and has consecrated 54 churches. Surely, he is "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

At the conclusion of the bishop's address the convention passed a resolution congratulating him upon the completion of twenty-five years in the episcopate, and at the same time expressing the gratitude of the diocese for his faithful and devoted service to it as bishop for a quarter of a century and pledged to him continued loyalty.

Resolutions in Regard to Bishop Greer—Several of the dioceses heard of the death of the Bishop of New York while they were in session. Virginia had expected Bishop Lloyd to be present to explain the Nation-Wide Campaign; but he was detained in order to take part in the late bishop's funeral. Long Island had expected Bishop Greer himself to be one of the speakers at the anniversary celebration which marked this year's convention. Missouri, Newark, Virginia and Long Island all passed resolutions of sympathy and of appreciation of the bishop's beautiful life and splendid service to the Church. In speaking of him, Bishop Lines, whose consecration preceded that of Bishop Greer's by only a few months, said: "He was always kind and considerate and brotherly, and I have a very deep sense of sorrow in learning that he has gone. His death is a very great loss to the Church."

Plans for Houses of Churchwomen—Kansas women who have been eager for a voice in church government for some time were given a house of churchwomen which has power to originate legislation. (The impression of the writer is that this is the only house of churchwomen with such power, although other houses of churchwomen may make recommendations to diocesan conventions.) Bishop Stearly proposed a house of churchwomen to the Newark convention, and Bishop Lines heartily concurred in the plan. Bishop Lines then announced that a conference of women would be held in Newark in the autumn to take action in this matter. The Newark women are also planning a diocesan house. The women, meeting as the Woman's Auxiliary, in Michigan City, are planning to organize a house of churchwomen after the election of Woman's Auxiliary officers at the next annual meeting, and have instructed the delegates to come prepared for action in this matter.

Women Delegates in Conventions—Two dioceses report women delegates in their conventions, Rhode Island and Kansas. Unfortunately the Kansas delegate forgot her credentials, and so Bishop Wise was unable to rule in her behalf. Impetus was given to ecclesiastical equal suffrage at the Kansas convention by the presence of Miss Elizabeth Dyer and Mrs. E. L. McMillian, members of the vestry of the Church of the Holy Communion in St. Louis, Bishop Wise's former parish. In Rhode Island women sat in convention for the second time, four delegates this year. A memorial was adopted by the convention asking General Convention to interpret the word "laymen" in the constitution of the Church to mean women as well as men.

Tag Day in Kansas—Tag day at the Kansas convention meant that every one must subscribe to a church paper. Altogether sixty subscriptions were secured by the Cathedral Girls' Friendly Society, and a profit of $16.70 was made. Cardboard tags in the form of a cross, with the letters "I. T. C. P. (I take a church publication)—Do you?" were used. (Next week THE CHURCHMAN hopes to publish a picture of this novel tag.)

Ecclesiastical Comity—The Presbyterian General Assembly was in session in St. Louis during the meeting of the Missouri convention. Bishop Johnson and two other clergymen were appointed to carry the greetings of the convention to the Presbyterian assembly. Later in the same day a delegation from the assembly visited the convention. In response to their greeting, Bishop Tuttle said: "We not only welcome you, but we thank you, and we bow to you, and we invoke God's blessing and guidance and grace on you as you return to your deliberations and as you return to your homes."

Diocese Wants to Change Its Name—The convention of Michigan City passed a motion that the name of the diocese be changed to the Diocese of Northern Indiana.

Clerical Salaries—The question of clerical salaries was to the fore in the discussion in many dioceses. In Rhode Island the report of the committee on inadequate salaries brought out the fact that thirteen parishes have increased their salaries during the past year, and that only eight are paying less than $1,500 and none less than $1,000. Bishop Johnson of Missouri asked that the convention would express their support of his desire that no missionary's salary should fall below $1,500 and a house. The convention subsequently went on record as sharing this desire. Bishop Sage urged the responsibility of adequate salaries upon his convention. Bishop Brewster (Connecticut), after saying that he appreciated the action of certain parishes in increasing the rector's salary, continued: "I hope there will be more examples. It is not always remembered that in view of the present prices a certain figure really equals only half of that figure two years ago. There ought to be increases all along the line. Naturally, my own efforts have been first exerted where the salary was less than twelve hundred dollars." In Dallas, Bishop Moore announced that nearly every clergyman was receiving at least $1,500 and rectory.

Bishop Morrison, speaking at the Iowa convention, said: "Many of the clergy now could make a better living in our cities, and their salaries would be better than they are now."

Three Pathetic Letters—"I have three extremely pathetic letters," said Bishop Israel in his convention address to the Diocese of Erie, "from clergymen who desire to exercise their priesthood, but who have been compelled to engage in secular work because they cannot find a living wage in the Church. I would read them to you, but I cannot without violating confidences. One is working all day and performing priestly offices in the evenings and on Sundays."

Two Splendid Gifts for Springfield—Bishop Sherwood announced two gifts of ten thousand dollars each for the endowment of the episcopate in Springfield. One is from Mrs. Jessie Taylor Brown of St. Paul's Church, Springfield, as a memorial to her mother. This is the first large gift ever made to the Diocese of Springfield. The second gift, to be made, like the first, in five yearly installments of $2,000 each, recorded simply as an intention because of complications due to an entailed estate, is also from a woman, a communicant of another city in the diocese. Bishop Sherwood in announcing these gifts brought out the financial situation in the diocese in an interesting way. He said:

"So far as I know there has never been a large gift to the diocese in the forty-two years of its history. There has never been what you may call an outburst of liberality on the part of our people. Knowing as we have known that the building of a large endowment fund for the support of the episcopate would release more money for missions than anything else we could do, enabling us to pay our apportionment in full to the general Church and maintain that self-respect which can come only from the payment of our just debts, the fact remains that the history of this diocese has been one of sordid struggle. The episcopate has never been properly supported, the clergy have never been properly supported, the work of the church extension would have come to naught had we relied upon our own gifts for our own mission work.

"You may perhaps be forgiven for not supporting the episcopate. Bishop Seymour was for his day a wealthy man, but had it not been for his personal fortune he would have starved to death. Bishop Osborne came to you from a life of utter self-denial which I fear was not mitigated during his tenure of the office of Bishop of Springfield. When you elected your present diocesan the greatest question you faced—and you faced it and answered it bravely—was, Can we afford to elect a poor man as our bishop?

"When I came to you I came expecting to find not only diocesan poverty but individual poverty. I had known of you for years and pitied you. Most of the letters of congratulation which came to me were really letters of pity, sympathy, assurance of prayers for my new and desperate condition. But, brethren, some one had seen this diocese through blue glasses. I knew the bishop had no home and I was surprised to find that our people owned their homes. I was in one of our country places and learned that one of our communicants was a farmer. I thought of course he must be a tenant. But he really owned that farm, and that farm comprised an even 1,000 acres of the richest soil in America, and the stipend of that man's clergyman was $300 a year and last year they paid all but $50 of it! Then I found there were many farmers with many thousands of acres and many business men with large interests and these farmers and these business men belonged to the Episcopal Church, and I looked at the salaries of the clergy and the large sum of money given to us by generous church people outside of the diocese, and the niggardly amount we gave for the work elsewhere and the work at home, and never in forty-two years a single large gift to the Diocese of Springfield! And I prayed to God to give vision to my people, to touch their hearts and open them and let them see the splendid opportunity they had for service, the noble uses that there are for wealth, and the possibility of a diocese that has been weak and dependent of growing strong and vigorous and becoming at last a power for good in God's Church."

Financial Affairs—Last week the excellent financial condition of the dioceses was noted and the fact that several dioceses were seeking to improve their financial methods. The same situation is apparent from the convention reports this week. Dallas reports $60,000 towards the diocesan endowment fund. Bishop Moreland in his convention address asked the diocese for a financial agent. Bishop Wise asked for a business administrator, saying that the financial work of the diocese was keeping Canon Hawkins from his pastoral work and that a consecrated layman, desirous of working for the Church, had offered his services to the diocese for a very low salary. In Virginia a general fiscal agent for all diocesan funds was elected, the Rev. G. McLaren Brydon of Richmond, to receive and disburse such funds and inform parish treasurers about apportionments and dues. Newark passed a resolution to memorialize General Convention to use, as need may arise, for clergymen not beneficiaries of the fund, the interest and principal of $400,000 raised by authority of the General Convention of 1907. Florida hereafter will count all missionary funds from the Woman's Auxiliary, Sunday Schools and Men's Missionary Society as separate and additional. The effort will be made to raise $10,000. Virginia and Springfield raised the bishop's salary to $5,000. Arkansas adopted the parish treasurer's cashbook. It also pledged its support to an endowment fund for the episcopate to be raised in Liberty Bonds.

Free Pews—In Rhode Island all but sixteen of the seventy-six parishes and missions in the diocese are now free churches. In Connecticut Bishop Brewster had this to say about free pews:

"Putting prices upon seats of the house of God or any commercialized method of church support would be bad enough had it worked successfully. The pew rent system, however, as an adequate means of support has practically broken down. When and where it has seemed to be really a question of private pews versus people, surely there can be no hesitation as to which shall be abandoned. It is, I am convinced, a time to beware of putting overmuch dependence upon financial resources and worldly methods. Today the Church's work in the world is not so much money that we are to depend upon, it is the power of profound conviction. We need more of faith and of prayer."

The Laity Take Hold—An instance of how the laymen are taking hold of diocesan problems was found in North Carolina when the Thompson Orphanage and St. Mary's School were made the special order for the day and laymen were the speakers. When the special representative of the trustees of St. Mary's School, engaged to raise the sum of $250,000 for improvements and endowment, made his report, and stated that the diocese lacked about $14,000 of its quota of $75,000, at once $5,000 was subscribed towards the $14,000, and a resolution was passed requesting the local committees in the various parishes to raise at once their respective parts of the remaining $9,000. In Salina the district board of missions established by canon at the convention will consist entirely of laymen, representing every parish and mission in the diocese.

Matters of Interest in Many Dioceses—

Of course all of the conventions heard of the Nation-Wide Campaign from specially appointed speakers, and so far as the reports from the dioceses show, all voted in approval of the campaign. A number of dioceses spent some time discussing the responsibilities of the diocese for students in college towns. Erie and Bethlehem discussed the necessity for student work at State College, Pennsylvania, and Bishop Brown urged upon Virginia the importance of building a student church for the University of Virginia. As was the case last week, a number of the southern dioceses heard of the plan for the Sewanee endowment and appointed committees of cooperation. The new hymnal, religious education, the work of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew were other subjects presented at a number of conventions by specially appointed speakers. Arkansas passed a resolution commending prohibition and Bethlehem found time to discuss possible substitutes for the saloon. Virginia, Sacramento, Iowa, Maine, passed resolutions in favor of the League of Nations. Connecticut approved "an effective organization for the maintenance of peace." In Kansas there was unanimous endorsement of the League of Nations—a statement that last autumn defeated every Democratic congressman but one.

Diocesan Missions—Rural and diocesan missions again came in for a good deal of attention from the conventions. In Utah a paper read by Archdeacon Reese caused a good deal of interest. The archdeacon favored the farmer-parson, living on a church farm. The farm would be a bond of contact between the leader and his parishioners. The diocesan social service committee reported lending aid to cooperative movements among the farming people of the state. Bethlehem voted an increase of 22 per cent. for diocesan missions.

Other Matters—Bethlehem went on record as approving cooperation of social agencies for the reemployment of soldiers, the censoring of motion pictures, juvenile courts, Americanization and substitutes for the saloon. In Long Island expression was given by a unanimous vote to the opposition felt towards Sunday baseball. In Rhode Island a committee was created to protest against the law permitting Sunday baseball. A memorial was sent to the congressmen representing the state opposing the lifting of the ban on wine and beer.

Iowa and Utah voted the resumption of their diocesan monthly magazines.

Maine is planning the celebration of its diocesan centennial next year and has accepted the invitation of Mr. Robert Gardiner to meet at Gardiner, Maine. Connecticut is planning the celebration of the centennial of Bishop Brownell, St. Louis the cathedral centennial and Michigan City Bishop White's silver jubilee in May, 1920.

The Bishops' Addresses—To give even the topics of the addresses of twenty-two bishops—more than that, in fact, for in many dioceses with two or three bishops, all of the bishops spoke—is manifestly impossible. After paying tribute to Bishop Gibson, Bishop Brown of Virginia spoke at length of the importance of subscriptions to church papers in church families and urged better attendance at vestry meetings. Bishop Wise asked for many things: for interest in the student pastor conference, for an educational secretary, a business administrator, a forward movement fund, a parochial prayer league. Bishop Sage described the associate mission plan. Bishop Touret, in temporary charge of Utah, deplored the lack of men for the district, and urged that eastern rectors take their vacations in the western mission fields and that they secure leaves of absence for such work. Social service in the life of the Church was the subject of Bishop Brewster of Maine's address. Arkansas has the distinction of having three bishops, Winchester, Saphore and Demby, each of whom made an encouraging address.

The Demand—In regard to our post-war responsibility, Bishop Cheshire said: "For the diocese, for my own work as your bishop, I make now only one demand. Our country two years ago called for our sons and brothers. We sent them ungrudgingly. We sent them knowingly and consciously 'into the gates of death and into the jaws of hell.' And they faltered not, neither did we. I ask now for those same sons and brothers, that they may serve as soldiers and as officers in the army of Christ, in His company of preachers and heralds of the Cross. I appoint each clergyman of this diocese a recruiting officer to enlist men for our church training camps. And I specially want men whose fiber has been hardened and whose spirit has been refined in the fires of battle. We, who had no such experience, may hope and believe that God will bless our poor work, when we strive and do our best. But with how much more power can he speak the word of truth who has daily looked death in the face, and blanched not! Can we be satisfied not to enlist in the ranks of our clergy these young lives who have learned that first lesson which our Lord taught those whom He sent out: 'He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for My sake shall find it.'"

The Church in the Balance—Bishop Burgess of Long Island called upon the parishes to justify their existence. He said:

"The time is fast approaching when the Church is to be weighed in the balance by the new age. Stop thinking about fifty years ago and bemoaning the changed conditions! The old period is forever gone; it will not come back any more than the age of the apostles and the miracles. We must go forward, ever forward, and meet the era, the new aeon in the history of the world. The Church is to be tried.

"If these buildings which our predecessors built for the worship of God are left unused and neglected save by a few old women and children, then the Socialist will order them taxed as an incumbrance to the city's growth, and the Socialist will be right. If our fat endowments are used as an excuse for the vestries' not giving to the cause of missions or paying a laborer's wage to the ministers of Christ, then I hope an indignant public will order them to be confiscated for the care of the sick and the orphan. If our Church no longer preaches the faith of Christ in all its power, His atoning love, His Resurrection as foreshadowing man's personal immortality; if our people do not value the sacraments as the very source of their spiritual power, if they do not bring their children to baptism and lead them to confirmation; if the Lord's Day passes without loving commemoration of His Passion by His faithful people, then indeed the new civilization will move onward and pass the churches by.

"The Church must accept the challenge, pick up the steel gauntlet as it falls rattling on the pavement before its door. The Church must show that it has a part to play, and an essential part, in the national development. Mighty changes have come in men's estimate of religion through the exigencies of a war which, with its lurid light, brought out in bold relief the stern realities of life. The world does not wish to hear vague glittering generalities about humanity and divine benevolence. It wants to hear the Gospel of love and power. And the Church which will prevail at last will be the Church which has a gospel to preach, definite, clear, founded on truth and appealing to the mind and the heart, and upheld by its united voice. We can sacrifice too much for mere outward machine unity. What the Church must have is the unity of a man, i.e., the unity of a vertebrate, not of a jellyfish."

Bishop Talbot's Address—Bishop Talbot in his address declared that "unless the new spiritual war, for the conquest of the world for Christ at home and abroad is fought and won, the great sacrifices which we have recently made to set the world free from military despotism and brute force, will have been in vain. The only power by which we as a nation can permanently hold what we have won by the force of arms is the power of the Resurrection manifested in bringing the world under the glad and loyal obedience to the will of Christ. Through an over-ruling providence God has brought us the promise of a new and better day for all mankind. A new consecration is needed to the greater tasks of bringing the gospel of peace home to the greatest of men."

The Missouri Addresses—Bishop Tuttle spoke first in Missouri, going back to the beginnings of the Missionary Host which celebrates its jubilee this month. He also urged the celebration of the cathedral centennial.

Bishop Johnson had this to say about church unity:

"In almost every quarter of the globe, sometimes by efforts to reunite parts of one communion, sometimes by attempting to bring together entire communions not differing much in discipline or worship, the desire is demonstrated for an alliance of Christian forces in some sort similar to the alliance of fighting forces that strangled Germany. Have we, really, sympathy with that desire? Who are these Christian brethren from whom we are separated and they from us?

"When the fate of the world hung upon the question whether Haig and Pershing would put their forces side by side, no one cared a button about who was responsible for spilling the tea in Boston Harbor a century and a half ago.

"Who are these brethren who approach us with the wish that we would join with them in whatever ways we can in fellowship and service? Baptized with water in the Triune name, have they not as effectually as we been received into the congregation of Christ's flock and made members of His body? Are not the beliefs which they hold as absolutely essential the beliefs which Paul insists upon in his epistles.

No Time to Defend Differences—"Are we right in thinking that one lesson that the Holy Spirit would teach us by the war is that this is not a time for the strengthening of agencies whose chief purpose is the defence of differences; that this is not a time for Churches to elaborate plans to shut members of Christ off from other members of Christ by a still higher fence, with barbed wire stretched across the top and knotholes all plugged up; that this is not a time for us of this communion to continue to reiterate our 'grief for our aloofness in the past, and to treat too often with scant courtesy those who eagerly approach us with the anxious hope that they and we together, by the Holy Spirit's aid, may find a way by which the middle walls of partition may be broken down!

Unity at the Altar—"Not many summers ago I was preaching in a village where there was no worship of the Congregational sort, and one of the worshipers with us was a distinguished minister of Christ, president of a Congregational theological school which is classed among the best in this country. The rector gave notice that there would be a celebration of the Holy Communion on the following Sunday. Said my Congregational friend to me as we exchanged greetings at the door, 'Do you think that Rector So and So would permit me to come to the Holy Communion next Sunday, with my wife?' (The wife, by the way, had been raised in the Church of England.) And that night I fell to thinking how Bishop McCormick, home from France, having jurisdiction of our chaplains at the front, had told us at a meeting of the clergy here in St. Louis that the chaplains over there were 'instructed to invite to the Holy Communion Christian men of all Churches.' And I fell to wondering whether we truly have the mind of Christ when we retain in our Prayer Book a rubric which does not, ex amino, encourage us to fetch along to 'the Lord's own service' Christian men who are fully going over the top against spiritual wickedness, that they may strengthen and refresh their souls as comrades in arms with us at one Holy Table of the Lord!

"I fell to wondering whether we truly have the mind of Christ when it has come to pass that a fellow member of Christ, of sublime faith, whose credentials of having been 'admitted into the fellowship of Christ's religion' in the sacrament of baptism are not doubted, who finds himself in a village where there is no church but ours, must stop at the door of our church and ask whether he would be 'permitted' to 'draw near with faith' to the Holy Table and take with us the other of the two sacraments which Christ hath ordained in His Church and put himself in touch with this special channel of the grace which assists us to 'continue in that holy fellowship and to do all such good works as He hath prepared for us to walk in!'

"Dear people, I am not presuming to suggest any platform of Christian unity. I am expressing my earnest belief that these are days in which we have a more compelling duty than simply to hold our membership against possible dangers of centrifugence. Is it necessary for us or good for the world that we should 'dig in' any more securely?"

Bishop Perry's Address—In his address Bishop Perry reviewed the response of the diocese to the call of the war, and also his eight months' service in France as representative of the War Commission. He pointed to the long rectorships of many of the clergy of the diocese as an assurance of continuity in diocesan life. Emphasizing the need of great care in arranging for war memorials in churches he requested that the diocesan architectural commission be called upon to lend advice. He outlined the encouraging condition of the diocese as evidenced by its support of war work, of missions, and of diocesan enterprises, and by its new vitality in public worship. In deprecating idle generalizations on our present national status, he believed there was need before all else of searching examination of our social, industrial, and religious institutions. "For us the present is a time, not yet of reconstruction, but of self-revelation." "With the passing of the old order the heralds of the new come to us in strange and startling guise, and woe to the state that refuses to take full account of them. The terror of Bolshevism, the strictures of prohibition, the widening outlook of internationalism, will work more harm if treated with obstinate intolerance even than if proclaimed as the solution of existing evils. They are not solutions. They are symptoms of social disorders, protests against intolerable conditions, which in our blindness and complacency we had refused to acknowledge."

It was therefore, the bishop believed, the duty of the Church to make careful study of the present social order and to bring all her spiritual resources to bear upon it. "With the spiritual enlightenment offered by the Christian Church lies the hope of the future." And to meet the present situation he advocated and explained the Nation-wide Campaign for the Church's mission. The address concluded with an appeal for the unity of all Christendom; not by compromise, but by an ideal of union discovered in the war: the pursuit of high purposes under differences of administration and diversities of gifts. "Let our own Church, with all courage and with humility, extend to our brethren on the right hand and on the left (Catholic and Protestant), the spirit that is ready to teach and to be taught, to give and to receive."

The Church and the New Order—Bishop Lines in a notable address to the Newark convention spoke of the Church's place in the new order, as follows:

"No age lived through ever comes back. Most systems and many institutions live out their time and pass, and they are passing fast in these days. Just now, about three hundred princes of one or another degree are said to have been taken out of their places by the war for the great good of the world, upon which they have preyed while they lived their useless lives, facing the possibility now of earning their living. There are a great many other old and accepted things in our social, industrial and political order which must go and it is useless to fight for them. The Church must not bind itself to an old and unchanging order for it belongs to Him who brought a new revelation and established a new order and gave us the hope of a new heaven and a new earth, and is making all things new by the power of His Holy Spirit as truly now as when He conquered death and gave to all who would receive it the inheritance of eternal life."

"We are taught that if a man would save his life he must lose it, and if the Church would save itself it must forget itself and lose its life in the service of the world. No Church which has the Master's consuming zeal for service and the love of souls need have any anxiety about its future. If its Master lived in poverty, it can do the same, and the times when great material resources and wealth have come to the Church have been the times of its poverty in spiritual power.

"The Church has a new responsibility, the meeting of which determines whether it shall be strong or weak. It has the spiritual resources to use in this new contention for the making of a better world, and the question is of its ability to use them."

The Causes of the Church's Slow Growth—"Some of the causes which have prevented the greater growth of the Church in this country are creditable to it," continued Bishop Lines. "The maintenance of dignity and reverence in the worship of the Almighty God, the holding of the Christian faith expressed in the early creeds in a distinct and definite way, the emphasis put upon the sacraments of baptism and the Holy Communion, the disinclination to adopt sensational ways and practices, the conservative position as regards Holy Scripture, the careful maintenance of a ministry of the ancient order, our attitude as regards marriage and divorce, stand in the way of great popular appeal in this country where many of these characteristics of the Church are not greatly regarded. We must appear, if we maintain the sober and serious traditions of the past, a somewhat exclusive kind of people, and I think we often make ourselves appear worse than we are. We are credited with an aloofness and an exclusiveness and lack of charity which we do not feel.

"I do not see why this Church should not continue to emphasize the place of reverent worship, and the sacraments, positive teaching out of and in accordance with the Holy Scriptures, an historic ministry, without being exclusive or taking an attitude of aloofness from other Churches.

The teaching of anything positive is likely to bring the criticism of being narrow and exclusive, but much depends upon the spirit in which a position is taken and held. We would do a great deal better if we were more gracious and generous in the way in which we hold our position and stake what we believe. Hardly anything creates more prejudice now than the affectation of superiority, talking about one's ancestry and the disposition to make claims."

The Christian Creed—"The tide runs strongly," concluded the bishop, "towards the careless thinking that men are to make their own creeds and make them over from generation to generation as the feeling of the time may be. Thoughtless people speak of creeds as if they were chains and bonds for the suppression of thinking, and the creeds have been through all the ages the protection of Christian liberty, of simplicity in faith. They have barred the way against the binding of hard systems of theology and human speculations upon the Church. Their great office of maintaining simplicity in religion has been nobly performed. Give God thanks that you have been trained to stand, in your day and generation in the house of God and say 'I believe in God, the Father Almighty.'"

Interesting Convention Events—It is very difficult to give any idea of the interesting convention features—meetings, dinners, special services and so on—when twenty-two conventions have to be covered in a single issue of THE CHURCHMAN. Last week, for example, the account of the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of Rock Creek Church as part of the Washington convention, as well as the account of the consecration of St. Paul's Church, Augusta, rebuilt and free from debt after the fire in 1916, were both crowded out at the last minute. Suffice it to say that both Connecticut and Bethlehem had interesting pre-convention meetings with speeches in Connecticut on Brotherhood work, Daughters of the King, G.F.S., child welfare, etc., and in Bethlehem in various reconstruction problems. In Sacramento Major Sanborn, of whom a graphic account may be found in the California letter this week, spoke to the convention. The Erie Churchmen's Club gave a dinner at which the chaplains spoke. In Rhode Island a new stone tower and chime of bells in the churchyard at Edgewood was consecrated during the convention. Newark had a service of recognition and thanksgiving in honor of the 4,400 members of the diocese who have been in the national service. The names of the hundred and fifty men who were killed or died in the service, were read by the diocesan historian. From the galleries hung the parish service flags.

Long Island's Anniversary—The chief feature of the Long Island convention was the service at the cathedral when the fiftieth anniversary of the diocese was celebrated, and the half million dollar fund for the Church Charity Foundation was presented at the altar. The procession around the cathedral was made vivid by the parish banners and the hoods and stoles of the clergy. The lay delegates from each parish marched together, carrying the parish banner made for the occasion. The procession stopped at the steps for a short service and address of welcome from Bishop Burgess, and then passed into the cathedral for the main service and sermon. Afterwards three hundred delegates had luncheon at the Garden City Hotel. Bishop Darlington, Senator Tully, Mr. W. M. Baldwin and Dr. Delatour were the speakers. It was on this occasion that Bishop Greer had been scheduled to speak.

Personals—At the Newark convention the delegates marked their appreciation of the twenty years of service as secretary performed by the Rev. John Kellar, by a rising vote. Since his first convention in 1887 he has never missed a session of any convention. Connecticut marked the forty-first year of the services of the Rev. Francis Goodwin, D.D., as president of the trustees for receiving donations for the support of the bishop, by a vote of felicitation. General W. W. Skiddy, for more than forty years a member of the diocese and for twenty years a member and chairman of the diocesan finance committee, was tendered a vote of thanks for all his services on his removal from the diocese. Bishop Tuttle presided at all sessions of his convention in the fifty-third year of his episcopate.

Our Weekly News Letters

NEW YORK

Letter Carriers at the Cathedral—Last Sunday fifteen hundred letter carriers attended the memorial service held for them at the cathedral. With their band of sixty pieces they marched from Broadway into the cathedral. Postmaster Patton and other officials attended. Dr. Manning was the preacher.

Bishop Brent Dinner Given Up—When the Church Club heard of the death of Bishop Greer, they had just completed all arrangements for the dinner of welcome to Bishop Brent planned for the following day. Of course the dinner was immediately given up.

Bronze Tablet to Soldiers—Last Sunday Holyrood Church unveiled a bronze tablet in memory of three parishioners killed in the war. Canon Nelson delivered the principal address. The rector, the Rev. Dr. Carstenson, who was a chaplain in the Spanish War, also spoke.

Archdeaconry Meeting—The archdeaconry of Richmond held its spring session at St. Andrew's Church, Richmond, on May 22. Dr. Dodd, Dr. Browne and Dr. Frost, who have recently returned from serving with the A. E. F. told of their experiences at the front. The Richmond branch of the Woman's Auxiliary met at the same time.

G. F. S. Elects New President—The diocesan council meeting of the G. F. S. was held on May 12. As was announced last week, the president, Miss Edith Hadley has resigned, as has Miss Satterlee, diocesan secretary for thirteen years. Mrs. G. C. Lowreys succeeds Miss Hadley and Miss M. C. Courtney succeeds Miss Satterlee. A vote taken by branches in regard to the proposed change in the third central rule resulted in a decision against the change.

SPRINGFIELD

Centralia—St. John's Church under the present care of the Rev. J. G. Wright, rural dean of Litchfield, is about to enter upon a new era, which promises great things for the future of this old parish. The church building had become very delapidated and the lots on which it stood very valuable for business purposes; these were recently sold for $7,000. The church was deconsecrated by the Rev. J. G. Wright, acting on the authority of the bishop. A new lot in a very much better location has been purchased and the parish has received a legacy of $5,000 from an old parishioner. This with subscriptions and gifts in hand and in sight will give them a fund to start a new building.

Diocesan Funds—The members of St. Mark's, Carmi, an unorganized mission in the Diocese of Springfield, have contributed $750 to the endowment fund of the diocese during the year.

Easter—Lenten services throughout the diocese seem to have been fairly well attended. Easter was beautiful and large congregations were the order of the day. Alton, St. Paul's, 164 communions, $528 offerings; Cairo, Redemer, 118 communions, $666, offerings; Danville 122 communions, $380 offerings and nine baptisms on Easter Eve; East St. Louis, 140 communions, $750 offerings; Jacksonville, 106 communions, $718 offerings. Springfield, St. Paul's, 240 communions and about $1,500 offerings. Springfield, Christ Church, 150 communions.

Mite Box Offerings—The diocesan banner presented by the bishop to the Sunday School having the largest mite box lentin offering seems to have been won by the Sunday School of Trinity Church, Jacksonville, which takes it from the Granite City Sunday School. Up to this time the amount of this offering reported is $715. We hoped that it would reach $1,000. There are still a number of Sunday Schools to hear from. It is, however, the largest ever made in the diocese.

Colored Mission—The entire indebtedness on St. Luke's Mission (colored), Springfield, has been paid and the mission, free of debt, has a beautiful little church and rectory. The priest-in-charge, the Rev. E. A. Craig, has gone on a trip to his old home in British Guiana, expecting to return in September.

Bishop's Anniversary Present—The bishop observed the second anniversary of his consecration on St. Mark's Day with a celebration of the Holy Communion in Trinity Church, Rock Island, his former parish, where he had been called to officiate at the funeral of a friend. On his return home he found on his desk a beautiful gold watch, of the latest design made in Springfield, and called "Illinois."

ALBANY

Church Pays off Indebtedness.—Members and friends of Bethesda Parish, Saratoga Springs, have united in an Eastertide offering of $5,800. This is the generous response made to the appeal of rector and vestry for a suitable expression of thanksgiving for victory and peace. Included in the offering were some Liberty Bonds, War Savings Certificates and Thrift Stamps.

The Rev. Irving G. Rouillard became rector last June. Under his administration, the debt on the church has been paid, the every member envelope system extended, and the maintenance of the beautiful parish house, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Trask, has been secured through one hundred monthly contributors. A mission chapel is included within the parish, and the clergy are chaplains of the Home of the Good Shepherd.

It will be of interest to the clergy to know that there is at Saratoga Springs in the Parish of Bethesda Church, a clergy rest-house, where they may have rooms during the summer months free of charge, board not being furnished however. Engagements of not over two weeks can be made by any clergyman through correspondence with Mr. Rouillard.

Parish Plan Discussed.—On Tuesday and Wednesday in Easter week Trinity Parish, Plattsburgh, enjoyed a visit from Mr. E. J. Walenta, representing the War Commission and the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Mr. Walenta addressed a meeting of women on Tuesday afternoon, explaining methods of work in the camps and recommending means of reaching the men after their discharge from service. Next morning Mr. Walenta visited General Hospital No. 30. In the evening the usual Easter supper was served by the ladies of parish and Mr. Walenta addressed the large gathering present, presenting the "Parish Plan" for welcoming returned soldiers. A parish committee was organized. The War Commission is particularly fortunate in its representative, he is a most effective speaker, possessing a fund of humor and at the same time taking a most sane view of both men and conditions.

EAST CAROLINA

Standing Committee.—At a recent meeting of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of East Carolina, the Rev. John S. Moody of Fayetteville, and Judge Rountree of Wilmington, were elected as members to fill vacancies caused by the removal from the diocese of the Rev. C. H. Jordan and Mr. F. R. Rose. Rev. John S. Moody was elected secretary and all communications for the committee should now be addressed to him at Fayetteville, North Carolina.

Easter Gifts.—In Greenville memorial gifts consisting of eucharistic candlesticks, white veil and burse, a Bible and cruets were received and dedicated at the six o'clock Communion service on Easter. Large offerings were made. An Easter purse was presented to the rector, the Rev. C. H. Bascom, by the men of the parish. In Christ Church, New Bern, the largest Easter offering in the history of the parish was presented this year, $1,515.

Unique Easter Service.—At the evening service on Easter the rector and congregation of St. Luke's, Roper, found the church thronged to the doors as the Baptist and Methodist ministers had cancelled their services and together with their congregations had come to St. Luke's for the special Easter service. The Rev. J. N. Bynum is rector of the parish.

Offerings for Missions.—St. Peter's, Washington, the Rev. M. C. Daughtrey, rector, on Easter presented an offering of over $400 for missions. One of the largest congregations ever gathered in the church was present on this occasion. The council of the diocese met in this parish on May 13. The Sunday School of St. Stephen's, Goldsboro, using a special lenten plan of encircling a cross with stars each star representing a dollar placed in the mite box, presented this year the largest offering in the history of the Sunday School.

LONG ISLAND

Two Hundredth Anniversary.—The two hundredth anniversary of St. George's Church, Flushing, was observed Sunday, May 4. There were two Communion services; the sermon was preached by the Rev. M. L. Griffith; in the evening an historic address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Van de Water of Manhattan.

In 1761 St. George's received its charter from King George III. The Rev. Samuel Seabury, rector, later became the first bishop of the American church. The corner stone of the present edifice was laid May 1, 1853. The present rector is the Rev. H. D. Waller. MARY E. SMYTH.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

Graham.—The Ven. E. A. Rich, Archdeacon of the Southwest, asked the congregation of St. Mary's Church, Graham, to make an Easter offering sufficient to cancel the debt on the church, which amounted to $500. The response of the congregation was $750. This leaves the beautiful village church free of encumbrance and the bishop has set July 11 as the day for its consecration.

Lynchburg.—A beautiful new chapel, built at the Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, was consecrated on Sunday, May 11. Bishop Tucker officiated, and Dr. McKim of Washington, was the preacher.

Norfolk.—Mid-day lenten services conducted in the American Theatre, under the auspices of the Church Federation of Norfolk were most successful, the attendance and interest greater than in previous years. All communions were interested and participated. The work done by volunteer Brotherhood of St. Andrew men in and around Norfolk among the men in the service has been singularly successful. Among these was Mr. H. H. Cowan, a layman of Philadelphia who has just completed his term of service. With the assistance of the rectors of Old St. Paul's, St. Luke's and Galilee Chapel (Virginia Beach) he prepared and brought to confirmation about fifty men in the service during his three months work.

New Missions.—The Rev. Herbert N. Tucker rector of the churches in Mecklenburg County has opened a mission at South Hill. He ministers to five points besides the parish church at Boynton, and the work is flourishing.

OREGON

Burial Service of the Rev. J. E. H. Simpson.—The funeral and requiem celebration of the Holy Communion of the Rev. J. E. H. Simpson was held at St. Mark's on April 29. Mr. Simpson died at his summer home at Estacada and the body was brought to Portland and placed in the choir of the church, where some of the clergy kept watch. Several celebrations of the Holy Communion were held, one in the crypt chapel for the family. The city clergy and Bishop Sumner conducted the funeral service.

Mr. Simpson was born in Ireland in 1860. His father, grandfather and great-grandfather were priests of the Church of Ireland. He was educated at home and in England, and graduated at Seabury Hall, Faribault, in 1890. Ordered both deacon and priest by Bishop Worthington, he had charges in Nebraska and Iowa. In 1896 he came to Portland, where he was rector of St. Mark's nearly twenty-three years. Last September owing to failing health he resigned the parish and was made rector emeritus.

From The Telegram of April 30.—It may be truthfully said of the Rev. John E. H. Simpson that he was "the salt of the earth" as defined by the Master. During his long and faithful service as rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church he devoted his best energies to ministering to the poor and the unfortunate and the down-hearted. He was one of the rare men who, wearing the cloth, would bend over the gutter and extend a helping hand to him who felt himself outside the pale of humanity. He put hope and strength into the heart of the down-and-outer, and in reality he did what he could to save men's souls and bodies.

Out of his great heart he gave freely to make the world better. He hated wrong in every form, and with hot Irish blood surging in his veins he fought injustice wherever he came into contact with it. One of his distinctly Christian ministrings was man-to-man talks with prisoners in jail. He could not deny brotherhood even to law-breakers. By all who ever got near him, he will be remembered with respect and deep affection. E. H. CLARK.

ERIE

A New Altar.—On Easter Day Bishop Israel consecrated the beautiful marble altar lately installed in St. John's Church,

May 31, 1919

Sharon (the Rev. E. J. Owen, rector). The altar and reredos are among the most ornate in this section of the country. The altar is elaborated with three great squares of conventionalized rose trees; and the grape-vine and the wheat symbolical of the Sacrament.

Three Debts Cleared Away.—Through the energy of its rector, the Rev. Bruce V. Reddish, Trinity Church, New Castle, has at last been cleared of its indebtedness. A campaign to raise funds for this purpose was successful, and the $7,000 on the church property has been paid. Thus a long wished for result has been accomplished, and the bishop has set Memorial Day as the date of the consecration of the church. It is hoped that the clergy of the diocese and all other friends of the parish will be present on this joyous occasion. Ascension Parish, Bradford, the Rev. W. H. Overs, Ph.D., rector, has also been made very happy by the action of a generous donor, Mr. Thomas R. Kennedy, paying the entire parish debt of $4,500. This gift was made in memory of his mother. Dr. Overs has not only cared for the work of his parish, but ever since he has come to Bradford he has taken an important place in the civic life of the city. St. Mark's, Erie, under its active rector, the Rev. Harold Jenkin, likewise reports freedom from all indebtedness this year.

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting.—The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at St. Mark's, Erie, on May 8 and 9. Bishop Israel was celebrant at the service which all the delegates attended. At the business meeting there were encouraging reports from all the parishes.

Some criticism was offered to the proposed constitution for the Woman's Auxiliary, and to the resolutions in regard to the United Offering Workers. It was considered by some that salaries of only $600 for women workers put the Church in the position of certain much criticized corporations that are paying "starvation wages."

Bishop Hulse, of Cuba, held every one's attention as he spoke of his work and the claims of Latin America. From the Jamaica Negro who asks the bishop's help because "We are Englishmen, Sir," to the poorest peasant the bishop is caring for all.

The Bishop's Activities.—The bishop has spent a most strenuous Lent. He has visited nearly every parish and mission in the diocese, beside making numerous speeches in the City of Erie and elsewhere, and has confirmed 250 persons in the diocese besides a class in his former parish in Scranton for Bishop Talbot. In most cities of the diocese the church buildings were too small for those who desired to hear him and high schools or other public buildings were used. At Port Allegheny he was introduced to an audience of 500 by the Roman priest. At Franklin and Oil City the high school buildings were packed to capacity, and the Venango Herald says of the bishop's address:

"We do not know how widely Bishop Israel, of the Erie Diocese, is telling of his observation of the spirit and purpose of our boys in France, but we do know that, whenever he tells it, he writes in the minds of his hearers a chapter of American history that is almost matchless."

CHICAGO

New Church for the Deaf Consecrated—

On May 11 Bishop Griswold consecrated All Angel's Church for the Deaf. The Rev. George F. Flick is the missionary-in-charge. The mission has ninety communicants, all of them deaf; the services are all carried on by means of the sign language.

New Rector at St. Simon's.—The Rev. J. B. Haslam has been elected rector of St. Simon's Church and was installed by Bishop Griswold on May 16. The Rev. J. D. McLaughlan was the preacher. Mr. Haslam has for several years been the secretary of the social service commission of the diocese and has been active on the State Council of Defence, the Moving Picture Censorship Commission and other civic matters. He was at one time dean of the cathedral, and for a number of years was professor at Nashotah House. He follows at St. Simon's Church the Rev. Leslie F. Potter, who is now dean of the cathedral at Grand Rapids. CHARLES L. STREET.

BALTIMORE

Tribute to Poe.—Young America paid tribute at the grave of Edgar Allan Poe in old Westminster churchyard on Arbor Day. The students of Edgar Allan Poe School planted lilacs and roses upon the spot where rest the bodies of Poe and his child-wife. They were of all nationalities, brought together in the melting-pot of the public school, who are learning to be good Americans. During the planting they recited some of his poems and listened to a sketch of his life which did justice to his memory.

A Victory Cross.—The Cathedral League is about to erect a "Victory Cross" upon the cathedral grounds. It will be nineteen feet in height and will be made by Maryland workmen from Maryland marble. Upon its base will be carved the inscription: "Thanks be to God, who gave us the victory through Jesus Christ, our Lord." It is intended to commemorate the victory of our armies in Europe, to serve as a memorial to the sons of Maryland who sealed that victory with their lives, and as a thanksgiving for the safe return of those who survived the conflict.

A Memorial Altar.—A beautiful altar is being erected in St. Luke's Church as a memorial to the soldiers, sailors and marines from Maryland who fell in the war. It was designed by Gordon Beecher and is flanked by a reredos containing a painting of our Saviour carrying a dying soldier in His arms, executed by Captain R. Magill Mackall of Baltimore. This altar is believed to be the first memorial of the war to be erected in any church in the diocese. It will be used for weekly celebrations of the Holy Eucharist, at which the names of Maryland men will be commemorated.

A New Rector.—The Rev. Roger A. Walke, formerly of Kyoto, Japan, has accepted a call to the rectorship of the Church of St. Mark-on-the-Hill at Pikesville in succession to the Rev. Edward T. Lawrence, who has resigned after a long rectorship on account of ill health.

Free Seats.—Since the close of the war there has been a growing feeling among the Baltimore churches that pew rents should be abolished, and several of them have determined to make all seats free hereafter. The Church of the Ascension, the Rev. John D. LaMothe, rector, is the latest addition to the honor roll of those which have taken this important step.

WYLLYS REDE.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Bishop Guerry in Demand.—Bishop Guerry delivered the oration at the Memorial Day service held in Magnolia Cemetery, Charleston, on May 10. The bishop has been in great demand as a speaker since his return from duty overseas. He has delivered addresses in almost all of the cities and towns of importance of the State of South Carolina on subjects connected with the war and the problems of reconstruction now to follow. WILLIAM WAY.

NEW JERSEY

Reduction of Debt at Christ Church, Woodbury.—At the above named place a large and convenient parish house was erected in 1915 during the rectorship of the Rev. Howard M. Stuckert, at a cost of fifteen thousand dollars. A debt of six thousand dollars remained upon the building, which recently, under the present rector, the Rev. Robert G. W. Williams, has been reduced to $1400.

The Clergy School.—The New Jersey Summer School for the Clergy will hold its second annual session at Ruth Hall, Asbury Park, during the week, June 16-20. The prospect is good for an increase in attendance over last year. Among those who have consented to be members of the faculty are Bishop Hall, Professor Jenks, Professor Tyson and Dr. Gardner. The Rev. Hamilton Schuyler, rector of Trinity Church, Trenton, is the chairman of the committee of arrangements, and the Rev. Morgan Ashley, rector of Christ Church, Bordentown, is secretary and treasurer. The privileges of the school are open to the clergy of other dioceses.

H. E. THOMPSON.

RHODE ISLAND

Churchmen's Club Dinner.—At the annual meeting of the Churchmen's Club of Rhode Island the Rev. Bernard I. Bell made a striking address, in pungent phrase, on "How the Episcopal Church Can Attract Young Men to It." Bishop Perry made a deeply impressive address on "How the Laymen May Share in a Great Responsibility." Mr. Albert J. Thornley was elected president, Mr. Henry H. Field secretary and Mr. B. H. MacDougall treasurer.

Presentation Service.—The diocesan Sunday School service for the presentation of the Lenten offering for missions at Grace Church, Providence, on May 3, brought together a large gathering of children. The offering was $5400, the largest ever given. One Sunday School (St. Paul's, Pawtucket), gave $1000, and forty-five schools gave more than last year.

Military Service.—In connection with the civic Welcome Home Day for the returning soldiers on May 5, a special service was held in Grace Church, Providence, the previous evening. It was attended by many officers and soldiers in the Yankee Division, and Bishop Perry preached the sermon.

St. Thomas' Church, Providence.—A church attendance campaign is under way in St. Thomas' Church, Providence, the Rev. Burdette Landsdowne, rector, with the purpose of gaining the promise of all parishioners to attend church every Sunday in May. At Easter a drive was completed to increase the fund for a parish house, with the result that the amount now raised is sufficient to warrant building operations.

Diocesan Victory Services.—Services of thanksgiving and commemoration were held in the parishes of the diocese on May 18, at the call of Bishop Perry. The purpose was to give the returning soldiers and sailors an opportunity to join in public thanksgiving and to commemorate their comrades who had died in the war. In some of the churches addresses were made by returned soldiers and sailors, and in others patriotic sermons were preached.

Church Attendance Campaign.—At St. Peter's Church, Manton, the Rev. Alva E. Carpenter, rector, a campaign was inaugurated on Sunday, May 18, to increase the attendance of men at church for five successive Sundays. An active committee is making a parish canvass and the results are gratifying.

Church of the Ascension, Auburn.—The Rev. Charles A. Meader has been seeking a deeper spiritual life in the parish by sending to his parishioners weekly messengers carrying circular letters urging private and family prayer and church attendance. Corporate Communion was arranged for each Sunday. Opportunity has also been provided for practice in congregational singing before and after service. There have been encouraging results. JOSEPH M. HOBBS.

LEXINGTON

Margaret College.—Commencement exercises at Margaret College, Versailles, will be held June 10 instead of May 28. The president, the Rev. George H. Harris, reports that already three-fourths of the rooms have been engaged for next year, while the enrolment of day pupils continues large. Some have already enrolled in this department for next year in order to secure desk room.

Intercession for Missions.—In accordance with the request of the Board of Missions, April 30, was observed as a day of special intercession at Trinity Church, Danville, and St. Philip's Church, Harrodsburg, the Rev. Henry P. Manning, in charge. Morning celebration of the Holy Communion and special evening service were held at the former; and, a special afternoon service at the latter.

The Every Name Canvass at the Cathedral.—Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, recently made an Every Name Canvass which resulted in an increase of over $4000 for current expenses and apportionments for general and diocesan missions. The annual budget and the apportionment plan were features of this campaign. At Easter the offering amounted to $1600, of which $1100 applied on pledges and $500 outside of the pledges. One hundred dollars of this offering will be given to the rectory fund of St. Andrew's Colored Mission, this city.

The congregation of the cathedral has planned to spend some several thousand dollars redecorating the church building.

Several memorials were dedicated at St. Andrew's Colored Mission, Lexington, at a recent visit of the bishop of the diocese. These include a brass altar cross, the gift of Mr. Charles Wallace and a memorial to his wife; a pair of brass vases, given by Mrs. Robert Seales as memorial to her infant son; and, a pulpit and reredos, the gift and artful workmanship of Dr. W. T. Dinwiddie as a memorial to his wife. The handsome memorial stained glass window, "The Light of the World," was the gift of friends and of the family of the late Mrs. Kate Ryan, a former teacher of St. Andrew's primary circle.

HENRY P. MANNING.

VIRGINIA

The Churchmen's League of Henrico Parish was organized on April 28, at a supper given at the Business Men's Club, Richmond, to which all the clergy and vestrymen of all the congregations in the parish were invited. Over one hundred clergy and vestrymen were present. Bishop Brown presided and suggested the formation of such an organization. The league was then organized, and every clergyman holding cure in Henrico Parish and the members of all seventeen vestries will be ex-officio members; other members will be secured by the election of delegates from every congregation in the ratio of one delegate to every fifty communicants. The purpose of the league is to aid in the strengthening of weak churches; to establish new churches; provide for the city missionary, and in general to enlist the service of every churchman in the upbuilding of the Church in Henrico Parish.

Colored Convocation.—The tenth annual meeting of the colored convocation of the diocese was held at the John Moncure Memorial Church, Stafford County, April 30 and May 1. The bishop and archdeacon, all the colored clergy of the diocese and delegates from the Sunday Schools and the Woman's Auxiliaries, were present. Interesting reports were made from the congregations, showing the work to be in splendid condition and the lenter offerings larger than ever before. Convocation voted to join with the convocation of the Diocese of Southern Virginia in a joint celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the first bringing of colored people to Virginia, to be held this summer.

Unusual Confirmation Class.—Bishop Brown confirmed a class of twenty-five in St. Philip's Church (colored), Richmond, on Wednesday evening, April 23. Of this number eight were deaf mutes, prepared for confirmation by the Rev. Herbert C. Merrill, missionary to the deaf mute in the diocese. FENTON WILLIAMSON.

WASHINGTON

A Proposed Approach to the Cathedral.—All Hallows Guild of Washington Cathedral on May 5 heard a very interesting discussion of the lay-out of the cathedral close, from Mr. Frederick Law Olmstead, the distinguished landscape architect. He pointed out the superb trees and their decorative and artistic effect, a feature almost, if not quite, unique on a cathedral close. Mr. Olmstead is seriously considering a decided change in the main approach to the cathedral from the city, in order to carry the cathedral pilgrim for as long a distance as possible through the beautiful oak woods lying on the southeastern slopes of Mount St. Alban.

The Laymen's Service Association.—The notable item of this season's work in Washington has been the foundation and development of the Laymen's Service Association under the leadership of Mr. Byron S. Adams. More than a hundred leading laymen of the diocese, representing thirty-two congregations, have taken hold of the matter, and it is hoped to create a large and active body of men who in diocesan and parochial affairs will spare no effort to maintain and develop the work of the Church, relieving the clergy of many tasks properly belonging to the laymen's field, and endeavoring to transform church activities to such an extent that the whole work of the diocese and of its constituent congregations will be placed upon a basis of efficiency and achievement such as hitherto has rarely been known.

A Diocesan Church Drive.—Under authority of the bishop of the diocesan convention, an active and responsible committee of clergymen and laymen have instituted a diocesan church drive for the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, the prayers and the efforts to be continued during the month of May and the offerings to be taken in every church of the diocese on Sunday, June 1. The Church of the Good Shepherd is a notable case of a people possessed of small means, living mainly on small salaries and wages, giving great devotion and energy to the Church, but not possessed of the funds to build and pay for their own church building, though they have achieved far more on these lines than is usual.

Cathedral Illuminations.—The cathedral chapter has placed flood-lights in such position as to illuminate at night the whole exterior of the cathedral sanctuary, now completed. It is a marvelous thing to behold, in the eye of the whole city, visible from far down the Potomac, and in the suburban and rural regions to the north and east. Near at hand, amid the trees, with night lights and deep shadows, with pinnacles, buttresses and windows and great massive walls outlined against the sky, it is like a glimpse of the heavenly Jerusalem. The illumination, begun during the Victory Loan campaign as an addition on the part of the Church to the illuminations which have made the capitol and the city like fairyland every night, will be continued permanently for two hours after dark every evening. W. L. DE VRIES.

MISSOURI

Susan Mount Legacy for Grace-Holy Cross.—A good while ago it was announced that $50,000 had been left to Bishop Tuttle by the will of the late Susan Mount of New York, for a church somewhere in the Diocese of Missouri. It could not be divided, but must all be used in one plant. The bishop appointed an advisory committee to consider the needs of the Church in the diocese and to make recommendation to him. He has now announced that he has designated the Susan Mount legacy for the building of a new church at Grace-Holy Cross Mission, in downtown St. Louis. The Rev. Carl Reed Taylor came to this mission about a year and a half ago from a successful ministry of ten years in St. John's Church, Kansas City. The business management of Grace-Holy Cross is in the hands of a committee of laymen chosen from the several parishes in St. Louis of which Mr. F. Churchill Whittemore is the chairman. Connected with the mission is a kindergarten, milk station, cooking classes, library, gymnasium, baths, sewing school, summer school, store, pure milk station, etc. There is a dispensary which last year reported over 8,000 treatments and over 2,500 individual patients. There is a baby feeding clinic which last year reported 423 consultations. There is a communicant list of about 260.

HARRINGTON ROGERS.

ALASKA

Death of Mrs. Rodman—The Alaskan mission lost one of its best friends in the recent death of Mrs. William Barbour Rodman, Jr. Mrs. Rodman's home at Tanana was always open to the members of the mission staff on their way to their posts; from the bishop down to the humblest worker, all the Interior workers have enjoyed her gracious hospitality and loved her for her Christian character.

No Work in the Interior—From Nenana word comes that owing to the failure of the last Congress to pass the railroad appropriations, work in the Interior has stopped, which means a quiet summer here. Even if the coming session of Congress provides the money, the work will be greatly hampered. With wood becoming more scarce and haulage longer every year, it would seem that the Government ought to devote more thought to the crying need of the Interior for coal; with large deposits within a hundred miles of Fairbanks; within forty-five miles of Nenana, both towns are still burning great quantities of wood every year because the coal cannot be transported.

No Mails for a Month—No mail will be sent to the Interior of Alaska from May 30 to June 20. This surprising condition of affairs is one more instance of governmental neglect of Alaska. (No reason for this failure is given in the word to the correspondent. It may be just one more illustration of Mr. Burleson's economies.)

Back From the North—Mr. Drane has just returned to Nenana, from a long trip by dog-team, to St. John's-in-the-Wilderness, Allakaket, and up the Yukon from Tanana.

He writes as follows regarding this journey: "The trip worked out nicely. For the most part, fine weather and good trails prevailed and we were well received wherever we went. In most places my visit was the first in over a year. This was the case at Allakaket and at Rampart. At Rampart I read services and had the majority of the population of the town, with many from the creeks present. It happened there was a dance Saturday night and many of the pioneers who came in for the dance, learned that there was to be service on Sunday, and instead of returning to their homes, remained over Sunday. And there were more at the services than there were at the dance, which was highly gratifying. It is splendid to preach to a congregation where the majority is made up of men. I could wish that there were more women in this country to attend, but we are glad that the men do come. I felt all along the trip that these men, deprived of opportunity for more than an annual service, do appreciate the call to worship, and hearing the Gospel preached.

"When one spends day after day on the trail just to reach one isolated point and bring the services of the Church, one wonders if it be worth the time and expense involved. But when he considers that what we give is in most cases the only religious opportunity these hardy men get, then we feel it very much worth while. Especially where we have women workers stationed, a visit from a priest is sure to give cheer and encouragement, for he brings to them the greatly desired sacrament of the Holy Communion."

A New Ice House—At Nenana, Arthur Wright has built a new ice house to replace the small shelter built some years ago, and keeps busy continually. It is comforting to report all well and happy.

A Hazardous Journey—Mr. Drane writes that he finds it necessary to visit the mission at Tanana Crossing, and as the ice is now dangerous, was planning to make the trip over the land trail, which is no trail at all, and much harder than a trip over the ice. This trip is to visit Mr. Singleton, lay worker temporarily in charge of the mission, and to prepare the mission buildings for a possible re-opening in the summer. He planned to return after the break-up about May 10.

New Church at Cordova—The new St. George's Church at Cordova was consecrated on Easter Day. Everything went well. Of course, the church was packed. Bishop Rowe delivered a powerful and convincing sermon. In the evening a class of eight was confirmed. There is now a fine little plant with the Red Dragon as a club and parish-house, the rectory, and the new church.

The Rev. E. P. Ziegler, the present priest-in-charge, has recently completed his tenth year at Cordova and to him great credit is due for the construction of the church, the outgrowth of his ministry.

GUY H. MADARA.

LOS ANGELES

Pre-Convention Meetings—The annual Sunday School rally in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral on Sunday May 11, brought together representatives from more than thirty schools from Los Angeles and vicinity. Comparative reports made for January 1 and April 1 showed that the schools have almost recovered from the depletion due to the influenza epidemic and that the total lenten offerings for missions were larger than ever before being—$2,921.80 as compared with $2,346.06 in 1918. The general subject at the conference of Sunday School workers on Monday was the study of the Bible. The speaker at the conference luncheon was the Rev. Theodore R. Ludlow from the Diocese of Hankow who gave a most interesting picture of Christian practices in a parish church in China.

Annual Auxiliary Meeting—The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary on Tuesday was attended by more than four hundred representatives from all parts of the diocese. The session began with the Holy Communion at 9:00, the bishop being the celebrant assisted by the Rev. Charles L. Barnes, rural dean of San Diego Convocation. The morning was occupied with the reports and pledges from the parish branches. The afternoon was largely devoted to a conference with the clergy in which many valuable suggestions were offered as to methods of stimulating missionary interest. An incident of the session was the raising of a fund of nearly nine hundred dollars to complete the endowment of a bed in the Hospital of the Good Samaritan, known as the Deaconess Grebe Bed, to be used for the free treatment of any patient nominated by the officers of the Woman's Auxiliary.

Large Offerings—Reports from the churches indicate that the Easter offerings throughout the diocese were unusually large, notwithstanding "high cost of living" and the many demands on the benevolence of the people, who evidently are learning that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Church Moves—The Church of the Ascension property on Boyle Heights, Los Angeles, has been sold. This church, which ten years ago was a fairly promising parish, has undergone a steady decline owing largely to the occupancy of the neighborhood by a Jewish population. It is expected that new work will be begun at a point central to the whole of Boyle Heights, including the field now covered by the Mission of the Redeemer. There is every reason to think that a strong parish centre may be developed.

Forty Baptisms—At the service on Easter Even in St. Paul's Church, Ventura, forty persons were baptized by the Rev. Thomas P. Swift, priest-in-charge. Mr. Swift has been in charge of All Saints' Mission, Oxnard, with various other points in Ventura County and only a few months ago took the additional care of the parish at Ventura, which has had a varied and on the whole discouraging history. Already the stimulus of Mr. Swift's devoted and energetic ministry is felt here as it has been at Oxnard and wherever he has served.

In the Imperial Valley—Bishop Johnson spent the last week of April in the Imperial Valley, where there are five missions in towns varying from 1,000 to 8,000 inhabitants and all under the care of one missionary, the Rev. B. J. Darneille. Life in this valley is distinctive and interesting. Lying in a broad basin below the level of the sea, an artificial oasis fed by the waters of the Colorado River with its sources in the snows of the Rocky Mountains, walled off from the rest of Southern California by some of the highest mountain ranges on the continent, this "Nile region" of America is a world in itself, California's frontier, a man's land where only a man can do the Church's work. Mr. Darneille is to have the help of a Maxwell car in which the bishop this time made the journey from San Diego over the mountains.

THOMAS C. MARSHALL.

CALIFORNIA

Convocation Meetings.—The three convocations of the diocese held their spring meetings on consecutive dates during the week ending May 10. In addition to the usual interesting programs of services, conferences and missionary meetings, each convocation had a men's rally dinner, the primary purpose of which was to welcome home again the Church's returned soldiers and sailors. On these occasions Bishop Nichols' forceful and deeply spiritual utterances profoundly impressed his hearers and Major Henry R. Sanborn, of the A. E. F., gripped every man present, judging from the rounds of applause which greeted his appeals for the practice of the higher life.

Major Sanborn's Message.—"Vital Conditions Confronting Christianity; Democracy's Challenge to the Church" was his subject. "Once a man is converted he will always be found talking about this thing. He becomes a crusader forthwith. This one thing he does. He is no longer ashamed to be a witness-bearer for Christ." With many sentences like these he sent the message home.

One speaker expressed the hope that the diocese might be able to arrange for the major to come to the Pacific coast to take up a special work among the men of the Church—a suggestion that was met by an impressive outburst of approval. All alike feel that a great new thing has happened in our midst, a new experience come into our lives, a new era opened fraught with splendid opportunities for men to join as never before in the work of "the Kingdom that must be Built."

Many Confirmations.—Noteworthy in the busy life of our bishop is the large number of confirmations which he has been holding since the beginning of Lent, with not a few still to be held. From reports received from many parishes the clergy have presented larger numbers than usual while the accessions from without the Church, including those from the Roman Church, have been very gratifying.

Bishop Coadjutor to Be Elected in July.—The special convention for the election of a bishop coadjutor has been called for July 2. A form of prayer for the guidance of the diocese in the choice of "a fit person to serve in this holy office" has been in use for several weeks. A pleasing feature of the conditions, as they now are, is the absence of concerted effort in favor of any particular candidate. Further than that a great outstanding and godly priest may be sent to us, one hears little about the possible selection of any individual clergyman.

Church Conference at Asilomar.—A summer vacation conference under the auspices of the Church is to be held at Asilomar, Monterey County, August 19-26. An interesting program of inspirational addresses, instructive classes on the topics of the day, the whole interspersed with social and out-of-door pastimes, will be provided. It is expected that the church people will attend in goodly numbers this first effort of the kind undertaken on this coast.

St. Andrew's Inn.—The episcopate of Bishop Nichols has been rich in the number and usefulness of the institutions founded under his direction and as the results of his farseeing foresight. An instance of this is seen in the bishop's "Aid for Boys" known as St. Andrew's Inn, the Rev. George Maxwell, vicar, situated at Hampshire and Twenty-fifth Streets, San Francisco.

Established in 1913 with the hope of discovering if such a work were needed, it has had a successful career and its permanence is secure. Non-charitable and entirely self-supporting, the charge of $22 per month for each boy, together with the method of self-help inaugurated by the vicar, meets all running expenses.

It is a home, not a school. A system of supervision has been installed that has contributed to the development of character as well as of study and industry. Primary, grammar and high schools are near at hand where the boys attend; but the study hours enforced at the inn and the assistance given to the backward lads make for results that are most gratifying.

Life at the Inn.—Around the large fire-places the boys are gathered for an evening hour after their studies are over. There the vicar gives Bible and Prayer Book talks or reads aloud some entertaining and instructive book. Monday evenings are anticipated for as a reward of merit for conduct, diligence and punctuality an opportunity is given to the happy boys of attending the best movie theatre in "the Mission."

The Church Influence Strong at the Inn.—The whole atmosphere is churchly. Each boy has his duplex envelope and therein he places an amount equal to what he spends every week on pleasure. The choir of the Mission of the Good Samaritan is largely composed of boys from the inn.

During the summer vacation St. Andrew's Camp at Tusealoma, Marin County, furnishes a delightful outing for these young fellows who make the most of the large swimming pool, walks in the woods, tramps over the hills and evenings spent round the campfire.

Thus St. Andrew's Inn is fulfilling well the high purpose of the wise bishop, always thoughtful of the lambs as well as the sheep, in whose soul was conceived this noble work for the upbuilding of Christian character in the young of his fold.

The Massachusetts Clerical Association.—The annual meeting of the Association was held on May 20 at Groton School. Dr. Peabody entertained the association at luncheon. The speakers were Chaplains Rollins, Addison and Sherrard Billings. The following officers were elected: president, the Rev. John W. Suter, vice-president, the Rev. Ernest M. Paddock, secretary-treasurer, the Rev. Dr. Francis L. Beal.

The Westminster Conference.—The Westminster Conference held its annual meeting at the City Club last week Monday. Chaplain Rollins was the guest of honor and the speaker.

Mr. R. A. Woods on Substitutes for the Saloon.—In the April Temperance Cause, Mr. R. A. Woods, for several years license commissioner in Boston, wrote: "The saloon has its being in the craving for alcohol. The sociability of it is alcohol soaked, and proves little or nothing as to what the same men, alcohol-free, would want. When a man's whole nature is cleared of the degrading effect of the drug, and the possibility of a return to it dismissed from the mind, he will surprise himself by the new kindling of interest which he will feel in his home, in his neighbors, in his work, in wholesome recreation with his family, in his Church. If his home conditions are poor, he will begin to remedy them. The facts from prohibition cities make this clear. A great many present saloon patrons will not be inclined to get back into anything like the saloon group again. I look for the development of independent workingmen's clubs like those which flourish in England. There will, of course, be places conducted by men now in the liquor business, at which soft drinks will be sold. And there will be need for experiments in the way of model saloon substitutes. But the great substitute will be the home."

Fund for the Episcopal City Mission.—Bishop Lawrence has announced that $22.00 has been secured in gifts and pledges towards the fund of $30.00 which is being raised as a reserve fund for the City Mission. One third of this sum is needed to provide for the change in the financial year to January 1. $20.00 will constitute the permanent reserve fund for the "lean months" in summer.

Dean Rousmaniere on the Twenty Weeks.—The dean writes "Like the Great War, the Twenty Weeks have come to an end, and like the Great War, they have disclosed the weakness and inadequacy of the lives of many of us so-called Christians, by compelling us to measure our daily living by the standards of Christ. They have also made those standards live anew by the call to justice and teachableness, to service and to worship. From day to day Christ has been lifted up, in Scripture passage, in simple and reverent prayers and in invitations to worship and unselfish living. We have learned afresh that wherever Christ is lifted up, men are drawn to Him in a more real discipleship."

Child Welfare Conference at the State House.—The opening session was held on Thursday with addresses by Governor Coolidge, Miss Julia Lathrop, chief of the federal Children's Bureau, and Sir Cyril Jackson and R. C. Davison of London. Sir Cyril Jackson former chairman of the London County Council said "The political power of the working classes in England is so great that education is needed to fit the workers for better citizenship. Though up to 1918 children had been allowed to leave school and go to work in some parts of England as young as twelve years, the official act of the Minister of Education was passed in 1918 without opposition. This act provides for compulsory part-time schooling for all children up to eighteen."

Church School Convention.—On the second day of convention the annual meeting of the Church Schools of the Diocese of Ohio was held. Meetings were at Emmanuel Church, Cleveland. Dr. Ferris of Rochester, New York, the Rev. E. G. Mapes of Cleveland, Mrs. E. S. Grauel of Painesville, and the Rev. E. Talmadge of Toledo, led the conference. Dr. Caley of Philadelphia, gave an illustrated lecture on the life of our Lord and a lecture on the Jewish temple was also given.

Gifts.—Among recent gifts presented to the Parish of St. Paul, Stockbridge, are the following: a pair of high standard lights surmounted by cherubs, the gift of the rector, the Rev. George Grenville Merrill, to mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination; a large bas-relief, representing the Good Shepherd, now in place in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd, South Lee; a handsome chalice and paten for use in the same chapel. The large Easter offering will be used toward paying for a much needed addition to the robing-room of St. Paul's, Stockbridge. The old union chapel at South Lee, (recently acquired by the parish) will be torn down and money will soon be collected for the erection of a curate's house on its site.

To Support Missionary.—All Saints' Church, Worcester, has undertaken to support a missionary in the foreign field. The Rev. Edmund J. Lee has been selected to represent this parish in Anking, China.

Entire Square Goes to Church.—Mr. Charles B. Smith, treasurer, presented to the parish of Christ Church, Fitchburg, the property known as the Reed estate. The gift places the ownership of the entire square in the Church.

Sends Books to Liberia.—The Christ Church Periodical Club of Springfield, sent a box of nearly three hundred text-books to Bishop Lloyd for the schools of Liberia. An interesting fact in the case being that the books, which were second hand and in very good condition, were secured through the co-operation of the Springfield public schools. Through the courtesy of the principal of the Technical High School, and the head master carpenter, a strong box was made, and the books all packed. The Springfield public library also was interested and contributed about fifty books for the cause.

JOHN H. ROSEBAUGH.

Justice and Generosity.—Speaking at a meeting on the danger of continuing a spirit of hatred towards Germany, the Bishop of Winchester ran the risk of becoming a target for abuse; which has indeed been the case. It was not the popular thing to say, which is perhaps good evidence that it was the Christian thing. But Dr. Talbot has been so assailed by people who misunderstood him that he has been compelled to write to the Times, enclosing a copy of a letter which he had written "in reply to a friendly enquiry." Germany, he says, ought to be dealt with on severe principles of justice, and to be made to pay for her cruelty and for the financial burdens which her acts have caused. He rejoices in her downfall, and in the shattering of her power. But is this the last word? Does the spectacle of a humiliated nation, feeling the pinch of real starvation, their children "withering for want of food," move no instinct in us but justice? Englishmen, he maintains, are ready, for good cause, to knock a man down; reluctant, when he is down, to kick him. And a higher spirit than English generosity and compassion says: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him."

Dr. Talbot is anxious for a change of spirit, for the sake of ourselves. Continued insistence on justice and punishment, and only on these, "may do us the infinite mischief of hardening our own hearts, and making us meet hate with more hate." Unless we have more than this in our hearts we shall be unthinkingly poisoning our own spirits, and making the name of justice cover disloyalty to the simple human Christian instincts of generosity and compassion. "Yet I hardly hear," he concludes, "a note of the latter kind in what is daily put before our people."

Women's Ministrations.—The Bishop of Coventry (Dr. Yeatman-Biggs) claims to have made history, in presiding over his diocesan "House of Women" for the first time. There had never been an assembly of this kind, so far as he knew, in Christendom. He declared that the bishops were in sympathy with the movement for the use of women in church ministrations, and he hoped soon to be able to say that in certain ways, not in the regular services, he could allow such ministrations; but he should insist on women being subject to the same rules of fitness and character as clergy and lay readers were, before they were licensed. An act of wilfulness like that of Miss Maude Royden in insisting on such ministrations against the wish of the Bishop of London, was likely to set back the idea rather than to advance it. (The bishop was of course speaking of Miss Royden's intention rather than her act. In the actual event, as already recorded, Miss Royden spoke in the parish hall, and not in church, so that, technically at least, ecclesiastical discipline was preserved.)

S. P. G. Anniversary.—The S. P. G. gets in its anniversary just before the rush of the "May Meetings," which promise to reach full tide this year. The society was fortunate in securing as its preacher the man of the hour, the Bishop of Oxford. His sermon was a sample of what we can expect in full measure when he is relieved from the cares of his diocese. One great need of the day was that of greater religious imagination, which touches the commonest events with glory and awfulness. He illustrated the principle from the Old Testament and St. Paul's writings, and he even dared, as he said, to speak of our Lord's spiritual imagination. Christ insisted that His disciples should share it; they were to stand in a despairing world as the only exultant group. And here Dr. Gore made the point that as conscience needs enlightenment if it is to direct wisely, so too does imagination need to be deliberately furnished and enlightened. Coming to modern days, after a lengthy examination of examples from the Bible, he showed the great need of imagination. "Is not the world becoming compulsorily one, as never before? Is not this the outstanding fact? It is represented by the urgency of events which threw the United States out of the isolation which was their fixed and proud tradition into the whirlpool of European politics." German aggressiveness was not the only danger to Europe; nationalist demands in every quarter threaten mutual strife, and there was no hope for saving civilization unless we had a supernational league. The world must become one, in a quite new sense, or perish. And so "with mingled shame and penitence and with astonished joy" we present to ourselves afresh the vision of the Catholic Church, in which the barriers of nationality go down before the claims of a more inclusive fellowship. The Apocalypse gives us the vision of the new Jerusalem, the city of the whole redeemed humanity. The old mission appeal was indeed strong; to imitate the methods of St. Paul. But there was another motive which must kindle our imagination: "the determination that a world, driven by secular forces to find itself one, shall feel again the meaning of the divine purpose of a Catholic Church, and shall see the Church becoming in spirit and in fact catholic."

Bishop of Chichester's Farewell.—Very simply and quietly, on the Sunday after Easter, Dr. Ridgeway spoke to his people in his cathedral after Evensong. The people then knelt, while he offered prayer for his successor, and for those in whose hands lay the selection of that successor. Next day he spoke at a meeting at Brighton, regretting that the new bishop had not yet been appointed, though he had given notice of resignation four months before. But Mr. Lloyd George is one of the busiest men in the world in these days, and presumably many other domestic matters of equal importance are awaiting the signature of peace.

A New Bishop of Calcutta.—There is a certain thrill in the announcement that the new Bishop of Calcutta, in succession to Dr. Lefroy who died recently, is one bearing the honored name of Westcott. He is

Theology and Education

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Of course we can get nowhere without criticism, and my paper on "Theology and Education" rather openly invited it. But it seems scarcely fair or creditable to criticize without reference to the text. Your editorial, which I have just read, seems to illustrate the kind of irresponsible comment on great questions which I am not alone in deploring in the current religious press. It could not I think have been written in its present form had you had, or cared to have, the actual substance before you of what I said.

PHILIP M. RHINELANDER,

Bishop of Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

(Note: THE CHURCHMAN did not think it necessary to send for Bishop Rhinelander's manuscript when two listeners, as intelligent and fair-minded ones as our American Church possesses, carried away from Bishop Rhinelander's address precisely the impression recorded in our editorial comment. EDITOR.)

Where Is It?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

The General Convention in both houses passed a resolution in 1916 requesting the joint commission on the revision of the Prayer Book to have their report "printed and circulated at least six months before the meeting of the next General Convention." (See journal pp. 368, 377.)

Why has not this been done?

Advance in Theological Education

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

That two different bodies working independently and with no knowledge of what the other was doing have arrived at very similar conclusions, is not only interesting but prophetic of the advance we are making in religious education. I refer to the general council and commission of our Church and the board of governors of Union Theological Seminary. At the close of the seminary year the president announced that hereafter the course would cover a period of four years. The necessity of taking Hebrew in order to secure the bachelor of divinity degree is dispensed. The B. D. will be given to those who take a general theological course. A vocational diploma will be given to those who specialize along a certain line: e. g. pastoral work; religious education; social service; or for the missionary field. During this course each student is required to do one year of work, giving part time, in some church, settlement or other institution, under the guidance of a newly appointed supervisor of field work.

The authorities have also found that many of the men who come to the seminary, even though they are all graduates of colleges and universities, have no thorough knowledge of certain subjects which in the minds of the faculty are essential for a working background in the profession. For that reason students will be required to show proficiency in such subjects as: English literature; history of thought; psychology and psychology of religion; history of religion; history of modern social movements; modern science—or else take these courses during their years in the seminary.

The recommendations that will be submitted by the council of our Church to the General Convention in the autumn are similar in many points to the requirements that Union Seminary is now putting into effect.

Irwin St. John Tucker's Sentence

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

On January 8, 1919, five men, Victor L. Berger, Adolph Germer, J. L. Engdahl, William F. Kruse and Irwin St. John Tucker, were declared guilty of violation of the Espionage Act and on February 20 they were each sentenced to twenty years in the federal penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth by Judge Landis of Chicago.

One of them, Irwin St. John Tucker, is a priest of the Church. The Church therefore must take some action in the case.

The following facts should be of interest: Berger is on the national executive committee of the Socialist Party; Germer is national executive secretary; Engdahl is editor of the party publication; Kruse is secretary of the national Young People's Socialist League; Tucker was the head of the party's literature department and is still a member of the party.

They were accused of conspiring together to obstruct the draft. It was not shown in the trial that they had ever gathered together for any purpose, unless being under one roof, that of a Chicago office building, at the same time constitutes a gathering. Nor was it shown that any two or more of them had ever definitely talked together about obstructing the draft.

The judge's charge to the jury was: "The law is that if any one of the defendants had done any act in apparent pursuance of an agreement which you think there is reason to believe they might have reached, which act might have had a tendency to cause any person subject to military duty to refuse the same, they are guilty of conspiracy."

Two pamphlets written by Irwin St. John Tucker formed the main part of the evidence submitted against him. These were The Price We Pay and Why You Should Fight. These were both published before America's advent into the war. When the espionage law was passed these pamphlets were submitted to Judge Rose of Baltimore, who declared that in his opinion they did not conflict with the law. Opinions were also asked of the attorney general and the postmaster general of the United States and no objection was raised by either. Publication—or rather circulation—was continued for awhile, but advice being given that these pamphlets might be considered against the law, they were withdrawn from publication, and circulation was ceased.

Certain extracts from Mr. Tucker's speeches were especially stressed: "The war began in rivalry between capitalist groups of England, France, Russia, Germany and Austria. Once started we could not keep out and we must go through with it." "The war should be paid for by taxation of war profits."

It was not shown that any person had been influenced by these pamphlets or by any other written or spoken word of any one of the defendants to refuse military duty.

There were several cases in which Mr. Tucker was consulted about the draft law and in each case he advised strict compliance with the law.

R. O. Handwerk, a government witness, testified that he was offered $600 to testify against the accused.

Edna Peters testified that she had been threatened with indictment if she refused to testify as desired.

Thomas C. Nixon of Chicago, one of the jurors, testified that Bailiff Streeter repeatedly denounced the defendants in the presence of the jurors, stating on one occasion, "Every one of those fellows is guilty and if I had my way I would hang every one of them."

The jurors all testified that the bailiffs brought in booze to them every night.

The Official Hymnal

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I note that new and improved editions of the old hymnal are being advertised in our church papers.

In view of the fact that the new hymnal has been authorized for use by the General Convention, and bearing also in mind that all profits from its sale go to the Church Pension Fund, it seems to me that all parishes that feel able to supply themselves with fresh hymnals should buy this book in preference to any other. By so doing they will aid in carrying out the intent of the General Convention, that the new hymnal should take the place of the one previously in use and that all profits resulting from its sale should accrue to the benefit of the Church Pension Fund.

ALEXANDER MANN.

Early Days

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I am writing this on my 89th birthday, March 25, being the oldest clergyman in age and residence in the diocese of Central New York. Within twenty miles of my present home I have lived in the Diocese of New York, Western and Central New York, and have a fair chance of being in another, though the only surviving clergyman ordained by Bishop De Lancey. Here the French Jesuit missions flourished in the seventeenth century, and their relations have interested me much. From their point of view—not necessarily ours

—I am able to reply to an "Answer Desired," from a picturesque and historic incident. Fathers Chaumonot and Dablon were ascending the St. Lawrence, on their way to Onondaga in October, 1656. I quote from their words:

"The 10th, which was a Sunday, we had the consolation of saying Holy Mass. As our guides were waiting for the rest of their people, we had soon set up an altar and a living chapel, since it was built of foliage. We made some wine of the grapes of the country, which the wild vines bear in sufficient abundance. Our devotions ended, we embarked."

A monument was recently erected on Indian Hill, Pompey, the Onondaga of 1656, in memory of another event of that year occurring in November: "The 14th, which was a Sunday, could not commence better than by the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, which we celebrated on a little altar, in an oratory used in the cabin of Teuton Narason, who was highly esteemed for her nobleness and wealth."

I forbear quoting more of these pleasant incidents and turn to one of a century later, when the Onondagas had reached the valley of that name. Between that and Indian Hill they had occupied another famous place for nearly forty years. The Jesuits had departed and the Moravians came. Their visits are sometimes called missions, but they held no public services, and neither preached nor baptized, for several years merely studying language and customs. I have recently collected, edited and published all their journals relating to this region, for the Onondaga Historical Association. I quote one incident at Onondaga, from Bishop Commerhoff's journal of 1750. David Zeisberger was with him. This was in June and the grand council welcomed them, after which they were much at home:

"We went directly toward the creek, into the thicket, and found a pleasant spot to rest. We sat down, and remembered in grateful words the Lord's goodness, in having watched over us so graciously thus far. Then we prostrated ourselves before God, and offered up fervent intercessions in behalf of the Six Nations. . . . Then, resting on the promise of the Lord's presence, where two or three are gathered together in His name, we celebrated the Holy Communion, and we fully experienced the blessings of the promise. We named the spot the Brethren's Chapel in Onondaga."

Of course, in a long life, I have seen religious incidents, once common but strange to the men of this day. I have here restricted myself to earlier matters, partly illustrated by two classes of missionaries, widely apart in opinions but actuated by the same love of souls.

Prayer Book Revision

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Anent Prayer Book revision and enrichment, etc., to the subject of which all are doubtless looking forward again this year, perhaps the following quotations (from the article written soon after the St. Louis Convention by Dr. St. George) may be useful to bear in mind. At St. Louis there was some evidence of impatience and restlessness under the exceedingly careful explanation of each proposed change, by members of the commission; and yet, while this was at times not unnatural, surely we do not want any change adopted or rejected hastily. Perhaps the hard-seated camp-chairs on which deputies sit for hours may have something to do with the irksomeness of listening to some of the speakers!

"Two possibilities emerge: The first is that the House (of Deputies—of which one alone has knowledge and experience) may become impatient of meticulous criticism and prolonged debate on words or phrases (as, for instance, whether the correct expression should be, 'Whose law is the truth' or, 'Whose law is truth') and attempt to stifle debate by the use of the closure. The second is that a criticism with a distinctly 'party' animus is injected into the debate, and the House of Deputies may be stampeded by a snap vote. Hence, in both these contingencies the possibility arises of matter being endorsed or rejected without due and deliberate judgment."

Though the writer adds: "Such instances, however, are so few as to be practically negligible; at any rate, one may feel reasonably sure that anything that has been adopted in the House of Deputies through precipitancy will be remedied when it comes under the eyes of the bishops."

Which, of course, takes time and lays upon the upper house an added burden and responsibility.

In all due justice to the Prayer Book Commission, also, should we not also acknowledge the readiness with which the commission undertook to consider, not once, but twice and even again, its former judgment and reverse its decisions—thus recognizing the fact that its business was not simply to amend the Prayer Book (as liturgical experts) or add new forms and offices, but rather to put into liturgical form and expression the devotional needs and demands of the Church to-day in rite and ceremony?

"Welcoming from every direction and source suggestion and proposal, the commission bent its energies 'to feel after if haply it could find' what enrichments from outside the Prayer Book were gradually finding their way into the services of the Church, or what modifications or additions to present regulations the Church was demanding. That the work of the commission on the whole met these conditions and demands is evidenced by the general commendation which the report received both from the church press and the Church at large."

Considering the fact it was an assembly of 600 members who took up the scrutiny, and any or every man might have an idea, a word, or a phrase of his own, which he would like to see incorporated in a prayer, progress under such circumstances must be slow; and the wonder is that so much was accomplished at the St. Louis Convention.

Another thing: The distance of some of the deputies from the platform, and the periodical roar of sound which rushes in from the corridors whenever doors are opened, is not a small matter; at times it was impossible to understand what was the question that was being voted on. It is a fact that a number of deputies left before close of convention because it was useless for them to stay. It is to be hoped that this will be remedied at Detroit.

Some Minor Suggestions

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Many of us are interested in the revision of our Prayer Book, which gives promise of marked improvement. Aside from the large principles, I should like to call attention to a few points that have been much in my own mind. These touch words or phrases or their position, and are to be found in the Morning Prayer and the Litany.

Taking them in the order in which they stand, the first point is in the Benedicite. The last verse in this hymn should either be omitted as now redundant, because the verse to which it belonged in the original form has been dropped; or this verse and the one before it should be transposed. In either case, the call to praise would begin and end on an equally high plane, Heaven at its outset, paradise at its close.

Second: In the Apostles' creed the sentence, "He was crucified, dead, and buried," records three separate momentous phases in our Lord's Passion. Why not place a colon, ritual not grammatical, after each of these great words, which would induce a slower and more reverent utterance by the congregation? This would be more in accord with our reverent estimate of the great worth of this statement.

Third: In the second collect, "A Collect for Grace," in Morning Prayer, omit the words "Almighty and Everlasting God." These make a long introduction to a short prayer, which deals with the everyday affairs of our life, and not with any divine mystery or depth of human need.

Fourth, the Litany: In the third opening invocation, that addressed to the Holy Spirit, substitute for a theological statement—"Proceeding from the Father and the Son"—some expression which bears upon our human need, as for example, "O God the Holy Ghost our Advocate and Comforter." In the petition for the holy Church universal, substitute the word "guide" for the word "rule"—a substitution which would both widen the thought and avoid tautology. In the petition "to give to all nations unity, peace, and concord;" insert after "nations" the words "and to all branches of the Christian Church." This gives to the Litany a definite prayer for church unity which it now lacks. Again in the two petitions "O Lamb of God, who takest away the sins of the world," is not the true and more natural order to pray first for mercy, and then for peace? This is the order elsewhere, and would be an improvement here. And lastly, in the Kyries which follow this prayer, instead of having these in the form of versicles and responses, why should they not be said together by priest and people? This would be in the interest both of brevity and of a more reverent recitation.

"Old White"

THE WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS. By William Alexander MacCorkle, LL.D., formerly Governor of West Virginia. The Neale Publishing Company, New York. 1918.

To those who desire a pleasant reminder of happy days at the famous resort or who desire a keen appreciation of its historic and romantic past, this book will prove a welcome acquisition. Governor MacCorkle has made a careful and judicious selection of material, has told the story in an interesting way, and the beautiful illustrations can only be a constant delight.

In olden times, the "Old White" was the great social meeting place for the southern wealth and aristocracy. In a land where large cities were few and far between and even the well-to-do people lived on large plantations or in isolated communities, the famous resort played a peculiar and important part in the pleasures, the social amenities, and also in the formation of that community feeling among the leading people of the South, which had such important results both before and during the days of our Civil War.

We have never had enough local history preserved in America as yet. This book is an attractive addition to this all too scarce form of literature. W. S. M.

Rare Adventure

ADVENTURES IN ALASKA. By S. Hall
Young. Fleming H. Revell and Co. New York. 1919.

When a man's actual experiences are more interesting than ingenious invention, he is wise if he avoids fiction and writes a straight narrative of his adventures. This is what Dr. Young has done in this illustrated account of some of his remarkable experiences during over thirty years missionary work in Alaska.

Boys and girls can find few better stories than "Old Snook and the Cow," "Nina will be engrossed in the pictures of both nature and man in such stories as "Bunch-

One feels the force of life's greater chal-cludes a story like "Louie Paul and the away where crystal snows and purifying frosts have made his soul white.

Florida

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS OF FLORIDA.
By Clifton Johnson. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918.

This book is very interesting reading about Florida, but not in any sense a guide to the peninsula and its beauties. It is mainly historical and filled with accounts of things as they were in past days. Thus the history of 350 years with the expeditions of Ponce de Leon, De Soto, Ribaut and Sir Francis Drake is compressed into fifty pages followed by a summary of the Civil War and its effects on Florida.

The descriptions of the efforts of the Indians of the North and the Seminoles further South to defend their country and lands from Spanish, French and English freebooters and the modern American land grabber awakens one's sympathy for a dauntless people, but one would look in vain for them now, a few half-civilized Seminoles being all that are left. The extracts of the diaries of early naturalists while full of interest help also to show how great the changes have been.

The description of the sea-going railroad and the wonderful Key West viaduct is well done. So also are the word pictures of rivers, lakes and forest life, the fishing among remarkable variety of fish, and the hunting and shooting of the almost destroyed numbers of wild animals. The railroad is modern, but for most other things the reader is reminded that this happened in 1513 or 1776 or perhaps as late as 1860. Sometimes our author forgets and describes the present in terms of the past. Miami for instance appears rather as a village of simple people near woods and forests, while those who have been there recently know it to be a town of 25,000 or more with great hotels and a people who have the one aim that no visitor or tourist shall carry a cent away if they can by any means get it out of his pocket. But the reader will enjoy the book, and if he takes it to Florida he will close it with a sigh, "I wish I could have come a hundred years ago."

There are many pictures well chosen and beautifully executed. E. O.

American Shrines

HISTORIC SHRINES OF AMERICA. By John T. Faris. George H. Doran Company.
1918.

Mr. Faris in his Historic Shrines of America tells the story of one hundred and twenty historic buildings and gives a brief biography of the men who made them notable. For the American who thinks that our historic places are few in number Mr. Faris' book will be a revelation. The book is well supplied with excellent photographs. The descriptive portions of the text are designedly brief in the hope that the reader will be stimulated to wider researches in this undeveloped field of historical study. D. N. A.

The Catskills

THE CATSKILLS. By T. Morris Longstrech.
Century Company, New York. 1918.

Like the author's charming companion book of last year, The Adirondacks it is welcomed by those who know the country and also by those who do not, as a delicious travel book, a "glorified guidebook," both breezy and practical, with a large map many pictures, and a bibliography.

John Muir's Sketches

STEEP TRAILS. By John Muir. Houghton
Mifflin Company. 1918.

Steep Trails is a collection of sketches written by John Muir at various times in his life. They have appeared before only in publications of limited and local circulation. It is fortunate for all his admirer that these delightful descriptions of scenery and wild life in the West, such as only John Muir could write, are now preserved for us in permanent and easily accessible form. D. N. A.

Apples in the Northwest

THE APPLEWOMAN OF THE KLICKITAT. By Anna Van Rensselaer Morris. Duffield and Company. New York. 1918.

This is an account of the actual experiences of a newspaper woman, who goes to the Pacific Northwest and transforms a quarter-section of government land into an orchard. The story is as leisurely as the apple growing process itself, merely a day-to-day record of little happenings. There is a love motif, but the chief interest lies in the descriptions of the various types of settlers, and the information which the book contains about apple growing. M. L. B.

Recommended to Commuters

OLD FAMILIAR FACES. By Theodore Watts Dunton. E. P. Dutton Company, New York. 1919.

None too familiar are some of them even to people who read. A volume containing essays on George Borrow, Dr. Gordon Hake, John Leicester Warren, Francis Hindes Groome is worth an interested perusal by those who may think they know the Rossettis, Tennyson and William Morris. There are some charming illustrations which add value to the book. The essay on George Borrow is especially charming. Here is promise of some delightful hours for the commuter. S.

Nights in London

NIGHTS IN LONDON. By Thomas Burke. Henry Holt and Company. 1918.

It would seem as though everything had been written that could be written about London sights and sounds, but Mr. Burke has succeeded in treating a familiar subject in an unfamiliar way. It is the outcome of personal experiences which have proved sometimes pleasant and sometimes bitter. In the odd neighborhoods and foreign quarters to which he conducts us we do not stand on the outside and look down: we become a part of the place which we are visiting and feel for ourselves the charm, the mystery and the joy of London life.

Mr. Burke's strength lies in his vivid description of vicious things and unpleasant people. In this respect his facility is only equalled by that of Poe. D. N. A.

Literary Chatter

LITERARY CHAPTERS. By W. L. George. Little, Brown and Company. Boston. 1918.

Readers of the Atlantic know W. L. George as a delightful essayist and a gallant champion of the ladies. Literary Chapters shows the author as the champion of the novelist. There are good bits, racy criticism of the Philistines who set the low literary level and discourage the brave novelist who considers himself the missionary of truth; there is no denying that Literary Chapters is good reading. But all the time the reader feels that his time would be ever so much better spent in perusing the novels themselves instead of the plaintive reasons why they aren't appreciated. J. H.

one of the sons of the famous Brooke Foss Westcott, Bishop of Durham, and he has spent nearly all his life in India. Dr. Foss Westcott has been Bishop of Chota Nagpur for the last fourteen years, so he will bring a rich experience to his new work as Metropolitan of India. And the people are asking Why not Archbishop of India? You may be more democratic without archbishops in America, but rightly or wrongly the Anglican Church has archbishops in Canada and South Africa, so why not in India?

ON SPIRITUAL HEALING READ

Does Christ Still Heal?

BY

HENRY B. WILSON

Did Christ's commission to His disciples to "heal the sick" terminate with the death of the Apostles, or, is it still in active existence?

Are the churches of to-day really Christian in their beliefs about pain and sickness?

Vital questions are these with which the author deals in plain, vigorous English, basing his arguments on the words and deeds of Christ.

GEORGE HODGES

THE day before word of Dean Hodges' death was published in the daily papers, a message came from Holderness, sent at the request of the dean, that he could not write the article on Charles Kingsley which he had promised for the present number of THE CHURCHMAN. The founder of Kingsley House in Pittsburgh, the interpreter by his own loving ministry of Kingsley's spirit, had probably up to the last hoped that he might write one more word for CHURCHMAN readers in behalf of the ministry of reasonable, holy and living sacrifice, for Kingsley's Master and his. On the day THE CHURCHMAN records its debt of love and gratitude to George Hodges, we also tell the story of that other saint of God who was born a hundred years ago next Thursday.

The loss of Dean Hodges will be very personal among myriad groups of Christians all over our land, for with a wealth of sympathy, a versatility of talent and a prodigious capacity for toil, the dean of the Cambridge School has been cheerfully saying "Yes" for more than a quarter of a century to the multitudinous appeals that have come to his desk for his written or spoken word. It was easy to ask of Dean Hodges a favor, for his response was so gracious, he made it appear so unaffectedly the natural one for him to make, that the suppliant forgot to count the cost of the favor or to sense his obligation to the overworked man who always said "Yes" to those who sought what with such rich grace he was accustomed to give.

We shall all be telling over in these coming days, when the sharp pain of missing him will be keenest, in how many ways and for how many graces we loved him. It is hard quite to say precisely what was the wealth of it all, but we felt it—sometimes in a short letter about some personal or business matter, sometimes in an interview when with rapier thrust he pinioned some bit of cheapness or by the kindly turn of a phrase he left us smiling over somebody's foibles, no sharp or bitter word having been said. We felt it oftenest, perhaps, in the versatility of his common sense so uncommon with mother wit and sympathy. The surface thing which he often said plumbed depths which the pretentious complexities of men who groaned over their thinking and knotted their problems in our presence never touched. We have heard men speak of the obviousness of Dean Hodges' writings. Some of those who made this reflection have never written anything which their fellowmen would read. All sorts and kinds of people read Dean Hodges gladly.

It has been told by one who knew him in his early life in Rome, New York, that George Hodges was always a peacemaker from the time he was a little boy. It was his part to smooth out difficulties and get discordant groups "together." Various temperaments have shown that talent and with varying motives, but the dean's gift of conciliation sprang from the soil of a real Christian fellowship. The quick intuition which sought and found agreement was the fruit of his spirit of love. In all his religious contacts there was the preventive grace of humor. If there were more of such men among us we should more rarely need to make the sacrifice of compromise.

Others will tell of what Dean Hodges has done for the great school for which he labored until they carried him wearied and broken to Holderness. THE CHURCHMAN to which he has been a contributor for more than thirty years, has the desire only to bear witness to the privilege it has been to a generation of editors to be the medium between the great-hearted, self-effacing dean and the hundreds of thousands of churchmen in America who have read in these columns the dean's message of good cheer, good fellowship and man's duty to neighbor and to God.

CHARLES KINGSLEY

ENGLAND will celebrate during the coming week the centenary of the birth of the rector of Eversley, who was one of the group, all too small for the honor of the Church, that tried to awaken the English nation to a sense of its social responsibility in the day when the doctrine of social justice was not yet fashionable. While Charles Kingsley was preaching a reasonable theology, writing popular novels and historical sketches, he and his master Maurice were doing for the English Church a service the significance and importance of which we are beginning only now to measure.

It is difficult for us to appreciate what dastardly inhuman practices were in fashion in the industrial world when Kingsley wrote and labored for a more Christian interpretation of the creed of the Incarnation. As late as 1860 it was possible in England for the inhumanity, which we describe in the words of Karl Marx below, to take place without its troubling the Church's conscience:

Mr. Broughton Charlton, county magistrate, declared, as chairman of a meeting held at the Assembly Rooms, Nottingham, on the 14th January, 1860, "that there was an amount of privation and suffering among that portion of the population connected with the lace trade, unknown in other parts of the kingdom, indeed, in the civilized world * * Children of nine or ten years are dragged from their squalid beds at two, three, or four o'clock in the morning and compelled to work for a bare subsistence until ten, eleven, or twelve at night, their limbs wearing away, their frames dwindling, their faces whitening, and their humanity absolutely sinking into a stone-like torpor, utterly horrible to contemplate."

In the last week of June, 1863, all the London daily papers published a paragraph with the "sensational" heading, "Death from simple over-work." It dealt with the death of the milliner, Mary Anne Walkley, twenty years of age, employed in a highly respectable dressmaking establishment, exploited by a lady with the pleasant name of Elise. The old, often-told story was once more recounted. This girl worked, on the average, sixteen and half hours, during the season often thirty hours, without a break, whilst her failing labor-power was revived by occasional supplies of sherry, port, or coffee. It was just now the height of the season. It was necessary to conjure up in the twinkling of an eye the gorgeous dresses for the more noble ladies bidden to the ball in honor of the newly-imported Princess of Wales. Mary Anne Walkley had worked without intermission for twenty-six and half hours, with sixty other girls, thirty in one room, that only afforded one-third of the cubic feet of air required for them. At night, they slept in pairs in one of the stifling holes into which the bedroom was divided by partitions of board. And this was one of the best millinery establishments in London. Mary Anne Walkley fell ill on the Friday, died on the Sunday, without, to the astonishment of Madame Elise, having previously completed the work in hand.*

It is painful reading to recall these bitter things today when men's hearts are softer and the social conscience more alert. But we need to remember these dark facts if we would know why there are multitudes of men bitter against organized religion which permitted these inhuman practices to go on almost without protest. It has been an easy fault of the Church to teach in its creed the Incarnation while it denies in practice the brotherhood of man. There can be no greater heresy than that. It was that heresy that Kingsley pilloried, albeit with a Tory emphasis. He did many another valiant service to letters and theology, but our age, which is gathering the fruits of his pioneer work in social justice, must lovingly record that he was a prophet in the day when it was a costly thing to teach the social gospel.

THE WEEK

PLEASE EXCUSE US

WE hope that bishops, diocesan correspondents and others will be generous in their appraisal of what THE CHURCHMAN is doing and leaving undone in the matter of reporting diocesan conventions and bishops' addresses. Twenty convention addresses and reports came to the news editor's desk during the past week,—most of them on Monday morning. We should gladly share these reports in their entirety with our readers, but that is manifestly impossible. What we omit to reveal of our correspondents' convention letters is not done under calm and studied judgment of their value. We simply do the best we can, under the avalanche of diocesan convention reports, to reflect the general movement of legislation and episcopal suggestion.

PROHIBITION AND POLITICS

THE papers announce that the anti-saloon League of New York will fight the renomination for the Senate of Senator James W. Wadsworth. Mr. Wadsworth's record in the recent fight for prohibition is the reason for the league's taking this stand.

This suggests a serious question. We have seen for many years in America the pernicious effect of the saloon in politics. That influence has been evicted by the courageous and patient fight of the anti-saloon forces in politics but the forces which have combatted the liquor evil cannot afford to copy too precisely the tactics of their enemy. What the liquor people were concerned about, when they set up and tore down candidates for office, was will the candidate vote as the liquor interests dictate? Other interests of the nation at large had no place in the reckoning of the liquor gang. Are the anti-saloon bosses going to follow this same narrow definition of what fits a man to be a public servant? There are, after all, other matters and public questions of importance than the liquor problem. If men are to be supported for office or ejected from office solely upon the merits of their vote on the liquor question, we are likely to get a pretty weak lot of public officials. Fanaticism sees one good and sees that narrowly.

THAT DEPENDS

SECRETARY DANIELS, while explaining the Administration's change of attitude on the second biggest navy, in reply to questions by the House Naval Committee, said: "If the League of Nations is approved, construction of battleships must stop. If it is not approved then the American navy must be made the equal of any navy in the world."

That depends. It depends upon the decision of Congress and the American people, not upon Mr. Daniels or the Administration which is now handling the League of Nations. America was reasonably safe for a good many years before our navy was the equal of any navy in the world. It will be safe, we think, even if the league goes down. Last December while Mr. Wilson was arousing public opinion in behalf of the league, at the very moment when everybody was talking about the era of peace on earth and good-will and no more big armaments, the Administration suddenly in response to secret information by cable from Paris, came out for a navy program to make our navy the equal of any in the world. While our representatives in Paris were talking peace and armaments, they prefaced the oration by a threat at Great Britain's mastery of the seas. Fortunately the secret cable did not produce a panic vote in behalf of the big navy. Mr. Daniels thinks that if we have the league we shall not need to build against Great Britain, but without the league we shall need to do so. That again will be determined not by Mr. Daniels or the promoters of the league. At leisure the American people will determine their naval program; they will also determine the league. It is not likely that we shall build against Great Britain.

It did not seem necessary to compete with the English navy in days that were scarcely as safe as those which are likely to follow immediately upon peace. Threats from advocates of the league may intimidate the opposition, and then, again, they may not.

THE REVIEW

THE third number of New York's new weekly is now on the bookstands. We like it. It's clean, white face looks up at one in decorous sobriety; its three columns of old style type give the hesitant purchaser tranquility as he turns from the shrill cover calls of the New Republic and other new things to find "nothing doing" on the first page of this new Review. But this chastity and restraint is mere manners. There is a good deal doing, one finds, as he turns the pages. Conservatism is on the offensive and it is using worthy weapons. In this regard it bids fair to have the field to itself. The difficulty with us, as far back as we can remember—that is since the great war began—conservatism has not been thinking. It has just been feeling, feeling "mad" and afraid. It has made a rather pathetic showing when matched with the keen fire of militant liberalism. One does not require careful thought of radicals, one looks to them for intuitions, wrath and mighty gusts straight from the heart.

But conservatives ought to employ a different tactic. They ought to think, and they ought to think quietly and not get mad. When a conservative ceases to reason, he ceases to exist. While he is willing to take trouble about his thinking, he need never fear the gauntlet which the radical throws down. Disraeli didn't. He had all the enemies' weapons in his arsenal.

"Between true liberalism and true conservatism there exists," says the editor of the Review, "not only no incompatibility, but on the contrary a vital bond of connection. . . . Indeed, it may almost be said that the primary endeavor of the Review will be to restore the words 'liberal' and 'conservative' to their rightful place in the minds of thinking people."

The weekly press has heavy responsibility in keeping these noble words in their place of dignity and honor. There is no longer a liberal or conservative daily press. There are just "dailies." The position of the typical conservative daily makes the genuine conservative blush for his creed. What a field for fun and fury Mr. Wilson has given conservatives during the past six years! But conservatism has lost its wit. For interpretation one has been forced to turn from the daily press to the weeklies. And now the Review has come into the field. As we peruse the two numbers that lie before us, we think that it has come to stay. The names that back the venture are not new names. They are reminiscent of the Godkin tradition, and the chronic readers of the Nation in the days before the Nation became new, will feel perfectly at home and know what to expect.

DR. JOWETT ON THE C. O.

DR. JOWETT, whom Americans remember as the minister for many years of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York, recently in a sermon in London spoke with frankness and daring upon the tense question of the conscientious objectors. It ought to be possible, he said, to find a tribunal that can distinguish between treachery and principle. This is not a day when England can afford to shut her consciences in prison. There are men now in our prisons serving long times at hard labor before whom I would take off my hat and they are placed alongside of life-long criminals often in solitary confinement. A tribunal can be found which will discriminate between the coward seeking shelter from danger and the idler refusing to share the burden of the task and the men—with martyrs' blood in their veins—who suffer because of their conscience. I would be false to myself and to my congregation if I failed to urge immediate action by our government looking toward their release.

During battle, it is too much to ask that pains be taken always to do impartial justice to consciences that clog the war machinery. But now that the war is over we can afford to give up the martyr-making business and let the members of pacifist religions out of jail.

RELIGIOUS TEACHING IN AUSTRALIAN STATE SCHOOLS

FOR nearly forty years Australia has had secular education. No help is given to denominational schools, and just as in America, the Roman Church has provided schools for its own members and has adopted a consistent policy of opposition to religious teaching in the state schools. Yet in all the Australian states except South Australia and Victoria, religious teaching in the state schools is provided for. According to Australian State law, the authorized representative of each religious body in the state has the right of entry into every elementary school for an hour every day, in order to teach the children belonging to his own religious persuasion the faith of their parents, and he may do this with perfect freedom and as fully as if the children were assembled in their own place of worship. This system seems to have worked out satisfactorily, the only complaint being that according to the law, religious education cannot be included in the curriculum of a secondary school without special permission, but this permission is, it seems, frequently given. Australian schoolmasters testify that religious teaching given in this way tends to raise the standard of morals and conduct in their schools. The fear that distinctions would arise by segregating the students for religious instruction has happily not been realized. In many cases where there are largely-populated parishes, or in widely scattered areas, the clergy do not find it possible to undertake the work of school instruction. In the Diocese of Sydney, for example, lay teachers are employed to do nothing else but give religious instruction in the various schools. The efficiency of their work is tested by a system of diocesan inspection and a scheme of bishop's certificates and prizes provides a useful stimulus to the scholars.

NOT CHARITY BUT JUSTICE

BY THE RT. REV. CHARLES GORE, D.D., D.C.L.

He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?—MICAH VI, 8.

THE current ideas about justice and charity today are manifestly quite different. One of the ablest and noblest of living Conservative statesmen in his description of "Conservatism," has distinguished justice from charity in the most naïve form. Charity or expediency, he says, induces us, or practically compels us, to relieve destitution, but it is totally denied that this has anything to do with justice. He declares also that "It is untrue that there is any obligation in justice upon the State to render to the individual an equivalent for what the individual has rendered to the State. It is equally mistaken to suppose that there is any obligation in justice on the individual to render to the State an equivalent for what he has received from the State." Here we have the legal meaning of justice put into the most marked contrast to charity. The function of justice is to maintain contract and property. It has nothing to do with equal distribution or distribution according to needs. Such doctrine, though in its extreme form it is perhaps startling, is the consequence of the whole set of ideas which have lain behind our "industrial system."

How far Protestantism with its encouragement of individualism was responsible for this vast change in ideas, or how far it was simply the breakdown of religious authority in society which left the industrial movement to go its own way, unimpeded by religious scruples, we need not inquire. Certainly protestant countries have been no worse than catholic in this respect. The whole philosophy of individualism—the whole theory that human progress would be secured by allowing individual initiative and acquisitiveness free play, enlightened by science or emancipated from state restriction—must be said to have broken down. It has resulted in a state of society in which the contrast between extremes of wealth or luxury on one side and destitution and misery on the other has become disgusting to common feeling. So far from the promised freedom of the individual being realized, the freedom of the few privileged by opportunity has been far more than balanced by a condition of industrial servitude for the many. And the state of law—so much more severe on violation of property than on damage to persons—has become a common scandal.

These are familiar topics. There has arisen from Labor in all lands, on its way to secure its emancipation, a cry for justice—not in the sense in which justice is a thing of law to secure the maintenance of contracts and the right of property, but in the old sense of a divine principle by which each human being born into the world is to be secured the opportunity of being born and nourished in health and properly educated and given honorable work and an adequate share of the proceeds of his work, and equality—if not of faculty or position, then of opportunity to make the best of that faculty he has. And through the growing strength of organized labor this claim is in its broad lines already becoming victorious.

We all recognize today that the State must busy itself to secure proper conditions for motherhood and protection for infancy; that we must have proper and sufficient housing for all citizens; that there must be free and adequate education; that there must be adequate wages secured to all—adequate to the nourishment of a man's self and family; that there must be legal protection of leisure; that there must be provision of hospitals and medical treatment for all—whether on the basis of old endowments and voluntary present day contributions, or by provision of the State out of taxes. Anyway, the hospitals must be there. In that sense it is no longer a voluntary matter. This is the old demand of justice, in its old Christian sense; but now its recognition as the function of the State has reached a point where it is practically undisputed—undisputed, that is, because the forces which claim it are too strong to be resisted. The right to give "sweating" wages, the right to acquire private wealth by public injury, can no longer assert itself, at least in the open.

And this claim of justice is put in contrast to charity. Not that it is so in the true sense in which charity is only justice with a new power in it because of the value which Christ has taught us to set on every human soul, but because of the meagre sense given to it in popular speech by which it was regarded as something over and above justice, which the just man might give or withhold as he pleased without being responsible to his fellowmen. In this unworthy sense of charity the cry is "Not charity, but justice." And, as I say, the cry is becoming dominant. We of the Church are conscious, with a profound sense of error, that for centuries we have been occupying ourselves only too contentedly in "administering charity"—that is, in going about with, as it were, an ambulance cart to pick up the wounded in the social strife, when we ought to have been attacking the sources and strongholds of wrong and maintaining the charity which is the same thing with justice.

Well, I say, practically we accept the situation in our current politics that the State must concern itself actively with the promotion of justice in the old Christian sense of equality of opportunity for a decent and human life. This leaves much to discuss and abundant room for different schools of political and economic thinkers. But I am not here concerned directly with either politics or economics. What I am concerned with are the ideas which should dominate our minds. In great measure it must be confessed that the change in our political outlook—the abandonment of the laissez faire ideal and the passing of measure after measure which our fathers would have denounced as socialistic—has been due to necessity. Labor has insisted on these measures, and Labor is too strong to be resisted without vast concession.

But it is not only this. It is also true that there has been a deep and widespread change of ideas in the whole field of moral, social and economic thought. Only we Englishmen do not love ideas. And in all that concerns acquisition, distribution and property, we are apt to cling to the ideas which belong to a system which we have in fact abandoned. We still need real conversion of mind, and even more a reforming of our imagination and outlook upon social life and citizenship. We cannot without disaster go on legislating on one set of principles and really thinking and feeling on another and quite different set.

What do we really mean when we say that the principle of justice means equal consideration for every human soul and that no man is justified in using any other human being as a mere "hand" or animated instrument for the promotion of his own selfish ends? What do we really mean when we say that the true "weal" of a nation lies not in the abundance of its material products, but in the use of those products to secure that all the citizens can lead a properly equipped, happy and hopeful life? What do we really mean when we say that the object of industry is not the enrichment of the individual, but that it is a form of social service—a function for the welfare of the whole community, and that the welfare of the community must be dominant over the interest of the individuals? These are no doubt Christian ideas, and they are becoming common phases of our political oratory and our literature. But they mean a great deal. And while few contradict them, few, it seems to me, really assimilate them.

And, in fact, this recovered idea of justice, as applied to a democratic State, and made the basis of its polity, makes a deep moral claim. Democracy in its very essence makes a great demand for the wide diffusion of a certain nobility of character. It demands that we shall all accept as a ruling principle of our life the service of the community. The wider you expand the function of control, whether in industry or in the State, the wider the demand you make on individual character. This is why democracy is a dangerous experiment, however just its principle, or however incontestible its acceptance. You cannot have a just democracy unless the mass of individuals composing the democracy have got the ideal of justice in their minds. You cannot have a real commonwealth unless the mass of members really and habitually think about the common good.

Thus, amidst the clamorous contentions of today, nothing is more certain than that it is the duty of every man, beginning with himself, to reconstruct his personal ideals of life, in his home, in his place of business, in his recreation, in his relation to other men. He has got to ask himself afresh: What do I mean by justice, and am I going to live by it? That is the challenge. And the challenge takes us back upon the very principle of religion. It forces us to reconsider our relation to God and His will and His government. For a religion that is worth anything must be primarily moral; it must reflect the divine character; it is, in all relations of life, to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God.

Charity is justice—justice with a soul in it. And if so a good man can be charitable in paying what at least he cannot help paying—his rates and taxes. He will be charitable in this because he does it gladly with a good will as making his contribution to the general good. But there is still a vast field of need dependent upon voluntary giving. It is not only that, at present at least, there are still immense inequalities between the wealth of some and the destitution of others, and that much of the necessary instrumentality for the supplying of human need, like our hospitals, is still dependent upon voluntary giving, but also, whatever changes take place in the constitution of our society, there will always be a vast field of human need which no state organization can satisfy—which must be left for satisfaction to the good feeling of the man who has toward the man who has not. There is no fear, or hope, to be rationally entertained that the place for almsgiving will ever be closed up in human society. And the motive of all giving can be expressed best in the noble words of John Woolman, the Quaker, in his Word of Remembrance to the Rich, that "To labor for a perfect redemption from the spirit of oppression is the great business of the whole family of Christ Jesus in this world."

OUT OF THE PAST

BY RICHMOND HERBERT GESNER

I

THIS yellow piece of parchment is a palimpsest of Egypt;

Here, dim below the clearer characters
You see the traces of old writing.

One, ages gone, wrote here o'er Homer's song
The epic of our Orpheus.

So, Blessed Christ, upon the leaves of my old nature,

That bears the marks of pagan sin,
Write Thy Most Holy Name in characters of Faith
In which all deeds of Love begin.

II

A Celtic cross rough-hewn by hand long-mouldered, Deep-sunk in Saxon soil, a martyr's blood commemorating,

Stands facing westward, red in the dying sun,
And saint-like smiling on the unsullied sea.

So plant Thy Cross, O Christ, within my heart,
Etch deep its sacred monogram in fleshy soil,
Tinge its far-reaching arms with holy light
And with Thy Dying Sacrifice my sins assoil.

III

A rare old folio, part of the Book of Books,
Each caput gold and vermillion, dight with patient care,
Some mediaeval monk in his dark cell by flickering rush-light,

Through many wakeful nights illuminated.

Lord, may each letter of my life,

Colored with loving touch, each chaptered story
Though done in dimness of my clouded sight
At last reflect Thy Glory.

IV

And last a sculpture set aloft in a Byzantine church;
No Phidias shaped these rugged features,
But one who knew the patience born of toil,
Carved with keen tool the peace that comes through pain.
E'en so, dear Lord, take this unshapen block of life,

Mould it unto the symmetry Divine,
That fairly-fashioned into sweet accord

It may adorn that radiant House of Thine.

THE CHURCH AND RECTORY AT EVERSLEY

CHARLES KINGSLEY. 1819-1875

BY MARGARETTA BYRDE

IT is no wonder that the centenary of the birth of Charles Kingsley should be so noted, and such preparations made for observing it, in England, for he was one of her representative men—poet, novelist, essayist, lecturer, priest, artist, naturalist, a country gentleman, a court preacher, a university professor, and a great and effectual reformer. And more than all, he was a personality and one of the kind that mirrors his nation. No other country than England it is safe to say, could have produced him, a man with such varied characteristics, often contradictory, who yet was so true to type. It is only in England, apparently, that a man can be a radical and an aristocrat, orthodox and free-thinking, idealistic and practical, sensitive and impressionable, yet robustly breezy, and independent, studious and artistic, yet a sportsman to his fingertips. Kingsley was all these and more, probably, and yet all his gifts and characteristics lived and were housed amicably within a personality which was whole and directed and inspired by a guiding impulse towards a single purpose. A nature like his often stumbles upon tragedy, and he was fortunate in finding through early and happy marriage just the environment that he needed for synthesis of his complexities. His nature, anchored thus and at peace, was free to expand into healthy activities, helped by a constant and faithful sympathy and an inspiring love.

It was a wonderful, beautiful, most useful life that is being so gratefully commemorated, nearly forty-five years after it came to such a premature close, a life that can be understood and valued better today, perhaps, than when his early death shocked and sorrowed such a wide circle of friends and made even his enemies—and he had bitter enemies!—pause in their strictures and bow their heads in admission of the nobility of his aims and their disinterestedness. It is these which are his lasting memorial, more than all he said or all he did; it is these which give value to the words and deeds which are to remain, and cover what was failure with tenderness. He was not always wise or right, but he was always sincere and always self-oblated.

Reading his biography and other data, and remembering the trend of his literary work it seems clear that Kingsley's originality lay in that singleness of mind, and that synthesis of his gifts and qualities. For he was very impressionable, and responsive to influence. Three influences were most marked upon his life, one of which worked through antagonism, one through his defects and one, strongly and beneficently throughout upon all that was great, noble and aspiring in his nature.

The antagonistic influence was the Tractarian Movement: it stirred up in him a very passion of repulsion, and made for him a positive doctrine—or led him towards it—by which he sought to counteract what to him was wholly un-English, and reactionary and false. There was something in his nature, healthy, human and independent as it was, which could only be antipathetic to the ideals which inspired Newman, Keble, Marriott and their group, which gave him a sort of shudder as he saw in them but a morbid introspection, a denial of the rights of life, an intolerable interference with the freedom of the soul. He was a poet and a lover, like Keble, and a parish priest, but how unlike in all these things! You may search in vain through Keble's biography to find a trace of interest in the merely human welfare of his flock, still less expect to find any of that burning indignation, that passionate pity, with which Kingsley saw social degradation and hideous wrongs. And because each saw in the other's cherished ideals and beliefs what they were not, instead of what they were and stood for, the most earnest and God-fearing men of the religious revival of modern times were arrayed one against the other, and had only suspicion and dislike for each other, each conscious of martyrdom at the other's hands. Kingsley was a doughty fighter, and his novels are as much the outcome of his hatred of the ascetic ideal as they are of his sense of social injustice, while his Saint's Tragedy was frankly a challenge to the Tractarians.

The second influence, that which worked upon what I must consider his weaker side, was that of Carlyle, and Kingsley was not the only notable radical who was inconsistently drawn aside to confidence in harsh coercion and vigorous methods of administration by that semi-pagan, semi-Hebrew prophet. That was a grand voice out of the wilderness of sloth and materialism, but its speaker persistently looked to the past and not to the future and the evils of his philosophy, noble as it was in many respects, are painfully apparent today in the crime and downfall of that Prussia which no man ever did more to idealize and glorify. The appeal to the ruling caste to rule was never given to one more naturally responsive than to Kingsley. For he was not a democrat, however eloquently he preached democracy at times—and then as fervently contradicted it! He was not, and probably never could be, but however great the chance Carlyle's influence over that age and his leadership in moral thought would have prevented it. Kingsley was an aristocrat, of the type which in England has wrought out its wonderful development, which has headed all movements for the good of the nation, against its own material interests, which is chivalrous and makes noblesse oblige a principle that one sees working every day. It is a great, noble, picturesque principle. It is magnificent but it is not democracy. It would work as well for the good of all as democracy if any set of men on earth were good enough and great enough for such unchallenged power. But when one sees such men as Tennyson, Dickens and Kingsley passionately championing a Governor Eyre one sees that there is nobody good enough to rule, except with the consent of the ruled. I am sure Kingsley never believed this, and Carlyle would not, for he loved his superman.

The greatest and happiest influence which first drew all those splendid powers into concentration and then urged them to such efficient purpose was that of Frederick Denison Maurice, the chosen prophet, the accepted master of Kingsley's devotion. The very chivalry of his nature responded to him, and he loved to be as a squire to that knight without fear or reproach, called his "Master" habitually, aimed to be his expositor, his revealer. There is no more beautiful instance in history than that knightly subservience of the gifted, many-sided but in some respects the lesser man to the greater, and no more characteristic revelation of Kingsley himself than the fact that he conceived "his mission to be a popularizer of the principles of Mr. Maurice" as one of his friends frankly confesses.

Maurice was the greatest and finest thinker of his age, a man with a limitless horizon, lost in God, permeated with his sense of the indwelling Fatherhood, fervent in his faith in the coming of the Kingdom on earth, and devoted to its promotion. To most people he seemed vague and mystical, or too profoundly intellectual to be understood. Great was that mutual cooperation—itself a noble testimony to the value of his leading social doctrine, cooperation—between the prophet and his brilliant disciple, and it is difficult, even impossible, to say which profited the more by the union, though not difficult to see how the whole world has profited by it. Kingsley certainly stands higher today for it. He was not great enough in any single one of his numerous capacities to live as poet, novelist, naturalist, scholar or even preacher, but Maurice made him great in all and everything by his inspiration, by calling into power what was there, of course, and turning it to steam in the passionate service of the oppressed, by first, however, calming that inquiet soul, giving it that conception of the eternal Word which was Kingsley's gospel.

The tale of their work is too well known to be recapitulated; some of their cooperative successes have since been failures, but the principle, as opposed to competition, still presses home and maybe in the near future will resolve the present industrial problems. It is their glory that Christians have become so awake to the principle that they dare not abandon it. Maurice and Kingsley are coming into their own. They are still astonishingly fresh, still ahead of average public opinion, even Christian opinion, afraid to believe that there is a divine plan for society, a Christian ideal to which we are gradually approximating. If that approximation has been hastening a little more of late, if the Kingdom seems a little nearer, we owe it more than to any other men of the preceding century to these friends, whose names are always coupled together and who would have it so did they know. And more perhaps to Kingsley, in some ways the lesser, in depth of understanding and breadth of conception and height of vision, but nearer to the common man, in that essentially human heart of his, with his glowing imagination always kindled by the human things that touch us all; with his ear for justice, his eye for facts and his hand for service. Kingsley, as I have said, was an Englishman, but he also belongs to the world, for his mission is not yet over; his message is not wholly delivered. It is for us who honor him to make it the better known.

THE MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL

BY PHILIP LITTLE

THE sun shone down on the Bulfinch front,
On the weak, the maimed, and the strong,
On the white-robed nurses, God bless them,
Ever where they belong.
And this was the blessed sun's message,
"Do you think I am here for naught?
Do you think there's no power behind me,
That my power can e'er be bought?
Do you think, in your idle prattle,
As you hold your ear to the shell,

And list to the works of the God of the sun,
That he does not all things well?
Then ye'd better kneel down in your weakness,
Bow your head to the earth in shame,
Because ye have doubted the Power
That rolls and controls my flame;
That has warmed and revived, and remolded,
And brought ye to life anew,
Doubt not ye the strength of the Power
That has never forsaken you."

KINGSLEY'S LIFE AT EVERSLEY

BY THE REV. P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A., F.S.A.

IT seems scarcely possible that we should be celebrating the centenary of the good kindly man, greatly beloved, the renowned writer and distinguished clergyman, Charles Kingsley. His memory is so green and fresh amongst us, not only in Berkshire and Hampshire and throughout England, but also across the Atlantic in our sister land of America, that one can hardly realize that a hundred years have elapsed since he was born at Holm on the borders of his beloved Dartmoor. But so it is, and I am asked to tell you something of his life at Eversley which will ever be associated with his name and fame.

Pilgrims from your country still love to visit the old church in which he served God so earnestly, and the old rectory where he wrote his books and the study wherein he labored; and when they leave us they retain kindly memories of the warm-hearted rector who had sympathy for every one in the village and was loved and respected by all. Kingsley died three years before I came into his neighborhood, but his daughter and many of his friends are my friends; his parishioners have come to live in my village, and stories of his life, his quaintness and idiosyncrasies linger on in the countryside and may be worth the telling.

Eversley is situated in Northern Hampshire, four miles away from the rectory where I am writing. This village of Barkham is not unknown in your country, as the Ball family lived here, the ancestors, it is believed, of Mary Ball, George Washington's mother. Kingsley's village is on the river Blackwater, so named from the tinge given to it by the peat moor through which it passes. It is a land of "brown heath and shaggy moor," of open commons whereon the purple heather grows in wild luxuriance; and across the heather-clad Hartford Bridge Flats runs the old coaching road beloved now by motorists who enjoy a glorious run along it.

To this remote village came Kingsley in 1842 as curate, when he found the parish composed of common land, divided into three hamlets, each standing in its own little green surrounded by moorland. One of these greens was famous for cricket-matches, in which Kingsley often took part, as the present writer has done before the war came and stamped out village cricket and many other pleasant gatherings. The new curate lived in a small house on this green in his early days at Eversley.

The population was then very scattered, consisting of "heath croppers" from time immemorial and poachers by instinct and heritage. They were cunning rascals, but he was very fond of them and earned their respect, and they returned his love for them and were devoted to him. (Perhaps I ought to explain that a "heath cropper," alias "brown-squire," is one who cuts the heather on the commons and fashions it into stable or garden brooms.)

Two of this clan met one day at the market and said: "Jim, I can't tell how you sell your brooms so cheap. I steals the ling and I steals the 'andles, but I can't sell 'em at your price." "Why, you fool," responded his mate, "I steals 'em ready made." Kingsley said of these parishioners of his: "The descendant of many generations of broom-squires and deer-stealers, the instinct of sport is strong within him still, though no more of the king's deer are to be shot in the winter turnip-fields or, worse still, caught by an apple-baited hook hung from an orchard bough. He now limits his aspirations to hares and pheasants, and probably once in his life 'hits the keeper into the river,' and reconsiders himself for a while after in Winchester gaol. Well, he has his faults as I have mine. But he is a thorough good fellow nevertheless, quite as good as I: civil, contented, industrious and often very handsome; and a far shrewder fellow too—owing to a dash of wild forest-blood from gypsy, highwaymen, or what not—than his bullet-headed and flaxen polled cousin, the pure South Saxon of the chalk downs. Darkhaired he is, ruddy and tall of bone; swaggering in his youth; but when he grows old, a thorough gentleman, reserved, stately and courteous as a prince. Sixteen years have I lived with him, hail fellow well met, and never yet had a rude word or action from him."

At the beginning of his ministry he wrote to his future wife the following description of the place as he saw it from the rectory windows: "The view is beautiful. The ground slopes upward from the windows to a sunk fence and road without banks or hedges, and then rises to the furze hill in the drawing, which hill is perfectly beautiful in light and shade and color. Behind the acacia in the lawn you get the first glimpse of the forests and moors, of which five-sixths of my parish consists. Those delicious self-sown firs!" He was very devoted to these firs, and imagined that they all sprang from some Scotch firs planted by James I in Bramshill Park.

Until recent years, with the exception of the thirty-three years of Kingsley's ministry, Eversley has been unfortunate in its rectors. His predecessor neglected his duties shamefully, and when he came there as curate he found it in a woful condition. For quite trivial and foolish reasons the rector would send the clerk to the church door on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock to inform the few people who attended that there would be no service. The inns were always full, but the church was empty on Sundays. It was not a very attractive place of worship. When pasture was scarce the farmer's sheep were turned into the churchyard, which was damp, dismal and deserted. Holy Communion was celebrated only three times a year, and the communicants were very few. The alms were collected in an old wooden saucer; a cracked kitchen basin inside the font held the water for Holy Baptism; and at the altar, covered by a moth-eaten cloth, stood one old broken chair.

Kingsley at once set himself the task of improving this terrible state of affairs, and acted vigorously; and in a short time his efforts were crowned with success. After two years the living became vacant, and he was appointed rector by the patron, Sir John Cope of Bramshill, in response to a petition of the inhabitants. The church he restored.

In the parish is one of the stately ancestral homes of England, Bramshill, built in the reign of James I, which I have no space to describe. My account of it has been published in your country as in mine. In Kingsley's time it was the home of fox-hunting. Sir John Cope kept a famous pack of hounds, and the good rector loved the sport and was the friend of the huntsmen and whips and every follower of the hunt in all his countryside. "That huntsman," he wrote, "I have known for fifteen years, and sat many an hour by his father's deathbed. I am godfather to that whip's child. I have seen the servants of the hunt, as I have the hounds, grow up around me for two generations, and I feel for them as old friends, and like to look upon their brave, honest, weather-beaten faces." How well he describes a run, a horn, a hound, and crafty reynard.

You will remember his "Ode to the brave north-easter," "Chime ye dappled darlings." He is riding his mare one day and he hears the music of the hounds he loves so well. With difficulty does he restrain himself from following them. "In the days of his vanity," he says, "he had drank delight of battle with his peers far on the ringing plains of many a county, grass and forest, down and vale." But he had four old women to read to at three o'clock, and an old man to bury at four; and he thinks his friend who is coaxing and soliciting him to follow, will respect him more for going home and doing his duty. When he died the hounds were brought to his funeral, and his friends the gypsies came in crowds and wept and wailed and sang their dirge over their beloved "Patrico-rai" (priest-king).

He loved nature in all her forms, and moods, as his Water Babies, Glaucus and more especially his Winter Garden show. There is a much respected chimney-sweep in Wokingham, now an alderman of his borough, who thinks he was the identical poor lad described in the Water Babies, who was sent up chimneys by his mother.

Eccentric and unconventional he was. My old friend and neighbor, the Rev. Edward St. John, rector of Finchampstead, told me that on one occasion he was walking home after dining at Bramshill, when he heard loud cries, and he thought some murder was being committed. Presently he saw a weird figure in a dressing-gown and slippers striding across the common.

"Good heavens, Kingsley, how you frightened me!" "Oh! I often come out here at night just to exercise my voice," replied the eccentric parson with his charming stutter.

Other stories linger on in the countryside, such as his fondness for smoking, and how surprised Dr. Benson, then headmaster of Wellington College, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, was one day when walking together he saw Kingsley drive into a furze-bush and from a discreet hiding place produce a clay pipe and tobacco, and proceed to solace himself with some whiffs of smoke. Among the few relics preserved at the rectory is his old leaden tobacco-jar. His friendship with Dr. Benson was a source of mutual pleasure and satisfaction. He used often to dine at the headmaster's house, and delight the company with his sprightly, humorous and inconsequent conversation, and sometimes shock the distinguished but dull-witted guests.

Another neighbour of his was the celebrated authoress, Mary Russell Whitford, whom he knew in her old age. He wrote a glowing description of his first visit to her, but it is too long to quote; but I may record her opinion of him: "He took me quite by surprise in his extraordinary fascination. . . . His is not only a high-bred gentleman, but has the most charming admixture of softness and gentleness, with spirit, manliness, frankness—a frankness quite transparent—and a cordiality and courtesy that would win any heart."

No wonder he was beloved in his village and in the whole neighbourhood. Of his connection with the outside world I need not tell here, nor describe how deeply he was stirred in 1848 by the events of the new revolution in France, by the writings of F. D. Maurice and the Chartist Movement, and how he labored to put Christian life into the masses, while showing sympathy with their best hopes and knowledge of the evils that then cried for remedy. His novel Alton Locke in 1850 and Yeast in 1851 represented the stir of the time, and showed what it meant in the long struggle towards a better life on earth.

His name became famous outside the boundaries of his little village. It was known in London and at court. Queen Victoria liked him, and I have here a sermon that he preached before her. Honors were bestowed upon him. He became canon of Chester and then of Westminster, and though not a great historian he was appointed by the crown regius professor of modern history at Cambridge. There were those who objected to the appointment, and had an interview with Lord Palmerston, pointing out that Kingsley knew nothing of modern history. Lord Palmerston's reply to the deputation was characteristic. "Know nothing of modern history! What has the fellow written? Oh! here's Two Years Ago; if that's not modern history I do not know what is."

He was not always quite accurate in his historical dates and details and on one occasion some members of his audience took him to task. He replied that when he was at Nuremberg he saw a wonderful ancient clock. It told the hours and minutes and months and years, the sidereal and human time and much else. The only unfortunate part about it was that all this information was wrong. In fact the old clock had too much to do. "Gentlemen, I fear I am like that clock," he concluded.

So the years passed. He was always overworking himself, and in consequence had frequent attacks of severe illness, until at last the lamp of life flickered out in the hard winter of 1875. It is well that Eversley, which he loved so ardently, should cherish and preserve his memory, and celebrate the centenary of his birthday in the month of roses which bloom so sweetly in the old garden.

The people of Eversley have decided to present some pageant or pastoral plays on June 11 and two following days. Distinguished actors are coming to us from London, and the proceeds are to be devoted to the founding of a Charles Kingsley Memorial Hall. You will not be able to attend the plays, the expenses of which may possibly absorb all the receipts; but if you wish to honor Kingsley's memory you may like to send a good-sized donation to the Rev. Maurice Tanner, rector of Eversley, Blackwater, Hants, England, who will gratefully acknowledge it and devote it to the building of the hall, this fund being separate from that of the pageants.

PEASANT LIFE IN OLD FRANCE

I HAVE just spent two days paying one of my young French friends a visit. The boy is sixteen. He lives in Gignac, a village thirty-eight kilometers from Montpellier. The village is notable for two annual events, a passion play and the Procession of the Ass. They are equally serious. One night when the garrison of Gignac was asleep the Saracens came to the assault. Just as the assault was on the point of becoming effective the asses brayed. The garrison awoke and, after a desperate fight, repelled the attack. Every year since there had been held a fete in honor of the asses of Gignac. The people of the village pray to the ass, just as those of St. Guilhem-le-Desert pray to the goat, the only animal that will live in that desert, and the people of Clermont pray to the pig. An ass is covered with the richest of priestly robes. He is led through the streets by the village priest. In the square a savage fight between two men, masked and dressed as Saracens, contributes a typical bit of Midi excitement. It is especially the fete of the children. They accompany the ass with great solemnity and importance. Molière left a jest for the inscription over the town watering-place; "May this water flow perpetually, cheering the sagacious asses of Gignac."

The second festival, the passion ceremony, is quite as much of an antiquity. The church is located on a hill. From the doors, along the highroad, is a series of fifteen stations, or chapels, each containing in some degree of ill preservation a scene from the Crucifixion. A procession, famous in the past of the province, goes every fifteenth of August down the road, enacting a scene of the Passion at each shrine. A touch of art appears in the final shrine. It contains no image. It is older and more impressive than the rest. It is an empty tomb.

Gignac, then, is in one way or another a most picturesque village. It contains many curious bits of carving, covered streets and antique doorways. Best of all it contains an historian. This man knows his native town and loves it. He has always lived here, has his vineyards here, and, no doubt, will die here. He is a peasant, writes Provençal French and has never dreamed of giving his manuscript to a printer. It lies open to whoever is curious. This is not a history of parliamentary claptrap or of favorite economic abstractions. It has its intimate sources in a knowledge of the lives of all the people living in Gignac. The unwritten literature of the village and the relics of by-gone customs and usages make the story. Above all is the love of the inhabitants. The reason this historian can love his village as an historian is that he knows it intimately. There is no earthly possibility of loving a society or a people or a country which one does not know.

My historian writes history in the right way. And almost everything that has happened worth mentioning in the history of the world has happened in Gignac. How my historian lingers with sympathetic joy over the introduction of electricity and all its conveniences into Gignac. How he loves to narrate the story of the peasants coming into their freedom. How he loves to tell how religion in Gignac passed through the stages of magic, piety, theology and honor. The history is never trivial, like military and political histories, and it is as complete as our imagination can make it. It is one of the most crudely executed and one of the most sanely directed histories I have had the good fortune to consult. If a few more histories were like this I might not wish to study in a department of literature.

A very few words must suffice to tell of the man to whom I owe my introduction to the historian, the father of my young friend. He is a man past middle age, short, squat, with a rough, genial face, wide mouth, sunken little nose and clear, round eyes under high arched, almost indistinguishable eye-brows, giving him an appearance of guileless, sturdy, hospitable provinciality. Like most French peasants, he is not one because he is ignorant of other modes of thought, but because, knowing and to a certain degree assimilating many of the types of culture in France, he prefers to remain in the time-mellowed ways of the village life. He has great, hard, black hands and talks dialect, dresses any way and never shaves. But he is, intellectually and socially, of a higher culture, to my mind, than the culture commonly found in American colleges. He knows his position better than anyone. He paid me that rare courtesy which a man of conscious merit pays to one of a rank that he honors above his own. Such respect can never fail to make the recipient aware of all his unworthiness.

It is this general high degree of mutual understanding and respect between the sharply distinguished classes in France that should keep France from the uglier evils of class antagonism. The French officers, for example, are as exclusive as the Germans, but, by casual hints and words and conversations, they satisfy the poilus that there is a common understanding and respect, and that no sham arrogance is being thrust on them. So French society combines the advantages of a highly aristocratic system of behavior with an underlying understanding of democracy. A similar marked contrast between legal and social relations may be seen in the position of French women before the law and in daily life. Where the law lays on them extraordinary restrictions, daily practice contents them with an equally unusual degree of liberty.

I wish I might tell you of this old fellow's house. One should begin with the beautiful garden of rare flowers and plants. At the door you meet a fine dog, an expert at catching rabbits. The living room, or kitchen, is vaulted with a simple cross, the plaster deliciously tinted. There is no stove, but an open fire in a tiled fire-place of generous proportions. There is a great-great-grandfather's clock, not a puritanical clock but a seventeenth century one; and then, the table, clean as a whistle, and the stone floor as clean as it. On the table is a central plaque in tile, with carved wood borders. It is not the salt-cellar here that would have delighted Horace, but the oil and vinegar rack and the salad spoon, both soaked through and through their fine wood grains with a rich color of reddish brown. And then they have their own old wine, in bottles, for such a far-away guest as I, an eighth of an inch deep in the cellar dust. Over the centre of the table hangs the evidence of the superior quality which I have been attributing to these apparently ignorant, innocent country people. It is an electric light with a light green shade, especially easy on the eyes, and corresponding to the tints on the wall. So do the better peasants live in this happy land.

On the morning of my second day I went bicycling with the young boy to St. Guilhem-le-Desert with which I have already fallen in love. It was Palm Sunday. The peasants, among other ceremonies, took each a branch of laurel, for there are no palms about this village, and with the priest and the children in the lead, marched in procession through the entire village, which was no great matter, singing their carols. The village is the utmost word in simplicity, piety, primitiveness, and hardship and contentment and peace. The image of the shepherd and his flock never appealed to me so much as this morning, when I saw first the shepherd bringing the sheep and goats down from the hill and, half an hour later, the same man among his comrades meekly following the priest and the children and the holy bells tinkling no more holily than before they had tinkled to the flock.

DEAN HODGES' PITTSBURGH MINISTRY

BY H. D. W. ENGLISH

"THE Church of Christ stands today just where Christ stood. On the one hand is unbelief, and on the other hand are pain and poverty. Men are coming constantly with that old crucial question. 'Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?' . . . What are the credentials of Christianity? . . . The credentials of Christianity are not creeds but deeds."

The words come to us in short crisp sentences with all the eloquence of simplicity and earnestness from a life, lived among us, every day of which gave power to the words that rang through the old parish church.

The Rev. George Hodges had become the rector of Calvary Parish after being the assistant from 1881 until 1889. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D.D. The words quoted above were from only one of many sermons which helped to mould Calvary Parish into the strong, viril and spiritual force it is today.

How did this man, at that time little known, become the power he was both in the pulpit and in Pittsburgh? (for the city became his parish.) It is easily explained now that we look over those blessed days when he walked with us. Splendid as he was in the pulpit he was best down among us with his hand in ours. He was a human solvent in those first days in Pittsburgh when we began really to study the hard social problems of life in this workshop of the world. Was there a twisted and hardened heart in the community? He beamed upon it with his cheerful eye and his quick common sense reached out for the cure to the problem back of it. He gathered men and women around him and speaking out of his great charity for mankind sought the help of privileged and unprivileged to solve these problems. So he went through his busy days among us seeming always to understand us all. He was never surprised by wickedness nor discouraged by weakness. He never lost faith in God or in man.

A great preacher? Yes! A great teacher? Yes. But best of all a great leader. Preaching, teaching and leading men by constantly presenting Christ as the pattern and translating that life of his Master into the simple language men could understand and into the every day work of dying men. His sermons were read every Monday morning by thousands of his fellow citizens and his deeds in their behalf made those words ring true, so that today his name is revered and treasured and lovingly remembered by thousands of our citizens although he has been away from Pittsburgh for twenty-five years.

Surely we can pay no higher tribute to our dear friend that to let him end this message of love in those words of his text from which he preached many years ago; words that have filled the minds and consciences of men in all ages as the interpretation of His life has been indifferently or vividly presented to men: "Whom do men say that I am?" Surely the men and women of Pittsburgh through our friend's teaching and example were never left in doubt as to who was the Saviour of the world. Surely the social gospel never was more honestly acclaimed or its attractiveness to men made more evident. Today in Pittsburgh through a great parish which continues his blessed work for others; through the services of a great social settlement called Kingsley House of which Dean Hodges was the founder; through a great summer home for women and children; through a convalescent hospital for women and girls; through thousands of men and women who found new life in loving service for their fellows the answer to his text has come in increasing measure as the years have gone on. We do not "look for another." The Master and His life as interpreted in deeds by the rector of Calvary is enough.

EROSION

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD

THE waves with ceaseless plunge and shock,
With unremittent surge and roar,
May change the mightiest bulk of rock
To shifting sands upon the shore.

But all of Time's persistent tides
From its firm bases may not stir
The steadfast soul in which abides
The rock of noble character.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

COADJUTOR CONSECRATED FOR MISSISSIPPI DIOCESE

Rev. William Mercer Green Made Bishop on Feast of the Ascension

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI.—On the Feast of the Ascension, in St. Andrew's Church here, in the presence of a congregation that overflowed the building, the Rev. William Mercer Green was consecrated by Bishop Tuttle Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Mississippi. Mr. Green has been rector of St. Andrew's for many years.

Besides the presiding bishop, Bishop Sessums, Bishop Johnston, Bishop Gailor and Bishop Winchester were present as well as the majority of the clergy of the diocese and many laymen. In the procession were all of the protestant ministers of Jackson. The Rev. J. Lunday Sykes, president of the Standing Committee was master of ceremonies and the Rev. Albert Martin, secretary of the diocese was appointed acting rector of St. Andrew's and chaplain to Bishop Tuttle for the service. Bishop Bratton is still in service overseas and was not present. The attending presbyters were the Rev. De B. Waddell and the Rev. Wallace Carnahan; the presenters of the bishop elect were Bishop Winchester and Bishop Johnston. Bishop Tuttle celebrated the Holy Communion and Bishop Gailor was the preacher. He chose for his texts Acts II:47 and Ephesians III:10, and dwelt upon the two functions of the Church.

"The Church is first of all," Bishop Gailor said, "a home, a spiritual family, a refuge and help for the man or woman convicted of sin who feels the need of pardon and help, a school and a training place in the ways of righteousness. To discharge this duty the Lord Himself has instituted and originated means and methods by which comfort and help and direction can be given from age to age. Because men and women have minds, and think and reason the Church has formulated a simple creed which includes the seven fundamental truths of our revealed religion.

"But St. Paul says that there is another function and business of the Church—to make known to the universe the manifold wisdom of God, the unsearchable riches of Christ. Here then is the essential missionary obligation of the Church. A baptized member of the Church who is not in heart and will a missionary stultifies himself. An unmissionary Christianity is a contradiction in terms."

In his charge to the bishop coadjutor elect, Bishop Gailor was especially impressive. He spoke from association with Mr. Green's grandfather, the first Bishop of Mississippi, his mother and old Sewanee days.

The new bishop is a native Mississippian, born at Greenville, in 1876. He is the son of the Rev. Duncan L. Green and a namesake and grandson of the first Bishop of Mississippi. Graduating from the University of the South he was ordained deacon in 1899 and priest in 1900 by the late Bishop Thompson. His ministry has been spent in Mississippi, save for the charge of three years as assistant at Knoxville, Tennessee. Bishop Green has been assigned the northern portion of the diocese by Bishop Bratton and has immediately entered in upon his duties.

After the consecration there was a luncheon at the Edwards Hotel in honor of Bishop Tuttle. This was followed by a reception given to Bishop Green at the home of Mr. Marcellus Green in Jackson. The pectoral cross which was presented to Bishop Green at the consecration was given him by the Parish of St. Andrew.

SEWANEE MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN OPENS JUNE 4

Wednesday night, June 4, is the date set for the launching of the great Sewanee campaign for a million dollar endowment fund. This campaign has been the subject of many eloquent addresses at the southern diocesan conventions and in every diocese has met with a hearty response. In Alabama at the call of Major-General Leonard Wood, twenty prominent men met in Montgomery to lay plans for the campaign with the result that a committee has been formed and Governor Kilby has accepted the chairmanship of the committee. Mrs. Charles Henderson, wife of former Governor Henderson, is chairman of the women's committee. Headquarters have been opened in Montgomery. In Florida, also, strong committees have been formed. Mr. Telfair Stockton has written letters to the moneyed men of the state who, like himself, were deprived of a college education, asking for their support. In Kentucky, incident to breaking ground in the diocese, twenty-five prominent laymen met at luncheon at the cathedral parish house in Louisville and organized their local campaign. Governor Barrett of Louisiana, chairman of the Sewanee committee, reports that his state with a quota of $100,000 has already passed the $50,000 mark and is rushing down the homestretch. Arkansas, South Carolina and Southern Florida also have received Sewanee speakers at their conventions with enthusiasm and have well organized committees at work.

Virginia Rector Dies

RADFORD, VIRGINIA.—The Rev. Charles Edward Ambler Marshall, rector of Grace Church here, died on May 31 of heart failure in the fifty-fifth year of his age. He was the great-grandson of Chief Justice Marshall. The burial service was held on Sunday and interment on Monday was made in Leeds Parish, Fauquier County, Virginia. The Rev. H. B. Lee officiated. Mr. Marshall leaves a widow, the daughter of the Rev. W. Q. Hullihen, and one son.

GENERAL WOOD OPENS NATION-WIDE CONFERENCE

Meeting in Chicago Brings Leaders from Eight Provinces

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.—Discussion and settlement of the many questions which have arisen in connection with the Church's Nation-wide Campaign were taken up at a conference of over a hundred leaders representing the eight provinces, which opened the evening of June 4 in the parish house of St. James' Church here. Bishop Lloyd opened the conference Wednesday night and was followed by Major General Leonard Wood, U. S. A.

Following a celebration of the Holy Communion on June 5, the details of the campaign were taken up by Bishop Lloyd, Dr. Patton and the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell. The Rev. Augustine Elmendorf explained what the campaign will mean to the Joint Commission on Social Service. The Rev. William H. Milton explained the importance of the Church's having a budget; Miss Grace Lindley, what the drive means to the Woman's Auxiliary; B. F. Finney, its relation to the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; the Rev. Douglass Matthews, to the Church Temperance Society; Miss Mary E. Thomas, to the Church Periodical Club; Mrs. W. W. Wilson what the campaign means to the Daughters of the King. The Rev. Louis G. Wood described the necessary field organization to make the drive a success and Bishop Wise how the individual dioceses must be organized. The Rev. Herbert Parrish told the importance of the speakers' manual and W. C. Sturgis explained how to organize workers' classes. The conference concluded Friday afternoon with a question box.

Up to the opening of the conference sixty-five dioceses had indorsed the campaign, fifty-eight of them officially by action of their conventions.

Dean Hodges Buried at Mt. Auburn

The funeral of Dean Hodges was held Friday afternoon in St. John's Chapel, Cambridge. The service was simple and triumphant. The chapel was filled with Cambridge graduates, men of letters, and representatives of the Harvard faculty. President A. Lawrence Lowell and President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot were present.

Dr. Drown, of the faculty of the school, conducted the service. He was assisted by Dr. Kellner, who read the sentences and the lesson. Bishop Babcock read the concluding prayers and pronounced the benediction. At the crematory at Mt. Auburn cemetery Dr. Washburn read the committal service. Students of the school were the pallbearers. The honorary pallbearers were William H. Lincoln, Richard H. Dana, Harcourt Amory and William V. Kellen of the board of trustees of the school.

DEAN HODGES DIES AT MOUNTAIN HOME, MAY 27, OF HEART DISEASE

His Great Ministries Had Been as Rector of Calvary, Pittsburgh, and Dean of Cambridge Episcopal Theological School.

HOLDERNESSE, NEW HAMPSHIRE—Dean Hodges died here at nine o'clock on Tuesday night, May 27, of heart disease. Dean Hodges was brought here from Cambridge several weeks ago, and has been steadily growing weaker. At the end, he was free from pain and his death was happy and as one of his friends expressed it, "just as he and as we would have wished it to be."

George Hodges was born October 6, 1856, at Rome, New York, the son of George Frederick Hodges and Hannah Elizabeth Ballard. Both of his parents were members of the Episcopal Church. He was baptized and confirmed in Zion Church, Rome. He attended the public schools and the Academy at Rome. Later, he went to Hamilton College, from which he received the degree of A. B. in 1877 and A. M. in 1879. He was also a member of Phi Beta Kappa. He was graduated from Berkeley Divinity School in 1881, ordained deacon by Bishop Huntington on Whitsunday, 1881, and ordained priest by Bishop Whitehead in 1882.

On October 18, 1881, he married Anna Sargent Jennings who died on September 22, 1897. Their children are George and Margaret. On April 10, 1901, he married Julia Shelley. Their children are John, Elizabeth and Richard.

Dean Hodges was assistant at Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, between 1881 and 1889 during the rectorship of the Rev. Boyd Vincent. Dr. Vincent was elected Bishop of Southern Ohio in 1889, at which time Dean Hodges became his successor. He was rector of Calvary Church until his election as dean of the Episcopal Theological School in the autumn of 1893.

During these years as assistant and as rector at Calvary Church, he wrote frequently for the daily press. He was one of the most active members of the Church Social Union, an institution similar in purpose and in organization to the Christian Social Union of England. In consequence of his deep interest in social subjects and his signal success not only in dealing practically with social questions but in leading the citizens of Pittsburgh along lines of social service, he was the founder of Kingsley House, a social settlement. During these years he was a prolific writer of sermons which were published and widely read.

In the autumn of 1893 Dr. Hodges was elected dean of the Episcopal Theological School at Cambridge in succession to Bishop Lawrence. At that time Dr. Steenstra, Dr. Allen, Dr. Nash, Dr. Kellner and Dr. Drown composed the faculty. There were about fifty students. The new dean came with a reputation of an excellent parish worker, a clear, incisive and effective preacher and a writer of sermons and articles of practical and interesting character. He at once assumed the double duty of teaching in the school and acting as the pastor of St. John's congregation.

He taught homiletics and pastoral care, the English Bible and liturgics. Three-quarters of the alumni have been his students. A large number of them are consciously indebted to the dean not only for the method but for much of the content of their pastoral instruction. Many a lay-reader has depended on the dean for the weekly sermon.

On coming to Cambridge the dean at once assumed the duties of a citizen. For many years he was the president of the local organized charities; he participated actively in local religious interests; he took part in the Ford Hall Forum. For some years he was one of the Harvard University preachers. A few years ago he was the leader of those who saw the value of an affiliation with Harvard and he warmly supported the close and valuable relationship that now exists between the theological school and university.

During the twenty-five years of his Cambridge life he was much in demand as a college and baccalaureate preacher. In recent years he confined himself more closely to the immediate neighborhood. But previously he preached frequently at such colleges as Yale, Princeton, Columbia, Smith and Wellesley. His sermons were always crisp, helpful and to the point. He was also a lecturer of wide demand. Some of his books are the result of lectures at the Lowell Institute, Haverford College and Brown University.

His social interests may easily be seen in a catalogue of the clubs and societies to which he belonged—the Twenty Club and the Clericus (Episcopal), the Ministers' Club (interdenominational), the Query Club, the Thursday Club, the Saturday Evening Club, the Society of Mayflower Descendants, the Massachusetts Historical Society. At all of these he was almost invariably present and a participant in the proceedings.

He represented his Church in General Convention both during his Pittsburgh days and after he came to Cambridge.

On January 6 Dean Hodges completed twenty-five years as dean of the school, the event being marked by the congregation of St. John's on the following Sunday and by the alumni on February 26.

He received the following honorary degrees: D.D. Western University of Pennsylvania, 1892, D.C.L. Hobart College, 1902, LL.D. University of Pittsburgh, 1911, LL.D. Hamilton College, 1912, D.D. Brown University, 1914, D.D. Harvard University, 1916.

He was the author of the following books:

The Episcopal Church, 1889, In the Time of Sickness, 1891, Christianity Between Sundays, 1892, The Heresy of Cain, 1894, In this Present World, 1896, Faith and Social Service, 1896, The Battles of Peace, 1897, The Path of Life, 1899, William Penn (Riverside Biog. Series), 1900, Fountains Abbey, 1904, The Human Nature of the Saints, 1904, When the King Came, 1904, The Cross and Passion, 1904, Three Hundred Years of the Episcopal Church in America, 1906, The Administration of an Institutional Church, 1906, The Year of Grace, 1906, The Happy Family, 1906, Holderness, 1907, The Apprenticeship of Washington, 1909, The Garden of Eden, 1909, The Training of Children in Religion, 1910, A Child's Guide to the Bible, 1911, Every Man's Religion, 1911, Saints and Heroes, 1911, The Castle of Zion, 1912, Class Book of Old Testament History, 1914, The Early Church, 1914, Henry Codman Potter, Seventh Bishop of New York, 1915, Religion in a World at War, 1917, How to Know the Bible, 1918.

Lay Moderator for Presbyterians

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—The Presbyterian General Assembly elected for the first time in its history a layman as moderator of the Presbyterian Church. In commenting on this the Presbyterian says: "We have never believed that an elder-moderator was contrary to our constitution, but we have always believed that there are functions of the office which are distinctly ministerial. In addition to this, the present tendency to secularize and commercialize the Church we thought might be increased by this additional magnifying of the laity and the retirement of the ministry and add to the secular tendency. But since the Church, within her constitutional right determined to change her custom in this matter, we hardly see how she could have been more fortunate in her selection than when she chose Dr. Baer for her first elder-moderator. His announcement that we did not need a new gospel, but more of the old gospel, found a hearty response in the Assembly, and at the outset gave confidence and co-operation."

DEACONESS TO RUN PARIS RED CROSS WOMEN'S CLUB

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid Transfers Students' Club to Red Cross

Deaconess Hodgkin, head of the Deaconess Training School of the Pacific, who is in France on war leave under the Red Cross, has just been put in charge of Red Cross Women's Club Number 3 in Paris. This club is situated in the building in the Latin quarter formerly used for the Art Students' Club and given by the foundress, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, to the French and later to the American Government for hospital use. There is urgent need in Paris for a place for women Red Cross workers to live. Accordingly three clubs have been established. This, it is understood, is the largest and can accommodate one hundred persons. At Mrs. Reid's request Deaconess Hodgkin has been placed in charge.

In regard to the chapel, Deaconess Hodgkin writes:

"I am very glad to say that the chapel is to be restored to Holy Trinity Church and I hope that Mr. Beekman, the rector of Holy Trinity, will begin services there very soon. There was some little question as to what was to be done about the chapel. During the war it was used for an operating room and the Red Cross being non-sectarian did not know what to do about it, but I feel sure that it has been decided now that the Red Cross will have nothing to do with it and Mr. Beekman will have it under his charge which is what he wanted for there are so many students living in that part of Paris that he wanted the chapel very much. It is a small separate building and the fence which used to separate it from the Students' Club is to be put back."

Women Release Missionary Appropriation

At a recent annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of North Carolina, the fact was brought out that the diocese receives more money from the Board of Missions than it contributes towards missions. The size of this appropriation is mainly due to the large appropriation for Negro work in North Carolina, but it is also due to the appropriations for salaries for archdeacons. The women accordingly, deploring the fact that North Carolina was a pauper diocese, raised on the spot more than the amount used for the archdeacons in the course of the year. At the last meeting of the Board of Missions this action was acknowledged by a suitable resolution.

Philadelphia Salaries Average $2,100

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—Much discussion has been provoked over the report of a committee on clerical salaries which was distributed at the last convention of the diocese. The committee found that of 128 rectors in the diocese, the average salary was $2,100 and the rectory. Twenty-seven missionaries were said to have an average salary of $1,174 and rectory. At their request, the new executive council of the diocese is to make a drive for $24,500 in order that the minimum salary of the whole diocese may be increased to $1,500 and a rectory.

There were some suggestions of the committee that made much ado, even in the public press. Among other recommendations were: "that all clerical salaries be paid from a central diocesan treasury; that any parish failing to pay into such treasury the amount of the minimum salary shall be liable to lose its rights, and may be administered as a mission of the diocese." "That a limited tenure of office for rectors, with definite periods of readjustment, would improve the salaries offered at present."

Bishop Dunn Arouses Interest

Bishop Dunn of Honduras is visiting this country and preaching in many cities in order to arouse interest in his work in Honduras. This work is not well known in the United States. The bishop's work has little support beyond the grants from English missionary societies. The bishop ministers to hundreds of American families connected with commercial corporations in the various republics of Central America as well as to a large West Indian population. The bishop has called attention to three immediate needs: more clergy, including an assistant bishop, a diocesan boat, (at present the bishop must go to New Orleans in order to reach certain portions of his diocese), an increased income. The bishop has received a cordial welcome and some financial assistance. In Philadelphia the sum necessary for an extra missionary for Nicaragua was raised through the efforts of Mrs. Eugene Newbold.

St. Mark's Hospital in Danger

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The fierce competition among the hospitals of this city threatens St. Mark's Hospital seriously. Two religious organizations with unlimited wealth and resources have erected large and up-to-date hospitals in the city and are striving to cut down the patronage of St. Mark's. In this struggle St. Mark's is forced to pit a superior staff and the skill of its nurses against better equipment. Unless the Church comes to the aid of this pioneer institution it must retire from the field.

The commencement exercises of the training school for nurses were held at the cathedral on May 13. Dean Fleetwood, of the cathedral, and the Rev. H. H. Henriques, chaplain of the hospital, read the service. Fourteen young women from the inter-mountain country received diplomas. Dr. Gibson in his address reviewed the history of the hospital, its foundation in an adobe building in 1872 under Bishop Tuttle, the first hospital between Denver and the Pacific Coast, its later growth and splendid work.

English Correspondent Here

The English correspondent of THE CHURCHMAN, the Rev. James Cairns, of Winchester, England, is at present in this country. He is visiting his relatives in New York this week and plans later to go to New England. He was the preacher at the eleven o'clock service at St. James' Church, New York, last Sunday.

PLANS FOR DELEGATES ARE MADE IN DETROIT

Hospitality Committee Will Take Care of All Reservations

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.—The committee on hospitality for the General Convention is making every effort to provide suitable accommodations for delegates and visitors. When the committee took up its work it was discovered that many rooms had already been reserved in the Hotel Statler which is to be the headquarters, by ladies and gentlemen who are not delegates. Continuance of this course would crowd out of the hotel many of the bishops and delegates. It therefore becomes necessary in view of the committee's first duty to care for the two houses, to ask the Hotel Statler, and all of the other hotels, to refer all requests for reservations to the committee. The hotels agreed with this plan and all requests for accommodations are being referred to the committee.

The committee is desirous of receiving without delay the names of all delegates clerical and lay, together with specific requests for accommodations, in order that assignments can be made promptly. It is hoped that the names of delegates, as well as others desiring accommodations, will be sent at once to Dudley W. Smith, 3 Grand River Avenue, East, Detroit, Michigan, together with a statement of the number of persons in each party, the proposed length of stay in Detroit, and the character of accommodations required. A list of the hotel rooms, showing rates, will be forwarded to each applicant by the committee, which will make all assignments. Naturally, it will be impossible to care for all visitors in the Hotel Statler, but the many other large hotels are conveniently situated, two being within a few hundred feet of the Statler.

Paris Organist in America

Gustin Wright who kept the choir of Holy Trinity Church, Paris, singing through air raids and under bombardment, has arrived in this country and will spend two months with his relatives here before returning to his organ bench in the Avenue d'Alma. Mr. Wright has been organist of Holy Trinity for two years; before that he was organist of the Passy Church in Paris. Queen Elizabeth of Roumania, (Carmen Sylva) once made him Knight of the Roumanian Crown, and he has received other decorations for his musical ability.

Men Pledge $20,000

MAPLEWOOD, NEW JERSEY.—An informal meeting of a few men of St. George's Parish took place on May 13 in the parish house. The sum of $20,000 was pledged towards the new church, parish house and rectory. These men form a campaign committee and will endeavor to raise all the money needed. The total cost is estimated at $100,000. A parish meeting was held the night of May 26, when the plans of the vestry for raising the money were presented to the parish and the architect exhibited the drawings of the proposed new buildings.

TRANSLATES MARS HILL SERMON INTO BOSTONESE

Professor Baldwin Delivers Notable Address at Commencement

The commencement exercises at the General Theological Seminary this year were marked by two notable addresses, the baccalaureate sermon on Monday night, May 26, delivered by the Rev. William P. McCune, rector of St. Ignatius' Church and the commencement address delivered at the conferring of degrees by Professor Baldwin. The honorary degree of S. T. D. was conferred on Dean Ladd of the Berkeley Divinity School and the same degree in course was conferred on the Rev. Francis Hudson Hallock. The Rev. Messrs. Jesse S. Weeks, Calvin R. Barnes, John L. Peckham, Vincent C. Bonnlander, Wm. L. Phillips, John A. McDonald, Kenneth L. A. Veall, Charles E. Hill, Harry E. Rahming, Donald F. Forrester, Elwood C. Boggess, Robert E. Marshall and Charles L. Street received the degree of B.D. The senior class consisted of Stanley Theodore Boggess, Jerome Harris, Donald Hartwell Morse, Charles William Nelson, John Clarence Petrie, Henry Kingsbury Pierce, Roderic Pierce, Thomas Lemuel Small, William James White, J. B. Gummere and C. C. Williams.

Mr. McCune's text was from the 69th psalm, "Let not them that trust in Thee, O Lord God of hosts, be ashamed for my cause; let not those that seek Thee be confounded through me, O God of Israel." It was an earnest, pointed sermon on the responsibilities of the priesthood to bear witness not only as a priest but as an individual.

The commencement address was delivered by Charles S. Baldwin, Professor of English Literature at Columbia University, formerly of Yale, long a well-known churchman. His remarks centered upon St. Paul's address at Mars Hill, the altar to a God unknown, and the words "whom ye worship without knowing, him declare I unto you." He "translated" the speech into terms of modern life, New York City, and fashionable cults and theories of the day. He pictured a missionary of Christianity coming to Boston and speaking to cultivated people, showing them with force that what they vaguely seek in their fancy religions is revealed in its fullness in Christian truth. Only by discovering the Christian faith could these floating doctrines, philosophies and pagan interests find what they really sought—a permanent basis. The address abounded in remarks of piercing insight into the intellectual moods of our day, the spirit of art and of religion, the relation of Hellenism and Hebraism. The loss of touch between philosophy and life, between philosophy and definite conclusions to live by, was described. The address was marked in every sentence by the ripe ease of a highly cultivated mind, thoroughly at home in a great subject.

Presbyterians Mourn Bishop Greer

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—At the meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church held here, the following resolution was passed when the announcement of Bishop Greer's death was made to the gathering:

Resolved, That the General Assembly has heard with sincere sorrow of the loss which has come to the Diocese of New York in the death of the Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, D.D., Bishop of New York, whose devotion to the cause of Christian unity recently evidenced by his welcome to the pulpit of the Cathedral of St. John, of representatives of sister churches, is fresh in our memory, and that the moderator and stated clerk be instructed to convey to the family of Bishop Greer the sympathy of the Assembly.

CHAPLAIN CLEVELAND

Who has just returned from France after service with the 36th Division rector of St. Philip's Church, St. Louis, and resigned last year to enter the first training camp at Camp Zachary Taylor. He was commissioned as lieutenant and first attached to the 142nd Infantry. The coordination of the work of the various chaplains of the divisions, as well as the general welfare work undertaken by the Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army and Knights of Columbus, has been under his direction.

The 36th Division is composed principally of Texas and Oklahoma National Guard Troops, and included a number of Indians. It arrived in Europe towards the end of July, 1918.

Pensions for Deaconesses

The Methodist Episcopal Church has made provision for pensions for deaconesses, according to Zion's Herald. This was by action of the General Deaconess Board, which met in May in Kansas City. The minimum payment for ten years of active service is $20 a month.

COMMITTEE ON SESSIONS ANNOUNCES DETROIT PLANS

Dates for Joint Sessions and Mass Meetings Are Suggested

In answer to many inquiries by societies and institutions desiring to appoint meetings at the time of the session of the General Convention in Detroit, the committee on joint sessions and despatch of business has announced that it intends to report the following recommendations at the opening of the convention: The convention opens on Wednesday, October 8. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 13, 14, and 15, all day, are assigned for joint sessions on the subject of missions, as voted by the last convention, the ordering of the sessions being in the hands of the Board of Missions which will accord time also to church work among seamen; on Friday, October 17, the joint session on the subject of religious education, eleven to one o'clock, to be arranged by the Board of Religious Education; on Tuesday, October 21, the joint session on social service, eleven to one o'clock, to be arranged by the Joint Commission on Social Service. The triennial missionary sermon will be preached on Sunday evening, October 12.

The following mass meetings are being planned: Thursday evening, October 9, a mass meeting on the "Effect of the War Upon Religion," Bishop Brent to preside and to speak and determine the choice of other speakers. On the evening of Tuesday, October 14, a mass meeting on the subject of "Christian Unity and the Cooperation of Religious Forces," the arrangement to be in the hands of our General Convention commission on the subject, the Commission on Faith and Order, etc. On Sunday afternoon, October 19, a mass meeting in the interest of missions, to be arranged by the Board of Missions. On the evening of Sunday, October 19, a mass meeting on the subject, "Reconstruction," possibly with special reference to industrial questions. On the evening of Tuesday, October 21, a mass meeting, to be arranged by the Joint Social Service Commission. On the evening of Wednesday, October 22, a mass meeting, to be arranged by the Board of Religious Education. It may be necessary to change this last date on account of the use of the great hall.

It has been thought wise to make public the nature of the report, which will be made at the opening of the session of the General Convention, subject to its approval, because so many appointments are desired during the session of the Convention. The statement concerning the proposed mass meetings is therefore given for the sake of information.

No Side Altars for Cathedral

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine held last week in New York, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That in the judgment of the trustees no altars other than the high altar and the altars in the seven existing chapels should be placed in the cathedral—any plans for such additional altars not having been authorized by the trustees.

NEBRASKA ELECTS SEATTLE RECTOR TO SUCCEED BISHOP WILLIAMS

The Rev. E. V. Shayler Chosen in Omaha on Second Ballot; Southern Virginia Makes Suffragan Bishop Thomson Coadjutor; San Joaquin to Have Twelve Weeks' Campaign; Los Angeles to Have Seamen's Institute

The Week's Conventions—The conventions of the past week include Chicago in the city of Chicago, Southern Virginia in South Boston, Central New York in Utica. The week before Spokane met in the city of Spokane, Western Colorado in Grand Junction, Marquette in the city of Marquette, West Missouri in St. Joseph, Asheville in the city of Asheville, Nebraska in Omaha and Los Angeles in the city of Los Angeles. The last named convention was partly reported last week; the full report appears this week. The convocation of Porto Rico met in Mayaguez on May 19, 20 and 21, Oregon in Portland on the same dates, and that of San Joaquin in Stockton on May 13. The same trend was apparent in the legislation and discussion as was exhibited in the conventions of the previous week. Clerical salaries, expansion of diocesan missions including in Los Angeles work among seamen, greater legislative powers for women in the Church were some of the subjects that came up for discussion. Nebraska elected a new bishop and Southern Virginia made the suffragan coadjutor. Central New York and Southern Virginia were both agitated over the question of new diocesan boundaries.

Nebraska Elects Bishop—The Diocese of Nebraska elected the Rev. Ernest Vincent Shayler, rector of St. Mark's Church, Seattle, to succeed the late Rt. Rev. Arthur L. Williams as Bishop of Nebraska. The new bishop was chosen by the clergy on the second ballot and their choice was unanimously confirmed by the laymen. Other candidates were Dean Tancock of Omaha who withdrew his name after the first ballot; the Rev. A. B. R. Hegeman, Syracuse, New York, and the Rev. Charles H. Young, Woodlawn, Chicago.

The Rev. Mr. Shayler has been rector of St. Mark's since 1909 and a priest since 1897. He is the author of The Making of a Churchman and The Making and Life of the Church. Born fifty-one years ago in Ohio, he was graduated from Bexley Hall, the theological department of Kenyon College, and ordered deacon in 1893. He was assistant at Trinity Church, Columbus, Ohio, up to 1894, rector of Calvary Church, Sandusky, Ohio, 1894-1900; and rector of Grace Church, Oak Park, Illinois, 1900-1909.

The new bishop's recent announcement of a magnificent Victory Cathedral in Seattle attracted much attention to this diocese of the Far West.

Bishop Thomson Made Coadjutor—The Rt. Rev. Arthur Conover Thomson, elected suffragan bishop of Southern Virginia in 1917 was unanimously chosen bishop coadjutor at the Southern Virginia Council. Practically all of his ministry since his ordination to the priesthood in 1895 has been spent in Virginia.

A New Virginia Diocese—The Diocese of Southern Virginia will ask the General Convention to create a new diocese for its western half which is far removed from the present centre of diocesan activities. It will include the counties of Alleghany, Amherst, Augusta, Bath, Bedford, Bland, Botetourt, Buchanan, Campbell, Carroll, Craig, Dickinson, Floyd, Franklin, Giles, Grayson, Henry, Highland, Lee, Montgomery, Nelson, Patrick, Pulaski, Roanoke, Rockbridge, Russell, Scott, Smythe, Tazewell, Washington, Wise and Wythe.

The present diocese has the largest rural mission and Negro work in the Church.

The convention resolution provides for equal distribution of all funds except those for the disabled clergy, widows and orphans of deceased clergy and the Newton bequest. Bishop Tucker in discussing the proposed division said:

"To a bishop the thought of the division of his jurisdiction,—or as I would rather term it—of his spiritual care, for he is the head not of an organized institution, but a shepherd of God's flock,—to one who loves his work and his people, the mere thought of severance brings pain. He is a member of every congregation, a fellow servant of all of his clergy, he keeps in his heart and prayers every church and mission, and feels the sacredness of the tie that binds him to all his people, not only to men and women, but to the little children of the church and of the home.

"The diocese is the spiritual mother of us all. It has its memories and its associations of more than a quarter of a century, and it goes back, as a part of the Old Dominion, to the very beginnings of Christianity and of the Church in the new world, on the island of Jamestown. It has as an inspiration, the consecration, the faith and the love of its first bishop, and of the men who, under his leadership did their loyal part, and who have entered with him into the rest of God. . . .

"If we divide, let it be not because we desire to part one from another, but only because we realize that God has blessed us with spiritual increase, has made His work to grow.

"May the division, if it come, be made in the spirit of Jacob, who recognized with grateful heart the prospering hand of God; 'With this staff I passed over this Jordan, And now I am become two bands.'"

Plans for New Diocese Deferred In Central New York and Asheville—As was expected Central New York took no action on the project to divide the state of New York into eight dioceses. Albany has already acted against the proposal and Bishop Olmsted said that the proposal could well wait three more years as he did not believe there was any great hurry.

A motion to ask General Convention to make a diocese out of the present District of Asheville was defeated by the district convention after Bishop Horner had pointed out the advantage of postponing such action.

Los Angeles to Help Seamen—Establishment of seamen's institutes at San Pedro and San Diego was favored by the Diocese of Los Angeles and the convention voted to spend the balance of the War Commission's fund allotted to California camps, for this purpose. The convention's action was the result of the report of the diocesan commission on philanthropy and social service which declared that with the resumption of Pacific ocean traffic, the institute established six years ago at Los Angeles harbor was of great importance. The report urged the adequate establishment of a seamen's institute which would cooperate with the other seamen's institutes in the Church, with the Church of England and with the Seamen's Institute of America. The Rev. Charles P. Deems of the San Francisco Seamen's Institute addressed the convention.

The Nation-Wide Campaign—The Dioceses of Chicago, Central New York, Los Angeles, West Missouri, Marquette, Southern Virginia, and the Districts of San Joaquin, Western Colorado and Asheville, all endorsed the Nation-Wide Campaign, several of the endorsements being unanimous. A number of diocesan committees were named to cooperate with national headquarters.

San Joaquin will have a twelve weeks' intensive drive of its own coincident with the Nation-Wide Campaign, in which it is planned to make an every member canvass of every parish and mission ending with a thanksgiving service on Christmas.

Bishop Sanford's Call to Action—If Noah had been a pessimist, said Bishop Sanford, he would have liquidated the family assets and then committed suicide. Instead, he feasted his eyes upon the rainbow and instituted a program of reconstruction. To an optimism that views unafraid the promises of God, the bishop calls the District of San Joaquin in his annual charge. This charge introduced the every member canvass, and was accordingly ordered printed and distributed throughout the district.

The bishop began by laying out a program for the parish. The clergyman's part was to perform a man's job, to prepare careful sermons, to find time for quiet and prayer, to take a wise leadership in civic and community affairs. The bishop urged the development of the gift of imagination. He also urged the necessity of putting responsibility on the laity. "The priest," he said, "who determines to do everything himself in order that it may be well done is not only developing too large a bump of self-esteem, but will soon find himself a lonely cog in an impossible machine." "The ideal pastor," he concluded, "believes his little cure the most important in the American Church."

A Ten Dollar Job and a Ten Dollar Man—Then the bishop turned to the laity. Their first duty, he asserted, was to provide a living wage. "If you support your clergyman," he said, "on a two dollar basis, even the grace of God can't keep him from shrinking to a two dollar man." The clergyman's job is a ten dollar job and needs a ten dollar man. $1,800 and a house was commended by the bishop as a suitable minimum, the highest salary now paid in the district. The sense of responsibility developed in the laity was the bishop's solution of parochial problems.

The Parish Program—A parish program was energetically recommended by Bishop Sanford for every local church. He described the enthusiasm that reigns while the new mission is being built, and the apathy that follows when it is completed until some venturesome soul suggests a rectory or parish house. Enthusiasm again, followed again by apathy. How about looking forward to a definite increase in subscriptions five years hence? Or in numbers? Why leave all the interest of the church year to the high spots, Easter and Christmas? Programs of finance, of worship, and of service should be drawn up in every parish. Speaking under the second suggestion, the bishop commended the use of the new hymnal and its stimulus to congregational singing.

A Twelve Weeks' Campaign—"If we were Congregationalists, I should stop here," said Bishop Sanford. "Our catholic theory emphasizes unity of organization no less than our unity of spirit. We must work not merely in harmony of purpose as parishes but corporately as a diocese."

After alluding to the Massachusetts Twenty Weeks Campaign, Bishop Sanford outlined his plan for a Twelve Weeks Campaign for San Joaquin to be conducted in relation to the Nation-Wide Campaign.

The bishop's address met with the enthusiastic reception so definite, spiritual and practical a charge deserves. It has been printed and circulated throughout the district.

Larger Clerical Stipends—Central New York heard from Bishop Fiske why the laity must awaken to more generous giving and more earnest Christian activity. "Missionary salaries," Bishop Fiske said, "deducting traveling expenses, are a mere pittance. Nothing has driven me so close to the verge of despair as the attitude of the well-to-do laity, who often measure their gifts by what others give, who contribute only what they feel is their moderate proportion, instead of giving as God has prospered them, whether others give or not. Men who own expensive automobiles ask me to purchase cheap cars for the rector."

"How many of the delegates to this convention conscientiously tithe themselves? Many, (indeed, most) of the clergy do it, poor as they are."

Los Angeles voted to increase the stipends of all its diocesan missionaries to a minimum of $100 a month with a house or $125 where no rectory is provided. The increase is financed by a $1,500 addition to the diocese's missionary budget which totals $14,500 for diocesan missions alone.

Bishop Tucker on the Increase of Clerical Salaries—In asking for a coadjutor for Southern Virginia, Bishop Tucker brought out the interesting fact that forty-five new parishes and missions had been added to the diocese since his consecration as bishop coadjutor in 1906. In regard to the salaries of the clergy, he said: "I want to express my appreciation of the generous response made by a number of congregations to the appeal which I felt compelled to make for a more liberal support of the clergymen of the diocese. The high cost of living made it difficult for them to maintain their families on salaries fixed in normal times. The generous sympathy of the people of the congregations touched my heart. In some places, however, there has been no increase, though in nearly every community there has been increased prosperity.

"If we are to maintain the Church in the rural sections of the diocese, and I believe this to be our largest responsibility and opportunity, the people who love the Church must give it a real place in their life. Fifteen hundred dollars should be the minimum salary of a married clergyman, one thousand the minimum of the unmarried man in this diocese. If we are to fill all of our parishes it should be more than this. It is a small sum for any community to give so as to ensure the great privilege of the ministrations of the Church of God and of all that it means in the life of the community and the home."

Bishop Huntington Centennial Observed

—The Central New York convention centred about the celebration of the centennial of the late bishop, the Rt. Rev. Frederic Dan Huntington. It was announced that more than one-fourth of the centennial fund of $50,000 had been subscribed. Father Huntington of the Order of the Holy Cross and two of the late bishop's daughters were present to take part in the celebration. Bishop Olmsted in his address on Bishop Huntington said: "It is hardly necessary to enlarge at this time upon the greatness of the bishop's intellect, the extent of his education or his ability as a preacher. He excelled in all these particulars and stood confessedly in the first rank."

The senior priest of the diocese, the Rev. William Martin Beauchamp, described an early visit of Bishop Huntington to the Onondaga Indian Reservation and how he was met by a band of aborigines in full war regalia and thus escorted to the church.

Bishop Huntington was termed "the product of the conflict between Puritanism and liberalism, coming from Congregational Unitarianism to the Church where he found his permanent place and lasting satisfaction" by the Rev. Herbert G. Codding, whose address paid tribute to the bishop's character and influence.

Simplification of the Prayer Book—The following report on simplification of the Prayer Book was submitted to the Oregon convention and referred to the deputies to the General Convention for their careful consideration:

Your committee have found a widespread opinion that while the Book of Common Prayer is probably the richest collection of devotional matter in the world, it is yet much too large, complicated and confusing for modern democratic use, and the work and worship of the Church are hindered thereby. Your committee therefore beg to recommend that the General Convention be requested to make the following changes in the book:

1. Omit from Book: 1. The Nicene

Creed in the Order for Morning Prayer and Evening Prayer. 2. The Gloria in excelsis, the Bonum est confiteri, and the Benedic anima mea from the Order for Evening Prayer.

II. Print in a priest's Prayer Book only: 1. All matter contained between The Preface and the Order for Morning Prayer. 2. The opening sentences of Morning Prayer and Evening Prayer. 3. The offertory sentences, the long exhortations, and the Proper Prefaces in the Order for the Holy Communion.

III. Change the rubrics of the book to make them conform to the above changes.

IV. Your committee believe that while the dignity and beauty of the Book should be carefully preserved, yet the English language has so altered since the times of the compiling of the Book as to necessitate the radical changing of the wording in order to make it "understood of the people" and expressive of their real devotions.

Chicago Turns Down Women—Upon recommendation of the committee on legislation, Chicago voted against a canon providing for the representation of women on vestries.

Two Conventions Demonstrate Christian Fellowship—Spokane not only endorsed almost unanimously the Congregational concordat but invited a number of Spokane Congregational ministers and laymen to a convention dinner at which Bishop Page presided. Bishop Paddock of Eastern Oregon was one of the speakers. "What has God wrought to think that you Congregationalists and you Episcopalians should come together here joyfully and peacefully to discuss church unity?" he said; "it is in the nature of a miracle." The Rev. S. B. L. Penrose, president of Whitman College, a Congregationalist school, said that "we need the pressure of common work that will bring us together in the sublime enthusiasm of a common undertaking."

Since Trinity Church, South Boston, Virginia, was not large enough to accommodate the opening evening service of the Southern Virginia convention, that convention had opportunity to demonstrate in a practical way its fellowship with another communion by accepting the invitation of the Baptist church to hold the service in the Baptist edifice.

Signs of Progress—Chicago acted upon the recommendation of the Rev. Herbert W. Prince, that a twenty per cent increase in the pledges for diocesan missions be made. Since the Church has no building in the heart of the city's business district, a diocesan headquarters in a Loop office building is also planned to facilitate the handling of the business affairs of the diocese.

Southern Virginia expended $16,000 for its extensive diocesan mission work, out of a total of $18,000 collected.

Marquette listened to an inspiring story of how St. James' Church, Sault Ste. Marie, wiped out a $60,000 debt during the past year.

Various Items of Interest—Porto Rico prefixed its convocation by a quiet day held in the St. Andrew mission building at Mayaguez. Delegates from St. Thomas and the Virgin Islands as well as from Santo Domingo were present. In Nebraska, Mrs. Irving Benolken was given the floor for the very gracious task of telling the clergy of the love and affection felt by her father, the late Bishop Williams, for his clergy. It was resolved that a special memorial to Bishop Williams be placed in Trinity Cathedral, Omaha. Los Angeles enthusiastically endorsed the League of Nations. So did Spokane, but only after a spirited debate. Bishop Mikell spoke to the Asheville convocation on the subject of the Sewanee endowment fund and met with a hearty response. At this same convention great interest was manifested by the clergy in the children's Sunday School offering, and the report was made by the Rev. A. W. Farnum of St. James' Church, Hendersonville, that the children of the district had given over a thousand dollars as against about $450 last year. At the request of St. Luke's Hospital, West Missouri took the first step towards making it a diocesan institution by electing the new board of trustees. The Church Club for men in West Missouri showed encouraging progress. The club has a field secretary, the Rev. J. W. Jones, who visits the parishes and missions of the diocese with the purpose of forming chapters and stimulating the interest and the zeal of the laymen. In Spokane each morning Bishop Page gave a meditation at the celebration of the Holy Communion and afterwards entertained the clergy at breakfast at the University Club. A number of men from Idaho over which Bishop Page has temporary jurisdiction were present at the Spokane convention. A conference on church music was one feature of the convention. Marquette and West Missouri are among the dioceses which are planning to change the time of their annual convention to January.

Chicago Church Club Dinner—The annual dinner of the Chicago Church Club was held in connection with the convention. Chaplain Wilson and Chaplain McCallum were the first speakers. Afterwards Bishop Griswold introduced Dr. Patton, who spoke on the Nation-Wide Campaign. Mr. Angus Hibbard has retired from the presidency of the club and Mr. Edward P. Welles has been elected to succeed him. The other officers are, vice-president, Mr. Richard C. Coombs, secretary, Mr. George R. Folds, and treasurer, Mr. Ernest Reckitt.

Western Colorado also enjoyed a convention dinner. The Parish of St. Matthew was the host and the senior warden acted as toastmaster. The Rev. Francis White spoke on the Nation-Wide Campaign. Archdeacon Reese of Utah spoke on the call to service and Mr. R. H. Oliver, treasurer of the local parish, spoke on church finance.

Convention Business—Central New York exhibited strong opposition to the resolution accepting such apportionment for missions as the Board of Missions might prescribe on the basis for distribution of current expenses and the local rector's salary. However, on the second day, a resolution was adopted to accept the usual apportionment. The question of elections took up all the time on the second day and precluded the admission of other business.

San Joaquin heard an address from Major Sanborn whose visits to Sacramento and to San Francisco have been described in these columns. At a reception at the Philomean Club, addresses were made by the Rev. A. G. Denman and Dr. H. H. Hammond, both just returned from France. At this convention the committee on canons reported that for the first time in the history of the district, it had no amendments to offer.

What the Bishops Emphasized—Bishop Page in his annual charge struck a note of optimism which marked his convocation and sent his clergy and laity away grateful for the uplift the convocation had been to them. He said that in spite of the war and the epidemic, the Church had had a good year. "In a financial and material way," he continued, "the results have been exceedingly good, and there has been considerable progress in the affairs of the district." Bishop Touret emphasized the need of intensified concentration in the midst of the expansion of the Church's work and influence in the district. Bishop Fiske has this to say about the need of continuous plain instruction: "It is quite evident that the majority of our communicants not only receive very little teaching before confirmation, but they have received very little since. They do not know why they are in the Church, they cannot give a reason for the hope that is in them, they have no instruction in prayer or devotion. Sermons, too often, are mild exhortations to good living or pious meditations on very obvious duties. The people are hungry for real teaching."

Bishop Johnson's Charge to the Laity—The Bishop of Los Angeles in a powerful charge to the "Brethren of the Laity," said: "If we want strong, vigorous churches, let us remember my message today. Our parishes are not clubs of congenial people. Our congregations are not aggregations of men and women who happen to think and feel alike about a number of ethical subjects. The Church is the mystical Body of Christ. It is the extension of the Incarnation and she fails when she ignores the fact, and succeeds when she remembers it. Our congregations must stand for that. We cannot stand for less. Are you, the members of the several vestries here, seeing to it that your congregations bear such a witness in the communities in which you live? Try it by my test implied this morning. Is your church a club of exceedingly good respectable people, or is it an organization that is living for God and striving to make itself a power for God in the world?"

His Charge to the Clergy—"And then, my brethren of the clergy," he continued, "let us ask what is the source of our power. Is it in society, at the dinner table, at the club, in committee rooms, in civic movements and social concerns? All of these spheres offer splendid opportunities for influence, and you and I may rejoice insofar as we have been able to function effectively through them. Perhaps you are powerful in the pulpit. God grant that you are. We need powerful preaching, but these things do not cover the point. I am not thinking of spheres of influence, but of sources of influence. It is only as we stand at the altar and kneel upon our knees that we tap them, and no one but you and I and God know how often we are there.

"One thing I must make plain. We may deceive the world; we may deceive ourselves; we may do the easy thing and allow life to slip on as it is able to do, but throughout the affairs of men, God is always working, and the only permanent and substantial work is done by Him or by others for Him, if they work in accordance with His laws.

"We may shape our churches after the form of fraternal societies and accept the travesty as sufficient. We may galvanize our churches into a kind of activity which may be malevolent rather than helpful. We may build up our forces into powerful organizations, but the supreme test will be made by God, and as He has asserted the reign of His law on the continent of Europe during the last year, so in His own time will He bear witness to His presence in the ethical, the spiritual affairs of men.

"A weak, puny Church, when the riches of God's grace are at hand, is a shame. A disrupted Christianity, when it is written large in the Book of Books that Christians should be one, is an insult to the Master. And every implied justification for manifest failure on the part of the disciples of Christ in the last analysis, means that man has ceased to count upon God, but now, turning from all this, let us, as far as we may, change the outlook. 'All things are yours.'"

Women's Meetings—Asheville, Spokane, Missouri, Maine, Western Colorado and Los Angeles were dioceses where the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held during the course of the past fortnight. In Missouri the treasurer of the United Offering reported $600 more on hand than three years ago. Mrs. T. Ewing White who has served as diocesan treasurer for twenty-five years, was presented with a purse of $450 with the request that she designate it for whatever missionary purpose was nearest her heart. Mrs. White has resigned as treasurer and Mrs. Dudley Bragdon was elected in her place. In Asheville the women of the auxiliary heard a sermon from Bishop Mikell of Atlanta. Among other things they established a scholarship in the Valle Crucis School and named it after their retiring president, Mrs. Anna L. Bacon. In Maine Miss Emily Tillotson and the Rev. Lewis G. Morris were the special speakers.

Nebraska Auxiliary Meeting—The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held on May 19 in Omaha, with over two hundred women present. The fact that one day is not sufficient time for such an important meeting was particularly emphasized, as it takes almost the entire time to present reports and take pledges and no time is left for speakers, conferences or discussion. The point that received most attention was our own Indian mission among the Winnebagoes. The motion was passed: "That the Bishop Williams Special be changed to The Bishop Williams Memorial and continued in the form of scholarships ($65 each) at All Saints' Mission, Winnebago." The Bishop Williams Special was $300 generally used by him in his newest or weakest mission. The amount was increased to $780, i.e., twelve scholarships, given in affectionate memory of our late bishop.

Our Weekly News Letters

BALTIMORE

Conference Upon Church Teaching—

During the past week a conference on religious education has been in session at Grace and St. Peter's churches under the chairmanship of the Rev. Philip Cook. Fifty parishes have been represented and Dr. W. E. Gardner has pronounced it the most satisfactory gathering of the kind which he has ever attended. Some very definite and important results have come from it. Aiming to unify the educational work of the Church, three schools will be organized, which will serve as centres for the training of Sunday School teachers. These will be located at the Church of the Messiah, St. Michael and All Angels, and the Church of the Prince of Peace, and thus will meet the wants of different sections of the city. The training will consist of fourteen courses, which will be given by a faculty of fourteen instructors, presided over by a paid supervisor. The courses of instruction will be broad and varied, including not only religious but patriotic subjects.

The Clericus—The May meeting of the clericus was held at the Church of the Nativity, Forest Park. The bishop, a number of the clergy, and some of the leading laity of the diocese were present. The speaker was Dean Bartlett of the Philadelphia Divinity School, his subject was "Recruiting for the Ministry." After giving many statistics showing an alarming decrease in candidates for holy orders, he proceeded to urge that this province raise a large amount of money to take care of the expected increase in candidates after the war. The Rev. Mr. Van Hoose, sometime mayor of Birmingham, Alabama, also spoke in behalf of St. Mark's School for Colored Children in that diocese, and a fund of five hundred dollars was subscribed by the bishop and some of the clergy present.

NEW YORK

Memorial Services for Dr. Huntington—July 26 will mark the tenth anniversary of the death of Dr. Huntington, the beloved rector of Grace Church. On Whit-sunday there will be a memorial service at eleven o'clock in Grace Church to enable those who in midsummer are away from New York to keep this tenth anniversary. Dr. Henry Bradford Washburn, in his boyhood Dr. Huntington's parishioner in All Saints' Church, Worcester, will preach the sermon. On July 26 the annual memorial service will be held in Huntington Close and on the Sunday after the Feast of All Saints' a special service will be arranged in Grace Church.

Dean Robbins Chaplain of Sons of Revolution—In succession to Bishop Greer, Dean Robbins has been elected chaplain of the Sons of the Revolution. For some time Dean Robbins has been the assistant chaplain.

St. George's Will Allow Parishioners to Spend Sunday Out of Doors—The new hour appointed for the Sunday morning service at St. George's Church—ten o'clock instead of the time-honored eleven—has been set with the avowed intention of allowing those who attend the morning service to enjoy a long afternoon out of doors.

Death of New York Layman—In the death of Colonel Asa Bird Gardiner, not only the city but the diocese loses one of the most prominent figures of the last half century. Soldier, active judge advocate, professor of law at West Point, government counsel in important cases, district attorney under Crocker, he was also charter member of the Church Club, deputy to General Convention and a layman always in evidence on all important diocesan occasions. He died in his eightieth year.

Convention Date to Be Decided—At a meeting of the Standing Committee scheduled for Thursday of this week, the date of the convention which will be called to elect the new bishop will probably be settled.

New Chapters of the Daughters of the King—Three chapters of the Daughters of the King in this diocese have recently affiliated. They are Christ Church Chapter, Bronxville; Holy Rood, New York City, and St. George's Church, Newburgh. The first two have already received their charters. The last will hold its initiation service on June 15. At the same time a junior branch of twenty-one members will be received.

Sarcophagus of Bishop Horatio Potter to Be Built.—In memory of Bishop Horatio Potter a sarcophagus containing a recumbent life-size statue of himself is to be erected in the ambulatory of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. It will cost about $20,000, and half of that amount is on hand. The design has been drawn by Thomas Nash, architect for Trinity Corporation, and the monument will be made as soon as the needed money has been contributed. It will be of white marble and similar to the sarcophagus of Bishop Henry Codman Potter, his nephew, in St. James' Chapel.

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, is chairman of the committee on the memorial. All who knew Bishop Horatio Potter are being asked for contributions and an especial appeal is being made to those confirmed by him.

Addresses on Social Questions.—Ascension Memorial Church, has been holding a series of Sunday evening lectures on social, and economic topics. Last Sunday Dr. James A. Hamilton, commissioner of correction of New York City, delivered a most interesting and instructive address on "New Prison Methods." The rector of the church, Dr. John Floyd Steen, has served this parish for over forty-nine years.

St. Thomas's Victory Club.—There has been formed at St. Thomas's Chapel under the leadership of the vicar, the Rev. John S. Haight, an organization made up of the boys who are back from service. It is called the Victory Club and meets once a month in the parish hall. On Sunday last after the morning service the young men in teams of two canvassed over sixty homes in the neighborhood of those who have not as yet returned from over seas. A set of questions was asked as to the whereabouts of the boy, whether or not he would take up his old position and when he would return. St. Thomas's Chapel has over a hundred men on the honor roll who in the course of time will have part in the service of the Victory Club.

Anniversary of Calvary Men's Conference.—Recently the Men's Conference of Calvary Church celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. This organization of laymen meets once a week for discussion of some religious question. It has a distinctive place in the life of the parish. The dinner was held at the Mansfield. So much enthusiasm was aroused by the speakers that although the meetings of the club had been finished for the season, it was decided to continue meetings throughout the summer.

News of the Church of the Incarnation.—The Rev. George Farrand Taylor just returned from France after sixteen months as army chaplain, is now associated with the Rev. Mr. Silver at the Church of the Incarnation. Mr. John Doane has taken charge of the music at the Church of the Incarnation. Mr. Doane has lately been in war service at the Great Lakes Naval Station as first musician. He was assigned special musical work there which led to his being put in charge of a selected orchestra on board the George Washington for the three trips of President Wilson. Mr.

Doane before entering war service, was at the First Congregational Church, Evanston, after being head of the organ department of Northwestern University. The new hymnals have been introduced and purchased by the congregation. They have awakened much interest.

The noonday addresses which have been a feature of the church's work ever since last October, have been discontinued. They were received with great interest by hundreds of people employed in the surrounding places of business.

Junior Clergy Missionary Association Meets.—A meeting of the Junior Clergy Missionary Association was held at the General Theological Seminary on May 12. After the missionary litany in the chapel and lunch in the refectory, the business meeting was held. Reports of the diocesan children's presentation service were submitted, showing the amount received this year towards missions from the Sunday School children of the diocese far exceeded the sum of any previous years and amounted to nearly $15,000. The officers for next year are: President, the Rev. Harold G. Willis; vice-president, the Rev. John S. Haight; secretary, the Rev. E. Briggs Nash; treasurer, the Rev. John H. Fitzgerald; member of executive committee, the Rev. C. Frederick Bambach.

The speaker for the day was Dean Fosbroke. His subject, "The Church's Objective—Should the Church Be Institutional or Inspirational?" was handled in an inspiring and very suggestive manner.

MARGARETTA MILLER.

PITTSBURGH

Mr. Porkess Instituted.—A large congregation assembled in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkesburg, on May 21 for the institution service of the Rev. William Porkess. In the absence of the bishop of the diocese, the Rev. Alexander Vance, D. D., president of the Standing Committee, was the institutor. The special preacher for the occasion was the Rev. R. E. Lee Strider, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, West Virginia, who presented the theme "Strength and Beauty" as a couplet. The pastor of the Second United Presbyterian Church of Wilkesburg was delegated by fifteen neighboring churches of Wilkesburg to make an address of welcome. Immediately after the service an informal reception was held in the parish house.

Church Home.—The annual supper and bazar of the Church Home took place on May 22. The supper tables and booths were well patronized, and considerable money was raised toward the expenses for the upkeep of the home. At present the home is caring for about sixty-five children and thirteen old ladies. JANE CUDDY.

HARRISBURG

Two Counties Hold Joint Service.—York and Lancaster Counties combined for a joint presentation of their lenten offering in St. Paul's Church, Columbia, the Rev. George F. G. Hoyt, rector, on the afternoon of the Third Sunday after Easter. The stately and spacious church was filled to overflowing. In special trolleys came two hundred persons from St. John's, York, both choir and Sunday School, crossing the Susquehanna River on the mile-long bridge by auto and truck. From St. John's, Maricetta; from All Saints', Paradise; from St. Paul's, Manheim, came delegations bearing crosses and flags. St. James' Church, Lancaster, came in two trolley cars, bringing their Sunday School, with banners, but not their choir. St. John's, Lancaster, came in two trolleys and auto with choir and Sunday School.

With one hundred and fifty voices in the combined choirs, the long procession wound round from the parish house to the front doors of the church with crucifers and flags, and with nine clergy. After the offering had been taken up, the Rev. Paul S. Atkins, of St. John's Church, York, made a telling address. Each Sunday School presented a slip of paper on which was written the number of scholars, the sum of the lenten mite chest offering, and the amount per capita. At the close of the address the rector handed the added total to Mr. Atkins, who announced that the children of the Sunday Schools of York and Lancaster counties had given the sum of $1,373.

LEROY F. BAKER.

BUFFALO

Bishop Brent's Return.—Not only his own people but all Buffalo is rejoicing to have our bishop back "for good." The first Sunday after his return he confirmed a class of forty at St. Paul's in the morning, and another class of eighty in the evening, preaching at both these services. Having no see house, Bishop Brent has taken a furnished house for the present, and Miss Brent has come to keep house for her brother. The Churchmen's Club is planning a reception for them in the near future and meantime we all bid them welcome.

Mr. Clough Honored.—At a recent meeting of the Laymen's League warm words of appreciation were spoken of the faithful and affectionate work of Mr. Clough among the Indians. For twenty-five years Mr. Clough has ministered to them, and the success of the work at Cattaraugus has been largely due to his devoted service. To mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Clough's connection with this mission, the members of the Laymen's League presented him with a purse of gold.

Sunday School Conference of the County.—It is gratifying to notice how many Episcopalans are on the program of the annual conference, and what valuable contributions they make to the discussion of vital questions. An invitation was sent Miss Withers to come and present our Junior Plan, but unfortunately she was unable to accept. The committee hopes to procure her for another year and to give prominence to our plan in all the discussions. Time was when we were not thought to have much to offer the other communions on the subject of Church School methods, but they are quick to recognize that we now are ready to make a distinct contribution.

Mass Meeting of all Church Schools.—All the Buffalo schools joined in a service on Sunday afternoon, May 11, at St. Paul's Church, when the lenten missionary offering was presented. Mr. Betticher of the Church Missions House came up to make the address at this rally, and in spite of terrible weather there was a good turnout of the children. Mr. Betticher also spoke at the Church of the Ascension school and preached at St. John's, in the morning—launching a united offering "drive" that the women are making this triennial year.

June 7, 1919

ELIZABETH A. LAWRENCE.

EASTON

Convocation Meetings—The Southern and Middle Convocations of the diocese held their annual spring meetings during the middle week of May. The Northern Convocation was forced to adjourn its meeting and postponed all further meetings.

The Southern Convocation of which the Rev. Sydney A. Potter is dean held its sessions at Pocomoke City, at St. Mary's Church, of which the Rev. L. L. Williams is rector. The Rev. Douglas I. Hobbs, rector of Church Hill Parish, preached the opening sermon. The Middle Convocation met at Hillsboro with a small attendance on the part of the clergy but a large congregation of laity. Dean Davies presented a paper on the problems of reconstruction which was very thorough and created a lively discussion.

Parish Notes—Until such time as a rector can be secured, Denton Parish will be cared for by Christ Church Parish, Easton, and Hillsboro Parish by Wye Parish. Wye Parish through the income from its endowment fund is beautifying the large grounds around the mother church. A new gate in keeping with the building and a new fence add much to the attractiveness of the colonial church.

Church Building Enlarged—Christ Church, Kent Island, the Rev. Hunter Davidson, rector, is making extensive improvements in the church building. A new addition cruciform in shape for the altar and sacristy is being constructed. The vestry are installing a new altar to be in memory of Mr. Wythe Blunt, who gave the farms which are the endowment of the parish.

Auxiliary Convention—The annual convention of the Woman's Auxiliary held at Cambridge last week was exceptionally well attended. The reports of the work done by the various parish branches were startling compared with those of previous years. Bishop Hulse of Cuba was the principal speaker. The Auxiliary is the strongest organization in the diocese at the present time.

Convention Plans—The annual convention to be held at Elkton, June 3, promises an interesting program for two days. Further progress is expected to be made in the plan for religious education in the diocese and earnest pleas for a greater missionary effort. The war has helped the missionary outlook in the diocese to a great extent, as it has given the people a greater vision of world needs. Already the amount paid on the apportionment is greater than for a similar time last year and the appeals are meeting a far better acceptance. The confirmations in the diocese for the current year have been on an average with those of former years although several of the parishes have contributed a large number of men to the army and navy. EVERETT JOHNSON.

PHILADELPHIA

Sunday School Service and Offering—The annual service for the Sunday Schools of the diocese was held in Holy Trinity Church on Saturday, May 24. In spite of the day there was an enthusiastic service. The speakers were the bishop of the diocese and the Rev. Drs. Grammar and Johnston.

Mr. G. W. Jacobs reported the offerings from each school. The total for the year is already larger than ever before, although all returns are not yet in. So far there is an amount of $42,984.23. The largest total in the past was in 1917 when an offering of $38,663 was recorded. The school of Gloria Dei (Old Swede's) Church had the largest per capita offering of $12.47. This is the third time that that school has led the diocese. The diocesan banner now remains in the possession of the children of Mr. Stockman's parish.

Divinity School Commencement—The commencement of the Philadelphia Divinity School was held at St. Andrew's Church on May 22. Dean Bartlett and Dr. Heffern read the service. The preacher was Bishop Murray of Maryland, who gave an inspiring picture of the possible position of leadership of the ministry. He said that the charge that the Church had failed was a real testimony to the place of leadership that men hoped the Church would take.

Dean Bartlett read the names of five students of the school who are still overseas on duty; and also the names of eight others who have returned, but who are not yet discharged.

The prize for scholarship ($100) was awarded to Mr. L. Koo Chee of the middle class, who had an average of 93.1 per cent. Bishop Talbot awarded diplomas to the Messrs. C. G. Baird, C. Estronelle, J. S. Gillespie, H. T. Morrell of the graduating class. The degree of bachelor of sacred theology was awarded to the Rev. Messrs. G. E. Boswell, G. Striano, M. Y. Tatsumi, J. L. Ware, R. A. Weatherly and T. V. Wingate. The Rev. Messrs. W. C. Pough and T. M. Tong were awarded the degree of master of sacred theology.

The joint boards of the divinity school entertained the clergy and their wives at the City Club at luncheon after the service at the church.

The alumni association met at the City Club in the afternoon. Speeches were made by Bishops Garland and Hulse, by Dean Bartlett, the Rev. Drs. Foley, Ayer and Montgomery. The Rev. H. M. G. Huff was the essayist, his subject being "A Critique on Suggested Methods of Instruction for Spiritual Training." Dr. Yerkes, the recorder, announced that twenty-four clergy from the school had been in war service.

Chaplains and the War Commission—The clergy who have served as chaplains have organized with the Rev. Thomas Cline as president, and the Rev. Samuel Booth as secretary. The Rev. J. D. Hamlin has been appointed by the War Commission to minister to the sick and wounded soldiers and sailors in the Philadelphia hospitals.

The Diocesan Church of St. Mary—On Trinity Sunday Bishop Rhinelander will ordain several men to the ministry. The preacher will be Dean Fosbroke. At four in the afternoon of the same day, Bishop Delany will preach to the colored congregations of Philadelphia at a united service to be held at St. Mary's. Beginning on Trinity Sunday the 11 A. M. service will be omitted, the chief service of the day will be Holy Communion and sermon at 9.30. The afternoon service will also be omitted in order to concentrate on the open air service on the Parkway, and the evening service outside the church on Broad Street.

The open air services on the Parkway will begin on May 25. The preachers appointed are: May 25, Dr. G. L. Richardson; June 1, Rev. J. H. Chapman; June 8, Bishop Garland; June 15, Bishop Rhinelander; June 22, Dr. E. M. Jefferys; June 29, Rev. T. S. Cline.

Song Festival June 10 and 11—A chorus of 1000 from the churches of the diocese will sing at the Academy of Music on the evenings of June 10 and 11. This is to be a victory song festival in thanksgiving for the allied victory in the war. The music has been composed by church organists. Tickets have been allotted to the various parishes; and a great interest has been manifest in this service.

MANILA

Captain Burdette Back From Siberia—On March 24 Captain B. L. Burdette of the American Expeditionary Forces in Siberia returned to Manila. Captain Burdette has been for a number of years associated with St. Luke's Hospital, Manila, and returned to take up work laid down by him to assist in the war. Our Church has had two men in Siberia of whom we may be proud, both missionary doctors, Dr. Teusler of Tokyo, who is in charge of Red Cross work, and Dr. Burdette in charge of a hospital on the Red River. Such is the high opinion of the work of Dr. Burdette in Siberia that the following records must be of interest to all who want to know of what we contributed to Siberian work from the staff of one missionary hospital. It is not often that such an unsolicited commendation is given by high army officers.

From the Commanding Officer in Siberia—One letter is dated from the War Prison, Krasnaya Rechka, Siberia. It is addressed to the chief surgeon of the A. E. F. in Siberia. It says "On November 7, 1918, Captain B. L. Burdette, medical corps, with four enlisted men of the medical department, took over medical charge of this camp from the Russian authorities. At that time the physical condition of the 1900 Austro-Hungarian war prisoners was pitiful in the extreme. For months they had been slowly starving for want of proper food. Over three hundred men with fever were scattered through the barracks. A hospital was not even in operation and the organization of the hospital corps and medical department of the prisoners of war was in a most confused condition. Medical supplies, drugs and equipment were practically exhausted. By splendid executive and organizing ability he established and equipped in one month's time a hospital the equal of which does not exist in Siberia. With 2,400 men under his charge for four months there has been but two deaths. When the condition in which he found these men is taken into consideration the result of his administration is little short of marvelous. To his policies of sanitation, his constant and never-ceasing vigilance this result is due. All of this work has been accomplished without the slightest friction, earning and receiving the good-will of all and practically without asking help or assistance of any department other than his own. I cannot too highly commend his professional work and desire to thank him for the splendid assistance he has always given me in the administration of this camp." The letter is signed by Lieutenant Colonel Morrow.

From the Austrian Prison Doctors—

The second letter is dated Krasnaya Rechka, Siberia, and is to the commanding officer of the war prison camp. It says:

"The approaching departure of Captain B. L. Burdette is for the doctors of medicine, prisoners of war, an occasion to present him their heartfelt thanks for the great services he has done for the war prisoners. The American authorities have taken over this camp at a very hard time. The political circumstances in the neighboring Habarovsk were complicated ones; in the compound itself an influenza epidemic was spread which had already caused two deaths. The prisoners of war were miserably nourished. The provisions of drugs and dressing materials were nearly exhausted. The hospital was in many ways not sufficiently equipped. Not only the overcoming of these difficulties but also the thorough sanitation of the camp is to a great extent due to the most distinguished advice of Captain Burdette. If at the beginning many prisoners were inclined to feel these sanitary measures in some ways hard ones and were roused abruptly from their lethargy, now not only the doctors, but also the overwhelming majority of our prisoners appreciate the beneficent effect of the new conditions. The successful accomplishment of a number of life-saving operations through Captain Burdette has put the war prisoners, doctors of medicine, under a great obligation. The undersigned doctors request the American commander of the war prison camp to accept their thanks and to let this be known to Captain Burdette."

The letter is signed by four physicians and the ranking Austrian officer.

NEWARK

Memorial Tablet Decorated—A bronze memorial tablet, placed on the back wall of the church in honor of the 119 men who served in the army and navy, was dedicated at the morning service, May 4, in St. Luke's Church, Montclair, by the rector, the Rev. Luke M. White. The main feature of the design is the shield of faith on which are engraved the 119 names, with crosses before four. Above the names are the words: "Thanks be to God Which Giveth Us the Victory."

Lenten Offerings Total Over $9,000—

Although the full amount of the lenten offering of the Church Schools of the diocese cannot be announced since there are still about forty schools to be heard from, the amounts received from sixty schools aggregate $9,522.57. When the presentation of these was made May 10 in Christ Church, East Orange, St. Luke's school, Montclair, was in the lead with $813.60. St. John's school, Montclair, came second with $661, and the third on the list was St. John's school, West Hoboken, with $600.

United Offering Presented—The United Offering of eighty parishes, leaving thirteen to hear from, was presented May 14 in Trinity Cathedral, Newark. It totaled $5,130.55, making the diocesan offering for the triennial thus far, $14,813.52.

Parish Treasurer Honored—Jay C. Young, who recently declined re-election as treasurer of Grace Church, Orange, after thirty-five years' service, was the guest of honor at the annual dinner of the Men's Club of the parish, held May 12. Bishop Lines and Dr. Mann of Trinity Church, Boston, a former rector of Grace Church, were among the speakers.

CHICAGO

Business Women's Council Organized

—It is estimated that there are over eighty thousand business women in the loop in Chicago every day. Many of these girls are new to the conditions of city life, and have no friends and no church affiliations. To meet this situation there has been organized a Business Women's Council, whose purpose is to affiliate these women with the churches and bring them under the church influence. The council has a central organization downtown, and is serving lunches and holding noonday services at which the attendance of the girls has been most encouraging. An effort is to be made to get the girls into touch with the churches in the part of the town where they live, and the movement promises to fill a great need among the women workers in the city.

The Church of the Epiphany Welcomes Returned Soldiers—

The Church of the Epiphany, Chicago, gave its first dinner May 13 to its returned soldiers, sailors and marines. Twenty-five have returned out of the total of sixty-one who entered war service. Invitations were first sent by the rector on behalf of the men of the parish. These were followed by a particular invitation, each soldier and sailor being invited to the dinner as the guest of one of the men. Thus each soldier and sailor was the particular guest of a selected churchman and all the men together were hosts to all "the boys."

The affair was most happy and successful. Each overseas man made a little speech, and each home-camp man stated where he was and what he did.

The rector made good use of the occasion by an address on "the men and the Church" making special allusion to the work for men at Epiphany. A committee of five ex-soldiers was formed to consider the question of perpetuating the "Epiphany Platoon."

The ladies of the parish served a most excellent dinner and the hosts were only too glad to pay for themselves and their guests. Another dinner was planned for all the soldiers upon their return.

New Society at St. Luke's, Evanston

—Gamma Kappa Delta is the name of the newly organized society of young people of St. Luke's Parish, Evanston, which attended service in a body on a recent Sunday afternoon and then after a half hour class study had supper together in the parish house. There are sixty of them, young men and women ranging from sixteen years upwards and their membership committee is out for one hundred members by Whitsunday. Their name is taken from the initial letters of the Greek words which embody the aims of the society,—knowledge of the Church, fellowship in the Church and service for the Church.

Girl Scouts at St. Paul's Church—

A troop of girl scouts has been organized at St. Paul's Church, and has been carrying on active work all winter. The account of their work in the May number of the St. Paul's parish record ends with this touching appeal: "In the scout education one of the requirements is that a scout shall satisfactorily bathe and dress a child two years old or under. Quite a number of the scouts found it difficult to pass off this requirement, as they have no acquaintance with a child of this age. Would it be too much to ask some mother to volunteer the use of a little prospective girl scout. The officers will guarantee the carefulness and reliability of any scout in Troop 23."

CHARLES L. STREET.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Convocational Meetings—The fifth district held its spring convocation in St. John's Church, Ithaca, May 12 and 13. The Rev. Wilson E. Tanner of Trinity Church, Binghamton, was the special preacher. Bishop Fiske addressed the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, and urged the women to take an even more active part in the work of the Church. He said that the war had brought out much business and executive ability among women which should be turned to good effect in church work.

The convocation of the first district met in Christ church, Clayton, on May 14.

Memorial Windows Dedicated—

Three windows were dedicated in Emmanuel Church, Memphis, at a special service on the Third Sunday after Easter. One of the windows was given by Mr. and Mrs. Homer V. Morse in memory of their daughter, who was organist of the church until last June when she was killed at a grade crossing. Mrs. Alice

June 7, 1919

Hanley presented another in memory of her mother, and the third was given by Mrs. Charles Daboll in memory of her parents.

New Title for Convention—By a curious typographical error the Syracuse Herald calls the diocesan convention "the animal convocation of the church."

Disapprove of Intinction—In a discussion of "Methods of Administering the Holy Communion" participated in by the members of the Binghamton clericus, those present strongly deplored the lawlessness and individualism in the manner of administration which seems to be creeping into the Church, especially in the East, and expressed the fervent hope that the House of Bishops would define that which is lawful and take rigorous action to put an end to the serious divergency of practice. The discussion followed the reading of a carefully prepared paper by the Rev. Johnson A. Springsted. General agreement was reached in discussion that a sounder faith would remove all idle fears; that the best practical answer to those who criticise the common chalice is the experience of the Christian ages, and the life insurance tables as to the mortality of the clergy. The practice of public administration by intinction was strongly disapproved. It was pointed out by many, that while the prohibition amendment makes exception as to wine for sacramental use, experience already indicates that there will be difficulty in obtaining wine. The opinion was expressed that the bishops should take steps to safeguard their clergy and provide for their dioceses.

Woman's Auxiliary has Interesting Annual Session—The annual meeting of the diocesan branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in Utica, May 21. The bishop of the diocese made an address of welcome at the opening meeting. He said in part: "The Woman's Auxiliary is not only a benefit to the work of the Church, but it has about it a certain intimate domestic element which is beautiful from several points of view. One can always picture, when sending off a box to a minister's home in some isolated spot, the joy and surprise of the wife and children, when the treasures of the big box, packed by loving hands back home are disclosed. You can't possibly do better than save every penny possible for the work of the auxiliary." The bishop suggested some of the pennies that go into movies might be diverted into missionary channels.

In the afternoon Miss Grace Lindley gave an address on The Nation-Wide Campaign. Miss Littell, the other speaker, represented the General Church Hospital of China.

Lay Readers as Missionaries—Before a large meeting of the Utica Clerical Union, the Ven. A. R. B. Hegeman, D.D., archdeacon of the diocese, presented a paper upon "The Lay Reader Missionary." The writer said that the laity have never exercised the power belonging to them, but that a change is taking place, the first expression of which has been in church administration and finance. Men have been induced to campaign for funds, and for church attendance. This is but a beginning. Lay reading is an activity that, properly directed, helps to break down the wall of separation between laity and clergy. To be successful a lay reader must be possessed of certain unusual qualities, otherwise he may be the cause of church extinction instead of church extension. Associate missions might well include trained laymen, and these would also be useful in hospitals, jails and other fields of work largely neglected.

TEXAS

A Mission at Calvert—A mission was held at Calvert by the archdeacon beginning Palm Sunday evening and extending through Easter Day. It was a great success from the first evening to the last. The attendance increased steadily through the entire eight days. Twenty persons were baptized, and Bishop Quin came at the close and confirmed a class of eleven candidates.

A Vacation for Every Clergyman—The Rev. J. M. Pettit, rector of St. Mark's Church, Bay City, was appointed to see that every clergyman of the diocese takes a vacation this summer. Each man is to book his plans and desires with Mr. Pettit and in this way every one may have a vacation. This is only one of the many advantages of living in the Diocese of Texas.

The Diocese Forging Ahead—Through the prodigious efforts of Bishop Quin, ten new priests have come into the diocese. Work has been opened up at many new points and many old stations have been revived. The hearty and happy congeniality of the whole body of clergy makes their association in conferences and convocations times of greatest value and pleasantness. The bishop has work for ten new men at points longing for the Church's ministrations. A living salary, a rectory, hard work and real support and encouragement are assured.

Bishop Kinsolving at Work Again—Bishop Kinsolving was able to take visitations in Houston and Waco during the latter part of Lent and on Easter Day.

A Clergy Conference—The bishop coadjutor held a conference with his clergy in Houston on April 30. Many vital subjects were discussed relating to Christian life and practice, and a good deal of light was thrown on a number of problems such as fasting Communion, the proper conduct of church services, the Negro problem, the preparation of a sermon, etc. The day was happily and profitably spent and a delightful luncheon was served in the parish house.

New Church for Grace Parish, New Orleans—The vestry of Grace Church, New Orleans, a downtown parish, has accepted plans for a new church to be erected in the immediate future, on a new and better site, but still in the downtown district. It will be built of brick, with stone trimmings, completed without debt, and costing $175,000. The style of architecture is the old English Gothic and the nave will seat six hundred people. There will also be a parish house and Sunday School room seating four hundred. It is planned to make it an institutional church and the rector, the Rev. A. R. Edbrooke, and his congregation are to be congratulated on the realization of their hopes for which they have worked for some years.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

G. F. S. Annual Meeting—The annual meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society of the diocese was held at All Saints' Church, Worcester, on May 24. Officers were re-elected for the ensuing year. After much discussion as to the advisability of changing the third central rule a vote put the society on record as against the change. The sum of $100 was pledged to the support of the worker of the Traveler's Aid at Ayer, Massachusetts, the location of Camp Devens. Bishop Davies suggested that the society work to obtain a holiday house for the diocese. After the business meeting the annual service was held in the church, the preacher being Dean Rousmaniere, of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston.

JOHN H. ROSEBAUGH.

DULUTH

Burned Church Rebuilt—On the evening of October 12, 1918, a destructive forest fire swept over a large portion of country in the vicinity of Duluth. Cities, villages, and homesteads in the path of the flames were utterly destroyed, hundreds of people lost their lives, and nearly twenty thousand refugees who had lost their homes and everything they possessed found temporary shelter in the cities of Duluth and Superior. Among the towns that suffered was the beautiful little city of Moose Lake, in which St. Andrew's Mission had lately erected a church which was noted for its beauty of situation and plan.

The flames made a complete sweep of the town, and our church was destroyed along with the other buildings. Before the embers were cold the people of northern Minnesota had set themselves to work in the task of restoration. In Moose Lake temporary structures to shelter the people were erected as rapidly as possible and with the advent of spring, the reconstruction of business houses and residences has proceeded rapidly.

In January the bishop commenced to rebuild our church, and in his effort he was generously supported by gifts from the Board of Missions, and from the American Church Building Fund Commission. The church building has been completed, and upon May 21 it was dedicated by the bishop of the diocese. It is the first public building which has been completed in Moose Lake.

Although there is no financial encumbrance on the church, the structure being fully paid for, Bishop Morrison deferred its consecration to a future day in order that he might permit its use by other religious denominations, clubs and societies, until they are able to build and provide chapels and halls for themselves.

The Rev. T. J. E. Wilson, in charge of the mission, has been most diligent and efficient in furthering the work of restoration, and to his energy and vigilance is due the early completion, and the thorough construction of the building. The little church is still very bare in the interior. It has a temporary altar and prayer desk, and a number of chairs for the accommodation of the congregation.

The church stood in the midst of a grove of beautiful pines, overlooking the pretty lake. We deeply regret to say that the pine trees show no signs of life with the return of spring.

Plans for the Cloquet Church—Cloquet, a town of 9,000 people, was also among the cities destroyed. Every house with the exception of a half dozen upon the island was burned. So rapid was the progress of the flames that the people barely escaped with their lives, and were unable to save any of their household effects. St. Andrew's Church, Cloquet, and the excellent parsonage belonging to the parish were consumed by the flames.

In the work of reconstruction there has been some delay, as it was necessary to dispose of the sites of the former buildings, and purchase another lot in a more desirable situation, sufficiently commodious for church and rectory. This has now been accomplished, and some time this summer it is expected that the new buildings will be completed. Here also the bishop has been generously helped by the Board of Missions, the American Church Building Fund Commission, the Society of the Double Temple, and by a fund, of which the Rev. Dr. Tanner, of Faribault was trustee.

HARRIET M. MORRISON.

MISSOURI

Big Confirmation Classes—Bishop Tuttle reports some excellent confirmation classes recently presented in St. Louis: At the Church of the Ascension, 25; at All Saints' (colored), 39; at St. Philip's, 21; at St. Peter's and at Grace (Kirkwood), 18 each; at the Redeemer, 13; and at St. Alban's, a parish organized one year ago, 11. The confirmations by the two bishops this year have been much larger than last year despite of the fact that churches were closed in some parts of the diocese for several weeks in the winter on account of the influenza epidemic.

Twice Burned, Church Again Rebuilt—On May 14 Bishop Tuttle consecrated the beautiful St. James' Church in Macon. The first beginnings of the work here were in the summer of 1865, when Bishop Hawks confirmed two candidates. The first church building was consecrated by Bishop Robertson in 1871, the Rev. F. B. Scheetz, long a devoted minister of Christ in the Diocese of Missouri, being the rector. The Rev. Ethelbert Talbot, now the Bishop of Bethlehem, was the rector from 1873 to 1887, when he was elected Bishop of Wyoming and Idaho. The original frame building was replaced by a substantial edifice of brick and stone under the leadership of the then rector, the Rev. Benjamin S. McKenzie, and was consecrated by Bishop Tuttle in 1911, when the Rev. John B. Van Fleet was rector. A few months later, fire devoured the interior of the church. The damage was restored and, in 1913, the building was visited by another fire and completely ruined. The Rev. H. Brownlee Smith with the assistance of a loyal vestry and a liberal people rebuilt the church more beautiful than it had been before, with pews, choir stalls, communion table and organ all of oak, the latter given by Mr. I. S. Miller in memory of his wife and family, and stained glass windows, one of which is a memorial to the Rev. F. B. Scheetz and to Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Knight, in whose home the first services of the Church in Macon were held. The vestry has just succeeded under the leadership of the Rev. Charles F. Edwards in wiping out the debt.

The sentence of consecration is signed by Bishop Tuttle "in the fifty-third year of our episcopate." This is a parchment richly prized by the congregation. The consecration sermon was preached by the bishop coadjutor. St. James' Church is now one of the most important of our rural parishes. At a recent service when Bishop Tuttle was the preacher, all the members of the Ministerial Alliance, of which the Rev. Mr. Edwards is the president, were present. Before his death Dr. Knight gave the parish a beautiful lot adjoining the church, on which an attractive rectory has been built. Senior Warden John Scovena has been twice elected to represent the diocese in the General Convention.

Missionary Host Celebrates Its Jubilee

—The golden jubilee of the Sunday School Missionary Host in the diocese of Missouri was observed in the Odeon, St. Louis, on the afternoon of the Fifth Sunday after Easter. A departure from the customary annual program was the presentation of a pageant, The Light of the World, issued from the Church Missions House and adapted for local use, the Rev. H. W. Mizner being pageant master. Thirteen apostles guard a lighted torch which burns before an empty cross. Groups of peoples come to this central flame, each lighting from it a torch to treasure it carefully and to hand it on to others. Through two thousand years the flame is passed on, "beginning at Jerusalem," and reaching to the America of the twentieth century. Nor does it stop there; for America is shown preparing to pass it on to "heathen lands afar." Spirited missionary hymns were introduced during the progress of the pageant. Allegorical figures representing the development of the Church through the ages were accompanied by groups of children chosen from branches of the Junior Auxiliary and the Sunday Schools connected with the Missionary Host.

The annual report was read by Mr. Frank Wyman, who has been the treasurer for thirty-three years. He rejoiced that this, his latest report, was the best that he had ever made, a total of $1,457.54, collected by the children in small amounts during the year and given to the bishop of the diocese for missionary extension.

The Beginnings of the Host—At the conclusion of the pageant, Mr. Walker Hill, president of the Missionary Host, introduced Mr. E. C. Simmons, who, with the late Mr. Wallace Delafield, founded the Missionary Host in the second year of Bishop Robertson's episcopate. The offering the first year was about $370. A testimonial in behalf of the officers and members was presented to Mr. Simmons by Bishop Tuttle, who spoke of him as a man who, in the high place which St. Louis has accorded him in the business world, had "been under the searchlight which shines upon a prominent business man and had borne it through all the years without flinching." Mr. Simmons made a fitting acknowledgment of the testimonial and told how the Host was started out of a conversation which he and Mr. Delafield had one early morning as they were walking along Fifth Street on their way to their business offices. The Host was a "layman's child" and has always been directed by laymen. The present secretary, Mr. William P. Nelson, has held that office for thirty-four years. The vice-president is Mr. Elias S. Gatch. The Odeon was filled to its capacity for the celebration. Appended to the program was a list of sixty-one persons who are members of the Missionary Host still connected with St. Louis parishes and who were present at the first meeting fifty years ago.

BETHLEHEM

Centennial Celebration—On Sunday, May 11, Trinity Church, Easton, began its celebration of the hundredth anniversary of its organization as a parish. On Sunday evening the Rev. Philip Kerridge of New London, Connecticut was the preacher. On Monday, a reception of the choir and old members was held. On Wednesday there was a jubilee service in connection with an archdeaconry service. The Ven. H. E. A. Durell, Bishop Garland and Bishop Talbot were among the speakers. On Thursday Major W. R. Coyle spoke on "Unity and Reconstruction from a Layman's Point of View" and the Rev. Herbert Parrish "From a Priest's Point of View." Bishop Garland conducted a quiet hour. The Rev. O. P. Steckle reviewed Bishop Gore's Dominant Ideas for the Twentieth Century. A reception was held that evening at the rectory. On Friday a centennial reception was held at which the following spoke: the Rev. John E. McCann, the Rev. F. R. Fretz, the Rev. E. F. Evemeyer, the Rev. William H. Ford, Judge Russell Stewart.

On Sunday a confirmation service was held at which Bishop Talbot preached on "Trinity's Responsibilities to the Diocese and the American Church." At this service the senior warden, Mr. W. M. Heiberger, burned all notes of indebtedness.

The rector, the Rev. Archibald H. Bradshaw, has been anxious to make this a turning point in the life of the parish and has succeeded in arousing a great spiritual awakening.

No Conference at Bishopthorpe—The diocesan board of religious education has announced that there will be no summer school at Bishopthorpe, South Bethlehem, this year. Because of their inability to secure a large enough faculty and for other insurmountable reasons, no attempt will be made to hold the school. This carries with it also the summer conference of the clergy of the diocese which will also be postponed.

Sunday School Overpays Parish Apportionment—The lenten offering of the children of the diocese is slowly approaching the $7,000 mark. Among the schools having a very large per capita offering is that of Calvary Church, Wilkes-Barre, the Rev. Robert Kline, rector, where the Sunday School gave $365, $77 more than the entire apportionment of the parish.

Seminary Alumni Associations Elect Officers—At the recent diocesan convention the Associate Alumni of the General Theological Seminary elected as president the Rev. Wallace Martin of St. Paul's Church, Montrose, and the Rev. LeRoy Eltringham of St. Stephen's Church, Catsaqua, secretary. Eighteen General Theological Seminary men took dinner together at the Hotel Sterling, Wilkes-Barre, having as their guest Dr. Alexander Mann, who gave reminiscences of his day at the seminary and the present great need of active cooperation in securing more recruits for the ministry.

The Philadelphia Divinity School graduates also held a meeting at which the following were elected: President, the Rev. William Richard Wood, Reading; secretary-treasurer, the Rev. Charles A. Bennett, Pottsville.

Improvements In Pottsville Church—Trinity Church, Pottsville, the Rev. Howard M. Miller, rector, is planning for extensive improvements in the church. Mr. Medary, of the firm of Zanzinger, Borie and Medary, of Philadelphia, architects, have undertaken to plan for extensive alterations whereby the interior of the church will be beautified and many improvements made for the increased efficiency of the work of the church and better accommodations for the congregation.

ALBANY

Brotherhood Meeting—The spring meeting of the Albany Assembly of St. Andrew was held in St. John's Parish, Cohoes, the Rev. E. J. Hopper, rector, on May 26. Over 100 men were present. The chapter reports showed the many activities of the Brotherhood in the diocese. The junior chapters were out in force. Master Roland Pollock of the cathedral junior chapter read a paper on junior work which had the true ring. The assembly in taking account of the activities of the juniors elected Paul E. Querin of Trinity Chapter, Albany, as representative of the executive committee of the assembly.

The first speaker of the evening was Ensign Lawrence Choate, U. S. N., now field secretary of the Brotherhood, who gave an interesting address on the needs of present day service for the B. S. A. and especially for "The Church Welcome Plan." Mr. Edmund J. Walenta, Jr., also a field secretary, not unknown in the vicinity, was welcomed with the usual acclaim and made good in an interesting address. The Archdeacon of Albany who was present made a short address as did also Mr. Frank S. Harder, a member of the National Council.

The next meeting of the Assembly will be held in St. Luke's Parish, Mechanicville, on August 8.

Church of the Messiah, Rensselaer Improves Property—The old rectory next to the parish house has been thoroughly

Convocation of Canterbury—Proceedings in Canterbury convocation, as I have more than once remarked, are nowadays of much more vital interest than they used to be, and the latest group of sessions is no exception. For one thing, those great protagonists of opposite views, the Bishops of Oxford and Hereford, are still active, though this is Dr. Gore's last appearance in convocation. Sometimes they pleasantly agree, as for instance in their disappointment at the comparatively mild interest which is being taken in the League of Nations in England. But even on this question Dr. Henson thinks that Dr. Gore is unduly pessimistic on the attitude of the educated classes. But the vials of Dr. Henson's wrath were not chiefly destined for his usual antagonist on the first day of the May sessions. The latter was silent during the discussion on the proposed Church Assembly. Nevertheless, Dr. Henson found it necessary to enter a vigorous protest, which he did with his usual brilliance, although his speech appeared to be impromptu, as it was not expected that the subject would be reached on the first day. He had considerable justification for his attitude. Although the decision of the Representative Council—to which the members of convocation ex officio belong—had decided almost unanimously to ask for the Enabling Act, it was, perhaps, scarcely fair to assume that convocation would simply register the decision of the council as a matter of form and proceed with the petition. Constitutionally, Dr. Henson was decidedly right, though of course practically he was powerless. Yet he succeeded in carrying with him Dr. Russell Wakefield, Bishop of Birmingham, and the new Bishop of Worcester, Dr. Pearce.

Principles, or Ecclesiastical Traditions?

—But far more important than this vain debate was a petition presented by the Bishop of Oxford on the reunion question. This petition was signed by fourteen members of the catholic party, including Father H. P. Bull (not the Father Paul Bull whose articles lately appeared in THE CHURCHMAN), Dr. Kidd, Canon Lacey, Rev. H. F. B. Mackay, Dr. Darwell Stone, Dr. Leighton Pullan, and Father Francis Underhill. The petition is full of language appreciative of nonconformists, but no friendly language can obscure the non possumus attitude on the most important points. "We ought not to take part in united services, either in our places of worship or in those of the non-episcopal bodies." "It is not permissible to admit members of non-episcopal bodies to Communion, except in the case of a dying person who has expressed a desire for reconciliation with the Church."

The writer of the Times' Saturday article, who is by no means antagonistic to high churchmen, raises the real point at issue. "Their appeal to principles requires more explanation than they provide, before it can be considered free from ambiguity. Men may easily mistake ecclesiastical traditions for principles, and it is possible that this confusion has not altogether been avoided in the present instance." Church traditions are valuable, and should be treasured, but "are they really principles?" Traditions change; principles are immutable. And in any case, this writer usefully reminds us, in reference to the "reconciliation" of a dying nonconformist, of the famous saying of Baxter's that he preached "as a dying man to dying men." Does not this phrase, he says, describe the condition of Christians in the present day? The time is short; the tasks which confront them are of extreme urgency. They must return to first principles, among them to that unity which exists in spite of our divisions in traditions and order.

A Personal Note—Not as a matter of news, but simply as a personal explanation which perhaps I owe to the readers of this column, I have now to add that I am taking leave of them for a time. The English correspondence will be in other hands for at least four months. And this for a reason that is certainly a pleasant one. I am finishing this letter on board the Olympic, and by the time it appears I expect to be renewing old friendships in New York City. My bishop has commissioned me to make a fresh study of the American Sunday School system. It is some thirteen years since I last studied your methods. I want to increase my efficiency so that I may be able to discharge certain diocesan responsibilities which have been laid upon me. I shall be moving about among the eastern states and possibly I may visit the Middle West. If any of my readers can help me with information regarding recent developments I shall be glad of correspondence. We particularly want to know in England how you are handling the adolescent problem. My central address till the end of August will be 823 Madison Avenue, New York City.

repaired; the interior repainted and papered, furnace, electric light and modern plumbing installed at a cost of about $1,400. The rectory is now occupied by the rector for the first time in many years, having been rented heretofore. This change is a great advantage to the work of the parish as it enables the rector to be in the centre of his work. A few days after the rector and his wife moved into the rectory, they were very pleasantly surprised by the Woman's Auxiliary which came in a body to call. The Rev. and Mrs. Johnson were presented with a handsome electric table lamp.

The outlook for the future of the Church of the Messiah is very encouraging. Great activities have been manifested in the organizations and splendid congregations are reported.

The Open Forum

The Persistency of Falsehood

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

You have a saying that a lie will cross a continent while truth is getting her boots on. That story of Darwin's closing days mentioned in the Open Forum of your issue of May 10, is absolutely wrong. I had occasion at the time of its first appearance to make enquiries of Sir Francis Darwin and others, and, as I fully expected, I learned that there was no truth in the story. I have long ceased to hope that any denials would put a stop to the circulation of the supposed incident for it has traveled to Japan and back already. But I venture to trouble you with this letter. The history of the anecdote and its wanderings would make an interesting article, illustrative of certain phases of modern literary criticism.

Testimony on the Other Side

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Numerous criticisms in the church papers concerning the new hymnal suggest that it is only fair to contribute some testimony on the other side.

I have noticed four points of difference between the old and new hymnals:

First: The number of tunes to a given hymn has been greatly reduced, in most cases only one tune being provided. In the old book there were often as many as three tunes to a single hymn. Even if the tune retained should be the poorest one this procedure has the advantage of associating certain words with a particular tune, which promotes successful congregational singing.

Second: The insertion of ancient plain-song tunes is of questionable value: the future will reveal the extent of their usefulness. They are in a rhythmic idiom unfamiliar to people in general, and their use is at present a little doubtful. But they certainly are worth study, and if people will be charitable enough to try them over at home and search out their beauties, not only will they be repaid, but the general use of these historic melodies may become established.

Third: Where some popular hymns have been omitted, places have been taken by hymns of unquestionable superiority. For example: "A mighty Fortress is our God" is in the new hymnal; "Work for the night is coming" is not; any fair-minded person examining the two must admit the superiority of the former. The clergy by virtue of their training represent the leaders in cultural as well as spiritual matters. They uphold the ideals, and strive for the betterment of the community. As sponsors, they will choose the best hymns, spiritually and artistically. It must be remembered that the best art recognizes truth just as religion does, and the reasons for using the best in art are just as logical.

Fourth: New tunes will do the world more good than harm. Let us have them, by all means; not to the exclusion of the old, but together with the best of the old, as many as our minds and hymnals can accommodate. I have tried the practical experiment of using one of the new tunes as an introit, and making a note of it in the Sunday bulletin. The congregation have taken great interest in it, and unmistakably shown their approval by several signs. Of course if this were not a musical edition, new tunes would not be feasible, and there could be no progress. We are hoping great things from putting the music into the hands of the congregation.

In conclusion, let me say that, although an organist, which fact will discount the value of my remarks in the opinion of some, still I have tried to see the matter from the point of view of clergyman, musician and layman combined.

Naturally it is not possible to produce a hymnal that would meet every personal preference, but in the long run, I am convinced that the new hymnal is a decided step forward.

The New Hymnal

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

One of the signs of how carefully those who are devoted to the Church guard it, is that whenever a change of any kind is proposed, a controversy arises at once. Now it is concerning the new hymnal. The voice of protest is to be heard on many sides. It is time that someone speaks a word of commendation for this much needed departure. There are many who rejoice in this step. The truth is that they are so much absorbed in enjoying this musical work, in finding how heartily the people respond, that they have not thought it necessary to defend it.

It is not within my province to undertake to pass on the merits of the music, as such. The experience that we have had thus far is that the selections of tunes both old and new show the hand of experts in hymnology and that they have given us the treasures of the whole storehouse of tunes ancient and modern. The test I apply is the response that my people make to this. Every Sunday night at the close of the evening service the entire congregation remains for the privilege of rehearsing these new tunes and the effect on the congregational singing is already noticeable.

We have learned in the past two years how great the advantage is in having every one sing. The soldiers had leaders who taught them songs. It is not a new idea. Cromwell long ago demonstrated how important it was to have singing soldiers. Large choruses were also organized in our communities. We have sold our bonds by the aid of singing. It is one of the things we have recently learned. And we are being told that reality in worship is to be one of the great results of the war if the Church is to meet new conditions. There is no better way to that end than to have every one join in the singing of the hymns. And to put in the hands of every person who is in the congregation the notes is a great aid to that end. However little we may know about music, the notes do help and for those who have a knowledge of music they are often essential. Presbyterians, and Methodists and Lutherans and Baptists all have long recognized this. We can find their hymnals in the pews always with music and no one who has ever visited one of our neighboring churches can deny that they have a heartiness in the congregational singing that too often is sadly lacking in the church we love. The books without the notes have always seemed to me to be a direct invitation to the people not to sing or else a slur upon their musical intelligence, as if to say, "The choir has the notes. You are less well educated than they, follow their leadership, and do it sotto voce lest you make a misstep and spoil the harmony."

Let us at least give this new hymnal a fair trial before we put our stamp of disapproval on something that, to my mind at least, is a step forward. Many of the objections that are now floating will soon disappear in the light of the splendid tunes, the hearty congregational singing and the vitality of worship that will come. Even the myth of the too small racks may disappear and it will be found that they, too, are expanding with the times and the broadening Church.

The Point Hope Association

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I feel that I cannot return to again take up my work among the Esquimaux of Arctic Alaska without expressing my deep appreciation of the interest shown by the Church at large in the work, and my thanks for the assistance rendered.

Various branches of the Woman's Auxiliary have taken an active part toward the formation of a native ministry and have pledged for four years sufficient to continue and complete the education of an Esquimaux boy (who is now at school in Northern Massachusetts), and enough to bring out and educate another boy.

Money to build a power schooner has nearly been guaranteed. This will freight coal, mined by the Esquimaux themselves, down the coast to their villages and make living and cooking conditions much more endurable.

We have good reason to hope that the services of a young doctor, who will travel along the coast in summer on the schooner and in winter by dog sled, can be secured at a minimum cost to our association. A young teacher, who will pay his own expenses, has expressed a desire to go next summer.

To meet the cost of running the boat, doctor's expenses, etc., an association has been formed, called the Point Hope Association. Literature regarding the work and photographs will be circulated among the members as frequently as possible. The membership fee is $5.00 per annum. Subscriptions may be sent to the secretary, the Rev. George F. Weld, Santa Barbara, California; cheques should be made out to the First National Bank of Santa Barbara,

"To inform the mind and awake the conscience"

An old heaven and a new earth

AGES have rolled away since God first said: "Let there be light;" and to-day the world trembles again upon the threshold of a new creation.

OLD forms are dead; new light has broken; nations are plastic, waiting to be moulded into newer, more spiritual being.

AND in this process of recreation it is our proud privilege to share.

THE problems that confront us are too vast to be solved by any pre-war program.

MONEY alone will not solve them. Only a deepening of the spiritual life of our entire membership will fit us to achieve the giant tasks that are before us.

THAT spiritual deepening has begun; it will continue, for in the glory of this reconstruction period the Episcopal Church in America shall not be found wanting.

Self Determination and the Prayer Book

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

May I be permitted to suggest that liberty in the use of the Prayer Book might well be allowed by the General Convention in the following particulars:

1. It should be permissible to omit the word "obey" from the marriage service, when the omission is requested by both parties to the marriage.

2. It should be permissible to omit the Lord's Prayer from the Holy Communion service in the first of the two places where it occurs.

3. All psalms containing imprecatory verses should be printed in an appendix to the Psalter with those verses omitted, and the use of the psalms as thus printed allowed.

4. Intinction should be legalized as an alternative method of administering the Holy Communion.

Brief reasons for the foregoing proposals may be given as follows:

1. There are some to whom the word "obey" stands for the survival of an old theory of marriage as a property-holding relationship of the man to the woman, and others for whom it destroys the mutual character of the marriage bond.

2. To some it seems absurd to say the same prayer twice in the same brief service. It is probable that in ancient times the Lord's Prayer at the beginning of the Holy Communion service was for the priest alone. It should be permitted now either to omit it or to say it silently.

3. While at present all imprecatory verses in the psalms may be avoided except on Good Friday by the simple device of omitting all the psalms in which they occur, this necessitates the entire neglect of such beautiful psalms as the 137th psalm, which by the omission of the sentiments of revenge and child-murder at the end, might be kept in constant inspirational use. A note might well be added, explaining that the omitted verses, while consonant with religious feeling at the time they were written, were rendered obsolete by the teaching of our Lord.

4. As the common drinking cup is contrary to the laws of at least some of the commonwealths of our land, it should be permitted those who feel strongly in the matter to use some other method of administering the Sacrament. The use of individual cups would seem more distasteful to the members of the Episcopal Church and less in harmony with the liturgical proprieties than intinction. That no one's liberty might be infringed upon in this matter, the present method of administration of the chalice should be mandatory, should any desire it, after those preferring the other method have communicated. While this would still fail to satisfy the law in some states, it would be far better than the present compulsion resting upon all to use the same method or to abstain, as many do, from partaking of the Sacrament.

In all four cases all that is requested is such a measure of self-determination as shall take away the reproach which attaches to the arbitrary imposition upon all of restrictions which may be obnoxious to some. The granting of the suggested liberty of practice would involve no doctrinal points whatsoever.

Will not some delegate to the General Convention bring these proposals before the convention?

The New Books

Inaccurate History

A HISTORY OF LATIN AMERICA. By William Warren Sweet. The Abingdon Press, New York, 1919.

Pan-Americans always welcome with joy books which are calculated to promote their hobby, and without doubt the volume before us is of that class. It is not too long and is well put together. In fact it is a very creditable production and we hope it may have a wide circulation so that our people may rid themselves of some of their ignorance about, and indifference towards, our by no means unimportant neighbors.

Having thus—for the good of the cause—wished this book well, the reviewer must change his tune lest he be written down as a subscriber to all Mr. Sweet's statements. For, however much one may approve of his volume as a whole, so far as its details are concerned there is much to be found fault with.

To begin with it has many statements which are based on popular rather than scientific histories. For example, on page 8 in summing up the influences which were responsible for the Spaniard's character he states that the "long wars with the Moors tended to create the two chief interests among the people, war and religion." This is just a repetition of what people have been saying for years. More recent scholarship, however, shows that one of the astonishing things about the Moorish occupation of Spain is that during the last 300 years of it there was little or no conflict between Moor and Christian. Altamira brings this out clearly. To explain the Don's love of warfare we must go deeper, the physical configuration of the country, the climate, and the Afro-Semitic inheritance. Again to skip over towards the end we would like to know whether there is any documentary authority for the statement on page 149 that Miranda was "informed" that a filibustering expedition to Venezuela would be "winked at." There is a complete error on page 243 where the chief exports of Haiti are given as cocoa, cotton and sugar. Coffee is much more important than cotton, and sugar is only just beginning to rival it in importance. Some very bad proof reading has been done on page 241 and elsewhere.

Lastly, the bibliographies are poor. Such books as Payne's History of the New World and Martin Humes' books on Spain, and Altamira's monumental work should have been given space, while such an unscientific set of histories as Dawson's should hardly be set at the beginning of a list.

All in all, though, the book is welcome and will at least lead the way to something worth while and sadly needed.

Coca-Cola

Why Coca-Cola is so refreshing

The refreshing quality of Coca-Cola, which has made it a favorite with the millions, is the result of three factors which are entirely natural and wholesome.

First—Coca-Cola is prepared with cold, carbonated water, which alone is quite refreshing.

Second—Coca-Cola contains natural fruit flavorings, which, with pure sugar, are very refreshing.

Third—Coca-Cola contains a purified extract from tea, called caffeine, which is both wholesome and refreshing.

Coca-Cola may therefore be described as "a cold, carbonated, fruit-flavored improvement upon tea, of approximately one-fourth the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

Coca-Cola is entirely wholesome, delicious and refreshing.

APPRECIATIONS AND DEPRECIATIONS.
By Ernest A. Boyd. John Lane Company.
New York. 1918.

Mr. Boyd is well known as a writer about things Irish and as a critic of Irish literature. He is a regular contributor to The Dial and writes for The North American Review, The Forum and New Ireland. The essays contained in the present volume are for the most part reprints of articles contributed to these papers. They make interesting reading, especially when read, as now, together. Standish O'Grady is discussed as a "Fenian Unionist"; "A. E." as "Mystic and Economist"; Lord Dunsay as "Fantaisiste"; Bernard Shaw as the man who missed his vocation by not sticking to Ireland and who thus showed himself a true "Irish Protestant"; Edward Dowden who lived a "Lonely Irishman" because he gave his life to the criticism of English literature when he had the opportunity to be the master of the literary revival in Ireland. The book is interesting, well written and revealing. It is charmingly printed—but why didn't somebody read the proof? J. H.

IRELAND: A STUDY IN NATIONALISM.
By Francis Hackett. B. W. Huebsch. New York. 1918.

This is a clever and in spots an illuminating study of a complicated and important question, somewhat difficult to read as a result of its extreme diffuseness and its author's irritating habit of jumping hither and thither apropos of anything that comes into his head. It presupposes a familiarity with the history of Ireland, and indeed of the world, that few Americans possess. Mr. Hackett leads so breathlessly through the maze of Irish politics that when he brings you to the exit with a triumphant "There you are," you are so hopelessly bewildered that you do not know whether he has actually threaded his way with incomparable dexterity to the real exit, or whether he has recklessly broken through and knocked a hole in the wall. You suspect, at least, he has knocked a hole in the wall. And yet in the process of doing so at times he has been most persuasive and even amusing. If you also happen to be a reader of the New Republic, you suspect that this is of a piece with the "liberal" propaganda that would willingly see the perishing of every tried and tested value of life for the sake of the promising experiment of proletarian government. Revolution is a short cut—so hail the Sinn Feiner! L. G.

An East London Vicar

MEMORIES OF WILLIAM WALLACE, D.D.,
First Vicar of St. Luke's, Stepney. By his wife. Preface by the Bishop of London. Longmans, Green and Co. New York. 1919.

Biography is one of the most fascinating and illuminating departments of all literature. It keeps us always in direct contact with human nature, and when well done never fails to be full of romance. A most prosaic life would be interesting if our knowledge of it were sufficiently accurate and full, and when the life is unusual in itself or has been lived under unusual circumstances, one must be cold indeed who does not enjoy studying it, and entering into its varied experiences. Dr. William Wallace was an unusual man, able, scholarly, but withal unassuming and kindly. The story of his work in East London is both pleasant and inspiring reading. For forty-five years he labored in one parish and was beloved by all. His wife has given us a clear and strong picture of him, and one which makes us wish for many more such men. J. W. S.

LETTERS OF WASHINGTON IRVING TO JOHN BREVOORT: LETTERS OF JOHN BREVOORT TO WASHINGTON IRVING.
Edited by George S. Hellman. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. 1918.

Here are two of as delightful volumes as have come from Putnam's in many a day. One wonders if the readable type was designed to appeal to the leisurely reader who has come to that epoch in life when the mind delights in reminiscence. The letters are full of the golden memories of a day that has gone and yet lingers on the borderland of our New York present. We commend these letters to the gentle reader. S.

Immortelles

A WREATH OF IMMORTELLES. By Kate Hope Huntly. Longmans, Green and Company. New York. 1919.

"Immortelles," says Webster, "are dry and unwithering." The late Archdeacon Basil Wilberforce was of the opinion that many of Kate Hope Huntly's poems, essays and prose poems were immortelles and suggested the publication "during life" as the author says, of this wreath. The book is dedicated to Basil Wilberforce and interpretative summaries of three of his books are included. The author is a theologian and a philosopher and leans to mysticism. Her style is exquisite and her fantasies are beautiful.

"He loves Him best who truly understands
How to release and not re-nail His hands.
Who best redeems some sufferer's crushing loss

Uplifts Him from His agonizing cross.
With every mission sped through squalid

Ye free His patient lacerated feet."

MY CHILD. By Jean Berry. E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 1919.

A book of simple poems of the love of a mother for her first child, from the moment the "little bundle" is put into her arms until she has gone away to school. It is a dainty sort of book, with a freshness and reality that will make mother hearts accept the simple, natural expressions as their very own. All the wonder of a mother's love gets into these unconventional verses. They are very true to life and really form a self-revelation of the growth of the mother in the first fateful years of a child's life. R. P. K.

BEYOND LIFE. By James Branch Cabell. Robert M. McBride & Company. New York. 1918.

A New Right-Hand Help for Writers and Speakers

Fifteen Thousand Useful Phrases

A New Book for Building the Vocabulary

This is a practical handbook of felicitous phrases, striking similes, and literary, commercial, conversational terms for the embellishment of speech and writing. Grenville Kleiser has designed the book for the convenient use of business men, public speakers, writers, lawyers, clergymen, teachers, students and all persons who wish to write and speak the English language with facility and power.

In gathering the material for this book Mr. Kleiser has drawn freely from the great masters of English, including Shakespeare, Milton, Scott, Goldsmith, Lamb, Macaulay, Browning, Carlyle, De Quincey, Newman, Ruskin, Pater, Stevenson, Tennyson, Arnold, Kingsley, Bulwer-Lytton, George Eliot, Dickens, Thackeray, Hawthorne, Emerson, Irving, Longfellow, Lowell, Mable, and many living writers.

There is an interesting introduction by Frank H. Vizetelly, Litt.D., LL.D., and a practical plan of study by the author.

It is believed that this is the only book of the kind so far published, and that it will fill a distinct and valuable need. It will be a useful supplement to the dictionary and regular book of synonyms.

RESIGNATION

The Rev. Henry M. Barbour, of the Church of the Beloved Disciple of New York City, has tendered his resignation to the Vestry to take effect February 1st, 1920, at which time, if still alive, he will have served as rector for twenty-five years. He will then become rector emeritus.

The Vestry was reluctant to accept his resignation, but realized that the burden is beginning to be too great for him to bear. They did so, and adopted the following minute as expressing in some slight degree, their appreciation of his long association with the Parish.

In accepting the resignation of Dr. Barbour, the Vestry desire to record their deep and lasting appreciation of the long and delightful association we have experienced as Rector and Vestry.

We have met him in joyous and happy hours of social intercourse; we have rejoiced with him when the Parish has received some special blessing; we have sat under his inspiring sermons and left the services feeling that, both mentally and spiritually, we have been greatly refreshed; we have been cognizant of his faithful and untiring pastoral visits, especially to the sick and dying. Some of us have experienced the loving sympathy of his ministrations in the darkness of some great bereavement; some have sorrowed with him when he, himself, was stricken with grievous losses of dear ones. In all these times of joy and grief, he has ever been a kind, patient and sympathetic pastor—bravely bearing his own burdens while doing his utmost to lighten those of his flock. We can truly say that his presence among us has been a perpetual benediction. Only for the inexorable law of the Almighty Father, we would that he should continue as perpetual rector of our parish. Much more could be said of him, without flattery, but we feel that is not necessary, for he is enshrined in the hearts of all our parishioners.

OBITUARY

IN MEMORIAM HENRY E. REES

Senior Warden of Trinity Church
Hartford, Conn.

Tributes to the long services of Henry E. Rees for Trinity Parish were paid yesterday by both church and Sunday school. In behalf of the vestry, Rev. Dr. Ernest deF. Miel, the rector, read the following tribute at the morning service at Trinity Church.

The senior wardens of this parish have been men of revered and hallowed memory, who have filled the office worthily and with a deep sense of its responsibilities. Among those honored names, that of Henry Ebenezer Rees must take its place as one whose devotion to the church has never been surpassed and whose life has left us an example of unselfish service for God and for his fellow men. In his death, not only the parish but the religious community, the diocese and the church at large have suffered a profound loss. To us it comes as a personal bereavement, for our close associations with him had taught us to esteem him highly not only for his work's sake, but because of the nobility of his nature and the charm of his personality. No official tribute from your vestry can compass or convey the regard and affection in which he was held by the whole congregation, nor can words of eulogy fully express our appreciation of him as a Christian and churchman. The dominant desire of his life was to render his full measure of service and his integrity of soul never permitted him to avoid responsibility or relax his efforts. No man called to the sacred ministry could have conceived more highly of his duty or discharged it with greater diligence. His confirmation was, indeed, his ordination to devote his choicest gifts as a layman to the Master's cause. That he should have experienced the serene and satisfying joy of service was the natural result of such complete consecration of heart and mind.

Henry E. Rees came of distinguished ancestry. His father, Henry Kollock Rees, a native of Darien, Ga., was a graduate of Princeton University (then Princeton College) and was ordained to the priesthood of the Episcopal Church by the Rt. Rev. Stephen Elliot, first bishop of Georgia. His father's early ministry was spent as rector of Christ Church, Macon, where his zeal for missionary work led him to establish St. Barnabas Mission on the outskirts of the town. Later he founded the parish church of St. Paul's on College Hill, the chapel of which he built and furnished with his own hands. After a service of twenty-five years as a parish priest, he was made archdeacon of Georgia, which gave him the longed for opportunity of devoting himself to missionary effort and church extension.

On his mother's side, Henry E. Rees was descended from the Bartow family of Savannah, whose church connections dated back for many generations. Rev. John Bartow, his great-grandfather, was sent to this country during the Colonial period by the Venerable Society for the Propagation of the Gospel as a missionary to New Rochelle. Wilhelmina Bartow, Mr. Rees's mother, inherited the missionary spirit of her forbears and while still a young girl organized a day school for the mountain whites near the summer home of the family at Cave Spring in northern Georgia. This proved to be a pioneer effort along those lines of Primary education which have since been followed by many enterprises designed to spread learning among these isolated people. On week days this young teacher instructed her pupils in elementary studies and on Sundays gathered them together for divine worship and religious instruction in the family chapel on the Bartow plantation. In the course of time these efforts took permanent form in the building of the Church of the Good Shepherd by the Bartow family in the neighboring village.

Sprung of such ancestry, it is not surprising that Henry E. Rees should have felt the missionary impulse and shared the enthusiasm of his parents for such effort. He was born in Macon, Ga., on April 29, 1857, and received his education in the local schools. As a young man he took part as far as an earnest layman might in his father's labors to strengthen and develop the church in the community. His business activities were not suffered to interfere with his church work. Some years later when he went to live in Marietta, Ga., he became identified with St. James's Church and served as a vestryman under the rectorship of Rev. C. T. A. Pise. Here he organized and carried on as a lay-reader St. Barnabas Mission among the colored people, a work which has developed and is going forward today.

When Mr. Rees came with his family to Hartford, one of his first acts was to place his services at the disposal of your rector. Our present church had not yet been completed and we were worshipping in the parish building. The Sunday school had been growing at a promising rate, but needed organization and leadership. Mr. Rees came to us at an opportune moment and immediately began to develop this part of our work on solid foundations. His sound and sensible views of religious teaching, his love of the church and her ways, together with his keen missionary interest, began to make themselves felt. The fact that this parish has sent so many of its sons and daughters to the mission field, both at home and abroad, is due in large measure to his influence. Certainly the interest in the church's missions, as manifested by the contributions that have been made, year by year, by the Sunday schools and parishes of the diocese is, in no small way, the outcome of his efforts to make that cause a supreme privilege, as well as a sacred obligation to the people of this church. During the twenty-two years he was with us he devoted himself to this field without intermission until he came to be recognized throughout the church as a leader in this department of her life and activity. In 1900 he was made a vestryman of the parish and in 1914 chosen your senior warden. On the part of this congregation this was your high acknowledgment of his worth and ability, the genuineness of his religion and the devotedness of his service.

In diocesan affairs his influence was felt, not only in the conventions to which he went frequently as our representative, but through various boards and commissions on which he served. During his presidency the Church Club of the diocese reached a high degree of strength and development. He was the moving spirit and directing mind of the Sunday School Auxiliary. On two occasions the Diocese of Connecticut sent him as a lay deputy to the General Convention.

In the business world he occupied a position of importance and responsibility. His fine sense of honor, sound judgment, and definiteness of purpose added to his native ability and uplifting energy gave weight to his influence and counsel and imparted confidence to those associated with him in financial affairs. His life and example have left an impression upon this community and particularly upon this church which can never be effaced.

As his fellow vestrymen we shall always think of him as the embodiment of those words of the Psalmist, "Lord, I have loved the habitation of Thy house and the place where Thine honor dwelleth." And in the words of Prayer Book as "Having been gathered unto his fathers, in the communion of the Catholic Church, in the confidence of a certain faith, in the comfort of a reasonable, religious and holy hope, in favor with God and in perfect charity with the world."

To the dear ones of his family and household, our hearts go out in tender sympathy and prayerful hope that God's richest consolations may be theirs and that the precious memories of a life so truly lived in accord with the Mind of Christ may bring to them uplifting comfort in this day of sorrow.

REV. O. H. RAFFERTY, D.D.

The Clergy present at the funeral of the Rev. Oliver Henry Rafferty, D.D., who entered into life eternal on Saturday, May 17th, 1919, desire to record their profound sense of the loss sustained by the Church in Connecticut, which he served so long and so faithfully. Educated in the Episcopal Academy, Trinity College and the Berkeley Divinity School, and ordained Deacon on his twenty-third birthday, May 31st, 1876, he began his work as Rector of St. Peter's Church, Cheshire, and remained there nearly ten years, when he was called to Trinity Church, Portland, where he served for thirty-three years, until his death. In both these positions he "made full proof of his Ministry," and gave evidence of rare talents improved to the utmost. He was eminent as pastor, preacher and administrator of parochial affairs. Always studious and scholarly, he "gave attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine," as St. Paul advised Timothy, and "showed himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" in sermons of uncommon ability. He was equally faithful in pastoral care of his people, bringing many to Confirmation, and exercising a strong influence for good in the community where his lot was cast. The temporal interests of his Parish received due attention, and through the liberality of many, Trinity Church, Portland, became one of the best equipped and best endowed Parishes in Connecticut. Doctor Rafferty also gave of his time and energy to Diocesan activities, serving for twenty years as Archdeacon of Middlesex County, for thirty-nine years as a Trustee of the Episcopal Academy, for twenty-two years as a Director of the Church Scholarship Society, and as Deputy in four General Conventions. Trinity College made him Doctor of Divinity. He received from men the recognition due to his efforts; and we trust that his Master in heaven has likewise accepted him as a "good and faithful servant," and welcomed him to share the joy of his Lord.

Of his personal traits we can speak with affectionate esteem. He possessed integrity unblemished and unquestioned; a kind heart and genial disposition; sound judgment and keen insight; and a sense of humor that was often refreshing. Thoughtful, eloquent, brotherly, he illustrated one of the highest types of excellence in the sacred profession. We feel that the Diocese has lost one whom it can ill afford to spare. And our sympathy goes out to his Parish, and especially to his widow, son and daughter in their great bereavement.

SAMUEL R. MARTIN

At a meeting of the Vestry of St. Ann's P. E. Church held May 17th, 1919, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, Our All Wise Maker has taken from us our dear and venerable Senior Warden, Samuel R. Martin,

And Whereas our long and pleasant association with him in our church work has endeared him to us,

And Whereas his loyalty to the church, and his untiring devotion to the cause of Christianity entitles him to our humble recognition and appreciation,

Therefore, Be it resolved by the vestry of St. Ann's P. E. Church, that we, the members of the same, fully recognize the long-continued and faithful services to the church, of the deceased;

Resolved further, that we realize that "a pillar of the church," indeed, has fallen:

Resolved further, that it is but fitting, right and proper, that we spread upon the records of our church, as a memorial, our appreciation of our deceased brother's activities in life; as a citizen he was zealously patriotic, and ever true to his democratic principles; as a churchman he was loyal to her tenets and teachings, a generous supporter to her worldly needs, and a regular attendant upon her services and devotions; a Christian gentleman in its fullest sense. As a parent and husband was always fair, just and considerate. His long, healthful and peaceful years are a testimony to his pure and chaste life, which we all know so well he lived.

Resolved further, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our parish records, that a copy be furnished the family of the deceased, and that a copy be furnished our local papers, and the church papers.

Vestry of St. Ann's Church,
New Martinsville, W. Va.

MRS. STEPHEN VAN RENNELAER THAYER

We are meeting today under the shadow of a great sorrow, in the loss to the Massachusetts Branch and the whole Church, of our former President, Mrs. Thayer.

As we think of her long and loving service as President and Vice-President, her steadfastness, her loyalty, her abiding faith, we give thanks for her good example.

With a friendship which was gracious, she drew people to love the work, and her fidelity inspired and led us, while her boundless charity with our failings spurred us to better service.

Her loss would be irreparable were we not sure that her gracious influence will abide with us. May we all be endued with her spirit as we try to follow in her footsteps.

To her family we would offer sincerest sympathy.

Resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family and the Church papers.

FRANCIS M. BERRY

On the twenty-ninth day of April, 1919, Francis M. Berry, for thirty years a Vestryman of Saint Clement's Church, Philadelphia, entered into Life Eternal. Mr. Berry was singularly devoted to his parish and for him the Catholic religion was a vital reality. Quiet, modest and unassuming he was the embodiment of simple Christian goodness. The Rector, Wardens and Vestrymen of Saint Clement's Church, desire to record their deep appreciation of his many years of faithful and loving service, the sincerity of his life and the true excellence of his character.

May he rest in Peace.

CHARLES S. HUTCHINSON, Rector.
CALEB F. WRIGHT,
Secretary of the Vestry.

Reg. Trade Mark

THE present is a particularly opportune time to lay in a supply of Towels, Sheets, Pillow Cases and other housekeeping Linens for the town house and the country home.

We cannot emphasize too strongly the impossibility of lower prices on Linens for another year at least. The destruction of machinery in Belgium and the failure to plant flax in Russia, make it certain that the world's supply of Linens will be far short of the demand for a long time to come

BISHOP PAGE who has been unusually successful in his ministry to children, contributes this week an article on "Church Worship for Children."
A form of service for a Church School, which Bishop Page used at St. Paul's Church, Chicago, has been published and can be obtained from the bishop. Grace L. Robinson, author of the article "The Unbroken Hammer" is a churchwoman of Rensselaer, New York. In the letter that accompanied the article, she writes: "Until the war came, my life was that of a student and teacher of German. In the light of what I learned in those years, much of which was only partly understood then, I see some things now more clearly than I could otherwise have done. A great deal in German literature and history takes on a different meaning from what I used to see. And I have felt that, because of the insight into German character and achievement which I have been able to get, it is now my business to help some who may not have had occasion to realize these things as deeply, see somewhat of their meaning. I tried once to teach German culture. Now I must try, when I can, to show the fallacy of that culture and the danger there is in anything short of a complete breaking of the German spirit." The Rev. H. Adeye
Prichard, M. A. Oxon., is the rector of St. Mark's Church, Mt. Kisco, New York. There is a moral in The Rev.
A. D. Snively's article, "Army Paper Work," which we publish this week, that some of our bishops and other clergy may take to heart. Lieutenant Snively resigned the rectorship of St. Philip's Church, Easthampton, Massachusetts, to go overseas with the A. E. F. We take pleasure in sharing with the readers of THE CHURCHMAN who enjoyed our eight year-old contributor's article on fishing in our issue of a fortnight ago, the author's receipt for his modest honorarium.

"Dear Mr. Smith,

I thank you very much for the $3.00, the Article looks very well in printing, and it was perfectly great to have you except it, and I have decided to send all my articles to the CHURCHMAN.
Thank you for the happy summer, and I hope you will have one to,
The CHURCHMAN is the best Magazine that was ever published.

Your loving friend,
H. B. WASHBURN, JR."

York, and St. Luke's Parish, Somers, New York, on June 1. He administered the Holy Communion and preached in the morning at St. Luke's Somers. In the afternoon he took part in the services and preached in St. James'. On Saturday afternoon preceding, a reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Russell at the rectory in North Salem, which was largely attended by the parishioners of both parishes together with many friends in the village and in neighboring towns. A substantial purse containing gold coin was presented.
Mr. Russell in his advanced years is in the enjoyment of good health.

THE REV. J. J. CLOPTON has entered upon his new duties as general missionary of the Diocese of Lexington. His new address is 139 Market Street, Lexington, Kentucky. During May in the discharge of his present office, he traveled eight hundred and fifty miles, took part in twelve services and touched fourteen towns. Mr. Clopton for five years was rector of the parish in Cape Girardeau, Missouri. The Cape Girardeau papers gave high praise to Mr. Clopton's work when he left his former charge. His daughter, Miss Irene Clopton, who has aided her father as organist and choir-mistress, came in for her mead of praise at the same time.

A LOVE FUND

TECHNICALLY speaking, within a few weeks we shall have no enemies. Our affections and impulses will be changed from a war basis to the peace status. Government officials will permit any Christian to love anybody towards whom his heart may warm. The Christian religion will be given the legal right to function as its romantic impulses may inspire it to do. Public opinion, however, is not so lenient and forgiving a taskmaster as is the censor. The war is over. But hate still lives—all kinds of hate. The intolerance which war always creates will not cease with the signing of the treaty. It is growing apace every day. How many millions is it that the Methodists and Presbyterians are raising for the spread of the Kingdom of God? How many millions does the Episcopal Church plan to put into its coffers for the glory of God? The figure is a staggering one. The Churches do not need those millions nearly so much as they need something else. There is another fund that must be immediately raised in Christendom, if this world is to be made a delightful place for men to inhabit. We are in sore need of a great fund of good-will. We need the spirit of tolerance and love. We need the spirit of trust. Giving money is an easy way out of every difficulty. Spending money is a slovenly way of speeding the Kingdom, if we spend nothing else. For five long, bitter years the world has been wiping out its fund of good-will. Its treasury of love is depleted. Christians and non-Christians have been destroying the bonds of affection that make for happiness and growth. It has been a costly, ghastly business from beginning to end. One shudders as one contemplates the havoc it has wrought. No man knows today how great that havoc is. But one thing every Christian does know or ought to know. Only good-will and love can rear a better world out of this ruin.

We need, distressingly we need, a fund of love. Every churchman, every citizen can start the fund going. Let it roll up till it redeems the nations. Before we can get very far with that fund, some of us, most of us, must learn new habits of mind and heart. Suspicion must stop. We must be willing to trust the motives of people who differ from us. We must be willing to listen to some people whom we have not permitted to tell us what they mean.

If the world is to be rebuilt, we must change the thoughts of our hearts. Christian love must rebuild the world that hate has torn to fragments.

THE WORLD'S HOUSE CLEANING

THE season of house cleaning is never one of exalted optimism. Before we set about the task of turning things inside out and exposing the seamiest side of our domesticities things look better than they really are. We might go on a little longer in comfort and with a fair show of decency. But when the job of exposure and renovation is actually under way and corners, closets, carpets and walls open to the sunlight their hidden grime, then we begin to lose heart. To face the whited sepulchre state of existence which we had been leading is a shocking revelation. The more vehement the will to expose and cleanse, the worse appears our former state of indecency and uncleanness. House cleaning time is never a season of spiritual satisfaction. But it is a glorious hour, nevertheless, of righteous energy and self-respect. Ultimately, if the good-will persists, the house is left in our hands swept and garnished—a thing of cleanliness and order.

The world at present is going through just such a house cleaning. And we, its inhabitants, are in much the same state of irritability as the family that is trying to keep its calm and high resolves while paper hangers, painters and scrub women mingle intimately in the home circle. Human nature, being what it is, cannot at one and the same hour cultivate the will to clean and the will to see only the brighter side. We suspect that the wave of spiritual depression, which has been rolling in upon us since the signing of the armistice, is quite normal; it ought to be understood and discounted. Europe has been turned upside down and inside out. The dust that lay in the dark corners has been swept bravely into the very centre of the rooms that once looked clean and tidy. We suspected that the dirt was there, but we did not know how much was there and how badly it would look in the daylight. Now we know and perhaps we know the worst. There is chaos, there is disordered routine; at times we doubt whether we can ever get the house to rights again. But it is, we must remember, a noble, wholesome task we have set about. It would help us out of our depression were we to remember that disordered nerves and pessimism are quite normal states of mind during house cleaning. Things look worse than they are. And they will look better more quickly than we believe it to be possible when the cleaners are busy at their noisy and disheveled tasks.

DIOCESAN CONVENTIONS AND THE LEAGUE

THERE has been no instance, we believe, of a resolution endorsing the League of Nations being defeated at a diocesan convention. Not only in our Church but in conventions of other Churches, a resolution favoring the league needed only to be presented to be adopted. The league has had smooth sailing in nearly all the church conventions.

One must not undervalue the meaning and importance of this unanimity of opinion concerning a league of nations. It is hearty testimony to the fact that the Churches want a world peace, that they believe in the efficacy of international control of war and that they also believe that now is the time to make effective such control. Resolutions are not very deadly weapons to aim against an enemy but if they represent intelligent and forceful conviction they indicate reserves of power that may decide the battle. Do the resolutions which our diocesan conventions and other church organizations have been passing with few opposing votes mean that the overwhelming majority of church members throughout America are intelligently and forcefully behind the League of Nations? We do not think so. We think that not one vote out of a hundred that is cast in these conventions for the league means anything more than that the voter believes in peace, hates war and would like to see the nations of the world get together to formulate some practical means of reducing the causes of war. If the vote means no more than that, the resolution which the voter endorses by his "aye" ought to be so framed that the supporters of the resolution will not be invited to pass hasty judgment upon matters which belong within the province of the most expert statesmanship.

The League of Nations, which will come before the Senate of the United States with the peace treaty for ratification, ought, in the opinion of THE CHURCHMAN, to be decided upon its merits as a document of political expediency. We doubt whether our diocesan conventions are fitted to weigh, after a brief discussion, the political expediency of the league,—especially before anybody in America knows precisely what the terms of peace will be and to what the League of Nations, if adopted by us, will commit the United States.

It ought to trouble some of the people who are voting "yes" with their eyes shut for any kind of league that is handed over the international counter that intelligent liberals are questioning whether there is more evil than good in what we have been pleased to call the League of Nations. It certainly is not the great adventure in political idealism for which we have all been clamoring. So far as we may judge from what we are permitted to know about its details, a Christian may with propriety question both its political and its Christian merit. The old school of statesmen in Europe have a right to be happy that an offensive and defensive alliance, with America drawn in, has been lifted to such an alluring moral altitude as that on which the League of Nations is now pinnacled.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

MR. HICKSON'S MISSION OF HEALING

DURING the past fortnight Trinity Chapel has been the scene of the most remarkable mission, perhaps, ever held in New York. Day by day a steadily increasing number of sick men, women and children have been passing in and out of the chapel, making their way to the chancel rail to receive laying on of hands by a layman, with the earnest expectation of receiving cure of their bodily ills and comfort and refreshment of soul. No one could enter the chapel during the mission and witness without deep emotion what has been going on there. Children with withered limbs, with eyes that have never opened to the light of day, have been carried by their mothers or fathers to the altar, soldiers in uniform, young men and old men, women with the story of suffering written in their faces have gone devoutly to kneel while a layman lays his hands upon their heads and asks of the Christ the gift of healing for mind and body.

What has been especially notable in this mission of healing is the sympathetic attention which it has attracted from the daily press. It is not easy to get the great New York dailies to give front page stories to church news, but nearly every paper in New York has carried from one to two columns on Mr. Hickson's mission. These reports have, all of them, been written in the most reverent mood.

Mr. Hickson disclaims any connection between his method and psycho-therapy. He does not use suggestion. He does not claim to heal. He claims merely to be a vehicle of the healing power that Christ has given to His Church. Through his faith in Christ, Christ heals through him. It is this striking faith in our Lord's command to heal that has made the mission in Trinity Chapel an experience unique in the memory of churchmen in New York. Mr. Hickson's unwavering faith in the veritable presence of Christ has certainly inspired the eager, reverent attendants at the mission with an awareness of their Master which they had not felt before.

THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT

THE suffrage amendment now waits ratification by the states. If two-thirds of the states ratify, woman's suffrage becomes the law of the land. We congratulate the women who have won the vote. America has, in keeping with her best traditions, accomplished the reform by orderly processes. Woman suffrage is as good as an accomplished fact throughout the civilized world. CHURCHMAN readers will be interested to read in this issue the document concerning legislation to be proposed at the next General Convention which is being passed around for the signatures of churchmen. Women are asking larger constitutional rights in the Church. They will get them.

WORK AMONG IMMIGRANTS

IT is welcome news that the Board of Missions has appointed a secretary for work among immigrants. The Rev. Thomas Burgess will enter upon this work early this month. People acquainted with the need have been impatiently awaiting the board's action in this regard. The work of foreign missions comes, in a very large degree, right to our door; we need not seek it afar. We hope that Mr. Burgess will shortly tell our readers something about the scope of his work and his plans. The whole Church will watch eagerly and sympathetically this important work.

BREAKING THE HAMMER

WE publish in this week's CHURCHMAN an article by Grace Louise Robinson, "The Unbroken Hammer." Miss Robinson has portrayed, strikingly, what we think millions of people throughout the world feel in their dread of Germany. It is this dread, quite naturally and pardonably, which is responsible for the severity of the terms of peace. The wages of Germany's sin is just this fear and distrust which her conduct has aroused. This attitude of her enemies must be sympathetically appraised. But on the other hand, Miss Robinson's assertion that "Wilson and Lloyd George, Pershing and Haig, Foch himself, and all the hundreds of millions of men whom they represent are not giants enough to break the hammer. It will be a force as long as Germans are Germans" has a double thrust. Thor will never break his own hammer. Christ alone has the power to do that. A war, no matter how successful it may be, cannot end the war. Love is the only power that finally can break the rule of force. We agree with Miss Robinson that no power of the Allies can make Germany safe for the world. Neither will any power of the Allies make their own rule safe for the world. Christ alone is fitted to make power beneficent.

HUNTING THE REDS

THE hunt for Bolsheviks has begun in earnest. The New York Tribune is happy. It has dipped its pen in ink with a renewed fervor and its gospel of straight Americanism is to be preached from the housetops where before, by comparison, it was whispered only in corners. Not only are the long-haired, bearded Slavs to be hauled from their hiding places, tried and shot or shot and then tried, but parlor Bolsheviks, men with soft collars and locks combed straight back from their white foreheads, are to be hustled out of their padded armchairs, pilloried by public opinion and given the cut direct by their friends and acquaintances. Editors' phrases are to be read, marked and inwardly digested by watchful censors. So shall we rid the land of the Red peril.

There are two sure methods of spreading false doctrine. One is an excessive publicity given to it by its opponents. The other is persecution and suppression. If a wave of tyrannical suppression passes over America, as it bids fair to do at the present writing, of every form of propaganda that is not orthodox, we shall have within a decade the same kind of terrorism that Russia enjoyed under the czar. By all means search out and hang the bomb throwers. But we are playing with fire when we begin to suppress what excited newspapers and congressmen call "agitation." Some of these men and apparently some of these newspapers are not aware that most of the doctrines which are branded as Bolshevism in America have been openly held and taught by millions of voters in Germany, France, Italy and England for more than a generation. Whom shall we permit to define "agitation"? Not every congressman eager to write his patriotism into the Congressional Record.

THE MINISTRY OF HEALTH

ENGLAND is making a systematic campaign to lift the health level of her citizens. The draft board revealed in England what the draft board brought to light in America, the dangerous number of C 3 class in the nation. It is really a sad reflection upon the intelligence of a people that we should talk as much as our modern industrial nations do talk about efficiency, economy and a scientific civilization while we give so little attention to the human machine. America, too, needs a ministry of health. If our present civilization is to justify its methods, it must do so by making good its claims of economic soundness and its reverence for science. We are wearing out the most valuable industrial machinery we possess, the human body, at a reckless rate. If short hours, good housing, good food make longevity, they are a good investment.

THE BOY SCOUT DRIVE

THE drive is the order of the day. We begin to expect it like a change of weather. It is a cheerful, friendly way of raising money and there seems no end of money waiting to be raised. The Boy Scout drive for a million members at a dollar each is one of the drives which everybody welcomes and wishes well. The Boy Scout movement is wholesome and sane. It already has a record which does it honor but it has only begun to develop its capacity for service and for promoting the happiness and well-being of our boys. The destiny of the world of tomorrow lies with the boys of today. America is determined to rear a generation of clean, healthy, normal, patriotic boys. The scout movement stands for that. We wish the scouts success in the big drive.

THE CHIOSCARO OF BOLSHEVISM

STEPHEN GRAHAM, who has so thoroughly dissected and discussed the religious psychology of the Russian peasant, has not yet ventured to explain why the devout country people of Russia allow their Church to be subject to a persecution not less frightful than that which the Armenians have suffered from the Turks.

The financial foundation of Russian Bolshevism is also a phenomenon that requires illumination from the expert. It is easy to understand how printing presses can supply legal tender to the interior of Russia, but it is not so easy to explain how Trotzky and Lenine are able to finance on an actual cash basis their extensive propaganda outside Russia. One hears of the Bolsheviks opening accounts of millions of roubles in banks at Berne, where fiat money would hardly be popular as sight drafts. The propaganda in Switzerland, which included the subsidizing of newspapers and the publication of large numbers of pamphlets, was so successful that it brought about an internal popular ferment in the way of a strike, which required the Swiss Government to mobilize 60,000 men ready to repress the outbreak. In Stockholm, another centre of Bolshevik propaganda, a Russian agent of the Trotzky regime began his activities by hiring a building at a rental of over $100,000 a year, with an office staff of eighty assistants. Innumerable packages of literature were brought over by vessels from Russia for circulation in Sweden. The Stockholm banks were filled with Bolshevik money. One bank alone had on its accounts credited to the Bolshevik agents about a million dollars. Couriers passed to and fro from one country to another with suit cases filled with marketable bank notes. Some times these agents brought with them artistic treasures from the Hermitage Museum in Petrograd to turn into cash. One Soviet envoy carried with him into Sweden three hundred and ten pounds of platinum. Sweden's tenderness towards the Russian Bolsheviks can easily be understood when one bears in mind their financial advantages in maintaining good relations with the Russian revolutionists. At Copenhagen the Bolshevik agents have been far from unpopular. Danish capitalists, it is said, are getting valuable concessions from the Trotzky envoys. Advantageous propositions have been made in Copenhagen provided Bolshevik propaganda is allowed.

THE WAR AND MISSIONS IN CHINA

BY EDWARD M. MERRINS, M.D.

THE great war has set in motion forces and ideas which are bound to change, for weal or woe, the political, social and religious life of every nation. Violent revolutions have already occurred in some countries; in others, changes are proceeding more slowly and orderly, but in the end they may be not the less radical.

Confronted by the disturbing forces of these days, it is no longer possible even for the East to bend low before the blast in patient, deep disdain, preserving the inner life unchanged. China itself has been stirred deeply, not so much by the war, perhaps, as by the opening of the country to the manifold influences of western civilization during the years immediately preceding the war. The old religions are losing their power; the bonds of ancient social standards and customs are being broken; everywhere there is change, if not disintegration. And there is no prospect of a new and abiding order being soon established. The more conservative classes are still strong, but bewildered; those moving in the new paths seem to have no fixed goal. What the future may bring forth when the full influences of the war are felt, it is impossible to say. Consequently, statements concerning the effect of the war upon Christian missions in China can be descriptive only of the situation as it seems to be at present.

Apart from the thousands of coolies sent to Europe, not as belligerents but as manual laborers, China took very little part in the war and has scarcely been affected by it. Missionary ranks were thinned by those who volunteered for service in Europe and Siberia, and the fluctuations of monetary exchange have necessitated large additions to the financial appropriations for missions. Notwithstanding many difficulties, no important form of Christian work has been even temporarily abandoned.

As to the religious and other results of the war, it may be well to consider each stratum of Chinese society separately. Among the millions of the poor and uneducated little intelligent interest was felt in the war. To them, western nations are still strange and hardly distinguishable from each other. The rapacity of their own officials, the cruelty and robberies of the rabble soldiery, the general lawlessness and other social troubles of their own, concern them far more deeply than a distant war the causes of which it is difficult for them to understand. What they need is good government, amelioration of their hard lot, education and true religion. A large proportion of our church members come from this class, and their children are being educated in our elementary schools.

The middle and wealthier classes, educated, and with some knowledge of foreign affairs, took a livelier interest in the war but solely from the Chinese point of view. Their sympathies were generally with Germany,

The writer of this interesting article is a physician on the staff of St. John's University, Shanghai. In response to a request from The Churchman, he has given us in the present paper a thoughtful account of how the world war has stirred even China to its depths. This article was, of course, written before China was aroused and agitated by the concessions made to Japan at the Paris conference.—Editor.

for they hate and fear Japan, and the Allied Powers were with Japan whereas Germany was against it. However, since the enunciation of President Wilson's famous fourteen points and the success of the Allies, their opinions have altered, and they are now expecting great things from the peace conference. As some of their demands are not very practicable, a measure of disappointment no doubt awaits them, and for a time they may be less friendly to all foreigners, but this is not likely to affect missions very seriously as they know the value of our hospitals and educational institutions. The students in our high schools and colleges come from this class.

As to the governing classes, the vast horde of officials, actual and expectant, with their hungry retinues, the war has left them unchanged; it has not kindled a spark of the unselfish patriotism which has done so much to redeem and strengthen the weaker nations of Europe. With but few exceptions Chinese officials are either weak, incompetent, unpractical, or corrupt. Under its present form of government the nation is floundering helplessly; and there is little prospect of immediate improvement as it is plainly evident that the ancient religions and customs of the Chinese give them no firm anchorage in dealing with the problems, external and internal, which have arisen since the country was forced open to the influence of western civilization. To work out her salvation new ideals are necessary, and the spiritual wisdom and power to enable those ideals to be realized.

China's need of help is the more urgent as two menacing clouds loom on the horizon in consequence of the war. The first is the spread of Bolshevism. By some foreigners this danger is regarded as negligible, but there is no tremendous difference between the Chinese of Manchuria and Mongolia, and the Russians of Siberia; and if people become Bolsheviks from want of food, in what part of the world are there such hungry multitudes living from hand to mouth as in China? It is interesting to read that as long ago as 450 B. C. China had to contend with an extreme form of socialism. According to its most important representative, Mih Teh, a contemporary of Confucius, the commonwealth was to be placed in the foreground; the highest moral act of the individual was to be found in making sacrifices for all; art was to be cast away as luxury; simplicity was insisted upon; also equality and indiscriminate love. Everyone, princes not excepted, was to grow his own rice and make his own clothes. The sturdy commonsense of the Chinese turned away from it. Will their descendants be equally wise?

The other danger is the rapid exploitation of the material resources of the country by foreign nations, and the evils to which this will directly and indirectly give rise. As soon as business in the West flows in more normal channels, the trade commercial competition in China will be very keen. All kinds of industrial enterprises will be started. Among the vast numbers of Chinese employed, many will be women and children. Unless the conditions in which they live and labor, their hours of work, wages, etc., are regulated by the humane laws and regulations now happily in force in western countries, the fate of the poor and defenceless will be most deplorable. This raises the question, what will be the character of the civilization which emerges from this commercial union of the East and the West? Also the deeper question, will Christianity in China be able to subdue unto itself not only all that is alien to it in the religious and social life of the Chinese, but also all that is hostile to it in the trade and commerce of the West?

From this brief sketch it will be seen that the war has increased immensely the tasks and responsibilities of missions. It rests with them to see that the whole structure of Chinese life is built upon spiritual foundations. Our own Church has always had a large and generous conception of its mission. Practically we have been saying to the Chinese: "Sent by the Church in America we come to you in the spirit of friendship and service. We bring the best we have—knowledge, science, medicine, and that which we prize most of all, our religion. We hope you will accept this religion for your own sake; if you cannot or will not, still we desire to help you." Many other missions are actuated by this same purpose which reaches beyond the individual and family to minister to the nation, as in Red Cross service, famine relief, plague prevention, public health education, etc. It is a mistake to suppose that the figures and diagrams of the statistician can set forth adequately the work and influence of the Christian Church in China.

In further illustration of a national necessity which missionary service will help to meet, consider the contemplated League of Nations, which should certainly include China. If the league has no other basis than a mutual hatred of war and community of commercial interests, it will never stand any severe strain; to be effective it must derive its strength from the sincere conviction that all men are brethren because all are children of God. It is hoped that not a few of the young men now returning from Europe, where they have fought heroically for the preservation of humanity's highest ideals, may see their way to complete their service in the way of peace, by coming out as missionaries to help the Chinese to realize the same ideals through the Christian religion.

Happily, the war has not affected adversely the native Church. At first we feared that the spectacle of Christian nations engaged in such a frightful struggle with each other would occasion moral perplexity; but the entry of Great Britain into it in defence of a small and weak nation, and the high, unselfish purposes of America, have helped them to see that in the cause of righteousness and liberty war is still necessary. The growth of our Chinese Church from the time when it struggled hard to obtain a foothold when confronted by prejudice, derision and often persecution, until it became large and well organized into three dioceses, and then its union with the English and Canadian branches to form a strong, united Church well on the way to self-government and self-support, all in the course of two generations, is very wonderful. In the reconstruction of China it will take a most important part.

Of course the war has made missionaries alert to adopt all reasonable suggestions tending to promote the growth and efficiency of the native Church, but little that is constructive has been forthcoming although there has been very much criticism. In a prize essay on "The Result of the War Upon Missionary Work," published in Shanghai by a secular magazine, it is said that the war has taught us one great lesson: that the Christianity which counts today is a simple belief in Jesus, rather than a belief in theories which men have worked out about Jesus; and we are asked whether the things which separate the Churches are of any significance. This is too large a subject to enter upon here. Suffice to say that Chinese Christians in refusing to conform to the traditions, symbols, ceremonies and practices of idolatrous religions must be able to give reasons for the faith that is in them, and in doing this they necessarily formulate a theology. The war itself has raised questions which can be answered satisfactorily only in the light of the deepest truths of the Christian religion. Unable to give reasons for their faith, it is, and will be, difficult for Christians to maintain their ground, and they cannot have much influence over others. Our own mission will probably go on in the old paths with the unshaken conviction that if the Church is to be a saving power in China its members must be well-instructed, and as an organization it must stand foursquare on sure foundations. At the same time there is no reason why all missions in China should not unite in some kind of federation for the purpose of speaking with one strong, united voice on all questions affecting the welfare of the nation as a whole, as in the recent anti-opium movement.

To sum up: at present the war has been followed by no apparent changes in China; but there is a weak government and much lawlessness, and there may be great political, social, and industrial changes in the near future. Missions have been weakened by the war, but the work has been maintained and the Chinese Church is growing steadily. Reinforcements are necessary to enable them to cope with the immensely increased tasks and responsibilities which the regeneration of the country lays upon them.

THE LITTLE STEEPLES

BY ARTHUR WALLACE PEACH

THE little steeples whitely rise
Among the dreaming hills,
Far seen by travellers who ride
The roads by wood and rills.

At dawn they catch the silver gleam
Upon the mountain crest;
At dusk they sear the crimson glow
Of altars in the west.

The toiler in the field looks up
Where wind-touched harvests toss
To see the sunshine tint with gold
The simple Norman cross.

O little steeples of the hills,
Amid the changing years
You stand for faith that leads to peace
Beyond our toil and tears!

CHURCH WORSHIP FOR CHILDREN

BY THE RT. REV. HERMAN PAGE, D.D.

AN article written some years ago, explaining the decadence of religion in a New England town, gave as one of the chief causes the emphasis laid on the Sunday School. In other words, the loyalty of the boys and girls was given to the Sunday School rather than to the Church, and when they outgrew the Sunday School the Church had no interest for them. When I was rector of a church in Fall River, a generation ago, I was profoundly impressed with the number of men who never attended church, but who showed me with great pride the prizes which they had won for regular attendance and faithful work at their Sunday Schools in England. Later, in Chicago, I was distressed by the fact that when the morning Sunday School session was finished, not only the children, but also the teachers flocked home just as the other people were coming to church. In short, faithful attendance at Sunday School by no means produces loyalty to the Church; and the Church is the institution which alone can maintain loyalty to Christ throughout one's life. It is doubtless for this reason that many people, even including some clergy, are not particularly enthusiastic about the Sunday School. They realize that it often supplants the Church. There are others who feel that the real way out of the difficulty is to return to the good old habit of having the children go to church with their elders. Much is to be said for this plan. The Church is peculiarly a home institution, and it is true that the Sunday School can in no way take the place of the family pew. On the other hand, the Sunday School is with us. It is necessary at the present time for the purpose of giving our children a religious education. It is the habit of modern life to turn over education in most of its forms to agencies outside of the home. We may as well make up our minds that the Sunday School is here to stay and do the best we can to make it the best possible agency for training children in loyalty to Christ and the Church.

The obvious way of solving the problem is to take the children of the Sunday School regularly to church. All education is largely a problem of training in good habits, those habits which we wish to carry through life. For maintaining and developing the spiritual life nothing can be more important than the habit of regular church-going and worship. Without this the religious life quickly goes to seed.

So in connection with St. Paul's Sunday School in Chicago we planned a number of years ago for a regular Sunday morning service for the members of the Sunday School. Teachers with their classes assembled in the church at 9:30. We had a Prayer Book service, but it was arranged to meet the needs of the children. In the first place everything was done to render the service as carefully and beautifully as for the adults later on. The altar was carefully vested, the clergy didn't simply wear their cassocks, but were vested as at the later service. A children's choir was organized and vested, and there were regular processional and recessional hymns as at the later service. The point to be emphasized here is not that this particular method is desirable, because in many small churches such a choir would not be possible; but that the children should be given a service as carefully and beautifully rendered as is given to their parents. Too much importance cannot be attached to the music. It is doubtful whether any phase of religious education is more important. Familiar hymns and chants will exercise a religious power in the lives of men and women long after much of the so-called definite teaching is forgotten. The various canticles should be sung again and again until the children are thoroughly familiar with them. They are easy to learn, easy to sing and are peculiarly a heritage of the Church. Hymns should be chosen which are adapted to the mind of the child. There are plenty of these in the hymnal, noble in both sentiment and music, which in later years everyone is glad to have for a spiritual possession. These hymns should be repeated over and over again until they are learned. The same principle holds good in regard to the psalms. Such psalms as the first, the fifteenth and the twenty-third should be read and re-read until the children know them. If a lesson is read it should always be one that contains a story, because stories alone make an appeal to children. Lists of such lessons have been made. Usually there is nothing better than the gospel for the day. Lists of good hymns and psalms for use at children's services have been made and can be easily obtained.

In St. Paul's, Chicago, we used a shortened form of either Morning or Evening Prayer, following a careful plan so that the children would become familiar with the canticles and versicles of both services. This service proved itself adaptable to all kinds of children, the smallest as well as the oldest. To the latter it was a shortened form of Morning or Evening Prayer, but as the psalm and the lesson were always short, there was sufficient movement in the service to keep the little children interested. Of course, the little ones were put in the front pews, where they could see everything; and there was always something to occupy their attention. The amount of disorder and restlessness among them was negligible. The offering was made an important feature of the service, and was duly presented by two of the smaller and two of the older boys. If possible the choir sang an offertory anthem. Usually an address was made and the notices were given out in due form. On the first Sunday in the month the ante-Communion service was read—with the commandments, epistle and gospel. In many parishes where children's services are held there is a regular celebration of the Holy Eucharist for the children. Here again it is a question of training in habits of worship.

The above-described services at St. Paul's used to take from thirty to thirty-five minutes and all of the clergy who have conducted them have felt that they more than justified the time and thought spent upon them. Of course, they may be varied in many ways. For instance, I was present not long ago when most of the children's service was given over to a service for the Public Baptism of Children. This was in the line of habituating the children to the customs and sacraments of the Church.

The important thing is to bring the children into the church for the worship of God Sunday by Sunday, to habituate them to the services of the Prayer Book, to teach them the music of the Church, and in every way to make them feel at home in their Father's house. Incidentally, it may be noted that the educational value of a good church service for children is very great. Following the five lines of education put forth in the Christian Nurture Series, they gain much information in regard to the Church and the Bible. They do much memory work in learning hymns, prayers, the commandments, responses, etc. They learn to worship, and Christian service is kept before them, especially in the offering, and they are trained in loyalty to the Church by a happy and constant use of her offices.

A practical difficulty that many clergy feel is the lack of time for such a service. In most Sunday Schools there is an opening service of some length, and also a short closing service. The time required for these will give ample opportunity for one good opening service in church. This service may be made longer or shorter, according to the conditions of the school. The important thing is to have a dignified churchly service of some sort, using the Prayer Book, and have it in church.

THE UNBROKEN HAMMER

BY GRACE LOUISE ROBINSON

FORGED in Asgard, a pagan heaven, for a heathen god, Thor's Hammer is unbroken. Armistice or no armistice, peace conference or not, that Hammer is unbroken. Let the world know that, and let it not try to forget the war, which is but one of the tragedies made by the Hammer. In spirit, which is the spirit, the temper, of the German people, that Hammer is a force now, as much as it was three thousand years ago, and farther back than that, in the dim past of Teutonic antiquity.

There have been heroes whose lives have been spent in trying to break the force of that Hammer. Those heroes live today, in history; and the Hammer lives, too, wherever a German unconverted to the doctrine of brotherhood with the world lives. The struggle is still on. The German force beaten is not broken. It is only waiting.

Back in the fifth century, shrewd old Bishop Ulfilas, apostle of gentleness, leader of the West Goths, the great missionary hero of his time, strove against the power of Teutonic force, its battle-lust and power-passion. When for grewsome mystic ceremonies, with sacrifices of blood in midnight forests, he gave the Goths the Christian Church with its hymns of love and peace, when he led the warriors across the Danube and taught them the quiet pursuits of agriculture, he hoped that the power of Thor's Hammer, among the tribes he knew, was broken. Thinking of their militaristic tendencies, when he evolved the Gothic language and wrote the history making Translation of the Bible he omitted the books of Kings I and II, saying: "The people love a good fight too well."

Little could the brave old hero of the faith have thought that, nearly two thousand years later, the world would have only the same to say of the people he had led and served and taught. The same, and worse, for the modern world sees, as Ulfilas could not, that it is not a good fight which the descendants of his Goths have made. It is a dirty and evil fight, far away from the beauty of righteousness which the gentle bishop taught them beside the Danube.

For he died; and the love of force lived and ruled. The Hammer, unbroken, although its ancient religious form was gone, persisted along with the observances of the new religion. Thor still thundered in the early Bavarian and Austrian wars, in all the uprisings of the Old High German period.

The seventh century came and with it St. Boniface, to make his adventures of great living among the western and northern tribes. When, in the Black Forest, on a December midnight, he came upon a band of heathen worshipers and flung aside the priest's iron hammer, crushing it on the stone altar, he, too, hoped that it was really broken. A hundred thousand followers he gained. And then he died, an old man and a martyr, in a Frisian swamp. Like Ulfilas, his spirit lives. But so does the heathen Hammer, the type of force, of selfishness, of cruelty. The Hohenstaufen and Hapsburg wars of the Middle German period are only the expression of that spirit.

Luther came, to be the religious liberator of the sixteenth century and of the world in times to come. But, although he said, regretfully, that he often had to be thunder and lightning when he would rather be something gentle and lovely, he could not break the force of the pagan Hammer, of the ancient worship of might. Sheltered in the Wartburg, he wrote "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" and the Translation of the Bible into modern High German, evolving, as did Ulfilas, a language form for the expression of his thought in something all the people could understand. But outside the age-old castle, in the aggressive, power-loving, mind-controlling lives of his countrymen, the heathen Hammer still beat its hateful rhythm of force.

Fliedner came, and taught anew to a world full of need the beauty of lowly service, of unselfishness, of sacrifice. Out from Kaiserswerth, with its symbol of the dove of service, went the deaconess movement, to help all men. In every land, the protestant sisterhood built its homes of mercy and trained its women to self-forgetful helpfulness.

But it was still Thor's land in Germany. Army and rulers, society and the national culture, worshiped force. Frederick the Great, Count von Moltke, Bismarck, and those later men, unnameable now, emperor and princes and generals, all were Thor's men, who wore their very conspicuous Christianity, a lamblike robe, over the Hohenzollern and Nietzschean monster-life of world-lust and of superman intolerance.

The Hammer was not broken at Château-Thierry.

It was not broken when the whole Hindenburg line went smash.

It was not broken when the armistice was signed.

It was not broken when the great ships came crawling sullenly out of their lair in the Baltic, and the dragons from their nests in the Atlantic, to give themselves up ignominiously in the Firth of Forth.

It was not broken when one nationalistic boss, claiming divine rights, was put down from his seat and another, gabbling, parrot-fashion, of the rights of man, was put in that place. Militarist or socialist, aristocrat or Bolshevik, the German of today is Thor's man still, and will be forever, unless there is the most marvelous of conversions, which it will never do for the world to take on faith. In the heart of the Teuton, the Hammer lives, an unbroken force. He has prepared for peace as efficiently as he prepared for war, accepting what is, for the present, inevitable, but getting ready, in ways of intrigue and of apparent submission, for a renaissance of force, his force, the brute force and the selfishness of the pagan world in which the Hammer of the Gods was forged. The German of this very day and minute, at bay, even more, conquered, as the world sees him, is, in spirit, in Asgard, making ready for a time of his own which is coming. For his spirit is not broken.

Wilson and Lloyd George, Pershing and Haig, Foch himself, all these and the hundreds of millions of men whom they represent are not giants enough to break the Hammer. It will be a force as long as Germans are Germans, no matter how conquered and, ostensibly, controlled. Bound for Valhalla, their passport, to themselves, is in the magic Hammer, in the force of the inevitable of their untamed will, in the spirit of cruel fatality, the grinding power of a non-crushable ambition.

Therefore let the world stand still and think. Therefore let the world watch and pray and work that, in time of peace, the stage be not set for war again, and civilization made, once more, to anguish beneath pagan might. For the Hammer is unbroken. And it may yet again be Thor's day, forever, all over the world.

CAN PRAYERS BE WAIFS?

BY THE REV. H. ADYE PRICHARD, M.A. OXON.

TO whom do you say your prayers?

Napoleon is reported to have asked a group of atheistic professors amid the glory of a shining night upon the Mediterranean Sea, "Who was it, gentlemen, who made these stars?" We can have no doubt that, when Napoleon prayed, he prayed to the unknown maker of the stars. His very question is a prayer.

Cardinal Wolsey died of a broken heart, lamenting that he had served his king more loyally and more continuously than the Saviour whom he should have served unflinchingly. "If I had served God as diligently as I have done the king, He would not have given me over in my gray hairs." That confession was a prayer to his neglected Saviour.

These are two very different acts of prayer.

St. Paul said of a certain act of his life that he himself was not responsible for it, but the spirit of God that was in him. That is a very remarkable prayer. It was as though he said, giving honor where honor is due, that it was not the light of the sun that made the shadows upon the hills so beautiful, but the sun itself. It is a prayer to the source of light not to take away the glory of its gifts, because it and they are joined together by innumerable golden bands.

Thus three men, men of preeminent authority in their different streets of life, said their prayers. It is curious, perhaps, that they are so little alike in their expression. Yet it is not so curious, for they were very different men.

And the fact that each one prayed, and the way in which he prayed, tell us something vital about the nature of prayer. It answers for us the question—to whom do we say our prayers?

The fact is that each man prays to the personality which most nearly expresses the personality he desires, in his own life, to be.

A Napoleon, therefore, prays to the God of Power—the Maker, the great Architect, the Moulder, the source of all dynamic energy. He wishes to be the mighty one of the world. He yields his authority to none but him who will bestow greater authority still. A Wolsey prays to the God of Service—to the holy minister who went about doing good. He prays for the foundation of a life of sacrifice, whose authority comes from the very abandonment of all its claims. If we would have authority with God or man we must have service first. St. Paul prays to a God of the Heart—a living source of energy which transforms petty into supreme, drab into glorious. Its authority is the authority given by the submission of all the degrees and depths of man to a holy and inspired thing.

This is a Trinity—a Trinity of Gods. But there is nothing remarkable in that; nor has there ever been, despite the devious uncertainties of theologians. There is a trinity in the simplest thought—subject, predicate, and verb: there is a trinity in the meanest choice—this or that or nothing.

To whom, then, do you say your prayers?

I kneel down at my bedside, or I stand by the foam-flecked barriers of the sea—it matters very little how or when—and I visualize myself as I might be with all my own particular powers trained to the utmost, the meanest of my talents turned to genius. For once in my life I am, while I pray, what I would be: and it matters to no one whither my own particular gift of human nature leads me. It may be to God, the Almighty and Eternal—a prayer for might. It may be to my Saviour, that I may be like Him. It may be to the everlasting Spirit within me, that I may turn from all that is vile and menacing. It matters not to whom I pray. I ask for the development of my own particular gifts that I may use them in the good vineyards of the world. God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit! They will all answer me when I call—but I call upon one, not three, for the needs that press upon me now today.

What word of cheer, then, can we say to the man who prays and does not know to whom he prays?

A word of the deepest cheer. Unconsciously he is praying to the source whence his own most potent strength shall flow.

You pray to the power nearest yourself. Your prayer is not the same as another man's prayer; but it expresses yourself along those lines in which you yourself most crave expression. The penitent thief prays for honesty; the gossip for a new understanding of the ninth commandment. Your prayer is an endeavor to fulfill your own destiny: and your prayer gives you your chance of such fulfillment.

There is reality in all prayer. Napoleon could not breathe the words of St. Paul. And yet his prayer to him was real, and expressed the fulness of what he was. If he failed in his duty as a Christian it was because no one ever taught him to be obedient to the answer of his prayer.

As long as you are gaining, in your own self, a nearer approach to the heart of things, so long is your prayer rising in the channel where it belongs. It takes many men to make a world. It takes three Persons of the Godhead to make God. And, as you who are a banker can never be a silversmith, so you who know the Father can never wholly know the Son. That would be omniscience—which is beyond our sphere. We are finite in our extension, infinite in our intention.

We pray where we may be heard.

That is final and forever.

ARMY PAPER WORK

BY THE REV. A. D. SNIVELY

IN connection with the doings of the American military forces one hears much of the way in which army officers, especially the company commanders, are burdened with an endless amount of paper work. It is true that the commander of a company, no matter what other arduous duties are demanded of him, is expected to keep up with his paper work through thick and thin. If he has an efficient, wide-awake first sergeant, he is relieved of much of the detail of this work. But he must sign or initial every report, and make sure that it is correct. If there is anything wrong he is responsible and must take the blame. He cannot "pass the buck," as the saying goes, to the first sergeant or anyone else.

Every day the morning report must go to headquarters, showing just how many men of all ranks are with the company and available for duty, and why the other men are not available. Every day the sick report goes to the infirmary. Usually five or six other reports are required daily or weekly by battalion, regimental or higher headquarters. Requisitions for clothing and equipment, ration returns, and other reports and summaries are required in the course of the month and must go in on time. No excuses are accepted if the captain or the subordinate to whom he has entrusted the task forgets or delays to send in a report when it is due.

The same is true of correspondence. An inquiry received through military channels requires an immediate answer. Usually this can be given very simply in an indorsement in the required form placed at the foot of the original letter. This must, however, be made in duplicate or triplicate, depending upon the letter itself; one copy of course being retained for record. Sometimes a communication will have fifteen or twenty of these indorsements, showing the number of hands through which it has passed. But if a report is not submitted, or an inquiry answered, not within a reasonable time but immediately, the officer is likely to receive a letter from headquarters directing him to "explain by indorsement hereon" why this was not done. And if he does not succeed in showing in his reply that someone else was responsible, and not he, he is likely to suffer anything from confinement to camp for two weeks to a trial by court-martial.

Clergymen as a rule are notoriously unbusinesslike. And strange to say, laymen when engaged in church matters, wardens and vestrymen, for example, are often as bad or worse. We often hear it said that it would do our clergy good to have a little business training. Certainly it would be a fine thing if the seminaries could offer a practical course in church paper work and correspondence. And much as the red tape and formality of army paper work have been criticized, it would be even better if both clergymen and laymen could have the excellent training involved in having to handle it.

How much at sea the average parson would be in this respect, were he to find himself suddenly a commissioned officer in the army. Suppose he were to neglect the monthly return for his company as he neglects his parish report for the diocesan convention, how swift and sure would be his punishment! Suppose he were to put off referring to his first sergeant a newly required report, as he puts off ascertaining from his Sunday School superintendent the statistics required, or postpones figuring out the present number of his communicants! Suppose he were liable to a fine of two-thirds of his pay for six months, for not answering promptly a letter from his bishop, or for not answering at all the communication of some important diocesan committee!

It is as undesirable as it is impossible to introduce such military methods into the Church. But one would think that self-respect and a high sense of duty would do for the priest of God what military discipline does for the soldier and the standards of efficiency do for the business man. It is a pity that we do not realize without compulsion that it is just as necessary for the rector of a parish, or the layman engaged in church work to fill out reports and answer letters, to cultivate promptness and efficiency, as it is for the business man and the soldier.

In the kingdom of grace as in that of nature, failure is the rule, success the exception.—Tyrrell.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

INTENSIVE WEEK IN N. W. C. SCHEDULED FOR DECEMBER

Enthusiastic Endorsement of Nation-Wide Campaign

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS—Unanimous endorsement of the Nation-Wide Campaign and its call upon the entire Church to carry forward its purposes to a successful issue, was embodied in a resolution passed at the close of the national conference held here last week. Preceding this resolution was one offered by Mr. George C. Thomas of Baltimore recommending that a national campaign committee should be named. This resolution was the result of some heated debate on the preceding day in which Mr. Thomas and several others brought the charge that laymen were being ignored in the management of the campaign. Another resolution suggested provincial as well as diocesan surveys.

The Rev. Louis Wood at great length outlined the plans for the summer and the early winter for the campaign. He first suggested, however, that the little word if be entirely eliminated from the campaign vocabulary. Diocesan committees, diocesan conferences with members of the Chicago conference to lead them, regional conferences, instruction at the summer schools are all to lead through the period of preparation to the "Intensive Week" scheduled for December. Special speakers, on the analogy of the four-minute men, organized in teams of two, are to visit every parish and mission during the week preceding the Sunday in December when there is to be a visitation of fellowship for personal service in every church home in the country.

Besides Mr. Wood, speakers representing various church organizations addressed the conference. Many interesting facts were brought out. For example, Dr. Patton called attention to the statement made by a United States commissioner that the Church ought to spend half a million dollars a year on its eight great negro schools with their three thousand pupils, (twice as many as in Hampton and Tuskegee,) and to the fact that only $125,000 is spent on them. Dr. Gardner said that it was a miracle that five hundred thousand children come to Sunday School to be taught by untrained teachers, poor and uninteresting lessons. Canon Elmendorf said: "It is an extraordinary thing that the Church has left the care of her children to the state and to politicians." Bishop Wise urged the need of a church publicity bureau. From all the speakers the importance of the campaign was urged both from a point of view of spiritual awakening and of revision of inadequate methods of coping with serious problems.

New Editor for the Crozier

THE Rev. John Albert Williams, since 1909 responsible for the editorial work of the Crozier, Nebraska's famous diocesan monthly, announced in the last issue that he must lay down the pen. The Rev. Carl M. Worden succeeds him. Bishop Johnson, the Rev. Francis S. White and Bishop Wise were Mr. Williams' predecessors on the Crozier.

Presbyterians Discuss Church Unity

According to the report of the committee on evangelical reunion submitted to the Presbyterian General Assembly in St. Louis week before last, there is to be a large popular council on church union next year. This is in the hands of the committees formed at the meeting of fifteen communions in Philadelphia last winter. Apparently the General Assembly felt little grief over the Pope's refusal to take part in the world conference. On the other hand everyone seemed gratified to learn that at least the southern parts of the Greek Orthodox Church were willing to participate. One thousand dollars was voted towards the expenses of the proposed world conference.

New York Convention in September

The date of the special diocesan convention to elect a new bishop to succeed the late Bishop Greer has been called to meet in Synod House, New York City, on September 17 next.

Dr. Bartlett to Be Installed

GENEVA, NEW YORK—The Rev. Murray Bartlett, D.D., will be installed as president of Hobart College at the commencement on June 23. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached the preceding night by Bishop Brent, chancellor of the college and bishop of the dioceses.

Dr. Tinker Leaves City Mission

For some time it has been rumored that the Rev. Charles P. Tinker, D. D., for several years the able superintendent of the New York City Mission, would not continue his work in that arduous position any longer. It is now announced that a unanimous call to the rectorship of Grace Church, Nutley, New Jersey, has been extended to Dr. Tinker, and that he has accepted it.

Dr. Tinker will assume his new duties on September 1 in succession to the Rev. Douglas Matthews, who relinquished charge of the parish to become field secretary of the Church Temperance Society. At a congregational meeting, held on June 3 for endorsement of the vestry's action, fifteen persons pledged gifts amounting to $1,240 toward the church's debt of $1,800.

New Pension Fund Trustee

THE trustees of the Church Pension Fund have elected to the board of trustees as successor to the late Bishop Gibson, Mr. J. Stewart Bryan of Richmond. Mr. Bryan is editor of the News Leader and is a delegate to General Convention.

DR. STIRES ASKS FRIENDS TO TURN TO ANOTHER

Rector of St. Thomas's Does Not Wish to Be Bishop

The New York daily press has been full of suggestions for a suitable successor to the late Bishop Greer. At a meeting of the out-of-town clergy the proposition was made that the diocese be divided, a thing impossible under canon law. On an informal ballot of some of the rectors, Dr. Ernest M. Stires was shown to be the first choice of the clergy present. Dr. Stires, however, in an interview with a reporter of the New York Tribune made it clear that he wished his name withdrawn.

"The convention called for September 17 cannot consider any other question than the one stated in the call, which is the election of a bishop," said Dr. Stires. "Therefore the plan to create a diocese with Newburgh or Poughkeepsie as the see city will not be decided at that time. Personally, I think the plan for a division of the diocese is natural, wise and just."

Dr. Stires was asked whether, in view of the informal balloting and the prominence given to the mention of himself as a probable successor to Bishop Greer, he would make any statement as to the result of the convention.

"Right-thinking people deprecate the discussion of this subject in the daily papers," he said. "In such a momentous and sacred matter there is need for deep thought and prayer. It is unfortunate when the press tries to forecast."

"It is to the credit of the diocese that many names are under consideration. Before the convention meets other names will naturally come to mind. Among others I think of one who has for many years been one of the ablest and best loved men in the diocese. He was once elected to the episcopate but felt that his other duties prevented his acceptance. There is no lack of good material."

"Your question, however, makes it possible for me to make a personal statement. My name has been mentioned, by the papers, in connection with this sacred office. I quite understand that the suggestion has come from a very few old friends, and that my election would be impossible."

"Nevertheless, I should like to say what I have said to many friends, that I am quite convinced that it is clearly my duty to continue in my present work, if my patient parishioners permit; and that I am utterly unable to believe that it could be my duty at present to undertake any other task, even the highest office. Of course, I know that I am neither great enough nor good enough for that sacred task; but I am venturing to declare that, in addition to these reasons, I have such clear indication of my present duty as compels me to be explicit. My friends will easily turn their thoughts to another, and this they should do."

JUST TO PLEASE BISHOPS? ASKS THE CONTINENT

Presbyterians Think Only Bishops Value Episcopal Ordination

"Just to please the bishops?" asks the Continent, the Presbyterian weekly journal, editorially and proceeds:

"Speaking of the Proposition for Congregational ministers to go to Episcopalian bishops and request Episcopal ordination, the Congregationalist asks (not capriciously, it assures its readers) whether there are really enough people interested in ordinations and 'orders' to make it worth while for anybody to bother about all this extra load of ceremony. Certainly, apart from gratifying the Episcopalians, neither preachers nor laymen are in the least concerned about it in the Congregational Church; it would not make a single Congregational pastor more acceptable to his own people. In fact, there is no denomination that would see in the arrangement any point gained for Christian unity save and except the Protestant Episcopal alone. And there the clergy would be the only folks perceptibly affected.

"The Episcopalian laity, of course, in their own communities receive the sacraments in their own churches. But when they get as far away from home as the army took them in France, they go to the communion wherever they have the opportunity without asking or caring whether the officiating minister was ordained by a bishop or not. Devout soldiers on American service abroad took the sacrament wherever they could; even Catholics accepted the bread and wine from Protestant chaplains. So there is no reason to suppose that in his heart of hearts the typical lay Episcopalian cares a fig for the difference between a bishop-ordained pastor and any other kind. The case seems to simmer down to a matter mainly of pleasing the bishops themselves. Just as other men, they enjoy believing themselves important, and are flattered therefore when their ordaining hands are in extra request. Yet if they were trained to look less on outward form and more at the intrinsic reality of acts and thoughts, they might not feel so much elated at the privilege of imparting their mystical sanctions to men who inwardly laugh at their prelate claims as so much vain pretense."

Chinese Merchant Makes Large Gift

A successful merchant in Peking, China, formerly a cathedral choir-school boy in Hankow, has promised $4,000 for the English school in Hantang. The building which is to cost $3,000, is already under construction. The remaining $1,000 is to be used over a period of five years to supplement the school's running expenses.

Bishop's Daughter Sails for Serbia

Mrs. GRACE BURCH WALKUP, only daughter of Bishop Burch of New York, left last week for Europe to organize in France one of four units to do relief work in Serbia.

Mrs. Walkup wears the uniform of the Serbian Relief Committee. She expects to take many pictures of Serbian war sufferers, particularly orphans, and on her return in about six months to give illustrated lectures for the benefit of the Serbians.

Mrs. Walkup was accompanied by several nurses and welfare workers, and Dr. William Cressey, a major in the Serbian army, who has been lecturing for some time in America for the Serbian Relief Committee. Although an American, Dr. Cressey was for seventeen months in the Russian army, one year in the French army and two years in the Serbian army. Mrs. Walkup will choose her other helpers from among Americans in Paris.

ISN'T THE IDEA WORTH IMITATING?

At the diocesan convention in Kansas, on Tag Day the delegates and visitors went about wearing cardboard crosses of the accompanying design. The letters mean "I Take a Church Publication." In the course of the day sixty subscriptions were secured by the Cathedral Girls' Friendly, who acted as canvassers and insisted that every churchman and churchwoman must take a church paper.

Methodists Lend Support to Pageantry

In the words of the Richmond Evening Journal the Methodist Church has arrived with a bang. The reason for this sensation is the fact that as part of the celebrations of the Methodist centenary in Columbus during June and July, a gospel pageant will be presented,—this, despite the fact that the regulations concerning amusements have never been expunged from the "Discipline."

VIOLENCE GAINS NOTHING, SAYS PRINCIPAL GREGG

Head of Hampton Addresses Graduates at Lawrenceville

LAWRENCEVILLE, VIRGINIA.—"The only way out of the race-problem is the way of true education for life, of friendly service, of courage and courtesy, of respect for others and respect for one's self, of justice and honor, of willingness to let bygones be bygones, to forgive and forget—the Christian way. Arrogance, intolerance, and selfishness get us nowhere. Violence is no cure for anything. Cruelty simply breeds cruelty. Hatred begets hatred. But mutual understanding, friendliness, sympathy, readiness to put yourself in the other man's place, the effort to bring men together rather than to drive them apart—these are the forces which, in Europe, in Asia, and in Africa, as well as in America, are doing more than has ever been done to establish the dominion of peace and good-will."

Dr. James E. Gregg, principal of Hampton Institute, recently closed with these ringing words his commencement address at St. Paul's Normal and Industrial School.

"I rejoice to believe that the education which you are receiving at St. Paul's, following as it does the ideals of General Armstrong, is veritably an 'education for life,'" continued Dr. Gregg. "This training of the whole man, this instruction of the head, the heart, and the hand together, is just the right preparation for good citizenship in this great republic in which we are prouder than ever to live."

Dr. William C. Sturgis, a son of one of the original incorporators of St. Paul's School spoke on "The Price of Freedom." Lieutenant Robert W. Fearing, who was graduated from St. Paul's in 1895 and recently has served as signal officer of the 367th Regiment (original "Buffaloes"), 92nd Division, and has won a croix de guerre described the efficient and loyal service which technically-trained Negroes rendered throughout the war.

Bishop Tucker presented diplomas to forty-eight graduates of the school's grammar department, thirteen of the senior normal department, and to nine trade students. To the normal graduates J. N. Hillman, state supervisor of teacher training in Virginia, presented special certificates and spoke on "Bearing the Torch."

Dr. Russell, in his annual report as principal, called attention to the sacrifice last year of the school's industrial department on account of the lack of funds. This department has been the pride of St. Paul's. Through it the school has achieved most. Around it all other departments have been built. The graduates of the industrial department have engaged in useful occupations and have set a worthy example for others to follow. They have won by their work substantial gifts for St. Paul's. The school's policy of necessary retrenchment "has been at the awful expense of the high standard which St. Paul has endeavored to maintain and it will cost in the future far more than the saving to restore the work."

In view of St. Paul's great need for funds, a campaign finance committee of the trustees was formed.

GRADUATE OF GENERAL WINS MILITARY CROSS

Chaplain Stuart, Serving with Canadians, Holds Service Record

Of all the alumni of the General Theological Seminary who have served in France during the war, none has seen harder service than the Rev. Cecil Stuart of St. Chad's Theological College, Regina, Saskatchewan. Chaplain Stuart arrived in Montreal from overseas just in time to come to New York for the commencement exercises last week. Mr. Stuart is a graduate of the General of the class of 1913. The outbreak of the war, found him "teaching everything the warden didn't teach," at St. Chad's. Six times he tried to secure his bishop's permission to enlist before the bishop "blessed the banns."

For nearly four years he has served with the 24th Infantry in the 2nd Canadian Division. He never failed to go over the top with his men. It was as a result of going over the top on August 8 last summer in the battle of Amiens that he won the British Military Cross.

When THE CHURCHMAN representative tried to find out for what act of gallantry Chaplain Stuart has won the right to wear that purple and white decoration above his left breast pocket, nothing would induce him to say more than "Why, I went over the top with the men and looked around to pull in the wounded."

Apparently there were other occasions as deserving of recognition as Amiens. For example at Passchendaele when all the German pillboxes behind which the Canadians had stretched tarpaulins for the reception of the wounded, were hit except the one where Chaplain Stuart was serving. "The only thing that saved us at Passchendaele was the mud," he said. "The shells buried themselves so deep in the soft earth that when they exploded you and the men you knelt beside were plastered with slime instead of slivers of shell."

Chaplain Stuart was mentioned three times in dispatches. He holds the record of the longest service with any Canadian battalion. Just seventy-five of the men in his regiment returned with him last week to Montreal.

"It is the funny things, not the tragic, that the men remember," he said in speaking of his experiences. "When they talk of Passchendaele they don't say 'wasn't it terrible?' but 'Remember how so and so fell into the water?'"

In answer to the inevitable question in regard to religion at the front, he said: "The fellow who has never been at the front can talk in eulogistic vein. But the fellow who has been at the front has seen the naked truth and knows all this talk about revival of religion at the front is tommy-rot. I don't mean that he is pessimistic. The men had got down to fundamentals and they liked to talk about religion. I've often heard them singing hymns in the dugouts. They all believe in a future and in God's goodness. Beyond that, they are pretty fatalistic. Of course there is a lot of unconscious religion, but it is ridiculous to say there has been a revival of religion in the trenches."

In speaking of the soldiers' relation to the clergy, Chaplain Stuart said it was all a question of the personal equation. The chaplains had broken down the barrier by talking and working and living with the men; the home clergy must do the same.

Chaplain Stuart was the first of the Canadian chaplains to go into the trenches to live with his men.

WISH TO REMOVE ALL OBSTACLES TO WOMEN

Resolutions looking towards the elimination of all "obstacles in law and custom which curtail in any way the usefulness of women," were passed by the annual meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society in Rhode Island on May 27. The resolutions are as follows:

WHEREAS, it is the part of wisdom to enlist the full powers of women in the efforts of the Church to solve the problems of the home and family life, of public and private morality, of social and industrial relation.

AND WHEREAS, there is grave danger that the women of ability will devote their powers of organization and spiritual expression outside the Church unless they are given full opportunity within the Church;

Therefore be it resolved, that the Rhode Island Diocesan Organization of the Girls' Friendly Society in America respectfully and earnestly urge the General Convention of the Church to remove all obstacles in law and custom which curtail in any way the usefulness of women in the Church or in membership in its councils.

Romance Grew from Speaking Mission

Word has just reached this country that the eldest daughter of Sir George Adam Smith, whose visit to the United States last year made such a profound impression, has announced her engagement to Captain Charles Drew of St. Louis. Miss Lilian Buchanan Smith,—or as she is generally called, Maisie,—met Captain Drew in command of troops on the transport, on her return journey to Scotland with her father last spring. They are to be married at Chanonry Lodge, Old Aberdeen, the end of June. Captain Drew, who is still on active duty with the A. E. F., will bring his bride to this country.

Class Confirmed at Reformatory

HUNTINGDON, PENNSYLVANIA.—On Mother's Sunday a class of twenty inmates of the state reformatory was presented to the Bishop of Harrisburg by the Rev. Frederick J. Compson, rector of St. John's Church. This was the first confirmation service held within the chapel walls. The five hundred inmates crowded the chapel.

Retreat at Swansea

SWANSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—The annual retreat of the Brotherhood of the Way of the Cross, to which all clergy are invited, is announced for September 22 to September 25. Bishop Osborne will conduct the retreat. The Rev. A. E. Johnson, All Saints' Parish House, Providence, Rhode Island, can supply information.

THOUSANDS OF ARMENIAN GIRLS RESCUED FROM TURKS

Relief Committee Proceeds Rapidly with Work of Repatriation

Word has been received by the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief that the instigators of an attempted massacre of Armenians in Aleppo, Syria, some weeks ago, have been executed by the British military authorities after a trial, and that this application of British justice has had a wholesome moral effect on the Turks.

The cablegram tells also of the work of rehabilitation and repatriation of the Armenians in the territory about Aleppo, which, since the armistice, has been greatly congested by the return of thousands of refugees deported to the Arabian desert by the Turks in 1915. There are 80,000 Armenian refugees in this area, 6,000 of these are Christian girls kept in Moslem houses.

During the month of April 260 Christian girls were rescued from Turkish harems in the one town of Aintab. "The faces of many of the rescued girls are tattooed with Moslem marks, to show that they were Moslem property," says the cablegram. "Some of the girls, in their shame, have attempted to eradicate these tattoo marks with corrosives, and even fingernails."

Within a fortnight, the message says, 4,000 refugees had been repatriated in towns westward and northward of Aleppo. About 3,000 were due to arrive from Damascus, 1,200 were in Deirzor awaiting safe conduct, and 150 were arriving daily from Kara.

The establishment of orphanages in that territory to take care of the children whose parents were massacred by the Turks, is proceeding rapidly.

Industrial work has been undertaken in the Armenian villages of the Antioch region and silk production recommenced by the distribution of 100 boxes of silkworm eggs to 300 families recently repatriated. Preparations are also being made for the rebuilding of a large number of houses destroyed by the Turks. Employment will be found for many men in quarries which are to be started near the cities, from which stone will be obtained for the houses. Other men will be sent into the forests in the mountains to cut the necessary timber.

Dr. Richmond Enters Baptist Ministry

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK.—According to up state papers, Dr. George Chalmers Richmond, originally a Congregational minister who afterwards took holy orders in the Church, and served for a time in this diocese under Bishop Huntington, and was suspended for two years because of his erratic conduct and utterances in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, has been rebaptized, into the Baptist faith, this time. He preached his first sermon as a Baptist in Brooklyn, Sunday, June 1. It is not clear whether the Baptists accepted his first ordination, or the second, giving him a dispensation from the suspension, or whether he has been newly licensed to preach.

IOWA PARISH REJOICES IN CONSECRATION OF CHURCH

Council Bluffs Parish Has Made Good Progress Under New Rector

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA—The Sunday after the Ascension was a day of great rejoicing for the Parish of St. Paul in this city, for on that day the church was consecrated, thirty-four years after its erection. During all these years a mortgage had also been accumulated. In February 1917, however, with the coming of the new rector, the Rev. Wilford Ernest Mann, the optimism and determination that characterizes his ministry seized the parish and matters began to improve. The first tangible evidence of the new spirit was cement walks replacing the old and broken brick ones that led to the church. Other repairs and improvements followed and then the rector announced a campaign to raise the mortgage. One of the vestrymen, Mr. A. D. Annis, offered $5,000. The parishioners rallied around their leaders, and in six weeks the debts were cleared off, and in addition more than $5,000 was spent for improvements and another $2,500 was given by Mr. Annis for the rector to use at his discretion for improving and beautifying the church grounds. The result is that whereas two years ago there was scarcely a spear of grass on the church grounds, the churchyard is now considered one of the show places of the city. Everything was planned and much of the work was done by the rector himself. The vestry has now appointed a regular caretaker for the church grounds.

With all this material prosperity, there has been a corresponding revival of religious life, and the consecration of the church building was the culmination of two years of steady advance. Bishop Morrison consecrated the church, and the consecration sermon was preached by the Bishop-Elect of Nebraska, the Rev. E. V. Shayler of St. Mark's Church, Seattle. The Rev. John M. Francis was master of ceremonies and the Rev. Coleman E. Byram also assisted the rector at the services.

Albany Summer School Program

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—The fourteenth annual session of the Albany Cathedral Summer School for the clergy is announced for June 23 to June 27. The Rev. Richard Morse Hodge, D.D., will lecture on Americanism; Professor Dickinson Miller, on "The Message of the Prayer Book for our Time"; Dean Ladd, on "The Social Task of the Church"; Professor Loring W. Batten, on "Four Studies in the History of Israel"; the Rev. Phillips Osgood will give a conference on mystery plays; Dean Richardson will speak on "The Spiritual Life of the Clergy" and Dr. Gardner, on "Recruiting for the Sacred Ministry."

During the past six years the average attendance at the school has been sixty-three clergymen representing twenty-two dioceses. The Rev. G. H. Purdy of Warrensburg, New York, will supply information in regard to the school.

G. F. S. to Meet in Cleveland

It has been announced that the Central Council of the Girls' Friendly Society in America will be held this autumn in Cleveland, by invitation of the Girls' Friendly Society of the Diocese of Ohio, Miss Marion A. Parsons, president. The dates for the meeting, October 2 to 7 inclusive, have been set with especial reference to the General Convention in Detroit. Plans for the program which are well under way indicate a series of unusually interesting sessions. Most of the meetings will be held in Trinity Cathedral.

NEW CASTLE CHURCH IS CONSECRATED BY BP. ISRAEL

Congregation Paid Off Parish Debt Last Easter

NEW CASTLE, PENNSYLVANIA—Trinity Church, of which the Rev. Bruce V. Reddish has been rector for the past three and a half years, was consecrated by Bishop Israel on Memorial Day. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Wilson Sutton, vicar of Trinity Chapel, New York City, who also preached twice the following Sunday. A number of clergy from all over the diocese were present and assisted in the ceremonies.

Trinity Church is one of the most beautiful churches in the diocese. It is built of limestone in the Gothic style and will seat about five hundred. It was erected during the rectorship of the Rev. Charles W. Tyler at a cost of some $56,500 and was opened for worship in 1902. A considerable debt was incurred by the parish in its construction and it was not until this last Easter that this debt was finally wiped out through a special offering of $7,000, which consisted largely of Liberty Bonds, and was made as a thankoffering for victory and peace.

Many improvements have recently been made, chief of which is a side altar in the south transept, which was given in memory of one of the parish's faithful children.

Last summer Mr. Reddish made himself much beloved in the town during the influenza epidemic by his faithful and unsparing ministrations in the parish and as a nurse in the hospital. The parish has entered upon an era of great prosperity.

In the evening Bishop Israel addressed a large gathering in the opera house where he was received with great enthusiasm by an audience that taxed the building to capacity.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH AND RECTORY, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA

ONE JAPANESE STUDENT ONLY BERKELEY GRADUATE

Professor Miller and Dr. E. M. Jefferys Speakers at Commencement

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT.—Commencement at Berkeley this year (June 3) was notable in several ways. Only one student was graduated, Umetara Uda, a Japanese student, a graduate of St. Paul's College, Tokyo. In his commencement address Dr. Dickinson S. Miller of the General Theological Seminary remarked upon this as symbolic of the generous and unique attention that Berkeley has given to the individual in its classes. "It reminds us also," he says, "of the infinite value of a single soul in the conception of that religion that the school exists to teach." The reason that only one man finishes his work this year is obvious. Every other member of the class of 1919 has gone into service in the army or navy. A number of these will return for the summer school and several will graduate in the fall.

The degree of bachelor of divinity was conferred upon the Rev. Edward Kimball Thurlow, of the Diocese of Massachusetts as of the class of 1912. He presented as part of his work for this degree the unusual subject of the Chinese language and literature, having been for several years a missionary in Anking. The degree of doctor of divinity was granted to the Rev. Samuel R. Colloday and the Rev. Theodore Sedgwick.

The preacher at the annual alumni service was the Rev. Dr. Edward M. Jefferys, rector of St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia. Dr. Jefferys spoke upon "The war, the English-speaking peoples and the Episcopal Church." He made a strong appeal for the continued and increasing friendship of English-speaking nations and their alliance as the only sufficient guarantee of the peace of the world. "Without such cooperation," he said, "the war is not won." He denounced in no unmeasured terms the efforts by propagandists to disturb this friendship and further misunderstanding and suspicion among those nations who have the English tongue as their common heritage and pointed out the privileges and responsibilities that rested upon the Episcopal Church as the Church that claims the common loyalty of all these nations.

At the business meeting of the alumni the following day Dr. Sedgwick was elected president to succeed Bishop Lines who declined to serve for another year; Dr. German, and Dr. Jefferys were elected vice-presidents and the Rev. Percy V. Norwood, secretary-treasurer, and as alumni preacher of 1920, the Rev. Erit B. Schmitt of the class of '86, rector of Christ Church, Ansonia. The newly elected alumni trustees are Dr. Colloday of Hartford, Dr. Frederick W. Harrison of Windsor and the Rev. J. Henry Fitzgerald of Brooklyn.

Announcement was made of the appointment of Mr. Horace Fort to the John Henry Watson Fellowship. Mr. Fort has returned from two years' service with the British Y. M. C. A. in India and East Africa and will be graduated from the school and enter upon his duties as fellow at the close of the summer session. The Rev. Percy V. Norwood, former fellow on this foundation, has been appointed professor of liturgics. Mr. Norwood is a member of the class of 1911 and has spent sometime in study at Oxford University. He has been acting instructor in Old Testament at Berkeley for the last two years. The Rev. Frederic C. Lauderburn was elected to the chair of pastoral theology. Mr. Lauderburn has been special lecturer during the last term.

The annual ordination of candidates from Berkeley Divinity School was held on June 5 at Holy Trinity Church, Middletown, when Bishop Brewster ordained to the diaconate Horace Fort of Baltimore and Samuel Herman Rees of Philadelphia.

Thirteen Graduate from Philadelphia School

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—The senior class of the Church Training and Deaconess House graduated on May 27 and received their diplomas from Bishop Rhineland, president of the school, after Morning Prayer in the diocesan church. The sermon, defining dogma as teaching which the Church has authorized, was preached by the Rev. Dr. Anthony, S.T.D., a member of the faculty. The students were presented for graduation by Dr. Perry, warden of the school.

The thirteen students graduating are from twelve different dioceses. Four of them remain to take the post-graduate third year of elective studies, which now for the first time has been arranged and added to the two years of required studies. Three of the class will enter hospitals to take the three years course to become trained nurses. One enters the medical college of the University of Pennsylvania to become a physician. Another will take charge of St. Mary's School for Indian girls, Rosebud Reserve, South Dakota. Another will have charge of the mission at Sandy Ridge, Southern Virginia and another will undertake mission work in Eastern Carolina.

Seminary Changes Degree Requirements

The General Theological Seminary has announced some changes in the procedure for earning the B. D. degree. Hereafter this degree will be awarded only for work done in residence. Students who have completed with satisfactory grade the three years' curriculum for the diploma, may enter upon a fourth year of prescribed study for the degree. Those who enter the seminary with some knowledge of Greek and take the Hebrew courses may qualify for the degree in three years if they attain a grade of ninety per cent. It is thought that the requirement of residence and the provision of a variety of definite fourth-year courses will enhance the value of the degree.

No Sunday Movies for Huntington

HUNTINGTON, LONG ISLAND.—The church interests here won a victory at a recent meeting when the members of the town board, after discussing the proposition in executive session, voted against Sunday movies in the township. The Rev. C. E. Cragg, rector of St. John's Church, has been largely instrumental in preventing this misuse of Sunday.

ASK GENERAL CONVENTION TO EXTEND FRANCHISE

Petition Circulated to Admit Women to All Councils of the Church

The following memorial to General Convention is being circulated among the clergy and the laity of the Church. Signatures should be sent to Mr. Robert H. Gardiner, Gardiner, Maine:

We, the undersigned, respectfully request the amendment of Article I, Section 4 of the constitution of the Church by the omission of the word layman in the first paragraph, and the word layman in the second, in order that in the new efforts which are being made on every hand to increase the efficiency of the Church the full measure of the ability and earnestness of churchwomen may be put into service.

In the last five years the whole world has placed upon the willing shoulders of women an increasing responsibility for active participation in the struggle for world-wide freedom and democracy and for the new order, international, national, social and industrial which finds its basis and its hope in the fact of the Incarnation, and the great services which women have rendered have proved their practical capacity, their high ideals and their sense of public duty, and therefore in most of the civilized countries of the world and in a large part of the United States the full duties of citizenship have been imposed upon women.

Nor is the Church altogether lagging behind. The Representative Council of the Church of England, in adopting a plan for the fuller and freer self-expression of the Church, has voted by an overwhelming majority to secure the full help of women by giving them the franchise, and the same action has been taken by similar bodies in the Church of Wales and in the Episcopal Church of Scotland. In several of our own dioceses women are eligible and have sat as delegates in diocesan councils, and where the compromise of a house of church women has been adopted, the women have shown, by their energetic, intelligent and practical interest, not only that they are fully competent, but that the Church is incomplete without their help. To take two examples outside the Anglican Communion, the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada has given to women all the franchises and eligibilities which it gives to men, and the General Assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland has greatly enlarged the place of women in the councils of that Church.

The position of women has been greatly changed in the last generation, and the Church, if it is to be a vital force in the new world which we hope and pray will come, can no longer ignore that change. It is the part of wisdom and of simple justice to enlist the full powers of women in the efforts of the Church to maintain the Christian principles through which must be solved the problems of the home and family life, of public and private morality, of education which shall recognize God and His Church, of social and industrial relations, and of international peace and the orderly progress of civilization.

Many plans will be presented to this convention looking to splendid efforts to make it a still greater power in the nation and the world for the establishment of the Kingdom. Filled with great visions of what the Church may be and do for the Master's cause, the convention will adopt those plans, and the women of the Church will be expected to do at least half the work involved in carrying them into effect. Surely the convention would have gladly availed itself of the advice of those women in shaping those plans; to have had a share in the discussion would have been a great inspiration to the women and the means of greatly increasing their sense of responsibility. Strong men have too often remained aloof from the activities of the Church because they alleged that the Church had no such vision and energy as they found in secular activities. This convention especially will see great visions and will plan work which will demand and satisfy the desire of the strong man to put forth all his strength. An increasing number of earnest, intelligent, educated women are finding scope for their powers in work for the betterment of the world outside of distinctly church work. The Church must give them as full responsibilities as it gives to men to keep them from being satisfied with less than the highest opportunity for the use of their talents. The amendment we urge will set them free to devote themselves more efficiently to that betterment, because the Church, to which has been entrusted the only enduring motive and means for that betterment, will be able to avail itself of their experience and devotion, their special knowledge of the women and children who need the message and the help of the Church, their readiness to give all that they are, all that they have, for Christ and for His Church.

So the Church needs the representation of women in its legislative councils and executive boards, not to displace men, but to supplement their work, to set them an example of devotion and sacrifice, to give them new hope and courage and confidence that, with God's help, the problems of the world can be solved. The great need of the Church is faith,—faith that fears no difficulties, that counts no cost, and women have that faith. But, so long as they are excluded from the general and diocesan councils of the Church, they lack the full opportunity to make their faith a power.

In 1789, the American Church took the great step forward of admitting laymen to its legislative and executive functions that it might be truly democratic and equipped with all its powers. We pray that the convention of 1919 will complete that advance by enlisting the full help of all the members of the Church. If the councils of the Church can have an infusion of the idealism of woman, of her swift intuition of righteousness, of her readiness to spend herself to the utmost, we may be confident that the bounds of the Kingdom will be greatly enlarged.

American to Conduct Canadian Retreat

TORONTO, CANADA.—The Rev. C. H. Young of Christ Church, Chicago, will conduct a retreat for women at the Bishop Strachan School here from June 24 to June 28.

SPRING CONVENTIONS CLOSE WITH A FEW EARLY JUNE MEETINGS

Campaign for All Saints' School Reported in South Dakota; West Virginia Celebrates Double Anniversary; Easton Relinquishes Appropriation

The Last Conventions—The convention season is over. West Virginia met in Wheeling, and Easton met in Elkton on the first days of June, Minnesota met at Faribault May 27 and 28 and South Dakota at Huron on May 24, 25 and 26, and Western New York at Geneva on June 3 and 4. Reports have not come in yet from North Dakota, which met in Devil's Lake on the first three days of June, nor from Honolulu which met on May 24.

Financial Advances—As in other dioceses, a sound financial situation was revealed by the reports and the acts in these conventions. Easton voted to relinquish the appropriation of the Board of Missions of $800 a year. The matter had been discussed quietly among some of the clergy during the past year but had met with little cooperation. After a spirited debate in which even the bishop joined adversely, the resolution offered by the Rev. J. D. Cummins of Centreville and backed by a group of the younger laymen and clergy was passed. A finance committee was organized with the Rev. Dunbar Gould of Cambridge as chairman to revise the diocesan budget and report next year. The report of the treasurer for diocesan missions showed a balance of $2500, and the treasurer for the Pension Fund showed that 99 per cent of all assessments had been paid. Minnesota reported 100 per cent of these assessments paid the first of last March. Minnesota, among other things, decided to employ a diocesan educational secretary.

Western New York voted to appoint a financial secretary at a salary of at least $3,000 a year, a layman to be appointed by the bishop, upon nomination of the Standing Committee, whose specific duties shall be to take charge of apportionments and assessments, and to assist the parishes in meeting their obligations. This diocese also adopted an amendment to the canons permitting missionary boards to enter into agreement with parishes and missions whereby the monies contributed shall be placed in the hands of the archdeaconry treasurer and the missionary board shall then become responsible for the salary of the incumbent. The proposed fund of $200,000 in Western New York is to be divided between the trustees of the episcopate fund and the trustees of the parochial fund, the former for episcopal endowment and the latter for use at the discretion of the bishop and the standing committee.

Western New York Admits Women to Church Suffrage—Western New York amended its constitution so as to admit women to the franchise in parish meetings. A woman to be eligible must be over twenty-one years of age and must have been a regular attendant at the services and a regular contributor for at least a year. This franchise was extended by a large majority vote.

Nation-wide Campaign—All of these five conventions unanimously endorsed the Nation-Wide Campaign. The Rev. C. E. Betticher addressed the Easton convention, the Rev. Dr. Milton, West Virginia, and the Rev. F. J. Clark, South Dakota. Easton, after hearing an address on the increase of the ministry, decided that every clergyman in the diocese should preach one sermon a year on the subject.

Coadjutor for West Virginia—In West Virginia the question of a coadjutor was thoroughly discussed and finally referred to a committee. The alternative of dividing the diocese into two parts was considered and commended to the committee.

South Dakota—The feature of the South Dakota convention was the presence of the suffragan, Bishop Remington, who almost since his consecration has been in service overseas. Resolutions were passed in regard to redistributing the provinces of the western part of the United States. Both the women workers and the convention agreed to pay $1500 toward the salary of the Bishop of South Dakota. Resolutions of appreciation were passed for those veteran missionaries, the Rev. and Mrs. A. B. Clark, who have worked for thirty years among the Indians and whose two sons are now following their example, one as superintending presbyter on the Rosebud Reservation and the other on the Crow Creek Reservation. At the children's mite box service, it was discovered that the per capita offering had jumped from 77c last year to 95c. St. George's, Redfield, won the banner from Grace Church, Huron.

Campaign for All Saints'—The addresses of the two bishops were intensely encouraging reports of the work the Church is doing in the great state of South Dakota and of the wonderful opportunities that face us. The most conspicuous and important undertaking reported by Bishop Burleson was the campaign now going on for the raising of $200,000 for All Saints' School. One half of this will be known as the "Helen S. Peabody Endowment," the other half to be used to finish the Bishop Hare memorial building and make other necessary improvements in the property that it may be brought up to modern standards, and to provide for increased accommodations. The Hon. C. H. Burke of Pierre has been secured as the manager of the campaign. He has left his home, set up his headquarters in Sioux Falls, and is devoting his entire time to the undertaking. Half of the sum is being asked from the city of Sioux Falls, and the other half from the state at large. All Saints' School is, perhaps, the most valuable agency of service which the Church possesses in South Dakota.

The Niobrara Instruction Course—His report of a new venture among the Indians was also full of encouragement. It is "The Niobrara Course of Instruction." Dr. Bradner the General Board of Religious Education kindly sent to the Niobrara Convocation last year. He held long conferences with the workers among the Dakotas and devised a plan of instruction to run through five years, based on the Catechism and the Christian Year. It is printed weekly in a leaflet in both languages, and is being taught each Sunday in the church service in place of the usual sermon. Thus the congregation receives instruction which the parents are supposed to take home to their children, and the workers in their calling keep in touch with the progress of the work. It is an interesting experiment in the instruction of a simple folk who speak a foreign language. The course has been in operation only since January, but it seems to be meeting with great success.

Bishop Brent Urges His Convention Not to Forget the Roman Catholics—In his convention address, Bishop Brent made a strong plea for unity. "The balance of the Christian world is ready for a peace conference," he said, "and it should be convened at once."

He urged churchmen not to forget the Roman Catholic Church in their deliberation in regard to unity and continued: "As we are refused official representation to present our case, the best advocates of Roman Catholicism should have a hearing at our conference." Bishop Brent declared that there is little appreciation by the Protestant Churches of the merits of the Roman Catholic Church. "In view of the fact that the overtures of your representatives have been repelled by the Pope, I do not say by the Roman Catholic Church," he added, "we cannot sit impassive when lovers of Christ and His unity approach us."

Bishop McElwain's Address — The Bishop of Minnesota sounded a most optimistic note in his address. Among other things he said:

"This is the year of the meeting of the governing legislative body of our Church, the General Convention. Innumerable questions will come before it, but I am hoping and praying that grace will be given it to enable it to choose between essentials and non-essentials in this day of judgment and reconstruction. However important Prayer Book and hymnal revision and canonical amendment may be, there are other matters, notably—church expansion and Christian cooperation—which should take precedence at this time.

"Now, if ever, the Church should seek to make her full contribution to the Christianizing of our land. Now, if ever, we must try to find means by which we can bring to bear on the social, moral and political conditions of our country the united forces of American Christianity.

"The Nation-wide Campaign is the attempt to meet the first need. The Inter-Church World Movement is the attempt to meet the second.

"In connection with the whole effort looking toward Christian unity, I wish to endorse heartily the outline of the concordat proposed by certain representatives of our Church and of the Congregational body. There are, doubtless, difficulties in the working out of details, but the spirit and purpose behind the plan are so evidently full of brotherliness and sincerity that I have hailed it with joy. None of us can lightly refuse to look with seriousness upon these efforts."

West Virginia Celebrates Anniversaries

—The West Virginia convention celebrated a double anniversary when it convened in St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling. On Ascension Day a service in memory of the late Bishop Peterkin was held to commemorate his consecration in that church on Ascension Day forty-one years ago. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Jacob Brittingham, D.D., one of the senior presbyters of the diocese. But it was also a hundred years since Bishop Chase of Ohio first held services in the old court house in Wheeling and so laid the first stone in the upbuilding of the parish. Among the rectors of St. Matthew's have been Dr. Swope and Bishop Thomas of Wyoming. The present rector is the Rev. R. E. L. Strider.

Women's Meetings—South Dakota held its meeting of women workers simultaneously with the diocesan convention. Miss Mary B. Peabody, for many years their president, resigned and Mrs. W. P. Remington, the wife of the suffragan bishop, was elected to fill her place. Mrs. J. H. Gates was elected secretary-treasurer. In West Virginia the Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting at the same time as the convention. The Vermont Woman's Auxiliary held its annual meeting in Middlebury on May 20-21. The bishop coadjutor of the diocese presided. Mrs. George Biller was the speaker of the afternoon; she took as her subject the difficult conditions of the western missionary. The Rev. Thomas Burgess, the new immigration secretary of the Board of Missions, spoke in the evening on the subject of the alien races in our midst.

Diocesan Elections—Diocesan elections were as follows:

Our Weekly News Letters

New Vicar For Holy Trinity—The Rev. Samuel M. Dorrance has accepted an invitation to become vicar of the Church of the Holy Trinity in St. James' Parish, New York City, and will begin his new work September 1. Mr. Dorrance was for a number of years rector of St. George's Church, Central Falls, Rhode Island, and for a year or more has served as chaplain in the United States Army at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri. Mr. Dorrance will succeed the Rev. James V. Chalmers, who has been vicar of the Church of the Holy Trinity for more than twenty-one years.

Mr. Dorrance is a graduate of Harvard and of the Cambridge Theological School. He is a son of Mr. Samuel R. Dorrance of Providence, a well-known layman and member of the General Convention. Mr. Dorrance has refused a number of calls to other parishes in order to accept this work.

Welcome Home Dinner at St. James', Fordham—A welcome home dinner to returned soldiers and sailors on the honor roll of St. James' Church, Fordham, the Rev. De Witt L. Pelton, Ph.D., rector, was given on May 28, under the auspices of the Men's Club. There are eighty-eight names on the honor roll and some forty men in service were present.

Fine Confirmation Class at Nyack—Bishop Francis has been taking confirmations in the diocese for nearly a month. On June 1 at Nyack he confirmed a class of fifty-nine in Grace Church. Thirty-six were adults. This seems to be typical of the excellent work the rector, the Rev. Alfred Longley is doing in the parish.

Commencement at the Western Seminary—The commencement of the Western Theological Seminary was held at Wheeler Hall on May 22. In the absence of Bishop Anderson Bishop Morrison presided and conferred the diplomas and degree. Four students graduated this year: Harold Raoul Flower, B.A.; Edwin Viets Griswold, Edward Potter Sabin, B.A., and Franklin Cox St. Clair. The degree S.T.B. was conferred upon the Rev. Charles Pomeroy Otis, B.A.

Forty-two alumni were present at the annual alumni dinner. Bishop Morrison and Bishop Griswold were guests of honor. Both bishops made short speeches, which were followed by talks on the war by the Rev. Geo. C. Stewart and the Rev. Brian McCormick. The Rev. Victor Hoag spoke of his experiences at the spruce camp in Washington. Mr. Edwin V. Griswold spoke on behalf of the graduating class.

The Spring Ordinations—The spring ordinations took place at St. Luke's Church, Evanston, on Ascension Day. The sermon was preached by the Rev. C. H. Young. Bishop Griswold ordained five candidates to the diaconate, Mr. Harold R. Flower, Mr. Edward V. Griswold, Mr. Edward P. Sabin, Mr. Franklin C. St. Clair, and the Rev. D. R. Mathews. The Rev. Mr. Mathews has for some years been pastor of a congregation of the Church of the Disciples, in the city, and at the present time holds the chair of Old Testament at the Union Theological Seminary.

Acolytes Service—On the evening of Ascension Day the annual acolytes service of the city parishes was held at Christ Church, Woodlawn. About two hundred boys, vested, were in the procession, with a cross and torches from each church. The Rev. Frederick S. Fleming, of the Church of the Atonement, was the preacher.

Lake Geneva Missionary Conference—A meeting of former delegates to the Lake Geneva Missionary Conference was held on May 16, to meet Mr. Frank B. Bachelor, executive secretary of the Interchurch World Movement, which now conducts the conference. Points of interest to Episcopalians are that Dr. Patton has been secured by the conference, and that the program committee hopes to have Miss Lindley on the faculty. To church people the appeal of Lake Geneva is naturally not the same as when there was no conference of our own in the Mid-West, but there may be some still who wish to specialize in missions and for that, or some other reason, will attend the conference in its fifteenth year. Any one wishing for information about the Episcopal group is asked to write to Deaconess Fuller, 206 South Lincoln street, Chicago.

St. Paul's-by-the-Lake Plans New Church—Some years ago the church of St. Paul's-by-the-Lake acquired a fine lot at the corner of Ashland and Estes Avenues. Since then a parish house has been built there, but the people have continued to worship in an old and unsatisfactory church building a short distance away. It has just been announced that the old church building has been sold, and that plans are being discussed for a new building. In the meanwhile the people will worship in the parish house, where a chancel and altar have been arranged. The Rev. Henry N. Hyde, who is rector of the parish, has been in the diocese for about a year, coming here from Little Rock, Arkansas.

Woman's Auxiliary Meets—The annual corporate communion of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at Grace Church, Oak Park, on Ascension Day. Bishop Howden was the preacher. The auxiliary of the diocese some time ago set $10,000 as the goal for their part of the United Offering, to be presented at the time of the General Convention this fall. When the total amounts already raised were reported at this meeting, it was found that they already exceeded the mark which had been set, so a new effort is being made to raise as much as possible in excess of the $10,000 before October.

Sunday Sports in City Parks—For the last two Sundays the Park Commission has allowed the public to play baseball and tennis in the parks in the afternoon. This has never been done before. It seems to be contrary to the Sunday laws of the city. The Park Commission has taken the law into its own hands, and granted the freedom that seemed to be the desire of thousands.

Some of the clergymen of the protestant denominations, and members of the Sabbath Day Association threaten prosecution of the park officials. There seem to be four courses of action open to those who are opposed to the opening of the parks to play: (1.) A prosecution of those who play tennis or baseball. Technically, they are law breakers, and could be arrested for their actions; (2.) Prosecution of the Park Commission, by the attorney general of the state; (3.) Prosecution by the district attorney of the city; (4.) Arrest of the Park Commission on a charge of conspiracy and inciting others to violate the "blue law" of 1794.

On Sunday June 1 petitions of protest were circulated and signed in many churches: one was an Episcopal Church. In many places prayers were offered for guidance in the matter.

The Victory Festival—A Victory Festival under the auspices of the Diocese of Pennsylvania was held in the Academy of Music on June 10 and 11. Nothing like this celebration has ever been undertaken by the diocese before. All the churchly solemnity of a great Te Deum of thanksgiving, coupled with dramatic orchestral and choral effects formed the background of a service at which patriotic addresses and the reading of a memorial poem were the features. The celebration was in charge of a committee of twenty-seven, composed of nine of the clergy, nine organists and nine laymen.

On Tuesday June 10, Dr. Manning of New York was the speaker. On Wednesday Major General Wm. G. Price, Jr., was the orator. On both evenings a memorial poem by the Rev. J. M. Gilbert of West Chester was read. This poem was awarded the first place in competition. A thousand voices from the choirs of the diocese rendered music especially composed for this occasion. On both evenings the bishop and clergy marched in their vestments, and sat together on the stage.

Spring Meeting of the Brotherhood—The Philadelphia local assembly of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was held at St. Martin's-in-the-Field in Chestnut Hill on Saturday afternoon and evening June 7. The junior session was at four. At five there was a service in the church, at which an address was made by the rector of Grace Church, Mount Airy, the Rev. T. S. Cline, who has just returned from service as a chaplain overseas.

The speaker at the evening meeting was Mr. Franklin Spencer Edmonds. Mr. Edmonds has been most active overseas with relief and educational work, both with the Y. M. C. A. and the "Khaki College."

BOSTON

United Offering Service—The annual United Offering service for the women of the diocese was held on Thursday morning, June 5, at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. The Rev. Dr. Endicott Peabody of Groton was the special preacher.

Memorial Service for British Societies—A memorial service for Englishmen who gave their lives in the war was held at Trinity Church last Sunday afternoon with the Order of the Sons of St. George and the Daughters of St. George attending. The Rev. Edward T. Sullivan of Newton Centre delivered the oration.

Conference for Church Work—The Conference for Church Work, formerly held in Cambridge, will be held this year at Wellesley College, Wellesley, June 19 to 30. The conference is intended for instruction and training in the spirit and method of church work. There are to be lecture courses on the Bible, Church history, personal religion, reconstruction, social service and the Church's mission, and there are to be classes on how to teach. The registration fee is $5. Applications for registration or further information may be made to Miss Marian DeC. Ward, 415 Beacon Street, Boston.

Ascension Pageant—At St. Luke's Church, Chelsea, on the Sunday evening after Ascension, an Ascension pageant, written by the rector, the Rev. G. A. Barrow, Ph.D., was presented in the parish church by members of the congregation. The pageant was a remarkable success and attracted great interest in the community.

Funeral of the Rev. Reuben Kidner—In the parish leaflet Dr. Mann describes Mr. Kidner's funeral as follows:

"That was a great and notable congregation that gathered in the church last Sunday afternoon for the burial service of the Rev. Reuben Kidner. Over 1400 people were present. All sorts and conditions of men and women were there, high and low, rich and poor, old and young. It was a wonderful expression of affection for the man, and it bore eloquent testimony to the extent to which that quiet life had touched all classes in the community. What a power there is in a long and faithful pastoral ministry, and above all, what un-failing attraction there is in the life of a good man! After all it is the Christian saint who is the one unanswerable argument for the Christian religion."

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Chaplain Returns to Former Parish—

The Rev. Harrison W. Foreman has accepted a recall to Emmanuel Church, Norwich, from which parish he resigned when he was appointed to an army chaplaincy at the beginning of the war. The salary has been increased to $1,800. He will enter upon his duties on September 1. The Rev. J. Winslow Clarke is acting as locum tenens.

A New Parish—All Saints' Church, Johnson City, recently organized, has become self-supporting, and has been admitted into union with the convention of the diocese. The Rev. T. Raymond Jones will be the rector, and will have a curate for the work in Endicott which he also carries on.

Work Among College Men—The Rev. Cyril Harris, recently appointed student pastor at Cornell University, addressed the diocesan convention upon his work. He not only has the care of the students in Ithaca, but also is charged with the duty of ascertaining the conditions of student life in the eastern colleges and of recommending a suitable scheme of action. There are more than five hundred members of this Church among the students at Cornell. He attempts to see every such student during the first week after he enters, and enters into the college religious life. He finds three problems in securing regular church-going on the part of students, viz: the arrangement of a suitable hour; the fact of a college chapel on the campus with its schedule of interdenominational services; and the habit among students of dedicating Sunday mornings to sleep.

THEODORE HAYDN.

NORTH DAKOTA

Dean Kloman Returns—Dean Kloman, who has been in service overseas since last June as Red Cross chaplain, was given a most cordial welcome by the congregation of Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, upon his return the third Sunday in May. An informal reception was arranged in the crypt to which not only the congregation but friends generally were invited. An exceedingly interesting program had been arranged and the dean was called upon to give an account of some of his experiences in France. As he had been on the French front around Montdidier through the summer and later on the American sector, with Mobile Hospital Number 1 along the firing line at Verdun and through the Argonne, he had many interesting incidents to relate.

During Dean Kloman's absence the Rev. L. H. Ewald, who is in deacons orders, assisted the bishop with the work of the cathedral. Mr. Ewald will soon be advanced to the priesthood and assigned to the mission at Lisbon.

Preparations for a New Rector—St. Matthews Church, Linton, has just purchased a very comfortable and adequate rectory, conveniently located. This congregation, which is at present without a rector, has shown commendable zeal not only in holding together but in going forward in the purchase of a home in which to house the new rector when able to secure one. This kind of zeal deserves reward. May they soon have a permanent pastor.

The Rev. A. H. Beer, who has been serving for the past year or more as deacon in St. Stephen's Parish, Casselton, was advanced to the priesthood on April 15 by Bishop Tyler. The ordination occurred in St. Stephen's Church, Casselton. The candidate was presented by the Rev. J. S. Brayfield and an impressive sermon was preached by the Rev. C. H. Brown of Mandan. Mr. Beer will continue in charge of the parish at Casselton where he is doing aggressive work along sound lines. There is a bright outlook for this parish under such leadership. Mr. Beer comes to us from the Methodist ministry. He is leaving his parish in June for a visit to his parents in Coventry, England.

RHODE ISLAND

Remarkable Confirmation Class—One of the largest classes in the history of the diocese was confirmed by Bishop Perry, on Sunday evening, June 1, at St. Luke's Church, Pawtucket, the Rev. Arthur J. Watson, rector. The class numbered one hundred and eleven persons, divided almost equally between the sexes, and ranging in age from eleven to sixty years. Thirteen were from other communions. During the service a second service was held in the basement to accommodate the throng attending the church.

During the past five weeks the rector has been conducting a modified form of mission and class in personal religion, with crowded congregations on Sunday and weekday evenings. While the church has been renovated and beautified the past year at considerable expense there is urgent need of a new and larger edifice with parish house facilities. The phenomenal growth of the parish is largely due to the enthusiastic leadership of the present rector.

St. Andrew's Industrial School, Barrington—On Memorial Day, St. Andrew's Industrial School, Barrington, a diocesan institution caring for sixty-two homeless boys, kept open house for many interested friends who came to visit it from all parts of the diocese. Mr. Albert L. Miller presided at the annual meeting of St. Andrew's League, an auxiliary organization comprising members of young men's clubs in twelve parishes in the diocese, who presented $200 as their annual gift to the school. Bishop Perry made the address at the noon meeting in the gymnasium, when the year's prizes were given to the boys, and a message of remembrance was sent to the Rev. William M. Chapin, founder and warden of the school, now ill in the South.

Annual Conference of G. F. S.—Many associates and members of the Girls' Friendly Society journeyed from all parts of the diocese to attend the annual conference Saturday afternoon, May 24, at Christ Church, Lonsdale. Bishop Perry made an address, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Frederick S. Penfold, D.D., the new rector of St. Stephen's Church, Providence. Most of the delegates remained for supper and a social evening.

British Empire Day—British Empire Day and the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Queen Victoria were observed on May 25 by the British societies of Providence and vicinity with a parade and special evening services at Grace Church and All Saints' Church. At the former the rector, the Rev. Philemon F. Sturges preached, and at the latter the preacher was the rector, the Rev. Arthur M. Aucock, D.D. Martial music prevailed at both services.

St. Mary's Orphanage—At the annual meeting of St. Mary's Orphanage, a diocesan institution for homeless children and babies, at Grace Church parish house, May 26, the reports showed that the orphanage is caring for sixty children. During the past year its crowded buildings have allowed the admission of less than twenty new children, while one hundred and twenty-five have been turned away. Steps were taken at this meeting for the erection of new buildings, for which a building fund of $12,000 has accumulated.

Rural Work in the Diocese—Rural work is steadily extending through the western section of the diocese. Deaconess Dahlgren and Deaconess Gillespie of the diocesan missionary staff have added villages and isolated families to their circuit of summer visitations and correspondence courses until now they are in touch with seventy-five families and one hundred and three children, who are far removed from all other church ministrations. In the five years of their rural work the deaconesses have brought seventy-four to baptism and thirty-three to confirmation.

Woman's Auxiliary—The quarterly meeting of the Rhode Island branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at St. Mark's Church, Warren, on May 27, with a good attendance. Addresses were made at the morning session by Bishop Perry, the Rev. Dr. Arthur R. Gray, of the Church Missions House, and the Rev. Dr. Frederick S. Penfold, of St. Stephen's Church, Providence. Mrs. William Hoppin presided at the afternoon session, when reports were rendered from the different departments of work.

WESTERN NEW YORK

Kirkpatrick House, Cuba, for Old Ladies' Home—By the will of the late Mrs. Bell K. Waite a house and grounds in Cuba were given to the Diocese of Western New York for the purpose of establishing an old ladies' home. An endowment of $26,500 has been put in the care of the trustees of the parochial fund of the diocese. A local corporation has been formed at Cuba to manage the home. In the past month the parishioners of Christ Church have raised $1,400 to finish furnishing and refitting the building. The home will be opened as soon as the improvements are completed.

WESTERN MICHIGAN

Encouragement—Lent and Easter seem to have brought to Western Michigan a splendid awakening to new and vigorous life. "As thick as tale comes post with post" bringing good news of progress. A hasty summary of the reports shows a spiritual Lent and glorious Easter to have been practically the unanimous experience.

Large Gifts—Assuming generally that the congregations were large and devout, a reference to the offerings may serve best to indicate the prevailing enthusiasm. At St. Thomas, Battle Creek, the offering of $1400 was $400 larger than asked for, and the Church School mite box offering was $200 the largest on record in the parish. At St. Mark's, Coldwater, there were ten baptisms on Easter Even, and 172 persons made their Easter Communion out of 179 enrolled communicants. By the will of Mrs. J. B. Pearce, $500 has been added to the endowment fund. The new rector, the Rev. G. S. A. Moore, expects to be released from the United States service and to enter upon his rectorship about June 1. At St. Luke's, Kalamazoo, the services were splendidly attended even in a pouring rain at the early Communion, the congregation made an offering of over $10,550, paying off all debts and providing for needed repairs, while the Church School gave an additional $319 for missions.

Akeley Hall—The diocesan church school for girls, Akeley Hall at Grand Haven, will hold its annual commencement June 3. In the absence of the bishop in Europe, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent will present the diplomas, the address to the graduates will be given by Dean Potter of St. Mark's, Grand Rapids, and the Rev. Walter F. Tunks of Muskegon will deliver the baccalaureate sermon.

Chaplains in the Movies—Some recent moving pictures are being shown about the country presenting the Michigan troops of the 126th Regiment, 32nd Division, in the preparatory camp at Waco, in training in France, and finally in their parade at their welcome home in Grand Rapids. Chaplain F. S. White, formerly dean of St. Mark's, and Bishop McCormick's son, Chaplain J. Brian McCormick, are both featured with words of praise.

Interesting Records for Lent and Easter—At Holy Trinity, Manistee, the Easter offering was devoted to paying the missionary apportionments. At Trinity, Marshall, Holy Week and Easter services were richly devotional, the church offering was the largest on record, and the school which has grown from twelve children a year ago to an average attendance of over seventy, gave $25. A purse of $100 was also presented to the rector and his wife. It is noteworthy that in this parish the Friday evening Litany, followed by confirmation instruction, began in the chapel but attracted such numbers that it was found necessary to transfer the services to the church.

At St. Paul's, Muskegon, nearly all the three hundred members of the parish made their Easter Communion and gave a special offering of $800. At the Church of the Epiphany, South Haven, the Rev. Kenneth Ives Rice became priest-in-charge at the beginning of Lent. The Easter offering was large enough to clear the mission of all indebtedness and leave a balance toward the parish house fund which now amounts to about $2,000. The mission is hoping soon to be admitted into the union with the diocese as an incorporated parish.

During the Bishop's Absence—Bishop McCormick is not likely to be home again from France before August. Meanwhile the Standing Committee, the Board of Missions, the archdeacon, and all other workers, are doing all in their power to prove their loyalty, to encourage the missions, to fill the vacancies, and make the bishop a "proud and happy man" upon his return, manifesting their love for him by their acts.

WEST VIRGINIA

Death of Mr. Martin—St. Ann's, New Martinsville, has suffered a great loss in the death of its senior warden, Samuel Riggs Martin. He was a member of the business committee of St. Ann's while it was a mission and a vestryman since it has been a parish. He had been senior warden of the parish since 1898. He was born in 1830 and was the son of the founder of the town.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE

The Rev. H. R. Carson Returns—After an extended leave of absence of upwards of four months, spent mostly at Sewanee, Chaplain Carson has returned to the field and resumed his work as a government chaplain and representative of the Board of Missions. He left New York May 3 on the Panama and had the pleasure of renewing old acquaintances at Port au Prince, Haiti, where his steamer made a long stay. Learning of his presence in the harbor, several of the native clergy extended him the courtesy of special calls on his steamer. The recent visit of the Rev. Dr. Arthur R. Gray and the Rev. Dr. W. L. Bevan to Haiti was uppermost in the conversation of the local clergy and all were keenly appreciative of the significance of the coming of the two distinguished churchmen.

Visitation of Bishop Knight—The bishop in charge of work on the Isthmus has sent word of his intention to start upon his regular visitations immediately after June 25, coming from New York in company with Mrs. Knight. The disturbed conditions of travel during war time have made it impossible for the bishop to observe his rule of at least one annual visit, sometimes two, and he will be eagerly welcomed by all.

Addresses on the Work—Chaplain Carson had an opportunity of presenting the needs of the field to the mission study class of St. Matthias' Church, Philadelphia, and St. John's Church, Somerville, New Jersey, as well as to informal Woman's Auxiliary meetings in various parishes and it is proposed that he return to the States in the fall to take part in the Nation-Wide Campaign of the Board of Missions. There are significant conditions here which it is felt he can best present to the Church and make the appeal which is a long time overdue.

LONG ISLAND

Dr. Jackson Resigns—At the morning service on May 25, the Rev. Townsend Glover Jackson, D.D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Flatbush, announced his resignation after thirty years of service. When Dr. Jackson began his work he had one hundred communicants; he has now over sixteen hundred. The property on which the rectory and church (which has been enlarged twice) stand is entirely free of debt, while the Church of the Holy Apostles, now independent, was started by St. Paul's. Dr. and Mrs. Jackson are greatly beloved and his resignation, which failing health makes necessary, was accepted with the deepest regret.

The Rev. Wallace J. Gardner, chaplain of St. Paul's School, Garden City, has been chosen at Dr. Jackson's request as his successor.

Church Club Lauds Bishop Greer—Surrogate G. A. Wingate, formerly Brigadier General in the 27th Division, and the Rev. J. C. Welwood, rector of the American Church at Dresden, addressed the members of the Church Club at the monthly meeting. The club went on record as approving the Nation-Wide Campaign. Resolutions in memory of Bishop Greer were unanimously adopted.

Sixtieth Anniversary of St. Matthew's—The sixtieth anniversary of the Church of St. Matthew, Brooklyn, was observed on Sunday, May 25, with special services and on Monday with a reception and entertainment which took the form of an historical review of the parish. Pictures of the founders of the parish, as well as many of the workers, were thrown upon a screen. A purse of gold was presented to the rector, the Rev. F. W. Norris, D.D., and a bouquet of American Beauty roses to Mrs. Norris.

The church has had six rectors. Dr. Norris has been with the parish nineteen years, and in that time the church has been entirely freed of debt and can report progress in every direction.

The Rev. Andrew C. Wilson's Anniversary—Ascension night, May 29, was the tenth anniversary of the rector of St. Paul's Church, Clinton street, the Rev. Andrew C. Wilson, who has served for this time without any stipend, all the income from the endowments and other sources being used for the maintenance of the building, and the work conducted in the parish.

The Rev. S. B. Blunt, D.D., was the special preacher and, as has been the custom on this night since the beginning of the war, each member of the congregation brought a red rose and left it at the foot of the war altar, in memory of those who have fallen in battle. MARY E. SMYTH.

COLORADO

As a mark of appreciation of his long service, the congregation of St. Stephen's Church, Denver, has presented the Rev. H. R. A. O'Malley with a check wherewith he is to purchase an automobile. The Masonic Palestine Lodge, of which he is a member, had a hand in the gift and attended the service at which the presentation was made. The confirmation class of this year is the largest ever presented at St. Stephen's.

Reports of Easter Offerings throughout the diocese show satisfactory but incomplete figures as follows: St. Mark's Denver, $1,885; Grace Church, Colorado Springs, $1,135; Ascension, Denver, $1,100; Boulder, $740; Greeley, $635; St. Barnabas, Denver, $600; St. Thomas, Denver, $550; St. Peter's, Denver, $205, in addition to the cancellation of a mortgage of $1,500 about the same time.

Sunday Schools—A standard of excellence based upon marks given for observation of certain points has been suggested for the Northern Deanery of Colorado. Notable amongst these points are public catechizing by the clergy or their appointees, punctuality in opening and closing, teacher training and regular children's services in church.

Union Gathering at St. John's Cathedral—On May 11 the various Sunday Schools made their annual appearance to offer their missionary lenten offerings and pass in review before the bishop. Evergreen with twenty-two scholars led the way with an average offering of $5.78, beating St. Barnabas, Denver, which has excelled the rest for six years past, aggregating in that period a total of $2,200 subscribed for the missionary work of the Church. The banner for representative attendance on the day of presentation was won by St. Luke's, Montclair, with 100% of scholars on hand.

BRAZIL

Church Development in Rio de Janeiro—Two new departures were made recently by our three parishes in Brazil's beautiful capital, one being a convocation of the clerical and lay workers of this archdeaconry, the other the introduction of the Three Hour Service on Good Friday. Both experiments were decidedly successful.

Archdeaconry Convocation—On April 9, in the Church of the Redeemer, occurred a profitable conference of our church-workers under the presidency of Dr. Meem, Archdeacon of Rio, the meeting being the first of its kind in the Brazil mission. The various parish activities were outlined by delegates, representing their respective vestries, Sunday Schools, Woman's Auxiliaries, and young peoples' societies. It was indeed inspiring to hear so many voices unite in singing appropriate hymns and in repeating the creed.

The meeting showed better than anything else could have done both the extent and the oneness-of-aim of the Church's varied activities. In this field, which was entirely unoccupied by our Church ten years ago, we now have three organized parishes, all admirably located, five Sunday Schools, ten preaching stations, nearly four hundred communicants, and property to the value of $42,000. To care for such an extensive work properly it is obvious is too much for the present staff of three clergymen, and it would be impossible to carry it on at all were it not for the enthusiastic cooperation of the laity.

We plan to have three such convocations per year, meeting by turn in the different parishes.

Holy Week—Holy Week has naturally been marked from the first by special services; but the Three Hour Service on Good Friday was introduced for the first time this year in the Church of the Redeemer and in Trinity Chapel. It was well attended in both, the people entering sympathetically and reverently into the solemn commemoration. Various members expressed the opinion that no observance could be more appropriate or impressive.

Miss Packard's Absence—We feel keenly the absence from us of our only woman missionary, Miss Mary Packard, who sailed for home on the S. S. Vauban on April 8. Miss Packard has dedicated herself to the Brazil mission almost from its beginning, coming out as a pioneer worker twenty-eight years ago. The success of the enterprise is in no small degree due to her faithful, untiring labors, especially in various Sunday and parochial schools and in the Woman's Auxiliary. She leaves here a host of friends and admirers whose lives have been touched and blessed by her Christian ministrations.

FRANKLIN T. OSBORN.

English Church News

New Bishop of Chichester—Approval, but nothing like enthusiasm, has been evoked by the translation of Dr. Burrows, Bishop of Truro, to the Bishopric of Chichester. Dr. Burrows, who is sixty years of age, has been at Truro seven years. He was previously Archdeacon of Birmingham under Bishop Gore, and in this capacity did a great work in organizing the new Diocese of the Midlands. As a bishop, he has never fulfilled the high hopes of his friends. He is a scholar of repute and a proved organizer, but I fancy owing to his somewhat brusque and unsympathetic manner, he has failed to win the hearts of the Cornish people. At any rate, as the bishop puts it frankly himself, he welcomes this "opportunity of making a fresh start."

A Difficult Diocese—Truro bishopric comprising practically the county of Cornwall, was reconstituted as a separate diocese in 1876. Methodism in its old type is very strong throughout the diocese and this fact makes it an exceedingly difficult diocese to work. Dr. Benson, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, was the first bishop. His charming personality and outstanding abilities as a leader, made a profound impression upon the new diocese, which he succeeded in welding together in a remarkable way. Dr. Benson was followed by the saintly George Wilkinson, one of the greatest spiritual forces of his day. Dr. Wilkinson was essentially a mission preacher and he thoroughly understood the emotional Cornish temperament. It was no wonder, therefore, that the Methodists and other nonconformists flocked to hear him and claimed him as their bishop. Unfortunately his health suffered and he was advised to go north, and when he was offered the See of St. Andrews, in connection with the Episcopal Church in Scotland, he accepted the offer. George Wilkinson was succeeded by Dr. C. W. Stubbs who was elect preacher at Harvard in 1900. He was a profound scholar, but he never gripped the diocese as Bishop Wilkinson had done. Thus, I fear, the Church in the Diocese of Truro has not made great progress during the past twelve years.

Other Bishoprics Vacant—Besides Truro there are two other bishoprics vacant—Oxford and Chester—and two or three other changes are imminent. Our prime minister—who as readers of THE CHURCHMAN know—is a Baptist, has been criticised for the delays which have occurred in filling ecclesiastical vacancies. The whole system of so-called "crown patronage" which is actually invested in the prime minister is open to grave objection, especially when the premier happens to be a nonconformist. But I do not think the critics sufficiently take into account the tremendous burdens borne by Mr. Lloyd George since he became prime minister. I have reason to know that when he first accepted office, he looked with favour upon a suggestion which was made to him to appoint an ecclesiastical patronage committee. Since then he has been engaged as the whole world is aware, almost day and night, first with the prosecution of the war and more recently with the peace conference. So far his appointments have given satisfaction, except to extreme "party men" who are never satisfied unless their own particular coterie is recognized.

May Meetings—What are known in this country as the "May Meetings" are now in full swing. I do not think you have anything of the same nature in the United States for the very adequate reason that you have a much better way of "doing things." I may perhaps be allowed to explain that "May Meetings," which really extend from the middle of April to the first week in July, consist of three hundred and sixty meetings and services of various missionary and philanthropic organizations, which give an account of their stewardship. These gatherings are not nearly so popular as they were a decade ago when hundreds of people from all parts of the country flocked to London each year, to attend the meetings of their pet society. There is now a feeling that this sort of thing has been overdone and that the multiplication of meetings leads to waste of effort and material, but as our home and foreign missions are organized by societies and not by the Church in her corporate capacity, May meetings are likely to continue for some time yet.

The Church Congress—After an interval of six years, the Church Congress is to be held next October at Leicester, one of the large industrial towns of the midlands. The Bishop of Peterborough, who is one of the most active and up to date of our bishops, will preside. The program has not yet been arranged, but it will probably be largely a "Reconstruction Congress."

The bishop is an ardent social reformer, but he is also equally strong on reforming abuses within the Church, and he is sure to invite "live" men to address the Congress.

The last Congress was held in 1913 at Southampton. The 1914 gatherings were to have been held at Birmingham, but when the war broke out, all the public halls were commandeered by the government. The following year, arrangements were made for the congress in the Chelmsford diocese, but when the program was practically complete, it was felt advisable to abandon the project, owing to the frequent air raids in that particular locality. Southend—the town where the congress was to have been held—suffered considerable damage from enemy air craft on two or three occasions.

The Church's Year Book—For several years past there has been a marked decrease in the number of baptisms, confirmations and communicants in the Church of England. According to the official year book, which has just been published for 1919, this tendency is emphasized.

For example, during 1918 there were 210,020 confirmations against 234,572 the previous year. The baptism of infants totalled 450,580 against 511,907. Baptism of persons of riper years numbered 13,170 as compared with 13,354. The communicants at Easter 1918 were 2,220,194 compared with 2,224,057. Children on the Sunday School books have fallen from 2,300,197 in 1917 to 2,233,111 in 1918. Sunday School teachers have decreased from 198,012 in 1917 to 190,095.

No doubt some of these decreases are due to the war, but unfortunately we cannot close our eyes to the fact that the decline both in baptisms and Sunday School scholars had set in before the war.

All the Churches have been experiencing the same trouble for several years. Various explanations are offered but so far, no effective method seems to have been devised to stop the leakage.

JOHN O'LONDON.

Bishop Greer's Brother Dies

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA—Mr. Jacob Greer of this city died on May 25. Mr. Greer was the brother of the late Bishop of New York. He was seven years younger than the bishop.

"See, Mr. Farmer What I've Done With Your Wheat"

Prof. A. P. Anderson took whole wheat and sealed it in huge guns. For sixty minutes he revolved the guns in a fearful heat, and turned all the wheat moisture to steam.

Then he shot the guns and the steam exploded. Every food cell was blasted for easy digestion. The wheat kernels were puffed to thin, toasted bubbles, eight times normal size.

Created the Supreme Food

Thus he made whole wheat so completely digestible that every atom feeds. He made it so flaky, so flavory, so enticing, that children revel in it.

When you float it in milk you have the greatest food in the world. It tastes like a food confection. It is the best-cooked food in existence—the easiest grain food to digest.

It combines whole wheat and milk. It's a vast mistake in these summer days not to have this dish ever handy.

Puffed Grains are not mere breakfast dainties. They are all-hour foods. And few things so delightful can be served without restriction.

The 1919 Tower of Babel

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Without trespassing upon your valuable space by any elaboration on my part, permit me to ask this question which I think a pertinent one: Was it by accident or by premeditation that nowhere in the twenty-six articles composing the covenant of the proposed League of Nations, as published to the world, is the name of the Supreme Ruler of the universe mentioned?

As few parents would hope for peace in the family without seeking guidance and grace from above, why is it that the peace conference does not either in preamble or postscript invoke "the guidance and grace and blessing of Almighty God," the God in whose hand are all the corners of the earth, in seeking to make and sustain peace among the nations?

Since the building of the tower the top of which mankind proposed should reach unto heaven, but which being conceived in the absence of the Lord brought but confusion, no undertaking equals the much to be desired League of Nations, calculated as it is to bring heaven down to earth. But have we any right to expect else than an ignominious death of that also, even though the centre of our fondest hopes, if we give not God the glory?

Dean Hart and the Hymnal

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Indeed, Sir, I apologize for throwing discredit upon the critical faculty of the hymnal commission. I was using a paper copy before I lately purchased the full volume with the index; my assistant ticked off the omitted hymns and by some misadventure "Praise to the Holiest in the Height" fell under the ban mistakenly.

I think it was a mistake on the part of the commission to try to do too much—to serve too many masters. In these days when the sheep are straying all over the common, an antiquated shepherd such as I am is very jealous of the old paths. I cannot write too strongly, but perhaps not too wisely.

H. MARTYN HART.

Denver, Colorado.

Legality and Christianity

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In a letter on "Irwin St. John Tucker's Sentence" in your issue of today, there appears an amazing affirmation. In recounting the names of the five men convicted in Chicago last January of violation of the Espionage Act, and sentenced to twenty years in the federal penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth, it is stated: "One of them, Irwin St. John Tucker, is a priest of the Church. The Church therefore must take some action in the case."

Why? If a man in orders commits a crime, the fact, that being in orders he ought to have known better, constitutes an aggravation, rather than palliation of his crime. The only action the Church can take is to follow the example of the courts, which when a member of the bar is found guilty of a felony, strikes him off the roll of attorneys. Was deposition of this criminal from the priesthood the action which your correspondent had in mind, as being that which "the Church must therefore take?"

JOHN BROOKS LEAVITT.

New York City.

[We understand that our correspondent feels that the Church sentence should follow automatically and agree with the verdict of the court. Had this been the practice of the Church in the past, St. Paul and a good many of our saints would not be in our calendar. What is legal is not always Christian and what is illegal is not always unchristian. We hold no brief for the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, but we understand that the courts are still to pass upon the legality of his sentence.—Editor.]

The Prayer Book Report

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

It has been the earnest desire of the Prayer Book commission to get its report before the Church early, and it has constantly borne in mind the resolution of the convention that it be printed six months before the convention's meeting. To this end the work was finished late in January, with the hope and expectation that the report would be published before Easter. The Macmillan Company is publishing the book, the proof of which has been read, and it ought to be ready for distribution very soon. It seems proper that the Church should know the facts. The work of the commission was long ago completed. In saying this, the commission is not wishing to place any undue blame upon the publishers for the delay. They are aware, as all who have to do with book-making at this time must be, that the difficulties attendant upon the printing and publishing of a book are great.

JOHN W. SUTER,

Secretary of Prayer Book Commission.
Boston, Massachusetts.

Reduce the Hymnal!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

I really had hoped when the final selection of hymns was made for the new hymnal that many, or at least half, would be eliminated, so as to bring the present large and bulky book down to reasonable size and weight. It is a great pity the new book contains such a large number of hymns; many will never be sung because a congregation will not sing them nor will they try. We now use about three hundred hymns during the year. The majority of rectors and organists desire congregational singing and work hard to encourage it because nothing is so inspiring as a large congregation singing heartily a fine hymn well supported by choir and organ.

Now the first thing to be done, in my opinion, is to reduce the size of the hymnal, then sing the same hymns frequently not only once or twice during the year but several times during the month. Our services call for about six hymns on Sunday, and if we were to sing the six hundred or more it would require two years to sing every one.

Then again the book is too expensive. We all know how difficult it is to keep a fine book in the pew rack. People will borrow a book now and then, because Mary or Jane wishes to try a few hymns on the piano; gradually the books disappear and we wonder what happened to the many books we had at one time. People naturally forget to return books of any description. Why can't we have a book of moderate size, say a book containing about three hundred and fifty hymns and the cost not to exceed fifty or sixty cents; then place several in every pew, and we will soon notice an improvement in congregational singing.

Mr. Hickson's Mission

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In Trinity Chapel, about fifty persons being present, with three or four clergy including Dr. Manning, Mr. Hickson recently made an address on Spiritual Healing.

Mr. Hickson is an English layman, well accredited, I believe, by Church of England dignitaries. As I had the pleasure of hearing him, may I take this opportunity to tell of his work, and express my sympathy with his motive.

This Christian gentleman's aim, as he frankly states, is not to practise psychotherapy (in the scientific sense of the term), but to demonstrate his belief in the Christian religion as a healing power. His mission is in the interest of the revival of the gifts of healing. His methods, he believes, are those of our Lord and His apostles—prayer and the laying on of hands.

As evidence of this power to heal the sick, Mr. Hickson read letters; one from a person he had healed of paralysis, and one from another whom he had healed of cancer. Mr. Hickson did not seem to think these cases were disputable.

Barring Mr. Hickson's organic cures, and other limitations which I need not discuss, I am in full accord with his mission, simply because I have been doing precisely the same work in New York for the past ten years, with ever-increasing encouragement and success.

In large numbers, too, I have had the satisfaction of proving to my patients that they do not need to go outside to call in charlatans, but that our own clergy, duly qualified, have the heart and the power to bestow upon them all the healing that they crave, within their own Church.

Our late lamented Bishop Greer was very much in sympathy with our work for the sick and depressed. He fully appreciated the value of suggestion by the laying on of hands, and, but for the fact that his strength failed him, I believe he too would have held a mission as evidence of the apostolic gift of healing in connection with our larger work here.

"To inform the mind and awaken the conscience"

"Not by might nor by power"

THE AGENCIES of the Episcopal Church have launched upon a great campaign to fit the Church for its part in the new and plastic world.

WHAT is the object of the campaign? Upon what does it rely for its success?

MONEY?

MONEY is a mere by-product.

EFFICIENCY in the King's Business?

GIVEN the one essential and efficiency will surely follow.

THE campaign is first of all to deepen the spiritual life of the whole Church; to tune its soul to the call for finer living and higher thinking.

"NOT by might nor by power, but by My spirit, saith the Lord."

THIS is the watchword of the great campaign: First of all it seeks a larger measure of the Spirit of God, knowing that all other needful things will be added unto this.

The Battalion of Death

YASKA. MY LIFE AS PEASANT, OFFICER AND EXILE. By Maria Botchkareva, Commander of the Russian Women's Battalion of Death, as set down by Isaac Don Levine.
Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York.
1919.

Everybody should read this book, for it is a fascinating tale of a wonderful human experience; it gives a singularly lucid picture of the rise and progress of the Russian Revolution; and it shows in all its ugly horrors what Bolshevism does to a country that once gets in its deadly grip.

Yaska is the name Madame Botchkareva took when by special permission of the czar she was enlisted as a soldier in the ranks. She is a peasant woman, scarcely able to read and write; but she has a marvelous memory, and is able to speak fluently and impressively. She told her story to Mr. Levine, in Russian, and he wrote it from her lips, the process taking a hundred hours. It is a happy fortune for the English reading public that this treasure is thus open to them. It is possible to point out but a few features of a book which holds the reader's interest from the first page to the last.

Quite incidentally Yaska reveals the treachery due to the German element in the Russian army and government. At a time when the organization should have been perfected she noticed that supplies for the troops began to fail. The general in command on her front walked openly in the most exposed places, and not a shot was fired at him by the Germans,—would that a Russian had exercised less restraint!
—and at weak spots in the defenses, he wiped his face with his handkerchief. Later when an offense had gained splendid headway, apparently to his surprise, he ordered a prompt recall to the original Russian line.

The reviewer has always believed that Kerensky was a weakling. Yaska shows that he was insufferable in his belief in his own powers, and that it was he that paved the way for the Bolsheviks. He broke down the discipline of the Russian army, and refused to listen to the many pleas, including that of the clear sighted Yaska, that the restoration of discipline and war against the Germans was vital to the salvation of the country. Kerensky relied upon the power of his tongue, and thought all was well when he left a body of soldiers cheering his speech enthusiastically. The moment his back was turned, the soldiers would follow his example in making many speeches, but they would not fight against the enemy.

It is impossible to summarize the ghastly tale of the red terror. The Russian soldiers, under the lead of the infamous Le-nine and Trotzky, became inhuman brutes, ready to slay Russians on every hand, but refusing to fire a shot at a German.

At the close she shows the disillusionment of the peasant, as the Germans advanced, and as the Red Guards plundered their stores. In the spreading of this disillusionment, and in the effective organization of the same element lies the hope of Russia's restoration to an honorable place among nations. The allied powers have been halting and so far useless. Whence shall come the deliverer? L. W. B.

An American Poilu

AN AMERICAN POILU. Little Brown Company, Boston, 1919.

Before America entered the war the young man who wrote these letters home to his mother and sister, had gone to France to serve as an hospital orderly.
Through friendship with an officer who was a patient the young American entered the French army and saw service at Soissons and Château Thierry and won his Croix de Guerre last June. But the remarkable thing about his letter is not his military experiences but his faith. "My dreams are my support" he writes. "I transform in order to endure." "An interesting sight these stoves on wheels with the stew inside. The cook, a huge fork in his hand stands near by, and the crowd of pathetic poilus gather round with their cups and pails. I watch and I have a vision. Suddenly behind the backs of these dreary, muddy, homesick soldiers I see the treasures of Paris, the Venus de Milo, the rose windows of Notre Dame, the golden galleries of the Louvre, the gardens, the avenues—quiet, sunny, leafy—all the splendors seeking safety and finding it behind these crowding soldiers waiting for their pails of supper." Sara Ware Bassett of Boston in an introduction is amply justified in saying "Truly war is not without compensations when through the rifts of the battle's haze we are granted glimpses of a soul like this!" A. L. M.

Le Jour de Gloire

THE DAY OF GLORY. By Dorothy Canfield.
Henry Holt and Company. New York. 1919.

To all who have read Home Fires in France the fact that Dorothy Canfield again tells the intimate story of the French people during the war is recommendation enough for The Day of Glory. The sketch from which the volume takes its name, pictures November 11 in Paris, the day when "the horrible weight on the soul that had grown to be a part of life dissolved away in scalding tears of joy" as the salvo of cannon from the Invalides announced the end of the war.

"On the Edge" is the most noteworthy sketch, a pendant, as it were, to "The Permissionnaire" in the earlier volume. It is the story of the agonizing life of suspense and hardship the wife of the poilu led and the release her husband's twenty-four permission affords. Several of the sketches describe the impression the dough boys made upon the French and vice-versa.

The Gray Home

A LITTLE GRAY HOME IN FRANCE. By Helen Davenport Gibbons. The Century Company, New York, 1919.

One cannot read this touching and beautiful story of how our boys thought and felt in France as they revealed themselves in this home of an American family over there, without feeling that if this house had been red or green the picture would never have been drawn. The appeal of this book is to the heart, though the hostess did not entertain angels unawares or otherwise. Though the boys were full of the fire of life and the adventure of war, still the very secret of their fine morale is revealed because the gray house was to them home and home is the magic willow that locates the presence of that inner spirit that gives life its poetry and charm. Mrs. Gibbons has succeeded admirably in getting "her boys" into her book.

In an introduction Mrs. Gibbons tells how her family kept open house for the boys and she kept a pencil and paper in an old Brittany wardrobe and as she went there for chocolate or socks for the boys she quietly wrote down their conversations.

Reminiscences

GEORGES GUYNEMER: Knight of the Air. By Henry Bordeaux. Translated from the French by Louise Morgan Sill. With an introduction by Theodore Roosevelt. Yale University Press. New Haven. 1918.

BEHIND THE WHEEL OF A WAR AMBULANCE. By Robert Whitney Imbrie. Robert M. McBride & Co. New York. 1918.

Of these two war books, recently come to our notice, the best introduction to the first is that supplied by Colonel Roosevelt, who says in a letter to the author: "I count the American people fortunate in reading any book of yours; I count them fortunate in reading any biography of that great hero of the air, Guynemer; and thrice over I count them fortunate to have such a book written by you on such a subject." M. Bordeaux's book justifies Colonel Roosevelt's hearty commendation. It is thrilling, interesting, not too long, and written in a direct, clear and simple style which we fain wish were the medium of many others who write their experiences in the war. Mr. Imbrie's book is less striking and of a more conventional type, chiefly interesting in that it records experiences in Serbia, about which we have heard little at first hand.

The Jugo-Slavs

A BULKWARK AGAINST GERMANY, by Bogumil Vosnjak. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, 1919.

The Slovene mentality, like the Serbian, possesses qualities peculiar to a nation without tradition and only just about to form its society. The unexhausted strength, the primitive instincts, the aversion to stilted formality and insincerity may appear immature but they are counterbalanced by the wonderful adaptability of the Jugo-Slav.

The Slovenes by their brave struggle against German imperialism since the Middle Ages have purchased to themselves this good degree, A Bulwark Against Germany. Professor Vosnjak now a member of the Jugo-Slav committee carefully explains the historical, social, economical, and political evolution of the Slovenes and with some fine passion shows that the Jugo-Slavic primitive sense of the immediate and practical, mingled with a strong socially controlled idealism tempered by the rebukes of many centuries indicate clearly that the Slovenes, Serbs, and Croats, promise to make Jugo-Slavia an important factor in future Europe.

For the laying on of hands is, after all, merely another form of suggestion. And our good bishop was well aware that suggestion, within the limits of a scientific definition, may influence healthy and morbid functions both of body and of mind.

But suggestion is more effectively exercised by some persons than by others. This fact explains the "gifts" of a special character claimed by various "healers." Why, then, should not any gifted bishop hold an annual mission for the laying on of hands in healing, just as he holds an annual visitation for the laying on of hands in confirmation? Should Mr. Hickson "stir up our pure minds by way of remembrance" of this episcopal as well as lay gift, his mission will have served a good purpose. As an auxiliary to more advanced religious and scientific healing work, I wish for his mission all possible success.

CONFERENCES

CONFERENCE for Church Work: A General Conference meets at Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass., June 19th to 30th, 1919. Directors: Rt. Reverend E. M. Parker, D.D., Rt. Reverend J. DeW. Perry, D.D. For registration, programs, or other information, apply to the Secretary, Miss Marian DeC. Ward, 415 Beacon St., Boston. The Summer School for Church Music meets at the same time and place.

A (CALL TO ACTION) CONFERENCE CHURCHMEN! All around us the world is in turmoil. Empires are crashing to ruin, and the established order is everywhere tottering. Has the Episcopal Church no clear word of inspiration, of faith, for the building of the New Order? If the trumpet of God give forth an uncertain sound, who shall prepare him for the battle?

In England, the Church Socialist League declares:

"The Church as a whole is failing to maintain the ideals and standards it has so long proclaimed, and is aiming to achieve, not the salvation of society, but the mere stability of the existing order."

Is this also true of us?
Followers of the Carpenter should be always on the side of the workers in their struggle for "life and life more abundant."

The Church Socialist League, mindful of this bounden duty, therefore issues hereby an invitation for a "Call to Action Conference," to which all churchmen in sympathy with Christ's challenge, "Ye Cannot Serve God and Mammon" are invited. This Conference will take place in the Club Room of the People's House, 7 East 15th Street, New York City, Friday, June 27th, at 10 a. m.

OBITUARY

RESOLUTION

"THE RECTOR, Church Wardens and Vestrymen of St. Bartholomew's Church in the City of New York, have learned with sincere sorrow of the death in this city on Monday, May 19th, 1919, of the Right Reverend David Hummel Greer. Bishop of New York and some time Rector of this Parish."

"Of the loss to the Diocese we are unable at this time to think without deep anxiety. For fifteen years he guided the Church with wisdom, justice and sympathy. His simple and unostentatious manner of life, his illuminated mind and unflinching courtesy influenced an ever widening circle of friends and admirers."

"Our minds turn back in gratitude to his great ministry in this parish. A brilliant preacher, a wise and far-seeing administrator, a faithful pastor and a loving friend, he placed St. Bartholomew's Church "as a city set upon a hill." Notwithstanding the multiplicity of his duties and cares he never lost interest in nor affection for the parish which he so faithfully served. One of his last public acts was to participate in the service of dedication of the new church, giving thereby we hope to the future some measure of a noble and rich past. His afflicted family has our sincere and deep sympathy in the sorrow that has fallen upon them."

"On motion, made and seconded, it was unanimously

"RESOLVED, That this minute be spread upon the records of the Parish, printed in the Year Book and in the church newspapers and that an engrossed copy of the same be sent to the Bishop's family."

Leighton Parks, Rector.

Clerk of the Vestry."

DIED

SHERWOOD—Mary Balis Sherwood, widow of the late Rev. Lyman H. Sherwood, entered into rest from her home at Lyons, New York, on Wednesday, May 28, 1919, in her 88th year. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.

ST. PAUL IN BOSTON

By Professor Charles S. Baldwin.

WHILE the missionary was waiting for them in Boston on his way to New York, he was cut to the soul to see the city overrun with false religions. So he debated in church with those who had the older religious traditions, and on the Common every day with any one that came along. When the Realists and Pragmatists from Harvard fell in with him, some of them said, "What is this word-monger trying to say?" and the others replied, "He is probably a Swami, or a prophet of some other oriental cult"—this because they heard "incarnation" and "resurrection." But they set him before an open meeting of the Discussion Club with the sarcastic introduction: "May we know just what this new philosophy that you are talking about so much is? You bring to our attention something—shall we say?—exotic. So we wish to know what it really amounts to." Bostonians, you know, and also the transient intellectuals who are pursuing Boston culture, enjoy nothing so much as hearing and discussing religious novelties.

Then the missionary rose and said:

"Ladies and gentlemen of Boston, the thing that strikes me most here is the insatiable appetite for religions. After I had reviewed, as I thought, the whole list of your various worships, I found one more expressed in an altar with this inscription, TO GOD UNKNOWN. Now doctrine is simply the definite proclamation of Him whom you do not know.

"God, if you conceive him as creative, as the maker of the world, or rather of the universe, has not come to live with men in the sense that men brought Him down by realizing Him in their own images, in the sense that He is limited and divided by our various subjective conceptions. Worship, therefore, cannot rightly be the projection of our own imaginations; for that makes God depend on us.

"No, it is of the very essence of God that He gives, that He is the life-giver, the maker of men and of nations, diversifying individual and ethnic life from the common human stock. The common human impulse to seek God moves as if we were fumbling after and trying to find Him who cannot be far from any one of us, since in Him we live and move and are. Your own best poets have said in various ways that we are His offspring.

"But since we are the offspring of God, we may not permit ourselves to worship our own images of God, however beautiful the embodiment of these human conceptions, as if the images were divine. What is really divine can be known; for it has been fully revealed. In those times and places, indeed, when men could not grasp fully, God responded to such imperfect worship, such gropings, as yours; but those times are not these, and those earlier seekers after God are not you. Your worship may no longer content itself with the empty beauty of outworn imaginations, nor your theology with those philosophical speculations which remain abstract because they balk at moral issues. Morality may be the long story of human behavior; but righteousness is divine. The hope of righteousness in the world is that the creator is the judge.

"God has come to dwell with men in the only way satisfying to the soul, not through our embodying His divinity, but through His embodying our humanity. We need not imagine Him; for we can receive Him, since He gives Himself. This is the final meaning of God as the life-giver. His final revelation is personal; for our final need is the empowering of personality. He has given us, not a larger philosophy nor a higher imaginative conception, but Himself. The personal influence of God is not limited by our philosophic or imaginative grasp; it is not our ideas or imaginations; it is personality working directly on personality. Jesus is not another great man; He is God made man. To receive Him is not to accept another philosophy or another example; it is to receive God. The eternal life that has been the dream of every great soul and the blind hope of even the smallest has been given completely and really, not partially and symbolically, by being given in the person of the Son of God. Thus the rising of the Son of God from the dead is not the survival of a man, nor the withdrawal of God after a revelation of Himself on earth; it is the proof of the empowering of mankind with eternal life. And the only real worship is the worship of God really present to empower us."

When they heard "rising from the dead," some openly jeered. Others said, "We should like to hear you discuss that further." So the missionary left them, since with him discussion was a means, not an end. But some of them—a judge of an old Cambridge family and several others, including one woman—hung upon him until they received the faith.

ON THE EPISCOPATE

I AM not prepared to accept anything just for the sake of unity. I am only prepared to accept it on the basis of convinced principle. But I have great hopes that here again you can reinterpret the meaning of episcopacy. On the rigid theory that outside the episcopal succession divine grace does not flow, we shall never get an understanding, but on the idea that the bishop, who, of course, need not be a prelate (perhaps if he were paid less money than all the rest of the clergy it would be an excellent thing, because in the Church of Christ the higher you go the less money you ought to get)—if the bishop were recognized to be the representative, not of the congregation, but of the whole Church, as he is meant to be, and if he was also a symbol of the continuity of the Church, then I cannot see on these grounds how anybody could be unwilling to receive recognition from him, because that is what we all want. I don't want to be a nonconformist minister. God forbid! I am a minister of the Church of Christ and nothing else, and I want to be recognized by the entire Church as such. Therefore, if the bishop merely by jurisdiction or by historical succession, or by the divine will, if he be as he truly is, the symbol of the Church as a whole, and of its continuity, then I think he is a perfectly desirable and quite a necessary thing.

A New Right-Hand Help for Writers and Speakers

Fifteen Thousand Useful Phrases

A New Book for Building the Vocabulary

This is a practical handbook of felicitous phrases, striking similes, and literary, commercial, conversational terms for the embellishment of speech and writing. Grenville Kleiser has designed the book for the convenient use of business men, public speakers, writers, lawyers, clergymen, teachers, students and all persons who wish to write and speak the English language with facility and power.

In gathering the material for this book Mr. Kleiser has drawn freely from the great masters of English, including Shakespeare, Milton, Scott, Goldsmith, Lamb, Macaulay, Browning, Carlyle, De Quincey, Newman, Ruskin, Pater, Stevenson, Tennyson, Arnold, Kingsley, Bulwer-Lytton, George Eliot, Dickens, Thackeray, Hawthorne, Emerson, Irving, Longfellow, Lowell, Mahle, and many living writers.

There is an interesting introduction by Frank H. Vizetelly, Litt.D., LL.D., and a practical plan of study by the author.

It is believed that this is the only book of the kind so far published, and that it will fill a distinct and valuable need. It will be a useful supplement to the dictionary and regular book of synonyms.

Fairy Books for the Seasons

THE PEARL STORY BOOK. By Ada and Eleanor Skinner. Duffield and Company. New York. 1918.

THE TURQUOISE STORY BOOK. Compiled by Ada and Eleanor Skinner. Duffield and Company. New York. 1918.

THE TOPAZ STORY BOOK. Compiled by Ada M. Skinner and Eleanor L. Skinner. Duffield and Company. New York. 1917.

Readers of THE CHURCHMAN who remember the series of "Heart of the Jungle Tales," written a year ago by Ada M. Skinner, will need no further commendation of these story books. The Pearl Story Book contains stories of winter, of Christmas and the New Year, brought together from many sources (among them THE CHURCHMAN). Perhaps the most delightful among the stories are the little known legends such as "The Pine Tree Maiden," "The Shepherd Maiden's Gift," etc.

The Topaz Story Book is a collection of stories, legends and poems of autumn, Halloween and Thanksgiving. They are designed to express the joy and blessing which attend the harvest time when the fields are rich in golden grain and the orchard boughs bend low with mellow fruit. Most of the stories are meant to suggest or reveal certain facts which stimulate a spirit of investigation and to attract the child's attention to the beauty and mystery of the world. Others serve an excellent purpose by quickening his sense of humor.

The turquoise blue book in this series is so well arranged, that, though the theme throughout is summer, plenty of change of thought is provided which is even more necessary to the child mind than to the mature. It is a most cheery and well-balanced collection of reading material and free from didacticism.

Animal Pictures

FAMOUS PICTURES OF REAL ANIMALS. By Lorinda Munson Bryant. John Lane Company. New York. 1918.

We are indebted to the author that she has been willing to include sculpture among the pictures, and that some of the animals are fish. For they are the best of fish, Mr. Wm. M. Chase's in fact, while the sculpture presents, among other good things, the much embarrassed Farnese bull, in the midst of classic gestures. Then there is an archaic Greek cock-fight, and a stately procession of boar, ram and bull from the Roman Forum. An Egyptian tomb shows a frieze of donkeys, questionable attribute for any man, however famous. The horse is shown in various breeds and shades, from Fromentin's delicate Arab of the Desert, to great equestrian chargers who strain and tug at heavy loads which were never there. There is but one best elephant, Rembrandt's capital drawing, showing the capy beast in the guise of benevolent politician. Of lions there are a plenty, including the tame old fellow in his hut at Lucerne. Barye made the best lions. Singularly enough, the cat, so aloof and alert, has never been well portrayed until Steinlen, a few years ago, took to making lithographic posters. Dogs, of course, are well to the fore. It is not for nothing that man's next friend has been constantly in the way, both at the wrong time as well as at the right. Velasquez, Rubens, Hogarth, Landseer and Bonheur testify to it.

Mrs. Bryant writes vividly of all these things and many more with a fund of information about the painters and their tasks. Among Americans, we note La Farge, Winslow Homer, St. Gaudens, Borglum, Ward, Walter and Abbey as contributors to the eighty and more illustrations. In this country, the honors are rather with the sculptors as animaliers. Wild denizens of our wild North and West are helping to form our national style.

Bible Stories

THE WORLD'S WONDER STORIES. By Adam Gowans Whyte. G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York. 1917. Illustrated.

This is a book for children ranging from twelve to fifteen years. The "Wonders" cover a wide field, and are told in an interesting way quite within the comprehension of boys and girls of the adolescent period. The stories begin with the how, why, when and where of things in nature. Then, tell the origin of men, of religion, of the Bible, of right and wrong, the scientific processes of the commonplace experiences of daily life, etc. To those who are interested in the religious education of children the three chapters on the origins of religion, the Bible and the distinctions between right and wrong, will be a real disappointment. Not so much with what the author has written, but rather with what he has left out. The Christian revelation as a "wonder" story of rare value has no place. The indefinite conclusions of these chapters, at least, leave an unsatisfactory attitude of mind to which not a few will seriously object. R. P. K.

From a Hospital

DOMUS DOLORIS. By W. Compton Leith. John Lane Company, New York. 1919.

A man with literary skill and wide reading finds himself in the hospital for a long term, beginning with a period where he hovers between life and death. He describes his sensations, his surroundings, his attendants, and the various problems that come into his mind during his long sojourn. The book can not be read hastily, for there are many unusual words. If one has time to read, and wishes the mental exercise, he will find clever descriptions of people and solutions of problems.

Christopher

CHRISTOPHER. A STUDY OF HUMAN PERSONALITY. By Sir Oliver Lodge. George H. Doran Company, New York. 1919.

This last book of Sir Oliver's deals with the last or highest type of so-called spiritualism. Through a group of persons of the best culture we are shown the workings of this belief, call it as you will, philosophy or religion. We have no accounts whatever of mediums, table tipping, raps or the phenomena met with in the elementary stage of spiritualism. Christopher, a lad of nineteen, who lost his life on the field of battle, his family and many intimate friends are fully convinced of the interblending, and mutual helpfulness of this earth life and what we call spirit world, so that their lives show a rare charm and power.

C. W.

The Plane of the Spirit
THEY WHO UNDERSTAND. By Lillian Whiting. Little, Brown and Company. Boston, 1919.
The title of Miss Whiting's new book is most significant. While it is a simple interpretation of the spiritual environment of human life, yet human life generally has very slight experience or comprehension of communication between the seen and unseen worlds. But this is the secret of Christianity and of all forms of religion, as the very word religion itself indicates. They who understand know this truth. It has always been known. The Bible is full of it. A vast body of such communications, ranging over all time have affirmed it. Those who do not understand, are simply those who from indifference have devoted no thought to it, or those who from some physical, mental or moral condition are not enough in tune with the infinite. To such persons this book ought to prove helpful, as the author shows how one's life may be enlarged and brought to higher planes of being. While Miss Whiting relates many psychic phenomena they are sane and reasonable to those who have followed the experiments of the greatest scientists of the time. Miss Whiting is also a well known churchwoman and often quotes sayings from churchmen of high standing.

Ghost Stories
FAMOUS GHOST STORIES. Edited by J. Walker McSpadden. Thomas Y. Crowell Company. New York, 1918.
There are few of us who do not enjoy the sensation of horror induced by the perusal of a ghost story read at midnight by the dying embers of a woodfire in the dimly lighted room of a sleeping house. The intimacy of Sir Oliver Lodge and his friends with the spirits of the dead has dragged ghosts out into a glare of day-light which fades the mystery out of modern ghost stories. For a genuine attack of the creeps, we must return to Edgar Allen Poe, H. B. Marryat, Fitz O'Brian, Defoe, Hawthorne and Washington Irving. Mr. McSpadden has culled from these masters a collection of Famous Ghost Stories which if read in a properly sepulchral atmosphere will make sleep impossible to any who so desire.

The Kaiser in Drama
THE KAISER'S REASONS. A drama in three acts with interludes. By Elizabeth Marsh. Duffield and Company. New York. 1918.
The mingling of symbolism and realism is a task which requires the magic of a Maeterlinck. The result of Elizabeth Marsh's endeavor is not only confusion, but at times, absurdity. Miss Marsh calls her drama "the play behind the play." In it, she finds a parallel for the Kaiser in Frederick the Great, whose reason for invading Silesia (as voiced by Voltaire) was "a hundred thousand men."

A VENTURE OF FAITH

THE splendid meetings that were held in St. James' Church, Chicago, during the first week in June and which were attended by prominent men from different parts of the country, prompt us to observe that the general boards of the Church have undertaken to "put across" a paradox: namely, to raise money in a religious way. It is because they are thus about to mix the wine of the spirit with the water of worldly exchange that many cannot understand what it is all about. Without doubt they gave their critics occasion to find fault when somebody blundered and used that now lamentable expression, twenty million dollars. Twenty million dollars have no more to do with the campaign than have twenty cents, as is abundantly evident to those who have read Dr. Patton's article on the Nation-Wide Campaign in the June issue of the Spirit of Missions.

We understand that momentary lapse into the language of dollars and cents occurred when some one yielded to the importunities of a reporter for facts which would be comprehensible to the man on the street, for concrete facts. But that is just what cannot be provided at present, concrete facts, because the enterprise is as we have said religious rather than financial. Of course there are bound to be individuals who cannot conceive of an undertaking in which money is ultimately to play a part and which cannot be described in the same definite way as was described, for example, the Church Pension Fund. But that is not the fault of those who are conducting this campaign. If someone had gone to General Pershing in 1917 and demanded that he write down in black and white how much money he was going to need to prosecute the war, and how he was going to use every dollar and cent of it, they would have received exactly the same kind of answer that Dr. Patton is now giving to similar questions. In the military emergency business men realized that the war had to be won and that details as to its cost should very properly be left to one side until the victory was won. In the same way those who realize the vastness of the present emergency are prepared to wait for details until at least some of the Hindenburg Line has been evacuated by the powers of evil. Aye, more, they realize that to insist upon concrete details would be to destroy the spirit of the undertaking. It is perfectly possible, and religious, to limit to the language of bankers an undertaking dealing with superannuation and death; but when one is face to face with the forward march of mankind and the prosecution of that march he has to confine himself to the language of faith, hope and charity. One cannot define the indefinable; one cannot crib and cabin and confine to debit and credit columns an undertaking which is spiritual and educational. One cannot even pin down a college president.

The Nation-Wide Campaign will culminate in a week, the time for which apparently is to be appointed by General Convention, six days of which are to be devoted exclusively to exhortation and education; it will be only on the seventh and last day that the question of money will be introduced. Dr. Patton is therefore quite right in insisting in the last Spirit of Missions that the movement is "primarily educational and spiritual."

This is a big undertaking upon which the general boards of the Church have embarked. It is vastly bigger than the raising of one hundred and five million dollars as was undertaken by our Methodist brethren. As we see it the Church is about to cap the climax to all the campaigns political and religious which have taken place in the last two years. It is one thing to raise a hundred million or a hundred billion, but it is a far more difficult thing to bring a whole Church to its knees in prayer for the progress of the Kingdom of God.

As Oliver Cromwell once said, "One never mounts so high as when one knows not where one is going."

IF THINE ENEMY HUNGER

JUNE 22 has been appointed Thrift Sunday we are informed by the U. S. Treasury Department, "when churches of every denomination throughout the United States will lend their aid to the nation's thrift campaign." Pastors and rectors will be expected to lay before their people on that Sunday the personal and patriotic reasons for perpetuating the lessons of "sane saving, wise spending and safe investment which the American people learned throughout the self-sacrifice imposed by the war."

Thrift is certainly one of the virtues which the Church can wisely teach and enforce. The family that saves is likely to be one which exhibits self-respect, strives to educate its children and provides for the future. We live in a spendthrift age. Loose spenders are likely to have loose morals. Without pressing the virtue too hard, it is safe to say that preachers can find ready material for making helpful sermons on June 22. The Government needs money. It is the duty of patriotic citizens to help the nation secure funds for its maintenance.

But THE CHURCHMAN in adding its voice to that of the Treasury Department in urging a Thrift Sunday, would like to give its peculiar interpretation of a "safe investment." We are bidden in the gospels to lay up treasures in heaven. We should like to suggest a heavenly treasure for the consideration of Thrift Sunday. There is to our mind, a weightier, more humane reason for our people's saving than that of investment in treasury notes. In eastern and central Europe, millions of men, women and children are starving. Women in lying-in hospitals in central Europe are giving birth to ten-months infants. Children six and seven years old are no larger than our children of two and three. The suffering in Russia beggars description. Europe and Asia are dying of hunger. On Thrift Sunday let the clergy throughout America preach the Christian doctrine of compassion. Let them remember the words of their Master, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him." Let the ears of Christian people be open to hear the injunction of their Lord rather than the dissonant voices of hate and suspicion and diplomatic prudence. Let the blockade be lifted that food may pass through. Not a word has been uttered by the Churches on the inhumanity of the blockade. It is time that the Churches spoke. Let them speak on Thrift Sunday. A Voice more sacred than that of our Treasury Department bids the people save, save, save, that starving Europe may be fed.

DOCTORED NEWS

A MONTH ago there appeared in the columns of the World Tomorrow a communication entitled "From the Women of France to Their Sisters in Germany." We have seen this document in none of the other weekly papers and we have not seen it in any of our daily papers. The document may have had wide circulation in this country and have escaped our notice. In reproducing it, therefore, in our editorial columns under "The Week," we run the risk of giving a place to stale news. But we suspect that the spirit of the document is not such as would warrant its being "played up" by our daily papers and most of our weekly journals.

Why is it that Christian communities do not welcome more eagerly this kind of chivalrous Christian sentiment? Why is it that we prefer, really prefer, to propagate suspicion, and ill-will? Why is it that America has been told so little about the protests of the liberal clergy and other public men in England over the peace treaty? People in America have had as little access to what has been going on in Russia, Germany and France the past few months as if the world were ruled by absolute monarchs. And we largely have ourselves to blame for this. The official cables could not have fed us up with the sort of thing that has been coming across the water, unless the kind of news they gave us was the kind of news we read gladly. One of the dastardly effects of war is that it not only kills and maims the bodies of men, but it maims the soul of the peoples engaged in war. Even when the war is over and strategic reasons no longer exist for doctored news, we continue to get fed up with the sort of news that will mould a desired opinion. The insidious effect of this sort of thing is that after a short period of this carefully selected diet, we get to crave it and we refuse other kind of food.

The fact is, and it is a very tragic and alarming fact, that Christian America does not want to know that certain Christian women in France pity oppressed and starving German women and children. The moment such news is transmitted to us, we at once shout German propaganda or we roll over in our mouths the choice morsel of reports that in the Rhine provinces there is an abundance of food and fat mothers and babies. Ought we not as intelligent Christian people really to want to know the truth? If reports reach us by indirect channels, our instinct of hate and distrust at once discounts the reports.

Preaching a doctrine of Christian forgiveness and love is not a popular task even for a Christian journal. Christians do not like to be convicted of the sin of hate and unforgiveness. Abstract truths are well enough. We can glow over them and entertain them with a comforting sense of well-being. But to apply them to the world's open sores of hate—that is another matter. However, week by week, THE CHURCHMAN must continue to preach the orthodox creed of the Incarnation, with its doctrine of neighborliness and love as we see it manifested in the person of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

THE WEEK

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

VACATION RELIGION

THE war is over but religion isn't. The three coming months should go far to rebuild our waste spiritual tissue. People everywhere have drawn pretty heavily upon their reserves. There are signs in abundance that we need to regain our poise, our hopefulness and our calm faith in the power of the everliving Christ. Tense months lie just ahead of us, months of political turmoil, social unrest, world crises. Christians need to learn through prayer what things they ought to do and receive power faithfully to fulfill the same. It will not be quite wise or safe for us to take a vacation this summer from churchgoing. More than ever we need the early Communion and we need the refreshment of the right sort of prophecy at the later service.

This summer let's try to restore our souls as well as our bodies.

A REMARKABLE REPORT

THE Committee on Country Church and Rural Life of the Diocese of South Carolina made to the one hundred and twenty-ninth annual council held May 13 a searching and thought-provoking report, which we publish in part in this issue of THE CHURCHMAN. We wish that we might quote the entire document. Its honesty, its courageous facing of facts, its frank unwillingness to evade responsibility might well be emulated throughout the Church.

The conditions in South Carolina are typical of conditions in perhaps a majority of the dioceses throughout the country. South Carolina and its bishop are bravely facing the situation and proposing a remedy. Everybody knows that the Episcopal Church in America has failed woefully in its responsibility in rural communities. We arrive late and we act feebly. We lay foundations with dilatory enthusiasm and then we do not build upon the foundations. Some day we hope our historians will give us the honest narrative of church beginnings throughout our country. That narrative will reveal some striking facts. We shall understand why the Church limps with such pathetic lameness in some quarters and is so sturdy and healthy in others. Look at the towns in Minnesota where its statesmen bishops laid strong foundations, sought out and attracted strong men, pursued policies which attracted and not estranged the laymen in these frontier communities. Look at certain other dioceses where for one reason or another, pathetically weak clergy have pursued under unstatesmenlike bishops policies that have smothered the flickering light in the mission stations and village parishes. The story of domestic missions in America has been a tragic story. The Church has no policy. It has no power to put a wise policy into practice. It is the hope of many that the next General Convention will do something. To do our part to win and hold America for Christ is the pressing duty of the hour.

THE LEAVEN—

THE English Challenge has stood consistently for a Christian peace. It knows the difficulties that seem insuperable in the way of obtaining such a peace, but we like the spirit of its editorial utterances on this subject:

We have pleaded in this column for the empty chair at the conference table filled only by the presence of the Master; we have endeavored to outline the universal yet half-inarticulate longing for a new order in society, but up to the present we have entirely failed to detect any breath of idealism, any spark of the divine, within the conditions of peace. The terms of settlement may be wisely contrived, cleverly formulated, studiously just, yet they appear to lack any adventurous surrender to the spirit of Christianity. The indescribable mélange of strategic frontiers, economic corridors, stupendous indemnities, racial jealousies, colonial aspirations, the exploitation of backward races, and the intricacies of international finance and secret treaties are at length to be worked up into an indigestible lump which must be swallowed whole, not only by the representatives of a defeated and disorganized enemy, but also by the whole mass of intelligent democracy with whom alone rest its chances of satisfactory acceptance and ultimate digestion. In a word, the treaty of peace lacks the leaven of the Good News that is in Christ Jesus.

A BEAM IN OUR OWN EYE

THE New York Evening Post remarks editorially thus:

Before a mass meeting at Atlanta, called to protest against the persecution and slaughter of Jews in Poland and other countries of Eastern Europe, District Attorney Alexander declared that the people of Georgia could not voice such a protest without incurring the risk of the reply that "we no longer have any right to protest against murder, since the slaying here some recent years ago of a man for a crime of which he probably was innocent." This reference to the Frank case would hardly have been possible in Georgia until now. It is a gratifying proof that even where criticism of lynching was most bitterly resented only a little while ago, there are at least the beginnings of a sober second thought. Mr. Alexander was evidently a bit uncertain of the temper of the audience, for, after denouncing the "brutal and high-handed crimes" against the Jews abroad, he asked permission to read a paper, asking that it be received without any demonstration, and that he alone be held responsible for its sentiments.

A DEPUTY WHO WILL BE MISSED

THE deputies at Detroit are going to feel the absence of Mr. Francis A. Lewis in a way that they could miss the presence of hardly any other. Mr. Lewis has long been one of the veterans of the house and from the time that some committee became necessary for the co-ordination of the work of the two houses and for getting necessary things done within limitations growing ever more inelastic, he has been for the deputies as spokesman and incarnation of that committee, a smiling philosopher in its perplexities, a guide through the shallows of what Dr. Dix, with a resigned irony, once called "the unlimited possibilities of debate," serene and confident of an issue even when measures seemed crowded in inextricable complications. He talked little but always to the purpose, always with good humor, almost always with some flash of dry wit. His rule over dispatch of business had become unquestioned in the house but never has there been an "easier boss." Only once, so far as our recollection goes, has he made what could be called a speech, but that one is a joy in memory yet. It will rarely be the happy fortune of any deputy to hear twice such ebullient, swiftly-shifting, inexhaustible persiflage, so light-hearted that it made men of every group smile at themselves, for it carried and could leave no sting. There is never lack of business that might excuse such men as Mr. Lewis, and not a few other of our older deputies, from attending conventions to which they give freely time and talents both precious. The duty must be imperative that keeps him from Detroit. His place will be filled, ably no doubt. More than one deputy is of well proved ability in this regard. But he on whom the mantle falls can hardly find better standards for emulation than the skill and the temper which have been applied for the committee to dispatch of the convention's business by Francis A. Lewis.

FROM THE WOMEN OF FRANCE TO THEIR SISTERS IN GERMANY

THE World Tomorrow in its May issue published the following very striking letter from the women in France to the women in Germany. We have made editorial comment on this letter elsewhere. We are publishing the letter this week because it has seemed to us to have been neglected by the press of America.

Twice you have appealed to us in vain. Your actual words have not been given to the people of France, to the women who work and suffer; but without having heard them, we want to answer you, for the universal and identical sufferings of the war enable us to divine what you said.

We are sure you said to us, "The war is over, but the blockade still continues. The war is over, but our men, captives for so many years, remain in your hands. The war is over, but our little ones are hungry, our little ones are sick, they lack everything. We watch their sufferings, helpless."

We answer that we share your anguish, we suffer from the consciousness that we are still too feeble and too scattered to bring you effective help. We can only insist with you upon the sacred right of misery, whatever its country, to be equally respected and succored. Nevertheless, from the depths of our impotence, we should blush if we did not pray for your children to the Peacemaker who came to bring reconciliation among men. We are sending the following address to President Wilson:

"In the name of a group of French women who have tried, during the war, to preserve themselves from hatred, we come to join our voices to those of the women of the enemy countries who ask for help for their children. We know what our own have suffered in the invaded regions and it is precisely for that reason that we appeal to you for theirs. In these days of the armistice after the long martyrdom of mankind, evil must cease to reply to evil; it is time that people stopped torturing one another. We have faith in the greatness of your spirit. To all the captives of all the armies alike, open the prison doors. To all the hungry of all countries, distribute equally the bread of the world."

But you are as hungry for justice as for bread; therefore women of the conquered nations, with you we demand a true peace, a peace without violence, a peace without reprisals, a peace, at last, of disarmament. After these accursed years, we desire reconciliation of spirit. We are wretched women who, like you, have not been able, have not dared to do anything to lessen its horror and monstrous cruelties. And even if all the crimes should rest on your leaders alone, we know we could not impute it to you, for we know too well, in what depths of ignorance and of helplessness the war has shrouded us all.

Henceforth let the same remorse unite us. Never during the war have we let suffering set us against you. Never has the mourning of a German woman lightened our mourning. Today, before peace is officially concluded between our countries, we want to affirm the fraternity that unites us—us whom community of suffering and bereavement, the deaths of husbands and brothers and sons, have rendered still more like one another. Across the ruins and the tears let us labor together on the same holy work; let us tear the war from the souls of all; let us build for our children the common city of peace and of love.

NOT OUR OWN

BY THE REV. ANGUS DUN

AS one looks back on the miracle of our great training camps it is clear that the most remarkable things one witnessed there were not the outward things. Not the sixteen hundred buildings, nor the twenty miles of macadam road, nor the four hundred miles of electric wiring, all of these constructed in some three months. The most remarkable thing that went on there was an experience of human nature, a transformation of men, a new way of life, a new outlook, new associations, along with new clothes and a new vocabulary. These experiences came alike to the most various men, to Jones a shoemaker in Lowell, to Ford a typesetter in New York, to Smith a farm laborer from Maine, to Vanderlip a merchant from Providence, to Silberg a salesman from Portland, to Wagner an organist from Detroit. They are the common possession of a nation. They furnish new terms for the interpretation to these men and to ourselves of the old Gospel. These brief papers are an attempt to approach certain Christian ideas through the experiences of military training.

The first experience that came to our men was that of learning, or at least being very clearly told, that their lives were not their own, that they did not belong to themselves. They had grown up, most of them, under the general impression that their lives were their own. To be sure, they recognized obligations to family or lodge or Church. Sections of their lives admittedly belonged to others. But their lives as a whole were planned for, and dreamed of, and enjoyed by themselves. Then came the first experience, the first transformation. They were inconspicuous, average men, of no particular importance; —Jones busy making shoes and making dates, Smith working at his farming and looking longingly towards the city, Wagner the organist, a bit sensitive and a bit effeminate. And then to all of them came the Government of the United States, speaking in the name of the nation, and said, "You are not your own. You are ours. We claim your life. Henceforth you shall go where we order you to go, do what we instruct you to do, wear what we give you to wear, rise when we call you, march when we command you, rest when we permit you. Present yourselves a clean and living sacrifice, acceptable unto us, for that is your reasonable service. You Smith, you Jones, you are not your own. You are ours. We made you what you are. We fed you and taught you. We gave our sons in the past to purchase for you such liberty as you now enjoy. And now we want you. We gave and now we take away." In some such way the nation spoke to these men. And Smith and Jones and Ford, knowing in their heart of hearts that they were not their own, left their shoemaking and typesetting and ploughing and organ playing and served gladly.

The interest of this first experience of military life for us in the Church lies in its likeness to the situation in which we all find ourselves. We all grow up very readily in the illusion that we belong to ourselves, that our lives are our own. Of course we admit obligations, but we plan for ourselves and dream for ourselves. And then to everyone of us, if we only have ears to hear, comes the Government of the Universe, namely God, saying: "Thou art not thine own. Thou art Mine, and I claim thy life. From generation to generation I have labored for thy sake. The sun that warms thee, the earth thou dost tread upon, 'the cattle upon a thousand hills' are Mine. All things come of Me and only of Mine canst thou give unto Me. My own Son hammered out thy faith amid the distress of Gethsemane and the agony of the Cross. And now I need thee. My hope for mankind is not yet fulfilled. I fight on against the obstinacy and ignorance and selfishness of men until My perfect will is done. My kingdom shall come. My will shall be done. I your Maker claim your life as Mine Own."

If we understand as well as Smith and Jones and Ford understood we shall "serve the Lord with gladness; for it is He that hath made us and not we ourselves."

MY SONGS

BY MEDORA ADDISON NUTTER

I sing of sorrow—I who have not known
The bitterness of grief.
I write of tragedy, and live a life
Tranquil beyond belief.

Yet when I meet with sorrow face to face
And walk in shadowed ways
I think that I shall sing of happiness
Remembering these days.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH AND RURAL LIFE

THIS identical problem that we now have under consideration was vexing the Church in South Carolina as long ago as the year 1851.

At the sixty-second convention, holden, as was the usual custom of the time, in Charleston, the Macedonian cry was heard out of the then village of Greenville, in the distant mountain district of the state, calling for help from the Church in the city by the sea.

The memorial then presented from the vestry and churchwardens of Christ Church Parish, Greenville, set forth "that there are now but three clergymen and five church buildings in the back-country districts, which contain about 200,000 inhabitants, chiefly of the white population," and, "that there are fifteen villages of some importance, where the Church should be established, and many densely populated neighborhoods, which would justify the expense of a mission." Then follows the obvious statement, "that the present is an auspicious time for the introduction of the Church services and teaching." As it was then, so, now, "the growing importance and increasing intelligence of the section in question demands the earnest and united action of the Church in this diocese." Then, finally, "the wants of this important missionary field" are "recommended to the prayerful consideration of the pious and charitable churchmen of South Carolina."

The specific nature of the "prayerful consideration" taken in the premises was the recommendation of a resolution requesting the several clergymen to preach an annual sermon and to take up a collection any Sunday convenient for the purpose "to aid in the erection of church edifices in the back-country." And, with all that, action upon the resolution was deferred till the ensuing convention.

Perhaps, gentlemen of the council, because the work of the Master cannot be done by the expenditure of talk merely, and the spending of small change, and by putting off for a more convenient season, it is that, relatively, our present status is about the same as regards the rural and industrial features of the work of the Church in South Carolina as seventy years ago.

For not as yet, forsooth, has the Church in our diocese become a factor in any important degree in the rural and industrial life of our state. Though full two generations have elapsed since the far-sighted churchmen of Greenville made their call for the extension of the Kingdom, yet, in this present year of grace, forty of the forty-six counties of the state contain less than a hundred communicants each; while much more than one-half of the numerical strength and the financial resources of the diocese are confined within the territory of Charleston and parts adjacent, as was the condition one hundred years ago.

True, it is, from a national standpoint, the situation as respects the Church is relatively as deplorable. From authoritative statistical sources it is gathered that our ministry remains without increase; while two-thirds of the parishes of the whole Church averaging an excess of two hundred communicants are located within five states of the Union. The Rev. Dr. Atwater publishes without contradiction in the journals of the Church his opinion that the roll of communicants is padded to twenty per cent. of membership enrolled in our communion, and also it is stated that the Sunday Schools of our body have decreased in attendance nearly sixty thousand in the past two years.

If it be any comfort—the reflection that our diocese is no worse off in degree than the national organization—it must be remembered by us to our shame that in South Carolina our Church, unlike the country at large, was the first in the field, and at times in her history had a preferred status and a virtual monopoly established by law, nevertheless losing our opportunities of growing pari passu with the civil life of the community, and thus becoming the water-mark of a class and not the possession of the whole people.

But, this world war is going to change all that. That scourge of God has taught His people that not talk merely, nor money, is the chief factor in the new life of the nations, and it has quickened the conscience and given the mind to understand that personal service and sacrifice are the sine qua non of success in any undertaking worth while for the spread of the Kingdom of Christ on earth.

Under this inspiration a committee was appointed at last council to investigate through the clergy and other workers in the diocese the status of the Church as respects the rural community of the state.

It is needless, however interesting and instructive it would be, to present in detail the responses to this questionnaire, which were, however, be it said, sufficiently numerous and representative to make it clear to members of this council that this field is not only not scarcely entered upon as yet, but that, as organized at present the Church is not able even to make an effort adequately to enter upon the position she should rightly occupy of spiritual influence and leadership among the masses in this state, the large majority of whom live in rural community life, and receive their religious instruction through the agency of country churches exclusively.

From an analysis of the responses to the questionnaire the deduction clearly follows, that as long as the purely parochial system is the basis of maintenance and operation of the Church in this diocese, so long will failure of state-wide growth follow—for the reason that it is impossible for an isolated minister, a persona, a parson, that is to say, standing alone, unrelated largely and un-

In 1918 the council of the Diocese of South Carolina appointed a committee on the Country Church and Rural Life, consisting of the Rev. Messrs. J. M. Stoney, A. Rufus Morgan and R. A. Meares. The committee made its report at the recent meeting of the diocesan council held in Charleston. The Churchman is happy to print this report omitting only those portions of it which are only of more local interest.—Editor.

coordinated with the work of the Church as an organization functioning upon broader lines of action than are contained in the sphere of a mere parish serving the special requirement of a single locality, and further hampered by the fact of his being maintained by and in the primary interest of his particular parishioners, to take the time and the money belonging in the first instance to them and (no longer a free agent, even if the disposition be ever so ardent) to spend his labors in the service of others who perhaps would be a liability and not an asset so far as his support from a financial standpoint is concerned.

In brief, it is not a matter of argument. Your committee assumes the fact of a general consensus of opinion that some radical steps must be taken if progress in this new field is desired. And we now proceed in part to name them.

Secondly: There should be, for the present no attempts to cover the entire field simultaneously. This policy would mean setting up weak missions here and there, with no definite aim or results in view. But, in Columbia, the railroad centre of the state, at the outset and not waiting for the future development as hereinafter outlined, an associated missions settlement should be established, under either a bishop or his archdeacon in charge, whence a force of resident clerical and lay workers could daily reach out to their field of work and return to their homes by night time. This assumes the taking advantage of up-to-date methods of transportation and the utilization of the improved highways soon to be an accomplished fact. To explain this suggestion of concentration and adaptation of present-day methods of life:—the Church has something, as is assumed, of value to present the public for their good. Then let the Church, in supplying the spiritual needs of the people, copy the methods employed by the astute business man in the distribution of his wares.

Thirdly: Such strategic points in the state, one in each congressional district at the least, should successively be chosen as centres of concentrated efforts, pushing one project at a time, till success be established. For this end gifted men and women—clergy and lay workers—highly paid, must be employed, each unit a missions settlement, under control of an archdeacon. These missions settlements eventually will cover the entire territory so that with motor cars and improved highways every point in the state may be covered by easy reach from some centre of the work. To secure a corps of adequately trained social workers to be appointed as archdeacons, it is furthermore recommended:

Fourthly: That the bishop choose out suitable volunteer clergymen from his present staff, who are already acquainted with the special needs of diocesan extension work, to take the course of instruction in the School of Social Science connected with the Columbia University, in the City of New York, to be there maintained at diocesan expense until their graduation, under covenant that they will assume these posts of duty, subject to the direction of the bishop for a stated term. Also,

That a band of lay workers, volunteers, and nominated by Saint Andrew's Brotherhood, be assigned to each associated mission to cooperate with the clergy in field work.

Fifthly: We recommend a separate and complete organization to cover the industrial fields of labor and development of service and the growth of the Church, such as in the textile manufacturing communities of the state.

Sixthly: We further recommend the establishment of a diocesan hospital, endowed, served by a volunteer professional staff, and equipped with nurses, members of a sisterhood, in which citizens of the state may be received without a question raised of ability to pay for the service.

In conclusion: Your committee is only too well aware that progress on the lines indicated, and otherwise, cannot be undertaken without the expenditure of money in amounts which hitherto our churchpeople have been unaccustomed to use in connection with the advancement of the Kingdom of their Lord and Master. But there is with us a full faith that, shown their duty, our people will respond to the call of their duty in this regard. As to the method to raise the needed money, we desire to call attention to the recent decision on the part of the General Board of Missions to raise within the next three years the sum of twenty million dollars from the churchmen of America for extension work. And it is stated that any diocese may cooperate in that purpose, and have a program of extension work outlined within the diocese, and the funds so raised will be utilized in connection with the special diocesan needs.

If within our province to make a suggestion with regard to the ways and means of effecting the recommendations made by your committee, as stated, we suggest that our diocese affiliate with the Board of Missions in raising the quota necessary for our part.

WHAT THE RAILROAD MEANS TO ALASKA

BY GOVERNOR THOMAS RIGGS

I DO not believe that even the residents of Alaska know how much out of doors the territory covers.

I have followed the international boundary from Mt. St. Elias to the Arctic Ocean, traveled the Yukon waters from source to mouth, and have made little jaunts of weeks and months at a time through its little known regions. Even I have no true prospective of its vast extent. Figures mean little to the ordinary reader. To say that Alaska is of the approximate size of all the states of the Union east of the Mississippi River or that it is two and a quarter times the size of the state of Texas or that if laid down on the United States one end would rest in the Atlantic and the other in the Pacific, means little but it may perhaps convey some dim questioning as to how the resident gets around the country anyhow. Generally he doesn't. He locates in one spot and stays there seeing all of Alaska within his own horizon. Then he roars if all governmental or territorial endeavor is not directed toward him as the bullseye. He is usually right in most of his contentions that his own pet locality should be assisted. I do not know of a single place in Alaska which would not be benefited by the expenditure of public moneys and benefited in a way which would benefit the nation, but life is short and none of us like to wait while the mills of the gods and of Congress grind out the meal which is to give us life and vigor.

The mills do grind, however, as is shown in the great enterprise of railroad construction now under way from Seward on the coast of Alaska to Fairbanks in one of the placer gold districts. That railroad is going to do much for Alaska; it is now about seventy-five per cent complete, held back in completion by war conditions and inadequate appropriations, but we want it this minute. The Government should have turned back the hands of Time to fairy or genii days and wished it there with all its bridges, cars, locomotives and tributary wagon roads. Then it would have accomplished immediately what we have been waiting for some time.

First and foremost we need fuel in our placer camps of the Fairbanks district. Inferior wood for mining and commercial operations can be procured only at great expense due to the now long haul. In some of the mines as high as $16 a cord must be paid. When the railroad is complete the coal mines of the Nenana field will be within easy reach. The cost of fuel will be cut seventy-five per cent. This is one thing the railroad will do. There are lode prospects along the main route which will become real mines when transportation is available. The Matanuska coal will be shipped to all coastal ports of Alaska replacing British Columbia coal at less cost. It will be possible to operate both placer and quartz mines without loss of time. As it is now, if an important piece of machinery breaks the mine must shut down for a year as replacement cannot be brought in by the slow water route in time to allow for repairs during the open season of navigation. Now the merchant of the interior must provide against all contingencies a year in advance. How much easier for all it will be when stocks can be kept up from small orders speedily delivered, thus doing away with heavy initial outlay, insurance, hot and cold storage, depreciation and dead stock.

We often hear of alluring lode prospects. Development companies will not send in their high priced, pushed-for-time experts who may be kept from their other work for many months. The railroad will allow speedy transportation of experts to make mine examinations and in the time formerly required to make one examination they will be able to make a dozen examinations of various properties, and these mines will develop with transportation near at hand. Mines now unknown will undoubtedly be in full operation before long on the line of the railroad.

The road means a great deal to coastal Alaska in that we shall be able to procure coal from the Matanuska coal fields. In Juneau we are now paying $13 per ton for inferior coal. We will get good coal at a much less price.

The history of railroad construction shows that development always follows the line of rail. Alaska will prove no exception to the rule.

BOGUS STOCKS

BY THEODORE H. PRICE

During recent weeks the daily papers have given a good deal of space to the scandal of bogus oil stocks which have been peddled about the streets. Unfortunately a very respectable class of citizens not generally supposed to have the speculator's weakness have frequently been the victims of these brokers. Mr. Theodore H. Price, in response to a request from the editor of The Churchman, has written the letter which we publish below. Mr. Price is a member of St. George's Church, New York, and is the editor of Commerce and Finance. He has been a contributor on economic subjects and questions of finance for the Outlook, World's Work, and many journals of political and social science.

I HAVE your letter of June 3 asking me to send you "from fifteen hundred to two thousand words for THE CHURCHMAN, giving a little instruction to widows, school teachers, the clergy and 'such,' on how to avoid the snares that are laid for them in the literature that they receive describing investments that are alleged to pay fabulous returns."

I need not use fifteen hundred words to comply with your request. This brief letter, which you are at liberty to publish, will be sufficient.

There is an old maxim which says that "The man who is his own lawyer has a fool for a client" and the common sense thus expressed is applicable in every relationship of life. If a clergyman is in poor health he should get the advice of a physician and pay for it; if the water-pipes in his house need repair he sends for a plumber; if he wants to build a house he employs an architect; and if he has money to invest he ought to seek the advice of some man of reputation who specializes in investments. If he fails to do this, he is almost certain to make a mistake and lose money.

In the congregation of nearly every clergyman in the United States there is at least one hard headed business man who is competent to give advice with regard to the investment of money and there are throughout the United States a number of high class, conscientious banking houses whose business it is to select good investments for their clients. Almost any of them would be glad to give a clergyman advice.

Fraud, when it is discovered, can be punished under laws that legislators may pass but all the laws that can be enacted will not prevent swindlers from trying to defraud those whose desire to get rich quick makes them easy prey of the unscrupulous.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

SENIOR CHAPLAINS THANK DIOCESE FOR BISHOP BRENT

Say He Has Represented the Church with Prophetic Vision

The Diocese of Western New York has received a letter signed by twelve senior chaplains serving abroad with the A. E. F. The letter is addressed to the diocese and says:

"Upon the departure for America of our beloved Senior Chaplain, General Headquarters, Bishop Charles H. Brent, we the undersigned senior chaplains, a committee representing all the chaplains in the A. E. F., who have served under his inspiring and efficient leadership, desire to thank the diocese for its generosity and sacrifice in loaning their bishop so cheerfully and for such a long period.

"He has represented the Church with prophetic vision, Christ-like simplicity and apostolic zeal and he has given his great heart with unwearied patience to his difficult and many sided task.

"In this great work of administration, comradeship and inspiration he has won the unwavering loyalty and admiration of every chaplain in the A. E. F.

"His religious statesmanship has commended itself to those in command from the commander-in-chief to regimental commanders. You may well be proud of his brilliant military record as a Christian leader.

"His is a master spirit. Every chaplain has found in him a wise counsellor and a sympathetic friend, indeed a brother. We are sure that you love him as we have so easily learned to do and we trust that you will accept these simple words as only hints of what we deeply feel and cannot fully write.

"Please accept our best degree of gratitude for your cooperation in this great world crisis and world victory. We follow our beloved comrade, always first among us, with our earnest prayers and to you we extend our warmest greetings."

The letter is dated Paris, April 26, and signed by the following names: Edmund P. Easterbrook, J. M. Kangley, Patrick R. Dunigan, Orville A. Petty, Jos. L. Hunter, G. C. Stull, Earl Cleeland, Raphael Grashoff, George C. Lenington, Wm. A. Aiken, Edwin Ronan, Paul D. Moody.

A Presbyterian Cathedral

New York is to have another cathedral—this time a Presbyterian one. The historic First Presbyterian Church on lower Fifth Avenue, one of the best Gothic edifices in the United States, will be partially rebuilt and choir stalls installed. The reconstruction work will cost $100,000, it is said. The pastor of the new cathedral is Dr. George Alexander.

Mr. Melish Receives $48,000 Damages

A verdict for $48,000 was awarded in the Supreme Court in Kings County, last week, to the Rev. John Howard Melish, the rector of Trinity Church, Brooklyn, as damages in a suit brought by him against the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. It will be recalled that Mr. Melish was very seriously injured in June 1917 by a fall through an opening due to the removal of a stairboard on the steps of the Brooklyn elevated railway. Mr. Melish was confined to his bed for six months following the fall, and his right hip has been permanently injured.

Bishop Celebrates Golden Wedding

DULUTH, MINN.—The fiftieth anniversary of the wedding of Bishop and Mrs. Morrison was celebrated here on June 3 at Trinity Cathedral. For two months the ladies of Trinity Cathedral have been working on the decorations which transformed Trinity Hall into a California pergola with wistaria blossoms drooping from the vines that covered the wall and hiding the electric light bulbs. Here the diocese offered its congratulations to the bishop and his wife. Mrs. Morrison wore the gown, veil and orange blossoms she had worn in her father's little church in Clarenceville, P. Q., Canada, in 1869. She carried a bouquet of golden roses given to her by one of the cathedral ladies. Part of the evening's entertainment consisted of the singing of songs Mrs. Morrison had sung years ago. At the request of the cathedral chapter, Mr. James A. Brown of Fergus Falls made a moving speech and in behalf of the diocese presented the bishop and wife with a purple satin bag containing in small, white bags, each marked with the name of the guild or organization, a sum of gold which amounted to over $1,000. The reception and gift came as a complete surprise to the bishop and his wife. Most of the diocesan clergy were present besides delegates to the Woman's Auxiliary annual meeting and a great number from the city churches.

Galsworthy's American Profits for Armenia

John Galsworthy, the author, surprised the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief by sending a check for four thousand dollars for its relief and reconstruction work. It represented, he said, a little more than the net profits of his lectures during his trip through the United States. The "little over," he added, was to make the check a "round figure."

Church Motion Picture Conference

The committee in charge of motion pictures for the Centenary Convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Columbus, Ohio, plans to hold a discussion to discover the kinds of pictures required for churches. This will apply to those used in the Sunday services as well as those used by the various organizations connected with the churches. The National Board of Review has been requested to assist in forming this program.

RAYMOND ROBINS ASSAILS "DECADENT CLASS CHURCH"

Speaking at Ascension Forum, Says More Follow Marx Than Christ

Last Sunday night the speaker at the Church of the Ascension forum was Colonel Raymond Robins of the American Red Cross Mission to Russia. Speaking on "One View of the Russian Situation," Colonel Robins was cheered repeatedly by the motley crowd of Greenwich villagers, uptown conservatives and out-and-out Bolsheviks, a majority of whom stood for three hours in the densely crowded church the temperature of which was never less than 85 degrees.

The evening was intensely dramatic, for the majority of the crowd was frankly Bolshevik and though in an Anglican church, did not hesitate to cheer Colonel Robins' declaration that "England tonight trembles on the abyss, thanks to a class Church, a class State and in a large measure a class industry. There are more people as a result, in the British Isles who believe in the doctrines of Karl Marx than there are who believe in the Gospel of Jesus Christ." His earlier assertion seemed equally popular, that a decadent Church and a class Church in America were contributing factors to Bolshevism in this country along with the sweat shop and the twelve hour a day seven day a week coal mine shift. He closed with the plea that "a land that could spend nineteen billions for war can spend millions for peace. We need the freedom of the press and freedom of speech. Let us get rid of our miserable sedition acts, which whatever they were in war, are merely panicky cowardice in peace. Let us have faith in America and in America's institutions."

The Church of the Ascension, it is expected, will be a radicals' mecca again next Sunday night, when the Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, a priest of the Diocese of New York, will make his first public address since his sentence to twenty years' imprisonment on a charge of violating the Espionage Act by obstructing operation of the selective draft law. His case is now under appeal to the United States Supreme Court, since his conviction was based on two pamphlets written before America's entrance into the war and approved by Federal Judge Ross of Baltimore.

China Missionary Becomes Roman Catholic

The Rev. R. E. Wood, for many years one of the Church's most successful missionaries in the interior of China where he served in Hankow and later as head of the school for beggar boys in Ichang, has resigned from the mission and made his submission to the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Wood spent last year in France working among the soldiers.

REGENERATION OF CHURCH IS CAMPAIGN PURPOSE

Dr. Freeman Quotes Labor Man's Commendation of N. W. C. Program

There has been little talk since the Chicago conference of the Nation-Wide Campaign's being merely a "money drive."

"Let us keep clearly before our minds that while there is need for money, the primary and essential purpose of the campaign is the regeneration of the Church," said Dr. Freeman of Minneapolis, a member of the Board of Missions. "If we lose that no matter what we raise in dollars, the effort is a failure. We in the Board of Missions have been discussing for years the question of deficits until it has become absolutely a weariness to the flesh to attend the meetings. We have started to bring to the Church the great work of the Master Himself—to convert the Church, to convert ourselves, to convert us of the clergy, to make us feel our obligation."

"One of the leading labor men told me the other day that this is the only Church in the nation that has in its program the suggestion of some plan, however vague, to meet the present economic conditions. Large reference was made during the recent New York diocesan convention by the New York newspapers, to the fact that the convention had been addressed on the subject of the Church's finding a substitute for the saloon; and this Church is the only Church that has set forth any program whatsoever for meeting that particular situation."

"We are coming to be more and more convinced I think," continued Dr. Freeman, "that the Christian Church as it is organized today, is not functioning effectively and efficiently in this country. I think a note of alarm should be sounded all over the land concerning the situation of the Church, and it seems to me one of the things to be impressed upon the people is that this is a movement within the Church to regenerate the whole life of the Church and while I agree with Bishop Lloyd that the spiritual note should be the dominant note, at the same time it is clear that spiritual enterprises do not function without material means. These things—men and money—we are short of, appallingly short of in the entire Church. As a matter of fact we should say very definitely and clearly that unless this movement causes a great increase of gifts for missions, we are in danger of insolvency, and while we are not yet insolvent, the Church should understand the situation."

Conferences between diocesan committees of the Nation-Wide Campaign and various national leaders of the project are being held this week in Provinces I, VI and VII. It is expected that by July 15 the men in charge of the campaign in every diocese in the country will have met, talked over the task they are facing, and mapped out their diocesan organizations. Bishop Lloyd pointed out in his closing address at the Chicago conference, "all of the machinery the Church has devised to carry on this campaign, will be useful only as the diocesan committees do what they are constituted for. The best machinery at the centre will be futile except as the diocesan committee, standing for the life of the diocese, does the thing in God's name. In other words, the diocese is the unit, and as each diocese rises to its opportunity the thing will be accomplished, and the diocesan committee with the bishop at the head of it, has got to set the pace."

ILLINOIS UNIVERSITY

HONORS BISHOP'S SON

CHAMPAIGN, ILLINOIS.—On Sunday, June 1, 1919, a memorial service for churchmen who had fallen in the war was held at the University of Illinois. There were three—Lieutenant Charles Patrick Anderson, son of the Bishop of Chicago, who went over in the ambulance service, enlisted in aviation and achieved a noble career, being for some time the leader of his detachment and meeting his death in a desperate air battle over the enemy lines; Captain Charles Arthur Wagner, son of C. A. Wagner, of Springfield, Missouri, who served in the infantry with distinction, was mortally wounded in the Argonne, and died in Paris shortly afterwards; Lieutenant Linn Palmer Cookson, of Carlinville, Illinois, who, like Anderson, passed from the ambulance to the air service, and after six months of excellent service had his lungs seriously affected, was invalided home for recuperation, and died of disease in Carlinville.

Of the hundred and twenty-two men commemorated on the service flag only these three have paid the supreme sacrifice. Lieutenant Anderson was a member of the Phi Kappa Psi. The other two men belonged to the Acacia. These fraternities attended in body. After the offertory, the president of the Phi Kappa Psi, Mr. Barton Ahrens Ingwersen, advanced within the sanctuary and briefly and impressively uttered an expression of the love and honor in which the fraternity holds Pat Anderson. Immediately afterwards Mr. John Wesley Ziegler of the Acacia house, came to the same place and read a beautiful liturgical tribute to the memory of Captain Wagner and Lieutenant Cookson. The service was a solemn Eucharist with special collect, epistle, gospel, and memorial prayers. The address was delivered by Chaplain Page. Taps was sounded after the service by two buglers.

Roman Plenary Council Called

An American plenary council of the Roman Catholic Church is called to meet at Baltimore next autumn. Cardinal Gibbons will be president, as he was in 1884 when the third and last previous American council was held. All the American bishops will attend; and it is expected that some important utterances will issue.

Club Publishes Interim Report

The Christian Fellowship Committee of the Churchwomen's Club of New York has just brought out an American edition of the Second Interim Report issued a year ago by English bishops and clergy of the Church of England and ministers of the nonconformist Churches. Copies may be secured from Room 1104, 2 West Forty-seventh Street, New York.

CHURCH OFFERS MARKET FOR AUTOMOBILES

Board of Missions May Equip Band of Motor Missionaries

The Church as a new market for motor cars and accessories is a possibility as a result of a recent request of several bishops to the Board of Missions for motorcycles and small automobiles for the use of their clergy in covering the great distances between the half dozen parishes which is the usual allotment for a priest in a western missionary district.

Clergymen have long been individual purchasers of cars but now the board is considering the wholesale purchase of motorcars and motorcycles and this item will be among hundreds included in the survey now being made for the Nation-wide Campaign.

Bishop Wise of Kansas, prefers motorcycles for his priests. Several high powered motorcycles, Bishop Wise recently wrote the Board of Missions, will enable him to provide a number of small Kansas towns within a sixty-mile radius of Topeka, with services each Sunday, clergy being sent from Grace Cathedral in Topeka.

In Texas motor cars have been requested by Bishop Quin and Archdeacon Garner of North Texas. In localities where a train a day or every other day is the rule, both believe the motor car will be a potent factor in giving the people services weekly instead of once or twice a month as is now the case.

South Dakota is another diocese where motor cars will play a part in evangelizing the state. "A priest with a machine can do just four times the work out here as without one," Bishop Burleson recently wrote the Board of Missions. "There are a number of towns off a railroad where the ministrations of the Church are eagerly sought by the people but cannot be given because of transportation difficulties."

If the bishops can prove that with the aid of gasoline they can increase their activities 400 per cent., it is expected that the directors of the Nation-wide campaign will include in their budget an adequate appropriation for the equipment of a band of motor missionaries.

Hobart Installs Bishop Brent

GENEVA, NEW YORK.—On June 3, preceding the meeting of the diocesan council, Bishop Brent was formally inducted as chancellor of Hobart College. The ceremony took place in Williams Hall. At this time the degree of doctor of laws was conferred upon the bishop.

Cowley Fathers at Nashotah

NASHOTAH, WISCONSIN.—The commencement of Nashotah House took place on June 4. The commencement sermon was preached by the Rev. Spence Burton, S. J. E. An interesting feature was the announcement that next year the Cowley Fathers are to send two members of their order—the Rev. Frank Gavin and the Rev. C. P. Otis—to Nashotah to take charge of the preparatory department.

SEVENTY SOLDIERS ENTER BERKELEY SUMMER SCHOOL

Professors from Many Seminaries Will Teach in Middletown

MIDDLETOWN, CONNECTICUT.—Arrangements are nearing completion for the Summer School in Theology to be held at the Berkeley Divinity School, beginning July 1. The summer school was first projected last January with the thought that there might be about forty men to be provided for. In point of fact there are now nearly seventy returned soldiers who have put in application for admission, and the experiment promises to be a complete success. The buildings of Berkeley Divinity School will be used and there will be an overflow into the college commons and fraternity houses of Wesleyan University, which have been secured through the kind cooperation of the college authorities.

The old city of Middletown is in many ways an ideal location for such a school. When the theological department of Trinity College, out of which Berkeley grew, was moved from Hartford in 1854, Middletown was chosen by Bishop Williams because the situation "conducted to the tranquility of mind that is suitable for theological studies."

The main building of the divinity school was originally an inn on the post road between New York and Boston. It was built in 1812, and is considered one of the finest buildings of that period in New England. General Lafayette stopped here on his journey through the state in 1826 and spoke from its balcony to the assembled townspeople. The Gothic chapel was built as a memorial in 1861, and is dedicated to St. Luke the Good Physician in memory of Dr. Thomas Dent Mutter. The chapel altar was once Bishop Seabury's, whose chalice is also among the school's most valued possessions. The library building, which includes several class rooms, was built in 1896 and named after the death of Bishop Williams, the Williams Library. It contains about forty thousand volumes. The privileges of the Wesleyan University Library, containing one hundred and ten thousand volumes are also offered to the students.

The summer school will open on July 1, and will be in session for two terms of approximately five weeks each, the second session beginning August 7 and continuing to September 23. Students may enter for either or both terms. Three classes of students will be admitted: Men returning from the national service or other war work who were previously enrolled in a theological seminary; men returning from the service who have not previously studied in any seminary; a limited number of men already enrolled in some seminary or candidates for one, who may wish to avail themselves of the opportunity offered by the school for summer study.

Students of the first and second of the above classes will be admitted on terms similar to those under which training was given in the national service. That is, board and lodging will be provided by the school without charge, and an allowance of $45 for the full session, or of $22.50 for one term will be granted toward traveling and other expenses. Students of the third class will be expected to pay for their board and lodging, the total charge for which has been fixed at $95.

The primary intention of the school is to enable students who are just out of the service to save time in their preparation for the ministry, without loss in the adequacy of that preparation. A competent student should be able to accomplish during the summer the equivalent of an ordinary half-year's work. Thus, if the school can be repeated in 1920 such a student might be able to complete his normal course in preparation for the ministry in two years instead of three.

There will be opportunities for social life and recreation and arrangements will be made with the authorities of Wesleyan University for the use of its gymnasium and swimming tank and athletic fields. There are tennis courts on the school grounds, and the Connecticut River offers fine opportunities for boating and canoeing.

The faculty is made up as follows: New and Old Testament, Dean Fosbroke and Professor DuBose; New Testament and Greek, Professor Robinson, Professor Easton, Professor Hatch, Professor Hedrick, Professor Ramsey; Systematic Divinity, Professor Drown, Professor Stewart; Church History, Dean Ladd, the Rev. R. B. Pomeroy and Professor Ayer; Ethics, Professor Dickinson Miller, Professor Lauderburn; Pastoral Theology, Dean Bartlett, Professor Miller and Professor Lauderburn; Liturgics, Professor Norwood. The registrar is the Rev. C. B. Hedrick, of Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, to whom applications and requests for information should be sent.

Churchman Correspondent Accepts Call

SYRACUSE, NEW YORK—Calvary Parish has secured as its new rector, to succeed the late Rev. Walter E. Jones, the Rev. Theodore Haydn, now rector of St. Paul's Church, Oxford, who will enter upon his new duties about September 1. The Rev. Theodore Haydn is a native of Central New York, having been trained at St. Andrew's Divinity School and ordained by the late Bishop Huntington. He was first in charge of mission work in Dryden, and places adjacent, during which time Trinity Church, Dryden, was built and consecrated as a memorial to Bishop Huntington—the first church edifice erected in Central New York after his death. He was subsequently priest-in-charge of Christ Church, Clayton, and St. Paul's, LaFargeville. He became rector of St. Paul's, Oxford, in 1911. During his rectorship the pews have been made free and a vested choir organized. He has served for some time as secretary of the Third District, and for the past year as its treasurer. He is the diocesan correspondent for THE CHURCHMAN.

Mrs. Romanes Enters Roman Church

Reports from England say that Mrs. Romanes, the widow of Professor Romanes, has been received into the Roman Catholic Church. Mrs. Romanes is well known in this country on account of her speaking visits and through her books.

WORLD CONFERENCE IS NOW AN ACCOMPLISHED FACT

Only Rome Refuses to Join in Projected Meeting

GARDINER, MAINE.—After nearly nine years of effort, the world conference on faith and order is practically an accomplished fact, though very much remains to be done in making the detailed arrangements. That will require much time, for it involves correspondence with nearly a hundred commissions scattered all over the world. But apparently all the invitations necessary, and at present possible, have been or are being issued, and the acceptances have been so far universal that it will probably be thought that immediate steps can now be taken to convene the conference or, at least, to consider where and when it can be convened.

When the deputation of the American Episcopal Church sailed to invite the Churches of Europe and the Near East, it had behind it the approval of the whole Anglican communion throughout the world; of almost every important protestant communion outside the continent of Europe; the unofficial, but weighty, assurances of the patriarch and many influential members of the Church of Russia; and the active and cordial sympathy of eminent representatives of the Holy Orthodox Eastern Churches in Greece and elsewhere; of many distinguished Roman Catholics all over the world and of leading Protestants on the continent of Europe.

In London the deputation met the Archbishop of Cyprus, and in Paris, the Acting Patriarch of Constantinople, each of whom promised to call a special session of his synod to consider the official invitation and gave assurances that it would be accepted.

In Athens the synod formally accepted the invitation, as has been already reported in THE CHURCHMAN.

The deputation was in Constantinople for Easter, and the invitation was presented to and accepted by a special session of the synod at Constantinople. The members of the commission took part in the Easter service at the cathedral, at which the gospel was sung in nine different languages, the Bishop of Fond du Lac singing it in English. They met the Armenian patriarch in Constantinople who promised to transmit the invitation to the catholicoi of the Armenian Church at Etchmiadzin.

At Sofia they presented the invitation to the acting metropolitan who assured them of its acceptance as soon as the synod could be convened, and at Bucharest they received a similar assurance from the metropolitan.

At Belgrade they were assisted in their conference with the metropolitan by Father Nicolai Velimirowitch. The synod accepted the invitation to take part in the world conference.

In Rome, as has been reported, the Pope has not felt able to appoint representatives to the conference. The deputation is continuing on its journey to invite the other Churches of Europe in Switzerland, France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway and Sweden. Two of the members are going to Alexandria, Jerusalem and Antioch.

KOREANS PERSECUTED BY JAPANESE TROOPS

Shanghai Dispatch Tells of Pastors Beaten and Churches Destroyed

The following article printed in the Shanghai China Press and dated Peking, April 21, has just arrived from the Shanghai correspondent of THE CHURCHMAN:

The following extract from some correspondence just received from a friend in Korea is of service in more ways than one:

Reports are coming in from the country of the terrible way the Japanese troops treated the people who made demonstrations for the independence of their country. Whenever reports of the doings of soldiers appear in the Japanese papers, the statement is always made that the Koreans were resorting to violence or about to do so. In every case the statements are false at least as regards the beginnings of the demonstrations. There have been a few cases where Koreans could not stand any more from the troops and they turned on them. A few have been injured and some buildings damaged. Even telegrams are tampered with to justify the violence of the soldiers. For instance, in a telegram telling of a demonstration made at a certain mine, the statement was made that as the Koreans came down the hill shouting "Hurrah" (mansei) the soldiers fired on them. During the transmission of the telegram the words "throwing stones" were inserted after "came down the hill." Nothing from any Japanese source can be believed unless verified by someone reliable. It is much nearer the truth to say that in no case have the Koreans used force or done violence than is any Japanese statement of their violence.

Christians, their homes and churches are particularly picked out by soldiers for violent treatment. The church at Pangsan in Wijun county was burned to the ground for no other reason than that some of the Christians were in the demonstration that took place before the gendarmery station three miles away—it must be remembered that the Koreans do not go off into a corner to have these demonstrations of shouting "mansei," but they always demonstrate before police or gendarmery stations or some governmental office. They want the Japanese particularly, and the world at large to know just what they want. Well, Pangsan church was burned because of this talking in more than a whisper, and the house of the chief office-bearer in the church was burned down with all his earthly possessions and grain. He had heard that the soldiers were after him and were going to shoot him, so he hit for the hills and the soldiers came. In response they turned his house to ashes. A few persons were shot incidentally with the burning of these two buildings. Near this church another was burned at Yungbong. The sexton's house in connection with this church was also burned and the large pile of firewood which he had on hand. His all is gone, and he has nothing left but his hands. The next church to this at Samhadan had the windows and doors broken through, the interior furniture destroyed, and it was also set on fire, but because the roof was of tile instead of straw, the Christians put out the fire before it had done much damage. The soldiers had left.

Like things have happened all over the country but the most outrageous and blood-thirsty I have heard of occurred at Tyungju. Here, the first planned demonstration was nipped in the bud and the pastor of the church beaten almost to a jelly. Nothing but shouting "Hurrah for Korea" was on the program, remember, but as they came forward in their joyful festivity they were met with a fire of death. Fifty-one were killed outright that day, besides six in the hills nearby. Many times more were wounded, and of these more than twenty so far have died. To show the brand of red cross kindness in the Japanese breast hear this next. They took strict measures not to allow the wounded to get away to any hospitals in other towns. There was one reputable physician in Tyungju, a Korean, a graduate of the Government Hospital in Seoul. His hospital was immediately filled with the wounded. He was extracting bullets and binding up wounds when the soldiers came into his establishment, gave him a hard beating, threw out his medicines and broke up his instruments. He had to flee from the town, and then, when there was no one to undertake cures, those who came to be healed were told to go home and die. This information has come from Koreans, but it has been corroborated and is reliable.

FOR THE NATION-WIDE CAMPAIGN

ALMIGHTY and Everlasting God, Who hast promised through Thy Son, Jesus Christ, to be with Thy Church to the end of the world, we humbly beseech Thee to prosper this undertaking of Thy People for the good of Thy Church and for the advancement of Thy Kingdom. Strengthen us, we beseech Thee, O Lord, with the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, and daily increase in us Thy manifold gifts of grace. Enlarge our faith, enlighten our understanding, and fill us with a hearty desire to do Thy will. Especially we beseech Thee to give wisdom to those who are called to lead us, and to all Thy people a ready will to work together with loving zeal. And grant that all that we do, may be so ordered by Thy governance that Thy blessing may rest upon our endeavors, to the glory of Thy Holy Name; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. AMEN.

Great Demand for Bibles

There has never been such a large demand for Bibles in the one hundred and ten years work of the New York Bible Society as at the present time. The society has moved from its historic quarter in the Bible House to 675 Madison Ave., in order to have more room and to be more accessible. In this new location it will be better able to carry on its work.

JUST WAGES, GOOD HOUSING, PART OF CHURCH CAMPAIGN

Mr. Wm. F. Morgan Describes Every Name Campaign

Some of New York's leading men of affairs, masters of successful business enterprises of international scope, have allied themselves with the clergy of the diocese to make religion in the diocese more efficient and practical through the Every Name Campaign.

The general purpose of this movement was outlined last week by William Fellowes Morgan, president of the Merchants' Association and chairman of the campaign committee of the Every Name Campaign. The movement is built around the practical idea that big business men believe that the life of the average American can be made to conform, with profit to himself, to religion and the spiritual law. It is to be an intensive development of the theory that religion is good business.

"It is obvious," said Mr. Morgan, "that in all the changes which the war has brought about the Church has not escaped. We are just now in a transition period, and in a large measure we may take hold on the situation and guide the changing order, provided we give heed to the fundamentals behind it. This is what our movement aims to do.

"Those who would lead must conform to the people's wishes. It is for the purpose of making this reconstruction that the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of New York has embarked upon the Every Name Campaign. This is a plan which aims to bring into close connection with the Church and its work, by personal visitation, every man and woman of whatever rank or class whose name is inscribed upon the church rosters. It seeks to awaken each of these to a sense of the duty and importance of the work of the Church; to bring about a spiritual awakening.

"A survey is being made of the diocese which will reveal the exact conditions in each parish, its wants and its needs, and put us in the way of establishing in each parish an efficient organization. But this is only a beginning. We shall have to give reasons, to show benefits from an active participation in the work of the Church, if we are to get that hundred per cent. efficiency which men strive for in the business world.

"Attention will have to be given to fair working hours, a just wage, adequate recreation, proper housing and stimulating, uplifting amusements. When these conditions are met we can look forward with more assurance to a greater spiritual reaction by the workers. Practical religion looks to a closer attention to these matters. The immigrant needs attention materially and as regards his development into the right sort of American citizen. The negro question likewise invites the serious study of the Church.

"Enthusiasm will grow as the Every Name Campaign progresses and as the survey discloses the weak spots in our organization. It is a movement which was dear to the heart of the late Bishop Greer."

The Diocesan Conventions

Three More Conventions Meet—Three more 1919 diocesan conventions met during the early days of June, North Dakota, at the Church of the Advent, Devils Lake, June 1-3; Duluth in Trinity Cathedral, Duluth, June 3 and 4, and Western Michigan in St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, June 10 and 11.

Equal Suffrage Canons Popular—So anxious was Western Michigan to give churchwomen equal rights that three canons were debated and two amendments to the diocesan constitution all seeking to accomplish this end. An amendment was finally passed increasing the number of convention delegates from each parish to six with permission to make one-half of them women. The proposed amendment will be studied and presented to the 1920 convention for final action by a committee of ten, half of them women, as well as a canon for a house of churchwomen and two others allowing representation on vestries and seats in convention.

In the absence of Bishop McCormick overseas, the Rev. G. P. T. Sargent, president of the Standing Committee, presided. To enable the 1920 convention to meet in January the convention voted to meet on the bishop's call, thus avoiding requesting the legislature for a change in the diocesan charter.

Adequate Clerical Stipends—Need of adequate clerical stipends was voiced before the Duluth convention by the Rev. A. H. Wurtele, former dean of the cathedral, and now in Rochester, Minnesota. He urged Duluth to start an associate mission such as has been inaugurated in Minnesota. Besides this address, the missionary session of the convention was marked by addresses on the work in the far north.

"Blue Box Sunday"—That is the name the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Duluth has given to the second Sunday in September when the United Offering will be presented at the altar. A special service of a missionary character is planned for that day. Two Indian members of the auxiliary addressed the annual meeting held in connection with the diocesan convention. Two United Offering workers in the diocese were also present and told of their work. The meeting was a most encouraging one and all the reports showed good progress. The women made their corporate Communion with the members of the convention on the opening day and heard the bishop's charge to his diocese.

North Dakota women also met as the Woman's Auxiliary during the time of the diocesan convention, and they also heard of the work among the Indians from Miss Margaret Elliott who described her work at Cannon Ball. Dean Kloman made an address to the women on "A Red Cross Chaplain in France."

The Nation-Wide Campaign—Western Michigan unanimously endorsed the Nation-Wide Campaign following an address by the Rev. Francis S. White. Duluth and North Dakota also endorsed the project. Bishop Tyler and Bishop Morrison both enthusiastically referred to the campaign in their addresses.

Church Publicity Appropriation—An appropriation for the commission on publicity and advertising for use at the General Convention was voted by Western Michigan along with sums for the Province of the Mid-West, the G. B. R. E. and Joint Commission on Social Service.

Religious Education—Western Michigan, Duluth and North Dakota all manifested great interest in religious education. Western Michigan passed a resolution urging all parishes in the diocese to send representatives to the Racine Conference this summer. Duluth voted to devote an entire day of next year's convention to the subject. The Christian Nature series was discussed by North Dakota and its use in the district heartily endorsed.

Bishop Tyler's Address—Bishop Tyler's hearty endorsement of the League of Nations caused the District of North Dakota to endorse unanimously the covenant and to telegraph President Wilson of their action. The bishop also referred to the Board of Missions' appreciation of the district's request for a twenty-five per cent. increase in its missionary apportionment. The increase was easily met by the district and Bishop Tyler pointed out that this should cause every parish and mission to work for a self-supporting district. He expressed appreciation for increased clerical stipends.

Bishop Morrison's Address—Bishop Morrison's thoughtful address was based on the text, "The Lord Is King, Be the People Never So Impatient." "Righteousness is the life of a nation," he said in speaking of the present situation, "While righteousness rules, the nation is safe. It can not be destroyed, although the forces arrayed against it may be overwhelming." Bishop Morrison spoke very optimistically of the future and of the outcome of the peace conference. From the League of Nations, he passed to the possibility for church unity. He deplored the refusal of the Roman Church to participate in the world conference on faith and order, and suggested that other attempts towards unity should be deferred until after the meeting of this conference. The bishop in discussing the coming General Convention went into considerable detail in regard to Prayer Book revision, urging a new translation of the psalms.

Convention Delegates—The following is a summary of the diocesan elections:

IN DULUTH deputies to General Convention: The Rev. Dr. A. W. Ryan, Dean E. W. Couper, the Rev. Messrs. J. G. Ward, S. J. Hedelund and Messrs. W. E. Magner, T. S. Wood, F. W. Paine, J. A. Brown. The Standing Committee: The Rev. Dr. A. W. Ryan, the Rev. Messrs. J. G. Ward, E. W. Couper, E. S. Murphy, Messrs. W. E. Magner, F. W. Paine, J. A. Brown and Dr. J. H. Beaty.

L. F. Potter, B. F. P. Ivins, W. J. Lockton, G. P. T. Sargent and Messrs. C. R. Wilkes, C. E. Hooker, T. Hume.

Weekly News Letters

Three English Visitors—The preacher at the morning service at Trinity Church on Trinity Sunday was Canon Masterman, rector of the Church of St. Mary-Le-Bow in London. Trinity Church has an interesting relationship with this parish. The ancient charter of Trinity Parish, granted in 1697, contains the following statement:

"As we further decree it to be our will and pleasure, that the first rector and all succeeding rectors thereof, shall and may have, take and enjoy, such and the like obligations, mortuaries, Easter books or offerings and other ecclesiastical duties arising within the said parish of Trinity Church, as the vicar, rector or parson of St. Mary Bow, within our city of London, in our realm of England, now enjoyeth; and such and the like profits of burials in the said church as the same shall be limited in the instrument of dedication thereof."

At the cathedral on Trinity Sunday Archdeacon Howson of Liverpool was the preacher. Last week, the Rev. James Cairns, English correspondent of THE CHURCHMAN, was the preacher at Trinity Church.

Would Not Return to Pre-War Days, Says Canon Masterman—Canon Masterman said he felt, after being in America a month, that the danger of this country in its present prosperity and the assurance of so magnificent a future is that the people may forget God.

"I come from a land that is mourning one million dead," said the canon. "They gave their lives in the great struggle to maintain freedom and right. The industrial life has been ruined and the people are facing the future with anxiety."

"Yet, even with what the war has cost, I would not care to go back to the old easy days, for I feel England was then on the verge of forgetting God."

"The war has taught the great lesson that without divine guidance nations may perish and right and justice depart from the earth."

Course in Prevention and Rescue Work Planned—The Churchwomen's League for Patriotic Service is planning a two weeks' course of training in preventive and rescue work, for women volunteers of the Episcopal Church, from September 22 to October 6 in New York City. These volunteers are not intended to do the work of professionally trained women. They will act as aides, similar to those of the Red Cross, and help in many ways especially where the work is weak. Particularly in the follow-up work when a girl leaves the care of the institution or society, and in the religious touch which cannot always be supplied by the trained worker the volunteer will be useful. Lectures and discussions will take up the mornings and the afternoons will be given to practical work. Several have promised lectures so far, among them: Mrs. John M. Glenn, Mrs. Pease (Church Mission of Help), Miss Stella Miner, Dr. Leonard Blumgart, Sisters of St. John the Baptist, Father Officer, and two of the Girls' Friendly Society officers. The cost of the lectures will be $5 for the course; carfare, etc., for the practical work extra. Those interested in taking this course please apply before August 1 to Mrs. Haley Fiske, chairman, rescue and preventive work.

Summer Services At Grace Church—The summer schedule is now in effect in Grace Church. On June 18 the first out of door service in Huntington Close was held and the Rev. William Wilkinson, "Bishop of Wall Street," officiated. During July Bishop Williams of Michigan will be the preacher and during August and September, the Rev. Dr. Lubeck.

The Rev. James Sheerin's New Work—The Rev. James Sheerin who has recently resigned, because of temporary ill health, the vicarship of St. Thomas's Chapel, has accepted the superintendency of the Orphans' Home on Convent Avenue. He succeeds the Rev. R. R. Claiborne, for nine years the superintendent. The chapel committee passed a minute of appreciation of his ministry at St. Thomas's Chapel.

N. W. C. District Conference—The first of a series of conferences of district committees of the diocese was held on June 19 at Wallace Lodge, Yonkers, to prepare for the preliminary intensive work of the New York Every Name Canvass and the Nation-wide campaign. Among those who attended were Judge Hand, chairman for lower Manhattan; John J. Watson, Jr., central Manhattan; Stephen F. Bayne, upper Manhattan; Henry D. Patton, of the Bronx; and Howell C. Perrin of Larchmont, William G. Bliss of Katonah and Eugene G. Alexander of Yonkers. William Walker Orr, vice-chairman of the committee, presided and the Rev. R. Bland Mitchell of the Central Office of the Nation-wide campaign, presented the program for the survey on which the campaign is to be based. Dr. Gates, Mrs. Wright B. Haff and others spoke.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Bishop Guerry Calls Women To Face Responsibilities—The annual convention of the South Carolina branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in the Church of the Holy Comforter, Sumter, May 21-23. The convention was an excellent one and was marked by a large attendance and progressive action. In his opening address the bishop urged upon the women of the diocese a more intelligent study of the task of the Church and a deeper sense of their responsibility in order that they might properly exercise the franchise recently conferred upon them. He spoke of their duty in upholding the Christian standard of marriage and of the home. He commended their growing interest in the colored work of the diocese, and spoke of the excellent work of Archdeacon Baskerville among the people of his own race.

Two Resolutions—Two very significant resolutions were passed by the convention, one offered by Mrs. T. H. Fisher: "That a committee be appointed by the president to confer with Miss Lindley and with our own bishop, to consider the possible coordination of the various departments of women's work in the diocese, this report to be made to the executive board, and the board given power to act."

The other offered by Mrs. H. G. Osteen: "That this convention places itself on record as recognizing the existence of a great social scourge in the prevalence of venereal diseases in the cities of this state, and the obligation which this imposes upon all good citizens, especially the members of all Christian churches, to support the efforts of federal and civic authorities in combating this evil, which is the most serious menace to society."

Sewanee Campaign Successful—The campaign for Charleston's share of the $20,000,000 endowment fund for Sewanee closed on June 10. The amount raised was over $20,000. This is considerably less than the local quota, but in view of some of the conditions under which it was raised it is not a discreditable sum. The first man appointed chairman resigned before the campaign got a good start and the early meetings were poorly attended. In addition, there have been so many drives previously that it was hard to persuade people that they had any more money to give. From another standpoint the drive was a success. It rapidly gained momentum towards the end until all of the parishes of the city were united in a sincere and enthusiastic desire to support Sewanee and to make a creditable showing, and finally Sewanee became better known to the people than it ever has been.

Much of the credit is due Mr. Frank R. Frost of St. Michael's Church, the chairman, also to Mr. A. V. Snell, the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce for his advice and assistance. Elsewhere in the diocese the campaign has been very successful, especially in the cities and small towns.

Porter Military Academy Closes Fifty-First Year—The commencement exercises of the Porter Military Academy, Charleston, were held May 30-June 3. A large class was graduated and the school closed a most successful year. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered June 1 at the Church of the Holy Communion by Bishop Mann, of Southern Florida. The address to the graduating class on commencement day was made by Dr. W. S. Currell, president of the University of South Carolina.

This marks the close of the fifty-first year of this splendid old church school. The semi-centennial exercises were deferred by the war. At the alumni smoker on the night of June 3 it was decided to mark the half century of the school's life and usefulness by a campaign next fall for a fund of $100,000. The Hon. R. G. Rhett, a distinguished alumnus, has consented to head the campaign. This fund is not for endowment, but to pay off outstanding indebtedness, to erect new buildings, and to make extensive improvements. Since the death of Professor C. J. Colcock, the beloved headmaster for so many years, the vacancy has been filled by the appointment for Mr. I. B. Brown who has long been connected with the school.

PHILADELPHIA

Whitsunday Services—Bishop Garland was the speaker at the out of door service on the Parkway on Whitsunday afternoon. In spite of the rain, a good congregation assembled. The bishop made an impressive plea for the spirit of service; that the churchmen of today might enlarge the heritage they boast from the past.

At Christ Church in Germantown, the Rev. Mr. Arndt conducted a service of silence on Whitsunday in the evening. Most of the time was spent in silence, the people reading a special service that had been prepared for distribution. It was hoped that in the silence men might hear and heed the voice of the Spirit of God. One wonders if this sort of silence would not serve as a helpful change occasionally from the thunder and the noise from choir and pulpit.

The Raven's Club—The Rev. T. W. McKenty, brother of the warden of the Eastern Penitentiary, has been most active and capable in working with the men of the "underworld." At the Methodist Rescue Mission he has formed a Raven's Club, a group of men who have been helped by the mission, who bring ten to twenty-five cents a day to feed new "ravens" who "wing in" from outer darkness. Recently thirteen of these men were baptized.

BOSTON

Confirmation at the Cathedral—On Monday, June 9, Bishop Babcock confirmed a large class at the cathedral. The candidates, coming from seven different parishes, were persons who through illness or accident had missed confirmation at the time of the regular visitations.

Special Preacher at the Cathedral—It is announced that the Rev. E. T. Sullivan of Trinity Church, Newton Centre, will be the special preacher at the cathedral at both the morning and evening services from July 13 to September 21. The opening musical services held on the cathedral porch are resumed and held as usual before the evening services on Sundays.

City Mission Superintendent Ill—The Rev. F. B. Allen for twenty-seven years superintendent of the Episcopal City Mission is incapacitated for active service and has been compelled to cancel his preaching engagements.

Following the Twenty Weeks—Daily readings in the Bible for the first thirteen weeks after Trinity have been prepared by a committee at the request of Bishop Lawrence. The printing has unfortunately been delayed, but the readings are now expected to be ready, by June 21.

EAST CAROLINA

St. James', Wilmington—The rector of St. James' Church, Wilmington, the Rev. W. H. Milton, D.D., will devote the next six months to the Nation-Wide Campaign. During Dr. Milton's absence the services at St. James' will be conducted by the Rev. T. K. Nelson, formerly of the Virginia Episcopal School for Boys.

Chaplain Promoted—Chaplain J. M. Robeson, canonically connected with the Diocese of East Carolina, has recently been promoted to the rank of major. Major Robeson is now stationed at Camp Lee.

Ministering to Convicts—One of the North Carolina state convict camps will be located for some time in Wayne County, the neighborhood of Goldsboro, and the rector of the parish, the Rev. J. H. Gibboney, has been requested by the chief guard of the camp to preach twice every month and otherwise to minister to the inmates of this camp.

Knights Templar Service—Bishop Darst was the special preacher at the annual Ascensiontide service for the Knights Templar at St. Stephen's, Goldsboro.

Field Secretary for Woman's Auxiliary—Mrs. A. M. Wadell of Wilmington has been appointed field secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary and parochial societies and entered upon her duties on June 1.

St. Mary's School Closes a Good Year—This splendid church school has just closed a very successful year. St. Mary's is one of our oldest schools for girls in the South, and has a notable history. The new rector, the Rev. W. W. Way, who began his duties last summer, has won the confidence and esteem of pupils, parents, and trustees. The school was full to capacity, and there are already sixty-seven applicants for next year. The school can accommodate one hundred and seventy-five resident students. When the campaign for $250,000 for the improvement and endowment of the school has been completed, it is hoped that the capacity of the school can be increased. Meanwhile a new heating plant is to be installed this summer, and Smedes Hall is to be renovated and improved with a special gift of Mr. W. A. Erwin and family of $10,000.

An Encouraging Report—The principal of St. Augustine's School for the colored people, the Rev. Edgar H. Goold, made a most encouraging report to the board of trustees of the school. During the past school year there have been under instruction four hundred and fifty-four students in all departments. Owing to war conditions, there was a slight falling off of young men in attendance; but there was a material increase in the number of boarding girls. It was difficult to accommodate them all. It is probable that another wing will soon have to be added to the Thomas Building.

Work has begun on the erection of a model building for the normal department of the school. Towards the expense of this building the General Board of Religious Education has contributed $5,000. This same board has promised $2,000 towards the equipment of a model farm, provided the school raises an additional $2,000.

During the year the school has been the happy recipient of two scholarship funds: $3,000 given by Miss Edith Morgan, of Aurora, New York, and $1,000 given by Mr. A. D. Vibbert in memory of his father, the late Dr. Vibbert. As a result of the campaign for the fiftieth anniversary fund, about $40,000 have been added in cash or pledges towards the various objects for which the fund is being raised.

Any report of St. Augustine's School would be incomplete without a word about St. Agnes' Hospital. During the fiscal year there were 1,007 patients in the hospital, with 286 operations. Receipts for the hospital from all sources for the year amounted to $21,479; of this amount the patients themselves paid $14,881. The endowment for St. Agnes' Hospital has grown to $18,500. This ought to be increased to at least $50,000.

HARRISBURG

New Location for Colored Church—The colored people of the Church in Harrisburg have been worshipping in a building constructed for their purpose, that is bound to prove not well located. A property has been secured in a part of the city, contiguous to where the colored people are settling, and has been fitted for the purposes of worship. The commodious and comely room was formally opened on Sunday, June 1. The preacher at the morning service was the archdeacon, the Rev. William Dorwart, who was also the celebrant, assisted by the minister-in-charge, the Rev. W. M. Parchment. A second service was held in the afternoon at three o'clock at which addresses were made by the Rev. Messrs. Appleton, Post and Heilman, of the local clergy, and by a colored Presbyterian and a colored Methodist. In the evening the sermon was by the Rev. O. H. Bridgeman. The newly-prepared building is located at the corner of Forster and Cowden Streets. The windows are all memorial, kindly donated by friends of the work. They are not yet entirely finished, but will be finished soon, and will be dedicated on Sunday, June 29. Our colored people are very happy in their new quarters, and look forward to a steady prosperity.

LEROY F. BAKER.

SPRINGFIELD

The Episcopal Church At the State University—On Whitsunday we had a last corporate communion of students, both men and women, at 8:00 A. M. Doctor and Mrs. Carmen had kindly offered their house on California Street for the place of breakfast which followed. On Rogation Sunday the choir of the chapel went in a body to St. Paul's, Rantoul, and gave much pleasure by their singing.

On Sunday night, June 1, twelve of the men of the chapel, who are members of the University senate, met at supper with Chaplain Page to discuss the possibility of a petition now pending before the senate asking the University of Illinois to give credit to its students for work done in religious instruction in classes conducted by representatives of various Christian bodies, but inspected and approved by the university. The movement represents a tendency which has already realized itself at the University of Texas, Missouri, North Dakota, Colorado, and Oregon.

Osborne Hall at Urbana—The life of the smaller Osborne Hall, which has been carried on by Miss Whitely at 1105 West California Avenue in Urbana, has been most happy both as a home and as a centre of church influence so much so that it has been arranged to carry on the same life during the coming year in our own house at 1007 South Wright Street, the same house in which Chaplain Page lived for several years. Already five girls of the household have decided that they wish to remain for the coming year.

GEORGIA

The Woman's Auxiliary Annual Meeting was held in Grace Church, Waycross, on May 14 and 15. Bishop Reese as diocesan made his annual address with great and earnest eloquence, urging all to greater zeal in the missionary work of the Church. Dr. Wing, of Grace Church, Savannah, and the Rev. R. N. MacCallum, the local rector, followed the bishop with short but hearty addresses. The treasurer's report showed a very large increase over the receipts of the previous year.

The united opinion of the meeting was in favor of having women sit on the Board of Missions, and the delegates to the triennial were instructed accordingly.

The general business was quickly and harmoniously disposed of, and all attending spoke of the benefit received.

Council of Colored Workers—The council of colored churchmen of the diocese held its annual meeting in St. Cyprian's Church, Darion, on May 21 and 22. The bishop presided. Several of the clergy were detained by unavoidable causes so that the attendance of clergymen was small, but there was a good number of lay delegates representing the colored congregations in the diocese.

The council expressed a strong desire for the appointment of an archdeacon for colored work, and offered to assist in securing such an appointment by accepting larger apportionments in the parishes and missions than had previously been made. Much interest was expressed by the laity present in this matter and a very decided impetus was given by their interest to the work of the colored people in the diocese.

WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS

Two Ordinations—At St. Stephen's Church, Pittsfield, on May 30, Bishop Davies ordained to the priesthood, the Rev. Henry Daniels, and to the diaconate, Mr. Edred May. The Rev. John B. Whiteman preached the sermon. Mr. Daniels will continue his present work as curate at St. Stephen's Church. Mr. May was formerly a Methodist minister of the New Hampshire Conference. He will have charge, under the supervision of Mr. Whiteman, of the missions at Turner's Falls, Shelburne Falls, and Miller's Falls.

June 21, 1919

Springfield Convocation Meets—The spring meeting of the Springfield convocation was held at Westfield on June 3. After the business meeting the Rev. Latta Griswold of Lenox read a paper on the subject: "The Relation of the Church to Social Reconstruction." A lively discussion followed. Other subjects of interest brought up for consideration were the matter of holding a retreat or quiet day for men, and the present situation in diocesan missions. JOHN H. ROSEBAUGH.

OREGON

St. Philip's Mission—The Rev. H. M. Ramsey, when dean of the Pro-Cathedral of St. Stephen the Martyr, at the request of some colored people in Portland, held Sunday afternoon services for them at the cathedral. These services were omitted for a time when he became an instructor at Seabury Hall, Faribault. Recently Archdeacon Chambers took up the work. Several places were fixed on for holding the services, but an unreasonable prejudice against having a negro church in those neighborhoods prevented. At last a suitable location was secured. Here, thanks to the skill of the archdeacon, a dilapidated store-building was soon transformed into an attractive and fitting place of worship. This includes space for a guildroom at the rear, vestry, recessed chancel well appointed, and sittings for sixty people. They have Holy Communion once a month, the other services being taken by a lay-reader. A woman's guild has been organized, duplex envelopes introduced, and a creditable offering received each week. St. Philip's gives promise of a good future.

House of Churchwomen—At the convention of 1918 this question was referred to the decision of the women of the diocese. The large number not voting showed a lack of interest in the matter, and others thought it was not wise to divide their energies between a successful Woman's Auxiliary and a new and, in this diocese, a doubtful experiment.

Clerical Deputies to General Convention are Archdeacon Chambers, the Rev. Thomas Jenkins, rector of St. David's, the Rev. E. T. Simpson, Corvallis, and the Rev. O. W. Taylor, of Grace Memorial. The Standing Committee consists of the Rev. C. H. L. Chandler, Oregon City; the Rev. Thomas Jenkins and the Rev. W. R. B. Turrill, of Astoria, and Messrs. J. L. Etheridge, C. N. Huggins and Dr. Josephi, of Portland.

Convention Sunday—Following the plan of Bishop Morris, Bishop Sumner asked the out-of-town clergy to officiate at the city churches on "Convention Sunday" prior to the convention. The renewal of the old custom proved successful, and gave the missionary priests an opportunity to present the needs of their fields, in an interesting and effective manner. During the afternoon of the same Sunday the Sunday School Rally was held at the pro-cathedral, when a large number of the children of the city marched in procession with crosses and banners to service and presented the proceeds of their lenten offerings. Notwithstanding the long interruption of attendance, caused by the epidemic of influenza in the autumn, and other hindrances later, the schools on the whole presented a good report, and the offering was a substantial increase over that of last year. E. H. CLARK.

SOUTH DAKOTA

All Saints' School—One half of the fund of $200,000 for All Saints' School has been already raised. One half of this fund was to be raised in Sioux Falls where the school is situated, and the other half in the state at large. The chairman, C. H. Burke, announces that Sioux Falls has contributed its share in just eighteen days in sums varying from $25 to $3,000. It has set a splendid example for the rest of the state to imitate.

Bishop Remington's Visits—On Sunday, June 2 Bishop Remington preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the South Dakota state college in the college auditorium, and in the evening preached to the Christian Association of the college. In each case the churches in Brookings held no services, uniting in a union service. On Monday he visited St. Stephen's Church, De Smet, for the first time and preached in the evening. Following these visitations he goes to Pierre to preach the commencement sermon to the graduating class at the high school and after that preaches on a similar occasion in Vermilion at the University of South Dakota. PAUL ROBERTS.

NEWARK

Well Loved Layman dies—Richard Stevens, the youngest son of the late Edwin A. and Martha Bayard (Dod) Stevens, died at his home at Castle Point, Hoboken, on May 18. After his education abroad, at St. Paul's School, Concord, New Hampshire, and at Columbia University, Mr. Stevens enlisted almost immediately in the active service of the Church and community spending himself and his inherited fortune for the good of both. While always a lover of true sport, one of the best tennis players in the country, his greatest pleasure was ministering to the poor and unfortunate. For sixteen years he was the probation officer of Hudson County and took the greatest personal interest in the unfortunate men sent to him by the judges.

He was the patron of almost every welfare work for the good of Hoboken. He gave to each his counsel and personal help. For years he was a trustee and regular worshiper at the Church of the Holy Innocents built by his family in one of the poor districts of the city. He was the treasurer of Christ Hospital, Jersey City, of Christ Church Home for orphan children, South Amboy, and a dozen other similar and real charities, among them the social service commission of the Diocese of Newark.

His interest in humanity knew no limit. While a devout and earnest communicant, never missing his Sunday Eucharist and a thoroughly loyal and intelligent churchman, his religious as well as his human sympathies were very broad. The Salvation Army and the Roman Catholic alike knew no better friend. On the evening before his funeral there was held a short service at sunset in his home and a brigadier of the Salvation Army was among those who prayed at his bedside. Later there came a Roman priest and some of his people to say their devotions, judges of the court, widows, orphans, young men of his church battalion, the policeman on the beat, nurses, business men and all sorts and conditions came to offer prayer or to give their testimony that the poor of Hoboken had lost their best friend.

Rutherford Church Anniversary Commemorated—Grace Church, Rutherford, commemorated its fiftieth anniversary last month with a special service at which Bishop Lines was the preacher. The event recalled the early history of the parish, from the time the land on which the edifice stands was given by Mr. Floyd W. Tomkins, father of the distinguished rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Philadelphia, who had more to do with the establishment of the church than any other one person. Services had been held since 1867 in the parlors of the Rutherford Park Hotel, where, in March, 1869, the parish was organized. The next month the organization was completed, and canonical consent for the formation of the Parish of Grace Church was given by Bishop Odenheimer, May 11, 1869. The corner-stone of the original church building was laid by Bishop Odenheimer in October, 1872.

In 1890 the church was enlarged, and two years later the rectory was built. The parish house was erected in 1911. The rector, the Rev. Henry M. Ladd, has now entered upon the twenty-fifth year of his rectorship. The church has greatly prospered under his leadership. He has closely identified himself with the life of the community, and his ministry has been one of ideal service in the parish, the community and the diocese.

The parish anniversary was marked by a special gift of $1,000 toward the debt of a few thousand dollars resting upon the property.

Bishop Lines asked the congregation to mark Archdeacon Ladd's twenty-fifth anniversary, on March 9, 1920, by having the debt entirely paid, the large property free from encumbrance, and the church consecrated.

Tower Will Be Added—Contracts have been awarded for the building of a tower at the northwest corner of St. James' Church, Upper Montclair, in which will be installed a chime of eleven bells, given as a memorial to the soldiers and sailors of the parish who served in the war.

GRACE MCKINNEY.

MAINE

Church Club Dinner, Portland—The Church Club of the diocese held the annual dinner May 20. The whole diocese was well presented. The subject of the addresses was, the welcome the Church should accord to the returning soldiers. The speakers were: The Rev. Herbert Shipman, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York; Mr. Alexander H.

Hadden, of the Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Chaplain John H. Yeates, formerly of Admiral Sim's flagship; Chaplain Green, of the hospital ship Essequibo, and Mr. Donald Heath. Bishop Brewster closed the speaking by indicating the great challenge to the Church.

A Memorial Window—A memorial window was recently placed in St. Luke's Cathedral, Portland, and was consecrated by Bishop Brewster, assisted by Dean Vernon on May 22. The window is in memory of Lucy Hayes Shipley, wife of George Foster Shipley, Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States and Brigadier-General of the United States Volunteers, and of their daughters.

SHANGHAI

Continuation Committee Meets—The China Continuation Committee held its seventh annual meeting in Shanghai, April 23 to 30. The committee is a representative council of protestant missionaries in China organized as a result of a visit of Dr. Mott in 1913. The committee has no mandatory powers, but is becoming a valuable consultative and advisory body. Bishop Roots of Hankow is chairman. Some fifty missionaries were present at the sessions. The whole field of missionary activity in China is pretty well covered in the reports that are presented.

Theological Education—The report on theological education shows that the missions in China are now awake to the need of producing a better trained type of minister. China is supposed to be one of the most backward fields in the world in this respect. It is commonly recognized that our own Church is the only one that has anything approaching an adequate staff of educated men in its Chinese ministry. Plans are now on foot on the part of other missions, to remedy their lack. Existing institutions will be strengthened and new ones established, so that adequate provision for modern theological education will be found throughout China within a very few years. Many of these will be largely union in character.

Day Schools—The committee lays great stress also on the importance of strengthening general Christian education. It recommends the immediate establishment of four or five high-grade normal schools at an outlay of nearly three-quarters of a million dollars during the next five years. This is of special interest to our own Church because the mission in China feels that insufficient use has been made of the common day school as an evangelistic agency heretofore, and the Board of Missions is likely to have representations made to it before long on this line.

Social Service—The meetings of the committee showed that the appeal of the social service motive is becoming as insistent in China as in America. One sees the old fallacy that the world can be saved by "methods" raising its head here; but in China a great deal of effort can be spent on social service before it will become an evil to be feared.

Death of Dr. Timothy Richard—Those who are familiar with missionary work in China will be grieved to hear of the death of Dr. Timothy Richard. Originally an English Baptist missionary, he has been for many years a more than sectarian figure. An accomplished Chinese scholar, he was the founder of the Christian Literature Society. Coming into prominence for his ability in organizing relief in the great famine of 1878, he was afterward an adviser to many Chinese officials and for a time to the Emperor Kuang-Hsu. A man of tremendous enthusiasm and charity, he spent much literary effort in attempts to draw Christian and Buddhist thought together. In Dr. Richard, China has lost one of the finest of her older missionaries.

Dr. Wood In Shanghai—Dr. Wood reached Shanghai April 23, and has been busy gathering knowledge of church and missionary activities. He sails for Japan May 9.

JOHN W. NICHOLS.

LOS ANGELES

Ordination—On Ascension Day in St. James' Church, South Pasadena, the Rev. Mortimer Chester was advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Johnson. The ordination sermon was preached by the Rev. R. B. Gooden, head master of the Harvard Military School, the bishop's school for boys. The Rev. R. L. Windsor, rector of St. Luke's Church, Los Angeles, presented the candidate. More than a dozen of the clergy were present and took part in the imposition of hands. Mr. Chester is doing excellent work as missionary in a large mountain region, including Beaumont, San Jacinto, Hemet and Elsinore.

The Bishop's Plans—Bishop Johnson will leave Los Angeles on June 7 for the East. In company with his son he will attend the commencement at Williams College. He will also take the opportunity when in New York to consult with the committee on the Nation-Wide Campaign with a view to clearing up many questions which concern the churches of the Pacific coast and about which more definite information is needed, in order that the diocese may enter into the movement with the enthusiasm which the general plan merits. Last week the bishop was busily occupied in San Diego convocation, visiting various churches and attending the commencement of the Bishop's School for Girls in La Jolla. The program for the week at the school included the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday, June 1, by the Rev. R. B. Gooden, headmaster of Harvard School, the senior play on Wednesday, the reception to the bishop on Thursday, and the graduation on Friday, with the address by the Rev. Harwood Huntington, D. D., who at present is making his home in Coronado.

The New Hymnal In Use—St. James' Church, South Pasadena, of which the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes is the rector, is said to be the first church in the diocese to adopt the new hymnal. One hundred and forty-five copies were presented to the congregation by the Parish Aid Society, and were used for the first time at the second celebration of the Holy Communion on May 18. The evening service of that day was devoted to the singing of hymns from the hymnal and an address by the Rev. Ellis Bishop, who told of the aims of the hymnal commission in making the revision.

MISSOURI

Anniversary Celebrations—The Rev. Carl Reed Taylor, of Grace-Holy Cross, St. Louis, will tell you, if you ask him, that the grass didn't grow under his feet much during the week of the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of old Grace parish. The special features began at seven o'clock in the morning of Sunday, June 1. That was a day filled with the customary services of Sunday worship and Sunday School. Monday was given over to the lads to frolic on the spacious lawn that surrounds the church, to play basket ball and to demonstrate Boy Scout stunts. Tuesday was spent in reviving memories connected with the starting of Holy Cross mission, which eventually merged with Grace Parish. There was a delightful lawn party and community singing. Wednesday and Thursday, as Old Home Day and Guild Day, brought together happy groups of old people who had worshipped here as children and had not met for half a century. The old members were especially glad to greet Bishop Tuttle, who was one of the party, and the Rev. Benjamin E. Reed, who had been rector of Grace Church in the former years. Friday a reception was given in the evening to returned soldiers and sailors. The City Four Quartet, which had been "over there," made inspiring vocal music, and there were brief addresses by Bishop Johnson, Dean Davis, the Rev. C. R. Taylor and a community service speaker. Saturday the auxiliary members held reunions. The young people several evenings enjoyed dancing in the guild hall. The park was beautiful with multi-colored lanterns. The weather conditions were ideal. The anniversary closed with Whitsunday services, Bishop Tuttle being the preacher in the morning, and the Rev. George Major, curate in Christ Church, Nashville, a former Sunday School boy at Grace Church, preacher in the evening. The Rev. Mr. Taylor, who is much beloved by the people of the community and who has shown strong gifts of leadership in a difficult field, is entitled to great praise for the success of the continuous program anniversary. Grace Church is the oldest church fabric in St. Louis. It has served its time and must soon give place to a more substantial building for the erection of which $50,000 is available. The work of rebuilding will probably be taken in hand in the autumn. One old parishioner, Mrs. Sarah E. Meinberg, now in her eighty-second year, told at the anniversary that she remembered playing on the lumber the present church was built from when that part of St. Louis was a pathless wilderness. HARRINGTON ROGERS.

PITTSBURGH

St. Margaret's Hospital—The annual exercises connected with the graduation of nurses from the training school were held on May 18 and 20 in the hospital chapel. On Sunday the baccalaureate sermon was preached by the Rev. Edwin Jan Van Etten, rector of Calvary Church.

Woman's Auxiliary—The semi-annual meeting of the Pittsburgh Woman's Auxiliary took place on May 23. Addresses were made morning and afternoon by Bishop Hulse.

Chapel Dedicated—The morning chapel of the Church of the Ascension was dedicated by Bishop Whitehead on the morning of Rogation Sunday. It has lately been remodeled by Mr. and Mrs. George B. Gordon as a memorial to their daughter, Katherine, their son, William, and to William B. Boorum. The work was done by Dr. Ralph Adams Cram.

Street Services Held—Sunday afternoon, June 1, on the corner of Smithfield street and Second avenue, Pittsburgh, the Street Service Movement, under the auspices of the city Episcopal churches, began its seventh successive year. The Rev. William Porkess, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, and the Rev. Walter N. Clapp, vicar of St. Mary's Church, Pittsburgh, were the speakers. The congregational singing of mission hymns was under the leadership of an able director of singing. Selections were rendered by four professional musicians. Five hundred message cards were freely circulated among the crowd. In point of attendance and interest this opening service proved to be the best of the seven years. Many of the city parishes were well represented by willing Christian workers.

Saint Barnabas Home—The Feast of St. Barnabas this year was made notable by the opening of the new Saint Barnabas Free Home for Convalescent and Incurable Men and Boys, by the bishop of the diocese. The home is located near Bakers-town, about eighteen miles from Pittsburgh, on the Butler Short Line. It is a fire-proof structure, of steel, brick, cement and tile, substantial and commodious.

The plumbing throughout the entire building is of the newest and most sanitary style, and a plant is provided in the woods in the rear of the house for the disposal of sewage. There is also a pumping station to provide water for the home, and an ice plant to supply the needs in that direction. The building cost $250,000.

The institution was founded nearly a score of years ago by Gouverneur P. Hance, who is now Brother Superior of the St. Barnabas' Brotherhood, and he has associated with him in the management of the home, Brothers Charles and August. There is a board of trustees composed of prominent business men of Pittsburgh, Mr. H. S. Paul being president, and Mr. George H. Danner, treasurer. There are at present sixty-five inmates, which number will be increased as soon as additional rooms are furnished, as there is always a long waiting list of applicants.

The Memorials—The chapel is finished in the interior in brick, with white stone altar and reredos. The altar is a memorial to the late Rev. Thomas Jefferson Danner, for many years interested in the work of the institution. The rood screen, reredos and its ornaments are a memorial to the late Rev. Laurance Foster Bower, engaged before his entrance into the ministry with Mr. Hance in evangelistic and charitable work. The lectern is a memorial to Albert Rott, of Homestead, who was actively interested in the work from the time the institution was removed to its former site near McKeesport.

On the Eve of St. Barnabas the chapel and memorials were blessed. Next morning there was the profession of the brothers, and a celebration of the Holy Communion for the inmates. At half past ten Morning Prayer, with the dedication of the several departments of the house; the congregation followed the procession of clergy and bishop from room to room. At three o'clock there was a short service in the chapel, with addresses, and in the evening another service. The gathering was largely attended, representatives being present from Pittsburgh.

Every Member Canvass—Immediately after the eleven o'clock celebration of the Holy Communion on Whitsunday, forty-two men of St. Stephen's Parish, Wilkinsburg dined in the parish house prior to going out for the rest of the day on an every member canvass. Returns were reported at the close of the day, resulting in the most successful campaign in the history of the parish. The sum-totals for current expenses and also for missions registered a new mark, and the number of individual contributors proved to be the highest ever. This campaign had been carefully planned; the rector, the Rev. William Porkess conducted three weekly conferences on Friday evenings; preached two special sermons on Sunday mornings, and mailed a letter, together with a financial statement from the vestry, to each parishioner. The benefits of this great effort by no means were confined to the financial. A good deal of information has been gained and tabulated for the rector's use. The spirit of the parish has also been remarkably awakened through the willingness of forty-two men covering the large field with personal visits.

JANE CUDDY.

WASHINGTON

St. Mark's Church Consecrated—A milestone in the history of the Diocese of Washington was reached on Whitsunday when the bishop consecrated St. Mark's Church in the city of Washington, and the parish thus celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its foundation. The service was beautifully ordered and conducted, the congregation as well as the choir and clergy being guided through its unwonted paths by a complete souvenir program, prepared with great care by the rector, the Rev. C. R. Stetson. The other clergy participating were the Rev. W. Curtis White, rector of the mother church, Christ Church, Navy Yard (the original parish in the city of Washington proper), the curate, the Rev. Wm. A. Masker, Jr., and Canon DeVries, who preached the sermon.

The large vested choir of men and boys under its director and organist, Mr. Samuel Wood rendered a fine program of music, notable for its restraint in length, the popular congregational hymns, and the beauty of the anthem portions. The whole service, including a very large communion, was concluded in two hours and a quarter, a real achievement for the lengthy service of consecration in the Prayer Book.

The Parish Meeting—On the following night there was a parish meeting which filled the church. The Rev. G. Freeland Peter, rector of St. James Church, Richmond, Virginia, gave very interesting reminiscences of his seven years as curate of St. Mark's, and the treasurer of the parish, Henry P. Blair, Esq., read portions of Mr. John C. Chew's admirable manuscript history of the parish, and added a strong plea for the spiritual and practical work of the parish now released from the burden of debt on its church, and close to the extinction of the debt on its entire property, the holdings in real estate being among the most spacious and well located in Washington, and adequate for all future expansion, so far as can be seen.

How The Debt Was Paid—The extinction of the debt on St. Mark's is a great achievement, for the people are almost all office holders on small salaries, and there is no wealth in the parish. Without material help from outside they have provided themselves with a property worth over one hundred thousand dollars, and their church is of exceptional dignity and worshipfulness, with appointments and adornments of rare taste and harmony. The rectors have been the Rev. A. Floridus Steele, the Rev. Andrew J. Graham, the Rev. W. L. DeVries, and the Rev. C. Rockford Stetson. All have been active in building up the parish, but its chief asset has been a devout and hardworking people.

The History of the Parish—The great step forward here was made in 1896 when Bishop Satterlee took St. Mark's for his pro-cathedral and placed three priests, the Rev. Charles H. Hayes, the Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, and the Rev. W. L. DeVries in the cure. Later several deacons, notably the Rev. Edward D. Johnson, the Rev. C. R. Stetson, the Rev. G. F. Peter, and the Rev. E. M. Thompson came to their aid. For the past seventeen years the parish has again been autonomous. Hearty and reverent worship, many and varied activities, and devoted pastoral care have always characterized it, for long years among the three or four foremost churches of the diocese in baptisms, confirmations, Sunday School pupils, and communicants, though only about twelfth in resources and income. The parish occupies and ministers to a very spacious field east of the capitol, a section of the city in which real generalship has been shown in the placing of churches, so that none are contiguous to each other, and the whole territory is adequately covered.

A Splendid Gift—St. Matthew's Church, Kenosha, has been left $30,000 and has been named the residuary legatee of Elizabeth Calkins Moore. The $30,000 fund will be used for an endowment, and the remaining amount which may be between $150,000 and $175,000, will be used to broaden the usefulness of the church in ways not yet decided upon. The parish has free pews. The new hymnal has recently been introduced.

Canadian Church News

Labor At The Synods—Many of the Anglican synods of Canada have just closed their annual sessions. Many more of the protestant communions have concluded similar assemblies, and running through all was the predominant thought of Labor and Labor's needs and claims. To the careful observer there was manifest an element of rivalry between these various bodies in an effort to attract the attention and command the approval of Labor. The changes were wrung on the length of the working day, the conditions of toil, the sharing of profit, the value of arbitration; in short, the resetting of the whole stage of industry. There seem to be no signs thus far that Labor has been deeply impressed by these efforts of religious communions to solve their problems. There is no flocking of the working men to the churches, where sermons are vigorously announced on the subject in which they are so deeply interested. There are evidences that these men are a bit suspicious of the enthusiasm that is sweeping our religious organizations, and they refuse to be impressed with a zeal that does not at all times issue out of knowledge.

In the domain of the spiritual the Church of God can and ought to speak with authority. It is more than doubtful if ever this authority can be attained in the complex realm of commerce and industry. The Church is being drawn into a field where the utmost discretion must be used by those who can look into the future, else it may one day find itself bankrupt in spirit and powerless in industry.

Race Track Gambling—Commercialized gambling on race tracks is another subject that has received considerable attention in our recent synods. The immense profits that are made by the proprietors of race tracks and the organizers of racing circuits has been a revelation to our citizens. In the days of war economy it was thought wise that these things should be brought to an end until peace was proclaimed. All sorts of influence has been brought to bear upon the Government to remove the restrictions on this phase of sport. The plea, of course, is the threadbare love of a high strain of horse-flesh, but the real motive power is a high strain of bank accounts. It is, of course, impossible to remove private betting except by the creation of public sentiment against it, but the professional type, publicly set up with a view of creating and pushing trade, is a different matter. Various social organizations are pressing the Government to make permanent the legislation that proved temporarily effective and useful in wartime, and they have every hope of success.

A Message From The Chaplains—A lengthy composite statement, signed by representative chaplains, of all protestant communions, who served overseas with the Canadian forces, has been issued to the clergy of Canada. With the exception of the Anglican Church it has been authorized to be read in all churches on Sunday, June 8, or at some convenient date thereafter. It purports to be the finding of men who have had unusual experiences with soldiers under conditions that facilitated an intimacy and exchange of confidences not attainable under other circumstances. It is an effort to place at the disposal of the Church in general conclusions that seemed to them to be justified out of their own remarkable experiences. The document is the product of thoughtful men. It is expressed with dignity and reserve. It is free from the platitudes, so often vouchsafed, of what the returned man wanted and what he was sure to do on reaching the home that he had left to take his part in the war.

There is no wild condemnation of the Church as a failure in the past or the present. "We desire to acknowledge with thanksgiving that the Church has been enabled to bear a strong witness for the faith. These are our evidences that the work of the Church in other years has been by no means in vain." The power of the divine spiritual forces of the Church is amply acknowledged and greater consecration to the development of these forces is urged. One of the causes of the pitiful misapprehension of the Church by so many men, the chaplains write, is as follows: "They have witnessed great crowds attending sensational religious meetings, and have heard of trivial forms of amusement being magnified into great moral dangers, and the pathway to heaven defined as abstinence from what were to them harmless diversions of life." Considerable attention is given to the consideration of the Apostles' Creed which the chaplains think requires resetting to make it "completely fulfil its purpose as a confession of faith."

The value and necessity of public worship is emphasized, and the following extract coming from the experience of men in the army is worthy of careful consideration: "We believe that the war has taught us something about the motives and impulses of worship. In these days, when strange devices are used to draw men to the House of God, we desire to express it as our opinion that men do not need to be tempted to worship by bribes or cajolery. The experiment of preceding an hour's worship by a cinema show or holding out the inducement of a band concert after the service has not been justified by results. It cheapens religion and lowers the ideal of worship."

There is, of course, a passage on Church unity. The chaplain's experiences in this respect under military necessity can hardly be specially valuable to the Church, where reality and conviction must be the fundamental bond of union and not convenience or compulsion.

The section that deals with the Church's social activities warns the Church that its spiritual leadership must not be handed over to lay organizations that neither by vision nor sound education are fitted for such work.

The document concludes with a splendid appeal for an ecclesiastical vision. "The Church must recapture the crusading spirit which, in face of peril and labor, ceaselessly pressed on to an unseen goal."

Much that is contained in this document required no army experience to see, and some of the things set forth are more or less fugitive in their essence. Nevertheless it is a document that commands attention and will not be without fruitful results.

RHODE ISLAND

Christ Church, Lonsdale, Celebrates Anniversary—The eighty-fifth anniversary of Christ Church, Lonsdale, was observed Whitsunday, when the rector, the Rev. A. M. Hilliker, preached an historical sermon. The occasion was also the eighteenth anniversary of the present rectorship, during which the parish has more than doubled its membership and has greatly increased its work along missionary, educational, and social lines. The anniversary was marked by a musical festival in the evening, when the parish choir was assisted by the choir of St. John's Church, Ashton. The Rev. Roberts A. Seilhamer, of St. Paul's Church, Pawtucket, the mother parish, and the Rev. William Pressey, of St. John's Church, Ashton, a daughter parish, made congratulatory addresses. On the following Tuesday evening a parish reception was held, when one of the two former rectors now living, the Rev. H. C. Cunningham, of Boston, was present, and the clergy of neighboring churches brought greetings.

A Rapidly Expanding Parish—The Rev. F. S. Fleming of the Church of the Atonement has just announced plans for a complete remodelling and rebuilding of the church. The proposed changes will cost $65,000 and will increase the seating capacity of the church to six hundred. The architect is Mr. J. E. O. Pridmore, of this city. The Church of the Atonement is in a rapidly growing residential district near the lake, in the northern part of the city. It has made rapid growth during the five years under the administration of its present rector. The attendance at the services during the past Lent and at Easter was most unusual. The parish reported 609 communicants early in the year. Since that time more than fifty have been added by confirmation and transfer. There were over 600 communions made at Easter, which is a remarkably high per cent. During Lent there was an average of over two hundred communions made each week. The neighborhood in which the parish is situated is building up rapidly, and the outlook well warrants the expenditure that is proposed in increasing the facilities of the church.

Graduation of Nurses at St. Chrysostom's Church—The graduating exercises of the Chicago Polyclinic School for Nurses was held at St. Chrysostom's Church on June 3. Conference on Church Union—Dr. Peter Ainslie, the Disciples' minister from Baltimore, visited Lexington for addresses and conferences on June 1 and 2. He came as chairman of the committee on round table conferences for the world conference on faith and order. Dr. Ainslie addressed a union congregation, or mass meeting, in the cathedral on Sunday afternoon. He was also invited by some of the ministers in Lexington to speak in their churches. On Monday there was a conference on church union conducted by Dr. Ainslie, with the ministers and representative laymen in the morning; and with leading women representatives of the various communions of the city in the afternoon.

N. W. C. Plans—The Rev. J. D. La Mothe of Baltimore, representing the Board of Missions in presenting the Nation-Wide Campaign, met a gathering of clergymen and laymen on the morning of May 19 to explain the purpose and plan of the campaign in preparation for the organization of the diocese in this movement. The minor chapter of the cathedral chapter, at a meeting in Lexington on April 29, had taken action looking toward full diocesan cooperation in this campaign. HENRY P. MANNING.

Cathedral School News—On May 28 the Cathedral School for Girls in Havana terminated its fourteenth year, graduating a class of twelve, most of whom were Cubans, and many of these from the best families of the city. Gibbons, who is also a canon of the cathedral, left for De Land, Florida, where later he received the degree of doctor of divinity from Stetson University. A number of years ago Mr. Gibbons was dean of the Woman's College there, and it is now in recognition of his services at that time, and of his subsequent career, that he has received this degree.

Episcopal Incomes—"The fatal opulence of bishops" has been a favorite subject for discussion in English newspapers for the past twenty years. At one time the question was treated with more or less levity. Later, many outside the Church began to scoff and ask awkward questions when opportunities occurred. Nowadays, however, the matter is being taken up seriously, and we are beginning to realize that the question is one which vitally concerns the whole Church.

The majority of the English bishops have official incomes of between £4,000 and £5,000 per annum. Two or three are larger. London, for instance, is £10,000, Durham about £7,000, and Winchester £6,500. Several of the bishops have recently published their "balance sheets," which reveal the fact that the greater part of the episcopal income is swallowed up by expenses connected with the administration of the diocese and the maintenance of official residences.

Castles and Palaces—All the older English dioceses are saddled with large castles or palaces, which have served as residences for the bishops for centuries past. As a rule, several acres of land surround the episcopal house. Thus an army of domestic servants is needed inside the house, and another army of men is required to keep the gardens and grounds in order. When we had "prince bishops" these places were in accord with the spirit of the times, but in these democratic days, something much more simple is demanded.

The time has come for the problem to be faced and solved by the united bench of bishops. The business layman has little sympathy with the bishop who complains that his income is swallowed up by the expenses of a palatial residence, when he makes no effective effort to remedy the state of things.

Poverty of the Clergy—Closely allied to the apparently substantial incomes of the bishops is the problem of the underpaid clergy. Unquestionably this is one of the greatest scandals in the Church of England. Its effect is being felt in many directions. For example, it is hopeless to expect educated men to enter the ministry of the Church when they find it impossible to meet their responsibilities from their stipends. It is important that the ministerial ranks should be recruited from all classes. We need men of special education and training; we also need those who have had to push their way in the world. But it is surely wrong to ordain men to a sacred work and then hinder and cripple their usefulness by preventing their securing the ordinary necessities of life. A good deal has been done during recent years by various societies to alleviate the position and special funds have been raised, but a determined effort is necessary by the Church in her corporate capacity.

Steps are now being taken, as your readers know, to raise a fund of £5,000,000 for what is known as the Central Church Fund, the objects of which include the training of men for the ministry, the maintenance of the clergy, pensions for aged and infirm clergy and assistance for the widows and orphans of the clergy.

The Enabling Bill—Readers of THE CHURCHMAN have been kept well informed in regard to the various movements and reforms within the Church of England. Much has been said about the struggle to secure a measure of self-government. What is known as the Enabling Bill has now been introduced into the House of Lords by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the second reading is likely to be taken about the third of June. The bill provides that an ecclesiastical committee of the Privy Council shall be set up. Every measure passed by the Representative Church Assembly must be submitted to this ecclesiastical committee. After considering the measure the ecclesiastical committee is to submit a report thereon to the king, advising that the royal assent ought or ought not to be given to it. "A measure passed in accordance with this act may relate to any matter concerning the Church of England, and may extend to the amendment or the repeal in whole or in part of any act of parliament." When the ecclesiastical committee have reported to the king on any measure, the report together with the text of such measure, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days. If the ecclesiastical committee advise the king to give his assent to any measure, then unless within forty days either House of Parliament shall direct to the contrary, such measure shall have the force of an Act of Parliament. "If the ecclesiastical committee advise the king that the measure ought not to receive the royal assent, no further proceedings are to be taken."

Lord Haldane's Amendment—At one time it seemed possible that the bill might get through the House of Lords without much difficulty. Curiously enough in the House of Commons a large number of nonconformists have signed a petition in favor of the bill, but it would be most unusual if a measure of this sort did not arouse strong organized opposition.

In the House of Lords, Lord Haldane has already given notice of an amendment to the effect "That this house is unwilling, especially in the absence of independent inquiry, to assent to legislation which would exclude the greater part of the people of England from effective influence in the affairs of the National Church, as established by the constitution, and which is so framed as to enable members of that Church to pass laws that may wholly change its character without adequate supervision by Parliament."

No doubt Lord Haldane will find a body of supporters, and it is not easy to forecast the result. Personally I fancy the bill will pass through the Upper House but I very much doubt whether the legislative machinery in the House of Commons is not already too clogged to permit of the bill being introduced this session. However, we are glad to be alive and we shall see what will happen.

Bahaism and the Church

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Among the church notices in the New York Times of May 3 appeared the announcement of a service to be held in one of our churches on the following day. The subject as announced was "the plan of Baha u'llah and Abdul Baha" for "world reconstruction." The speaker was an official representative of Bahaism, sent to the United States for the express purpose of promoting the principles of that form of religion among us.

Now Sir, I submit that the Christian Church and the Christian pulpit is not the place for the propagation of any other gospel, of any other program for world redemption, than that which was once for all proclaimed by our Lord and His apostles. Said St. Paul to the Galatians: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach unto you any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you, let him be anathema."

Bahaism, if I have understood its principles aright, claims to be that final and ultimate form of religion of which the existing positive religions—Mohammedanism, Christianity, Judaism—are the forerunners. Bahaism does not profess to deny Christianity, but rather claims to transcend it. Yet in effect it denies the absolute claim of Jesus Christ upon the hearts and consciences of men, as is sufficiently seen in the usurpation by its leader of one of our Saviour's titles, "The Glory of God," Baha u'llah. We further read the fact that the pioneer of this movement, Mirza Ali Mohammed, who was born just one hundred years ago, usurped another one of our Lord's divine titles by proclaiming himself the "Bab," that is, the "Way."

It would seem that there are public halls enough for the propagation of religio-politico-economic novelties without place being given for such propaganda within precincts consecrated to the worship of Almighty God through the One Mediator between God and man, Christ Jesus.

Let us hope that this invitation of alien and non-Christian religionists to proclaim their newer gospels within the sacred precincts of our churches, will cease. It can only give pain and offense to Christian consciences, who will ask themselves the question, Have our priests and bishops forgotten the vows of their ordination to "banish and drive away from the Church all erroneous and strange doctrines, contrary to God's Word?"

The Apostolic Ministry

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In many contributions from our Church to the discussion of Christian unity, there is, to my mind, a too prevalent tendency to prate idly about the majesty of the apostolic succession and the sacrosanct character of the three-fold ministry of the Church, as if this anxious safe-guarding of an institution were a concern actually more vital than making way for the coming of the Kingdom. The apostolic ministry may be of immense value as a basis and guarantee of unity, but we ought to concede that it is a non-essential, and ask that it be judged on its practical merits, and commonly accepted, if possible, in the truly catholic Church that is to be, as our valuable contribution to the common depositary, to which all Churches are to bring their honor and glory. At the same time, let us seek the vision and grace to recognize the full validity of the other Churches' ministry and sacraments. Our ministry clearly represents a gradual development to meet the exigencies of the past. Was it not even that recognized authority, Hooker, who ventured to say: "It is not essential to the being of the Church, but to its well-being?" The jealous tenacity and superstitious regard of some of its guardians savors of a day that is dead.

This impossible view of a peculiar Church and priestly ministry is all bound up with that old, artificial, unspiritual theory of things which conceives of God as remote from human life, and accessible only through certain arbitrarily appointed outward channels. It is closely related to aristocracy and the divine right of kings. It is hopelessly out of place in modern life and thought. It cannot survive today. It bars the way to Christian unity. It is found even to be fighting against God.

There is altogether too much evidence of spiritual pride, cold aloofness and boasting of ecclesiastical ancestry, in the spirit of them of old time who drew forth the holy wrath and the withering scorn of the Church's Master, saying, "We have Abraham to our Father." In our zeal for the observance of the outward form we have forgotten the truth in the stricture of the author of the inside of the cup. A successor of the Apostles must be an apostle himself. Let us evidence the daring and venturesome spirit of the Master and of His disciples in defying the cold ecclesiastical and sacerdotal temper of their time, for the sake of gaining the larger things. There is too much evidence of a secret desire for Episcopal absorption—in place of a genuine desire for a real comprehensive unity—which shall mark a triumph for the Episcopalian brand of Christianity rather than a gathering up of all that is truly apostolic in the several branches of the Church into a larger and all-inclusive unity. Let us rather evidence the spirit of Him who said, "He that loseth his life for my sake shall find it," an utterance as applicable to institutions as to individuals.

I venture to say that if Jesus were to return under his former limitations, He would stand in profound amazement before the spectacle of a Church bearing His name and yet so far adrift from the great elemental things of the religion He came to proclaim, and trifling with petty things of supreme indifference to Him, when life-and-death issues are at stake. In sorrow He would exclaim, "O foolish men, and slow of heart!" Stephen, returning, would repeat his stinging words: "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcized in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Spirit; as your fathers did, so do ye."

What the Church needs is a mighty spiritual rebirth, that we may have eyes to see with the vision of Jesus Christ. Then all artificial, man-made barriers would be swept aside, giving way before the surging tides of the Divine Spirit of Truth, which is ever a uniting spirit. Then, and not till then, Christian unity will spring spontaneously into being, and the divine Master will see the travail of His soul consummated, and shall be satisfied in the fulfillment of that wondrous dream and prayer of Galilee.

Believe me, God is not limited in His universal and eternal processes to the apostolic ministry. If the "Apostolic Church" will not bend to His irresistible will, He will annihilate it. "Watch ye therefore; lest coming suddenly He find you sleeping."

Ecclesia Docens

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Thank God for the humility of a leader in the Church that causes him to pay tribute to the Infinite Mind in the memorable words: "I do not know. I am one among you * * * * groping for the truth!" In the same issue of THE CHURCHMAN, wherein you quote the above words from a recent sermon preached by Bishop Israel, appears a letter from a churchwoman, under the caption, "A Lesson in Propaganda," which suggests the thought: In this transitional hour, is it propaganda that we need, so much as intensive, internal training? Christian Science excels in that.

A question as to the special appeal of Christian Science, which is not found in the Church, was answered by a restless seeker after truth, as follows: "A good Scientist must study the Bible every day, and the quarterlies, used in connection with Science and Health throw light upon it that the Church has failed to give me." Couple that statement with observation of the Sunday Schools of "non-conforming" bodies, and attention is drawn to a weak spot in our own methods, recognized by our Board of Religious Education, but not yet fully covered by the elaborate systems that have been arranged, i. e., the loss to our Church Schools of those who have been confirmed. Adults, in considerable numbers, attend the Epworth League, Baracca Classes, and Sunday Schools, where the Bible is taught systematically, and all take part in an endeavor to focus their little rays of light upon the subject in hand.

Are we, of the Episcopal Church, defeating the vital purpose of the Church we love and feel to be full of glorious promise, in producing a state of anæsthesia by a sublime service that may be oppressive to many, and a state of indifference; by sermons that are over the people's heads, instead of teaching the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ?

Clear the Jericho Road

THE WORLD today is like that traveler of old who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho.

THE road the world is traveling is new and strange, and dangers unforeseen and unforeseeable lie in wait.

IT is not enough that the good Samaritan should wait until evil has befallen, and then bind up the sufferer's wounds.

THE Church of Christ which embodies the spirit of the Samaritan shall this time precede and not follow.

IT shall chart the path and bend its energies to practical solutions of every problem that to-day faces it.

THE Church must clear the Jericho Road—clear it by thoughtful, direct and well-planned action.

THIS is the meaning of the great new movement for which the Episcopal Church is to-day girding itself——a forward looking movement; a movement for the increase of spiritual power; and for the vigorous application of that power to the problems of a new and plastic world.

Is it impossible that the great Christian minds of the day should unite in illuminating a treatise upon the Bible, that should set forth the digested facts of the gospel in simple, helpful words, introducing none that could represent personal opinion, merely; and that such a treatise should be authorized by the Church to be used in connection with quarterly studies, for the edification of seekers after truth?

The Church does possess the whole truth, in Jesus Christ. God grant that she may never lose that precious gift! Let us sit at His feet and learn of Him. If a group of extremists can do, with half a truth, what the Christian Scientists have done, what could not the Church do with the whole truth—with its attention fixed upon the teachings of Christ, undisturbed by individual theories?

Approves New Hymnal

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Mr. Hickson's Mission

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

As one who has been privileged to render assistance in answering questions and to hear the outpourings of the hearts from some of the men, women and children who in throngs have been seeking help of body and soul in prayer, by the laying on of hands by James Moore Hickson at Trinity Chapel, I want to give some of my impressions of this great mission for the revival of the ministry of healing in the Church.

I wish everyone could enter the quiet chapel one morning during Mr. Hickson's mission and see the suffering souls going to God's altar by the power of faith, to receive the healing message by prayer which Christ gives through His chosen servant. In silence the praying people receive the blessing of this spiritual gift of healing. I have never beheld a sadder scene nor experienced moments of more exalted inspiration and of greater promise.

As the people (and they represent every denomination), go forward to the altar, one is moved by the agony on many faces. As they return, one can tell when the healing gift rests upon them, for their faces are illumined by the Spirit. In leaving the chapel many have taken me by the hand with words of deepest gratitude to Mr. Hickson for the wonderful and beautiful prayers and the blessing that has been wrought by Christ through him. So many people have returned several times with faith strengthened to receive a fuller blessing.

I could mention cases, but that is unnecessary, where healing has taken place as the supplicant has knelt at the altar while the healing prayers were said in the presence of our Lord and Saviour.

All Churches have faith in the efficacy of prayer. We know that the prayers for sickness offered by every clergymen are saving many lives, but the laity are seeking help for the body outside the Church by healers other than physicians and surgeons. God, too, works through medical science. The reason is that the doors are not opened to all who seek this healing message of the Gospel at God's altar.

Several prayer circles for intercessory prayer for the sick and needy and for the work of healing have been formed by Mr. Hickson. The Rev. Henry B. Wilson, who also has the healing gift, and has done a great work, has formed prayer groups in churches in several states. Two months ago the Rev. Mr. Wilson organized a group at Grace Church. These groups should be formed in every church. The healing ministry will follow.

This letter is sent from one who was healed by prayer some years ago.

Dr. Manning has had the vision and has opened Trinity Chapel for this mission. To him we should render grateful hearts for this opportunity and the example he has given to the churches of our country.

To Mr. Hickson our thanks cannot be expressed. It is only by obeying the command of Jesus Christ to "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, and these signs shall follow them that believe—they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

We bid Godspeed to Mr. Hickson for his missionary journey around the world and our prayers will follow him to aid in uniting the chain at Jerusalem in the Ministry of Healing.

Christianity and the Peace Terms

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Since the peace terms have been made public, I have seen several printed articles speaking as if those terms were contrary to the spirit of Christ's teachings.

But, when our Lord saw the Temple desecrated by money-changers, did He spare their feelings?

How many temples consecrated to God has not Germany desecrated?

People who quote the parable of the two debtors to show that Germany should not pay anything, ignore the attitude of mind of those two debtors. Both debtors acknowledged their indebtedness, both stood ready to pay, only asking for time to work it off, and the cruel servant was punished, not because he claimed his dues; but because he refused to grant time, and "showed no pity." And his punishment, inflicted by the same indulgent master, was that "he was delivered to the tormentors till he should pay all that debt."

Has Germany "shown pity" when she wrung tributes that were not her due from the starving people of Belgium and Poland? Did she not "cause them to be sold and [their] wives and children?"

The Allies offer Germany plenty of time to work off her debt. They do not even demand full reparation for the inestimable ruin she has wrought.

Is it truly Christian to grant absolute indulgence to those who pitilessly trample on the rights of others?

H. H. BRADFORD.

The distinctive flavor of Coca-Cola

The flavor of Coca-Cola is a composite of natural fruits so delicately blended that the palate is unable to distinguish any one of the component parts—the result is a distinctive flavor.

The art of compounding flavors has become a science which requires a lifetime to master. That is why it is so difficult to imitate the distinctive flavor of Coca-Cola.

The slightest deviation from the delicate balance of flavors reveals the imitation. When you ask for Coca-Cola demand the genuine by full name — nicknames encourage substitution.

THE FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY of the rectorship of the Rev. William M. Chapin at St. John's Church, Barrington, Rhode Island, was quietly observed Whitsunday. Mr. Chapin had sufficiently recovered from a recent illness to take part in the service and to make a brief address of appreciation of the harmony prevailing in the parish during the past forty years. In addition to his parish duties during these years Mr. Chapin has founded and stood at the head of a diocesan institution for the care of sixty homeless boys, now equipped through his heroic efforts with substantial buildings. It is not surprising that the double burden bears heavily upon his shoulders.

EDMUND J. GATES, a student from the General Theological Seminary, will have charge of Trinity parish, Camden, New York, during the summer, also of the missions in Redfield and Altmar. He began his work the first week in June.

THE REV. ALMON A. JAYNES, recently senior chaplain of the 27th Division, has been appointed a Grand Chaplain by Judge William S. Farmer, Grand Master of Masons in New York State.

THE REV. WARREN P. YEAKEL, of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, has taken charge of the missions at Holland Patent and Trenton, New York, and will render priestly assistance at other points near Utica.

THE REV. R. F. PHILBROOK has accepted a call to St. Thomas's Church, Rawlins, Wyoming and took up his duties there June 15.

THE REV. GEORGE F. DUDLEY, rector of St. Stephen's, Washington, D. C., is the secretary of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Washington.

THE REV. EDWARD DOUSE, vicar of St. George's Chapel, St. Albans' Parish, Washington, and priest-in-charge of St. John's Chapel, Georgetown Parish, Washington, left New York on June 3, by the S. S. Santa Marta, for Kingston, Jamaica, his old home, for a four months vacation, in the hope of restoring his health.

THE REV. RANDOLPH F. BLACKFORD, who has until recently been serving as Red Cross chaplain at Camp Sevier, has accepted a call to St. Bartholomew's Church, Hartsville, South Carolina.

THE REV. RICHARD L. MERRYMAN, of the Church of the Advent, Marion, South Carolina, has accepted a call to the rectorate of the Church of the Redeemer, Orangeburg, including the work at Fort Motte.

THE REV. LOUIS A. PEATROSS, late of the Diocese of Tokyo, has accepted a call to Trinity Church, Edgefield, South Carolina.

THE REV. ROYAL K. TUCKER, D. S. C., late of the A. E. F., has been called to St. Matthew's Church, Darlington, South Carolina and St. Albans' Mission, Kingstree.

THE REV. H. H. LUMPKIN, of Fairbanks, Alaska, has been called by Bishop Guerry to the newly created archdeaconry of the convocations of Columbia and Greenville, South Carolina. Mr. Lumpkin is a native of South Carolina, and for several years was priest-in-charge of St. John's Chapel, Charleston, where he did a splendid work.

A SON WAS BORN to the Rev. and Mrs.

Horatio N. Tragitt, Jr., in St. Luke's Hospital, St. Louis, on Ascension day. The mother was Miss Henrietta Mueller of Jackson, Missouri. Mr. Tragitt is the minister-in-charge of Crystal City and Herculaneum in the Diocese of Missouri.

THE REV. JOHN ERNEST CARHARTT has resigned as secretary to Bishop DuMoulin and rector of St. Andrew's Church, Toledo, Ohio, and on June 16 became senior curate at Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, being in full charge until a new dean is elected.

The Brotherhood, therefore, is promoting during 1919 its new Advance Program of accomplishment, calling to enlistment therein all the laymen of the Church. This program has seven objectives in the work of laymen, and correspondence is invited, regarding the application of the work in the parish.

OBITUARY

IN MEMORY OF RICHARD STEVENS

The trustees of the Church of the Holy Innocents, Hoboken, N. J., desire to give expression to their deep sense of personal loss in the death of Richard Stevens, a life-long member of the parish, and for many years one of its trustees, and its treasurer.

He was remarkable for his goodness. And this goodness was more than a good-natured and genial disposition, which won him many friends; it was a strong and aggressive goodness that made him an earnest leader in social welfare work; and yet his manner was always unassuming, and his life was wrapped up in the activities of the numerous charitable and beneficent institutions of the Church and community with which he was associated, and his rare equanimity of mind was shown in the splendid courage with which he administered for several years the exacting duties of probation officer. Although admitted to the bar, he did not practice law. A man of the best social position and of large means, his happiness consisted chiefly in personal work among the poor and unfortunate; and he proved a warm friend to the many troubled people who sought his sympathy.

The late Richard Stevens will be greatly missed in our parish as well as in the community. He was most appreciative of the opportunities of worship and sacramental grace; and his devotion to God was none the less because of his arduous and unselfish labors for his fellowmen. In a word he was a true Christian gentleman, a faithful and loyal Churchman, and a generous and public-spirited citizen. We beg to record here his bequest of $8,000.00 to our parish.

To his widow and children, and his other relatives, we extend sincere sympathy.

The New Hymnal

with both Words and Music

All Protestant Churches encourage congregational singing. It greatly increases their effectiveness. They use a musical Hymnal.

The Episcopal Church alone has clung to a words-only Hymnal. We have had little congregational singing. We have lost in strength and zeal.

The General Convention has officially ordered a Musical Hymnal. An eminent Commission of the Convention has prepared it. It is sold by the Church itself. Hundreds of parishes have adopted it. The price is low—$1.05 to congregations—on credit terms reaching over a year.

CAN YOUR PARISH AFFORD NOT TO PLACE A MUSICAL HYMNAL IN THE HANDS OF ALL THE CONGREGATION?

WORLD UNITY AND CHURCH UNITY

From the Convention Address of Bishop Brent.

IT is no new thing to insist that the value of the particular can be discovered only in the light of the general, that the local is but a fragment of the universal, and that the part can disclose its meaning only in terms of the whole. This ancient axiomatic truth has been branded on our souls by the war, which if it reaches its perfect work, will make the nations practise mutual respect for one another in their interrelations.

It was because the world had undervalued the importance of this clear principle of order and refused to reckon with it seriously that things went to smash. Now, as we crawl to some semblance of unity, we are planning to give more heed to it, but the signs of the times do not indicate that the nations are ready and able to surrender themselves trustfully to its control so that each will look not only on its own things but also and equally on the things of others. So far as American citizens are concerned, however, we can never again even for a short time sit on the side lines of the world's arena as mere spectators. Let partisan logicians argue as they may, it remains a black fact that, had America been living a less self-centred life than she was prior to 1914, she would have been in a position to block the war game, and had she not been blind and supine when Belgium was ravished, she would not have waited until the end of the third year of the conflict without pitching in. Let past history teach us the lesson we need to learn in order to become a full-grown nation.

But our whole duty has by no means been done when we have planned out a world scheme in which each nation will live according to the principle of mutual considerateness. I see no ghost of a chance for the League of Nations to become permanently effective unless a power superior to a mechanical agreement or an international pact, is let loose. Without a united Church to animate the united nations I am not encouraged to believe in the possibility of a stable peace.

By what logic can we reason that unity is possible and necessary among world powers if spiritual powers continue to compete and pull against one another? "The need of unity"—I quote Neville Talbot—"in the Church of Christ is preeminent. The world can never listen to a Christ who seems to be divided. It can never derive a new power of fellowship and co-operation from a society at variance with itself. Yet it would make the last condition of things worse than the first to plaster the broken Body of Christ together merely for the sake of expediency and urgency, or by means of some mechanical unity. The Body of Christ has to recover the expression of its unity (the Body is one, though the expression of its unity is broken) through the realization by its separated parts, in their struggle for the Kingdom, that they belong to one another. Many conditions, prevalent today, are forcing the pace in this direction." *

The preliminary step toward Christian unity is, as in the case of international unity, a peace conference—a world conference on faith and order, as we term it. The refusal of the Pope to participate in the conference is disappointing though not unexpected. His isolation from any but second-hand or book knowledge of the non-Roman Catholic world of course makes him incapable of weighing true values or appreciating the unprecedented opportunity presented to him. Nor does his refusal necessarily register either the mind or the wishes of the Church he represents. It is contrary to what an increasing number of loyal sons of the Roman Catholic Church hold. I speak as one whose record through long years proclaims him to be a sincere friend of the Roman Catholic Church, when I say what I do. It has been my instinctive custom throughout my episcopate to stand for interpretation and reconciliation as against controversy.

I cannot but think of Him whose ambassador the Pope is, who, even when a certain wayward son was a great way off, saw and had compassion and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. The analogy is not perfect, for in the parable only one party was at fault. In the case of the Churches, none is without fault, and the responsibility of unifying the broken family of God is upon the shoulders of all. I hold to the hope that a day will come, perhaps, when, with a fuller understanding of the situation a pope will ask those who are not of his fold to consider with him the unity of the Church. In the meantime the way is made clear for us. The balance of the Christian world is ready for a peace conference. It should be convened without delay. . . .

In view of the fact that the overtures of our commissions have been repelled by the Pope—I do not say by the Roman Catholic Church—we cannot afford to sit impassive when lovers of Christ and His unity approach us. We must run toward them. This is so in the case of the "Proposals for an Approach Towards Unity." Admitting as I do, that the plan presents practical difficulties, admitting that it is an ad interim measure, I thank God for it and feel that critics should beware of rejecting it without first proposing a better

HOW TO SPELL

AND PRONOUNCE
25,000 WORDS
FREQUENTLY MISPELLED AND MISPRONOUNCED

Nothing conveys the impression of slipshod mental processes so much as the misspelling and mispronouncing of words. No one can afford to allow these errors to creep in and ruin the effect of what he has to say. Every one who wants to be sure of the spelling and pronunciation of the words he uses, will welcome this unique and practical new book—

A Desk Book of 25,000 Words
Frequently Mispronounced

By FRANK H. VIZETELLY, Litt.D., LL.D. This volume contains, in instantly accessible, alphabetical form, a selection of the words about whose spelling or pronunciation you are ever likely to be in doubt. Whenever you meet a tricky spelling or doubtful pronunciation, this book will set you right. Or, if you will glance through the volume for five minutes a day, you will become a "good speller" in a surprisingly short time. This book is very different from an ordinary dictionary—it specializes in spelling and pronouncing the everyday English words that all of us use; foreign terms, and proper names of all kinds. It must prove of immense value to the average "poor speller," and "mispronouncer"; every speaker, letter-writer, salesman, conversationalist, and everyone else who aims to speak and write with accurate English.

"So far as my experience goes, it is quite the best book of its kind."—Brander Matthews, Litt.D., LL.D.

A New Right-Hand Help for Writers and Speakers

Fifteen Thousand Useful Phrases

A New Book for Building the Vocabulary

This is a practical handbook of felicitous phrases, striking similes, and literary, commercial, conversational terms for the embellishment of speech and writing. Grenville Kleiser has designed the book for the convenient use of business men, public speakers, writers, lawyers, clergymen, teachers, students and all persons who wish to write and speak the English language with facility and power.

In gathering the material for this book Mr. Kleiser has drawn freely from the great masters of English, including Shakespeare, Milton, Scott, Goldsmith, Lamb, Macaulay, Browning, Carlyle, De Quincey, Newman, Ruskin, Pater, Stevenson, Tennyson, Arnold, Kingsley, Bulwer-Lytton, George Eliot, Dickens, Thackeray, Hawthorne, Emerson, Irving, Longfellow, Lowell, Mahle, and many living writers.

There is an interesting introduction by Frank H. Vizetelly, Litt.D., LL.D., and a practical plan of study by the author. It is believed that this is the only book of the kind so far published, and that it will fill a distinct and valuable need. It will be a useful supplement to the dictionary and regular book of synonyms.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as Othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of Othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength Othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

and truer mode of approach. It offers the first clear proposal for union between our own and another communion that has occurred in our history, so far as I am informed, and I believe, whatever shape it ultimately may take, it has in it a hope and an opportunity that will make glad the City of God. It is inconceivable that our communion should be willing to sit still in the vain hope that the protestant world with its wealth of piety, learning and saintliness would flow into her. We have talked unity more than any other communion. If we remain passive and critical we put ourselves under our own condemnation, and run the serious risk of dying of dry rot.

Those of us who steadfastly believe that it is the purpose of Christ that His Church shall be actually, visibly, organically, as well as ideally and invisibly one, can afford to be patient in the slow healing of her wounds. A short time since a conversation on unity with a saintly Roman Catholic bishop was closed by his saying to me—"There are three principles which are the basis of everything: 1. We must will to do the will of Christ. 2. We must try to discover what the will of Christ is. 3. Having discovered what the will of Christ is we must do it at all costs." When the whole Christian Church acts out these principles the unity of the Church will become a living fact. In His will is our unity.

Our world-wide responsibility as Christians is being brought home to us with new force by the way the war has dragged into the light the weakest and most remote peoples. Our efforts to give our knowledge of the truth to those who do not have it cannot be other than increasingly intelligent now that we know the world so much better than before. I am of the opinion that unified efforts, like the Interchurch World Movement of North America, to provide adequately for missionary work are especially valuable with the unified front of the nation during the war as a background and a pledge. Our own nation-wide campaign is of vital importance and commands our attention. . . .

OUR first duty in the ministry—it is comforting to me to feel it to be so—is not to strain at great effects but to unveil God to the people. This is to draw men to their knees. Worship of the mysterious and yet simple God is the greatest and most vital activity of human life, coloring and invigorating and giving point to all other activities. Worship is languishing with us, in part I think because we have tried to make our services attractive to men instead of attractive to God, and partly because we try to give to men by preaching a knowledge of God that can best come through worship in sacrament and prayer. I am assured by those who have a right to speak, that our churches are frequented more than formerly by people who know the meaning and value of worship. For more than two years I have been going in and out of the churches in France. Those churches are places of worship through which a ceaseless stream of worshipers flow—the brave poilu in his war stained and faded blue uniform, the little children, the sad faced widow and the aged peasant. They go to meet God. There may be no service to join in, no preacher to listen to, but they know God is in His holy temple always, and they are well content to talk to Him and be talked to by Him.

A year ago last Sunday I went to the little village of Neuilly sur Suize in the afternoon. There was the sound of singing in the little sixteenth century church on the hill which I often visited. The curé was away at the war but all the villagers were there singing vespers. They were gathered to pay homage in worship to the ever-present God.

A colonial chaplain tells of an incident from his experience in Amiens cathedral. "Presently," he says, "my eyes caught sight of two figures a dozen yards away to the right—a little before me, but not so much that I could not see their faces. They were sitting perfectly still, hand in hand, and one could read their story plainly enough. She was a young woman of the poorer class, but well-dressed as a Frenchwoman should be; and he was a soldier in the uniform of the French line, and what was more, his whole kit was there, significantly, too. I have no doubt whatever that they had slipped into the cathedral on their way to the station.

"As I watched, she said something, and kneeled forward on the prie-dieu before her. He stood up as the French soldier does. Then she began to pray for him to hear, and I could catch a murmur. His eyes were fixed on the high altar and never wavered from first to last, but she hid hers in her hands, after a little. Also her voice rose with the passion of her prayer, and soon one knew that she was weeping. At last, she prayed loudly enough for me to catch the words, in French, of course, but I could understand that well-known prayer, and marvel at the simplicity of her so slight change in it.

'Soul of Christ, sanctify him;
Body of Christ save him.' . . .
"So she went on until:
'Within Thy wounds hide him.'
"She cried and could say no more for sobs.

"A while I saw dimly, and waited for I knew not what, when the man's voice broke calmly and steadily in, without even a hint of passion or of fear:

'In the hour of my death, call me,
And bid me come to Thee,
That with Thy saints, I may praise Thee
For ever and ever. Amen.'

"And then, like the victor that he was, there, in God's house, and all unashamed before His High Majesty, he lifted the woman to her feet and turned her face to his, and kissed her long upon the lips.

"Oh, my God, how fine a thing can human nature be! It was no disgrace for You to share it. It has that in it which can look out across the worst that earth can do, and gather up its dearest into its arms, and go forward—to You."*

May God teach us His ambassadors how to worship that we may be not unworthy to unveil His face that others too may worship Him in spirit and in truth.

AN OPEN HOUSE OF BISHOPS

ONE of the questions which are sure to come up at Detroit in October, for it is one of those that will not down, is whether the House of Bishops shall discuss and vote in the open as does the House of Deputies. A great deal has been said and written on both sides. Probably there is little new to be said on either, except to note the signs of the times and to see how, in this world that is struggling toward open covenants openly arrived at in other matters, the grounds of argument shift. Reluctances and fears grow less stubborn and acute. We note less of the desire to screen and hedge in episcopal dignity, more consideration of the convenience of privacy and a certain informality in procuring a readier meeting of minds and in getting business done. Now no one can have been a watchful listener in and about the sessions of the House of Deputies in any recent convention—no one could have listened to the messages that came and, yet more, could have listened for those that did not come from the House of Bishops—without realizing that, whether for better or worse, things were being said, done and left undone behind the closed doors that would not have been said or done or left undone had the great body of churchmen been able to learn where some of the bishops stood and what they had to say about why they stood there. Possibly publicity and the more formal procedure that attends it would have sufficed to disentangle in that house some legislative knots before they were tied for future publicity. On the whole it is doubtful whether episcopal dignity would have suffered more had all the sessions been open at St. Louis than it did because one or two of them were closed. It is common knowledge that the vote on this question in 1916 was very close. A good deal of water has gone under the bridge since then and a good many new bishops, forward-looking men in every school of churchmanship, have gone over it into the Episcopal Canaan. It is not a very hazardous surmise that there will be a vote on this question early in the session at Detroit, that the vote will not be as close as it was at St. Louis and that the business of the Church will be better done when each house acts with full knowledge and recognition of the work and thought of the other.

OUR ARMY AT COLLEGE

A UNIQUE and characteristically American venture in education is just coming to a close. There have been praying legions and singing armies. America has had the first student army in service away from home. Hardly was the armistice signed when it became evident that many hundred thousands of our young men would be months in France, in peril of the let-down in morale that comes after victory as well as defeat. When the idea began to take definite shape of giving to the more teachable of these soldiers the sort of training, that would make these months gain instead of loss to themselves and to their country. Classes, more or less informal, were organized at the base camps. Soldiers who had been teaching or were going to teach were detailed to these camps to get or keep their teaching powers alert there. Then came the organization at Beaune out of a great base hospital of a "university," numerically the greatest in France, with more than ten thousand students, working with the American teachers and books, truly redeeming the time. The accelerated return of the National Army made it wise to disband this institution some weeks ago. Meantime, those who had been drawn into the army from graduate study or teaching were being detailed to the number of several thousand to many of the universities of France and Great Britain, where they are just now finishing four months of study and observation under conditions that should make their experience of broad national value. These are men who, as writers and as teachers, will be among those to mould public opinion in the next generation. It will be impossible for them to think or write or teach parochially, after having come into really intimate touch with foreign life. The French, in instances that have come to our notice have been as alive to the international import of this experiment as our own officials. With gracious kindness they have opened their homes to our students, have made them socially welcome, have even allowed them the crowning grace of association with their jeunes demoiselles. "My sole anxiety," writes one of our soldiers from a Provençal city, "is how I can ever sufficiently thank these French ladies and professors for their kindness and courtesy." These student details are now all withdrawn. The planting is over. The fruit of it remains to be gathered for many a year.

KOREA'S MARTYRDOM

TRUE information regarding the situation in Korea is gradually reaching America by means of the messages which that stricken state has been sending to the Paris peace conference, and also through the descriptions uttered by returning travelers from the Far East. One thing is patent: Japan is policing Korea in an oppressive manner which recalls the German rule in Belgium, but with a difference—Korea has been the subject of organized suppression for so long that she is in too despairing a condition to arouse herself to the spirit that sustained Belgium in 1914.

On March 1, 1919, the Koreans issued a declaration of independence from Japanese rule. This was signed by thirty-three loyal Koreans, eighteen of whom were Christians, members of all sects. It is obvious from this and other information that the Christian missionaries had no connection with the formulation of this document, or the instigation of the movement, other than that general stimulus to liberty which Christianity always gives. Korea has responded to Christianity more extensively than any other far eastern nation, largely because that has been the only ray of hope which has permeated its darkened prospects for generations. Japan knows this, and has studiously striven to propagate Buddhism as a counter-irritant to this impending evil. She has in addition suppressed freedom of speech, the freedom of the press, education, morals and moral codes—in fact everything which might tend to elevate the Koreans and make them anything but an abject and subject people.

Therefore, the Declaration of Independence! Koreans perceived that their one and only hope lay in their being able to obtain redress by means of the peace conference at Paris. They smuggled delegates out of the country to visit this conference and lay their pleas before the civilized nations. They sent messages and published the declaration. The entire movement has been one of deep feeling on the part of the Koreans, but of no violence. Orders were issued that no person should resort to violence, and that if arrested each Korean should submit with calmness and fortitude. All of the original signers of the declaration were very promptly put under arrest, together with hundreds of others. In fact, the Koreans seemed to take a patriotic pleasure in being arrested, that being in their opinion the most effective manner of sacrificing themselves for their country.

The result of this movement for independence will be—what? Those most intimately acquainted with the situation do not venture an opinion, because the possibilities are too profound. On the surface, Korea has won nothing but punishment. But there are deep feelings beneath the surface. It is more than evident that the present rule in Japan and its branch in Korea does not represent the unified opinion of all Japan. The present power in Japan, which is thoroughly militaristic and of the Hohenzollern type, is in its death grapple with the powers for reform. There are parties in Japan which desire to treat Korea as, for instance, England has treated Canada. In the opinion of many, this struggle is so pressing that important decisions may be won or lost even as early as the approaching summer or fall of 1919.

Chronicle and Comment on Current Events

A DIOCESE UNITED FOR FREE PEWS

WHEN a diocese of the character of Pennsylvania appoints a committee on free pews and when that committee issues a statement calling upon every parish with rented pews to give the free pew system a trial, and when this statement bears the endorsement of the bishop who believes that through the committee's suggestions "some constructive action will be taken which will be of material assistance in freeing all the churches in the diocese," it begins to look as though the days of the rented pew were numbered. Out of one hundred and eighty-seven parishes and missions in Pennsylvania, fifty-eight use the pew renting system. From their pew rents they derive only sixteen and a half per cent of their total income. These churches, though relatively few in number, are largely city churches having about fifty per cent of the total communicants of the diocese and therefore exercising a wide influence. The committee points out that the abolition of the rented pew system would not only open the church to the stranger and to those unable to afford pew rent, but would firmly place the responsibility for support and service upon every man, woman and child who attends the services instead of restricting it—as is now so often the case—to those who rent or own the pews.

NOT FIT FOR PRINT

A PARODY on the Lord's Prayer: Can you believe it in these days when the world seems called in judgment for millions a dies irae is not only on the horizon but well beyond its dawn? And where is this evil thing to be seen? In the New York Evening Post of June 12 and on the editorial page. The journalistic chiffonnier, searching in rubbish heaps "at a venture" drew this spoil from the Mehun News, a paper printed to pass the time of some of our soldiers in France. The quill of Rabelais would have splintered before it would have written such a thing as this journal, with the traditions of William Cullen Bryant, alleging on the same page as part of its design "to inculcate just principles in religion . . . and to cultivate a taste for sound literature," selects to reproduce for the entertainment of its readers.

DEMOCRACY AND THE CHURCH

DEMOCRACY is a good deal more than a governmental form. The expression of a political organism goes back ultimately to the foundation of ethics and religion. It is the peculiar function of the Church, therefore, to safeguard democracy; but this obligation is twofold and reciprocal. The Church cannot safeguard democracy unless Christian organizations themselves avoid undemocracy in their teachings and activities. The point is pressed home by Dr. Yocum of the University of Pennsylvania in a pamphlet published by the Religious Education Association entitled What Democracy Should Compel Through Religion. The duty of the Church, he says, is to make specific contributions to democratic needs. For example, it is plain that men are not wholly brethren in religion or democracy until they pray together, and here the religious side of Sunday amusement may be made to predominate over the old principle of restriction and reserve. A similar responsibility may be introduced into the control of church music, the singing of mediocre hymns and the encouragement of banal music being essentially undemocratic. Dr. Yocum sees hopefulness for the future in the cooperation of all denominations in social service, and singles out for praise the broad social program of the National Catholic War Council because it deals with every form of government, from legislation against child labor to insurance against unemployment. He suggests that the various denominational programs for money drives, so popular at the present time, should include propaganda for economic and social reform.

PRESBYTERIAN REUNION

WHILE American Presbyterians are still at the hesitating stage in reuniting their divided membership, their brethren in Scotland have completed the work of reunion. Scotland once more will have a united national Church embracing those who hold Presbyterian principles and who see in union the one method for accomplishing their common aims. Scottish disunion dates back originally to the eighteenth century, but the historical and critical act of disruption took place in the early part of Queen Victoria's reign. The work of restoration which is now completed began when some years ago the Free Church and the United Presbyterian became a consolidated organization. The chief difficulty in accomplishing the final stage of union was due to the inconsistency involved in bringing together a free Church with an established Church. This was made possible largely because the Established Church of Scotland had always firmly rejected Erastian influences. An enabling bill which will certainly be passed by Parliament to control the legal side of the union is carefully drawn to secure full independence. The question of endowment is, of course, difficult to handle. This matter will be brought before a royal commission for settlement, but a proviso has been made that in no case must endowments be secularized. The establishment of this principle is only another evidence of the clear vision that belongs to the Scotch temperament. Our English correspondent on another page shows how the recognition of this principle may influence the question of church endowments in England and Wales.

OPIUM TRAFFIC IN CHINA

IN his discussion of the opium evil in China, which appears in this week's issue, Dr. Merrins sees that something more is necessary than placing the responsibility for the traffic where it belongs. Historical causes which brought about the degradation connected with the traffic in the past may cease to operate, but as long as there is a weak government in China and an apathetic public sentiment regarding the need of suppressing the traffic it will not be enough to deal with superficial factors of the trade. As Dr. Merrins says, if a people can not or will not work out its own salvation, other nations cannot save it. All that other nations can do outside of China is to cooperate with the Chinese themselves, and the strongholds of evil cannot be shaken except by such cooperation. Great Britain's record, so dark in the past in this respect, is now clear. Unfortunately, Japan seems at the present moment to be the main support of the traffic which plays such havoc in Chinese life. According to the China Medical Journal, eighteen tons of morphia are imported every year by the Japanese into China. The drug is sold wherever the Japanese predominate, and the sale of it takes place under extra-territorial protection. Japanese drug stores throughout China carry large stocks of morphia. Its introduction into China is facilitated by the Japanese control of the Chinese customs in certain localities. Large profits are being made in the trade, and the attraction of these profits is encouraging Japanese dealers in opium to extend their interests throughout other sections of Eastern Asia. Dr. Merrins' plea for the international interference in the traffic is irresistible. It is an evil that should be fearlessly dealt with before the present peace conference closes its session.

WHERE THE CHURCH IS GROWING

WHERE is the Church growing? The question has been often asked and answered regionally. We have ourselves answered it province-wise year by year. The Rev. Dr. George P. Atwater has been at infinite pains to furnish materials for viewing the matter in another light, a light that ought to prove of guiding value to the General Convention in shaping the policy of the Church in these coming years of moral and social as well as political reconstruction. In a recent issue of the Living Church, grouping parishes, missions and stations according to the reported number of their communicants, he finds that 3,632 or nearly half of all these posts have less than fifty communicant members, 1,058 of them less even than ten. Of the others 1,114 report less than 100. Together these 4,746 posts have 155,870 communicants, about a sixth of all. The great body of our membership is in parochial groups of from 100 to 1,000. Of these there are 2,494 posts with 755,394 communicants, while the 524 parishes reporting 1,000 communicants or more count together 154,097, a total almost the same as that of the 4,746 little posts. The fact is curious, but what of it? This, taking thirty dioceses, large and small, east, west and south—New York, Long Island and Albany among them—where he compares the reports for 1918 with those for 1907, Dr. Atwater finds that 165 parishes out of the 2,462 posts in these dioceses will account for the entire gain that has been attained in them all. In other words, our policies and methods, at least in these thirty dioceses, are relatively successful in the larger urban units somewhat at the expense of the rural and smaller urban units. Among the questions that arise are whether in the cities and possibly in some rural districts concentration of effort should be further encouraged and whether a more centrally organized collectively administered service of the Church to its smaller groups may not merit a place in the counsels of our ecclesiastical statesmen.

SAVE AND FEED

THE following facts, from a well authenticated source, draw a fairly vivid picture of what the blockade has meant to the women and children of Germany:

In Bavaria the daily ration for an adult was one-tenth part of an egg, a piece of bread the size of the thumb, two or three beans, the same amount of another vegetable, all of which could be easily placed on the palm of the hand.

In a German hospital during the blockade, the chief meal, at midday, served to physicians and nurses, to the new mothers, to patients recovering from serious operations, to those ill with kidney trouble, to little children—in short, to everyone—was a bowl of carrot soup with large pieces of carrot floating in it. A Berlin stenographer recently testified that she and her eighty-five-year-old grandmother had for the month previously had nothing to eat except cabbage and carrots.

The little children are showing the indisputable signs of famine, shriveled legs and swollen stomachs.

The lying-in hospitals are reporting increasingly serious nervous troubles among their patients. Many of the babies are born dead. Seventy out of ninety-one is one week's record in a Vienna hospital. Seventy-five per cent of the women of Germany are suffering from functional diseases due to malnutrition.

Since the armistice a number of people equal to the total population of Lynn, Quincy and Salem, Massachusetts, or equal to the population of the state capitals of New York and Pennsylvania, have died in Central Europe from starvation.

THE OPIUM EVIL IN CHINA

BY EDWARD M. MERRINS, M.D.

ON January 6, 1918, the President of China issued a mandate part of which runs as follows in the official translation:

In spite of our stringent prohibition of opium the large profit derivable from dealing in this stuff has tempted many iniquitous people and unscrupulous merchants to evade it by various subterfuges, even falsely representing themselves as soldiers, and guaranteeing safe transit and disposal on different railways. If such daring offenders are not strictly brought to justice, our anti-opium policy will be nullified, entailing very serious consequences to the future of our nation * * * * After the issuing of this circular order, all our countrymen should take note that our order once issued will be enforced, and that any evil must be eradicated wholly and entirely. Let them all wash off their old stains, and thereby cooperate with us in ridding our people of a harmful habit.

The mandate does not refer directly to the increased production of opium in China, yet in Manchuria, Kirin, Honan, Anhui, Szchuen, Yunnan, Kuangtung, Kuanghsi, Fukien, Shensi, Kueichow, to mention only those provinces concerning which we have clear and reliable evidence, there has recently been a very wide increase of poppy cultivation. To complete the survey it should be added that an immense amount of opium is being smuggled across the Burmese frontier (recently the British Government has announced that it will take measures on its side to stop the smuggling), and thousands of the Chinese are now addicted to the use of morphine by hypodermic injection, a far worse vice than opium smoking. This horrible trade is promoted by the Japanese. During the war they have taken to the manufacture of morphine and now send tons of this drug yearly to China.

Two or three years ago hopes were entertained, based on the decrease of opium cultivation in China, that the country was at last determined to abolish the whole trade. What is the significance of the apparent retrogression? Of course it shows that the reform movement was not as extensive and genuine as was imagined; perhaps we were all much too sanguine in thinking that evils of this kind can be entirely done away with by external laws and mandates. The renewal is also, and mainly, a sign of the lawlessness which prevails in many parts of the country due to the weakness and disease of the whole body politic. There are a few good officials who are doing their utmost to keep their districts free from opium, such as Governor Yen, of Shansi, whose family is connected with that of the late Rev. Y. K. Yen, our first native clergyman. But most of the officials are inefficient and corrupt, and either compromise with the evil or openly aid and abet it. It goes without saying that any reform, to be thorough and permanent, must have the hearty moral support of the governing classes and a majority of the people.

As the great war, now happily over, has brought most of the nations of the world into better and friendlier relations with each other, and the obligation of strong nations unselfishly to help the weak is now generally acknowledged; and as China is one of the weak nations, it may be well to probe the opium evil a little more deeply in order to explain why help should be given to her if it is ever called for.

The political and moral aspects of the opium question cannot be justly understood if it is held that the vice was somehow fastened upon the Chinese against their will by foreign nations. The habit of smoking opium was introduced to China, probably from Java, towards the close of the seventeenth century. At first all the opium was imported from abroad. The evil spread, and imperial edicts were issued against it in 1729, in 1796, and again in 1800. Had the people then been willing it could have been nipped in the bud. In 1838 a very determined effort to suppress it was made by the reigning emperor and his viceroy at Canton, but the Chinese, with the connivance of their own officials and foreign merchants, continued to smuggle the drug into the country in large quantities, where it found a ready and profitable sale. The friction over this and other incidents led to the war in 1840 between Great Britain and China. In 1858 the trade was formally legalized. The importation of Indian opium thereafter increased steadily until 1888; afterwards it began to decline because the cultivation of the poppy in China itself had by this time grown to large proportions. The habit had now become very common among all classes, and those who urged reform were as voices crying in the wilderness.

The war with Japan in 1894, which was so profoundly humiliating to the Chinese, the suppression of the Boxer reactionary movement, the work of Christian missionaries throughout the land, and other influences, all tended to awaken the Chinese to a sense of their national needs and dangers. Perceiving that the alarming prevalence of the opium vice was weakening the nation morally and physically, a strong anti-opium movement developed. In response to its demand the Chinese court issued an edict in 1906 ordering the abolition of opium smoking within ten years. At the same time, the British Government agreed to reduce the exportation of Indian opium to China by one-tenth annually for ten years, provided the production in China was reduced pari passu. This arrangement seems to have been partly due to the belief that the anti-opium movement was not altogether sincere, that as soon as there was no competition from abroad there would be a great increase in the native production. The British apparently were not willing to run the risk of compelling the Indian people to suffer financial loss for the sake of the Chinese unless the latter proved they were sincere. Under this arrangement the cultivation of opium in China steadily decreased during the earlier part of the decade.

In 1911, the Manchu dynasty was overthrown and a republic established. The people were not ready for this highest and most difficult form of government and the country fell into disorder. The cultivation of the poppy was renewed. In 1917 the importation of Indian opium ceased in accordance with the terms of the agreement with the British. The "Opium Combine" of foreign merchants in Shanghai was left with 1,200 chests of the drug still unsold of the value, if sold in China, of over $20,000,000. In 1918, most of the important government officials in Pekin formed a syndicate to buy this opium and retail it to the country at large, on the pretence that it was needed for medicinal purposes. This was too much even for the far East. There was a storm of protest from Chinese and foreigners alike, to which the Government had to bend. A presidential mandate ordered the opium to be publicly burned. This was done with much ceremony in January last. Whether the growth of native opium will now be finally abandoned remains to be seen.

It is evident that opium smoking is not an isolated evil. To abolish it completely and the evils on which it depends, is a stupendous task for it means the thorough reformation of China. The following seem to be the greatest and most urgent requirements to attain this end:

(1). The creation of a strong public sentiment against the opium evil in all its forms, based on moral grounds, not solely on political expediency.

(2). Social reform. Millions of the people should be delivered from the poverty, ignorance, disease and general wretchedness, which often lead to opium smoking just as the poverty and squalor of the slums of our own great cities lead to alcoholism. Many of the Chinese first take to opium to alleviate the distress of pain or disease. The lure of the drug lies in the pleasant sense of contentment and well-being which it gives; for a little while the victim feels that he has been raised above all the ills of life and is content.

(3). The rigorous prohibition by foreign governments of the exportation to China of opium and its derivatives unless really required for medicinal purposes. Great Britain's hands, if one may say so, are now quite clean; she has "washed off her old stains." The Japanese trade in morphine is an international evil which should be fearlessly dealt with by the nations of the world at the peace conference.

(4). China's greatest need, politically, is strong good government. Enough has been said of the weakness and wickedness of most of the present officials, but the questions may be asked: Why are such men allowed to come to the front? Why do not all decent Chinese insist upon good government? Perhaps the answer gives the master key to China's political difficulties. The "Opium War" broke down the barriers between China and the western world. China was brought into close contact with a civilization it did not understand and despised. "The structural character of the people, the deep-rooted qualities and defects produced by two thousand years of the Confucian system of ethics and ancestor worship, have made it quite impossible for the nation rapidly to adapt itself to the new environment forced upon it." It is confronted by problems which neither the experience of the nation nor the statecraft of even the better officials can solve. Hence the general weakness and disorder. Yet something must be done, and that soon, if the country is to be saved from disintegration. Under the protection of a strong, friendly nation, China should be given a government which shall guide the people along fairly familiar paths to a state of civilization which may be distinctively Chinese and yet in harmony with the highest civilization of the West; or the peace conference may find some other and more rapid means for the establishment of law, order, and financial integrity.

(5). Fundamentally, the problem is spiritual. If a people cannot, or will not, work out its own salvation, other nations cannot save it. They may help to pull down its strongholds of evil, but constructive work is even more necessary; high ideals may be set forth, but there must also be the bringing of spiritual power into the life of the nation to make it possible for those ideals to be realized. Herein lies the supreme value of the mission work of the Christian Church in China.

THE CHURCH AND THE STATE

BY THE REV. SELDEN PEABODY DELANY, D.D.

THE political and social upheaval in Europe is now drawing our attention forcibly to a novel form of government. The Russian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic, which is the official title of the present regime in Russia, has initiated a scheme of government which has never been tried before. No one is permitted to exercise the franchise except those who are engaged in what the government considers productive and useful labor and who do not hire others to increase their profits. No clergy or monks of any denomination are allowed to vote. As we know, there is a determined and organized effort to spread this form of government throughout northern Europe and into Austria and Germany; and even in Italy and France there are many proletarians who would not be averse to its taking root in their own countries.

The question suggests itself, what should be the relation of the Church to the form of government under which it is carrying on its work? Should the Church hold itself absolutely aloof from all secular affairs, or should the Church aim to be established as the official exponent of state religion, or should the nineteenth century Italian conception of a free Church in a free State be considered as the ideal condition? Should the Church try to save the world or simply try to save people out of the world? Should the Church be influenced by the world or the world be influenced by the Church? Is the world war to be regarded as convincing evidence that the Church has failed, as many magazine writers and popular preachers would have us believe? Or is the war simply an indication that there were radical defects in our modern materialistic civilization, and that civilization has failed because it has not heeded the message of the Gospel?

In attempting to answer these questions we shall doubtless be compelled to choose between two theories of the relation of the Church to the State. The whole problem is part of the larger problem of the relation of the Church and the world. Let us then consider these two theories as impartially as possible.

One theory is that the Church should endeavor to control the government of the nation, to the end that it may be kept true to Christian principles. If this were the end in view it would obviously be the duty of the Church to work for the adoption of that kind of government which appeared to be most in harmony with historical Christian ideals. According to this theory the Church should mingle in politics and the clergy should often preach from their pulpits on the burning political issues of the day. Moreover the clergy and the other leaders of the Church should both openly and secretly endeavor to manipulate the political forces of their country. This policy would soon result in the prevalence of clericalism, which we have seen developed on so lavish a scale in France and Italy and Austria. It would clearly be the aim of those who held this theory of the Church that the Church should wherever possible be established as the spiritual arm of the State. The chief bishops of the Church should be prominent in affairs of state, and might occasionally develop into wily ecclesiastical statesmen like Richelieu and Mazarin and Wolsey. The Church should endeavor in every way to influence legislation and it should teach its people that the chief function of the Church is to engage in some form of social service, to purify and reform and humanize the present social, commercial, industrial and political life of the nation. When functioning in a monarchy the Church would champion the divine right of kings, while in a democracy the Church would aim to be the mouthpiece of vox populi. There have been many instances in the history of the Christian era of the complete working out of this theory.

The other theory is that the Church should hold herself aloof from all affairs of state; that she should rather attend to her primary spiritual functions of enlightening the ignorant, enabling her children to fight against sin, and conducting them into the Kingdom of Heaven. The supreme duty of the Church according to this conception is to teach the truth of God to men, to proclaim the essential principles of faith and morals which God has revealed, and by administering the sacraments to convey to the souls of men the grace which they need in their struggle against sin. The words of our Lord are clear-cut and unmistakable: "My kingdom is not of this world." On another occasion He gave expression to a principle which ought to simplify for us the relation of the Church and the State: "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." The claims of Caesar and the claims of God are separate and distinct, and we should not allow them to be intermingled or confused. The Church, therefore, is not concerned with the form of government which the majority and circumstances may at any time determine. The Church must always refuse to allow herself to be dictated to by the State, or to be bound or fettered in any way whatsoever. The Church must consider it a lasting disgrace to allow her bishops to be nominated by prime ministers who may not belong to the Church at all; and therefore the Church must always set her face against any form of establishment or concordat with the State.

The best illustration of this theory is to be found in the condition of the primitive Church. She lived through days of violent hatred and persecution, but they were the days of her pristine glory and innocence. The worst calamity that ever befell the Church was when Christianity became the established religion of the Roman Empire. From that time on worldly ideals and standards began to permeate and pollute and degrade the Church. We have in our own time seen a striking transformation in one of the most ancient and glorious sections of the Church, the Orthodox Church of the East, due to her forcible separation from the State. Only a few years ago she was fettered and bound and gagged and crippled by her close alliance with a reactionary and decadent autocracy. Now she has been set free. She has to be sure been robbed of her treasures; some of her bishops and her priests have been mercilessly slaughtered; she has been bitterly maligned and persecuted and forced to carry on her life in out of the way places, unknown to the bloodthirsty mobs, who are drunk with their new-found power. But can anyone maintain for a moment that the Church in Russia today is not vastly better off than she was a few years ago under the too propitious administration of the czar?

Having stated the two opposing theories, we may feel that the truth does not lie wholly on either side. We realize the drawbacks of the theory that the Church should be closely linked up with the State; and yet we are not willing that Christians should live in a world apart and make no effort to guide the national destinies.

It will help us to come to a right solution of this difficult problem if we make a distinction between the Church as the Body of Christ and the individual members of the Church as citizens of the State. The Church as a divine organism has nothing whatever to do with the State. She belongs to another order of things entirely, an order that is spiritual and other-worldly and eternal. The members of the Church, however, belong not only to that supernatural order; they also belong to the natural order; and in their capacity as citizens of the State, they must of course according to their opportunity strive for the adoption of Christian ideals in government, in legislation, in industrial and commercial affairs, and in social life. The members of the old centrist party in Germany, comprising the catholic laymen of the various German states, are quite right in forming a Christian People's Party and in appealing to all Protestants and Evangelicals to make common cause with them, to construct if possible a stable government on Christian foundations. Nevertheless we must be on our guard lest we become too immersed in the world. We must not forget that our true home is not here. We should not set our hearts too much on this fleeting and transitory world. We are merely pilgrims and strangers on the earth, and as we go along our way toward the city that hath foundations we must act in every relationship of life on Christian and other-worldly principles. When we cast our vote, when we hold public office, when we serve in the army, when we engage in our business, when we mingle among men and women in their social affairs, we must be different from the people of the world. They are governed by principles of expediency and worldly advantage and material prosperity. We should be men and women whose gaze is fixed on the land of far distances, whose hearts are in heaven, and who are laying up treasure where moth and rust doth not corrupt and where thieves do not break through and steal. We are the disciples of Him who said, "My kingdom is not of this world."

THE LIBERTY OF CHRIST

BY THE REV. A. E. MONTGOMERY

The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.
ISAIAH LXI, I.

ALL through the Book of God is found this message about liberty. It is voiced by Isaiah, Jeremiah, Jesus, James, Paul; all of whom are urged on by the belief that they are messengers to a burdened people concerning liberty. It is the pulsing soul of the glad tidings proclaimed by the angels when announcing the coming of our Lord. It was the key-note which caught the ear of the multitude and made them listen gladly to the words of Jesus. It has been the burden of the prayer of the oppressed throughout the history of the human race.

Today there is laid upon the American people the great privilege, and the duty, of assuming the responsibility laid upon the prophets of God and upon His Christ. The Lord God Jehovah has called upon the American people to proclaim liberty unto the world; to bring to the oppressed peoples of the world God's wonderful message. Yes, more than that, to translate that message into fact, to infuse into the world life the soul of liberty, the mind of liberty, and the form or body of liberty.

The soul of liberty is God. The mind of liberty is Christ Jesus. The form or body of liberty is Christianity. God is love. Christ Jesus is love translated into action. Christianity is society shot through and through with love.

The responsibility laid upon us, therefore, is something more than mere speech. We cannot be satisfied with the deliverance of a message. We must enact that message. We must mould life, government, society, industry, into the form of liberty.

This was the purpose of Jesus. Read his teachings concerning the Kingdom and learn the purpose back of the parables—to establish a social order in which all men should be free: free to develop all that is noblest and purest within them; free to enjoy the full heritage of manhood and womanhood and childhood. He carefully trained the little group of twelve that they might transform society by building up an order in which the principle of liberty should be dominant, in which liberty should be thought of as the necessary outcome of a civilization founded upon the divine principle of life—love.

This must be our purpose. We are not followers of our Lord Jesus Christ in the fullest meaning unless this is our purpose. Yet we have been loath to make it our purpose. We have been indifferent to the voice of God calling upon us through His Christ to proclaim liberty to the captives. Three years ago we heard the call, but Jonah-like we sought to escape the responsibility. The call of privilege was more alluring. Thank God, we later accepted the responsibility, and the nation's voice was raised to proclaim liberty to the oppressed peoples of the world. And back of the voice stood the vast multitudes dwelling within the far reaches of our country. What the nation proclaimed the people have sought to put into being. In the throes of battle and the anguish of sacrifice they sought to give birth to liberty. In loyalty to our dead, in loyalty to our maimed, in loyalty to our widows and orphans, we must now see to it that the liberty for which they fought and died, and for which their wives and children were bereft, shall be real, touching the three dimensions of human activity at their extremest points, political, social, industrial. Only so can it be real and of God.

No man is free unless his freedom embraces these three phases of life. It makes little difference what type of government a man lives under if he is an industrial or a social slave. It makes little difference what kind of an industrial system he lives under if he is not free politically or socially. It makes little difference what social system environs a man if he is a political or industrial slave. If he is a slave in any of these phases of life he is not free in any. If the law of liberty is broken in one it is broken in all. The only type of liberty which is real, deeply satisfying, which will meet the aspirations of men, is that described by St. Paul as "the liberty wherewith Christ has set us free." It demands the emancipation of man's whole life, political, social, industrial. Anything accomplishing less than this is not liberty. It provides the only environment in which man is able to develop to fullest capacity body, mind, and soul.

America was called to proclaim this liberty. Her sons and daughters have suffered and died to establish it. In very loyalty those of us who are left must set forward with firm determination to develop it. We cannot be satisfied with political liberty, or social liberty, or industrial liberty. We must demand that the principle of liberty set forth by Jesus Christ be applied to every phase of human life. This is the post-war task facing America. And it is a task requiring great physical, mental, and spiritual courage. We wonder at the courage of the soldier and we marvel at the fulness of the sacrifice offered on the battlefield. This task confronting the American people demands courage quite as great and sacrifice, if not as great, at least of a very high order. Theories hallowed by time must be cast aside. Privilege long entrenched must be disestablished. The valuation of man must be measured by a new standard. The economic and industrial life of the nation must be rebuilt upon a radically different foundation. The god profit must be cast out and service enthroned. The wage system must take its place with other discarded barbarities. The law of compensation must be "to every man according to his needs." And his needs must include everything necessary to his physical, mental, and spiritual development.

This will take a high order of courage for it means turning the back upon the past. Loosening the grasp upon things once hedged in by theories of ownership requires a spirit capable of great sacrifice. Changing the point of view from which the mind looks out over life demands character of great strength, Christlike humility, and deep loyalty to truth.

PERFECT FREEDOM

BY THE REV. ANGUS DUN

I SPOKE last week of the first experience that came to men who were called into the nation's service. Men were living their own lives in their several ways and then suddenly were claimed as not being their own but the nation's. The nation had given, the nation took away. The maker claimed the life and service of its creatures, its citizens. And men by hundreds of thousands accepted as truth this claim and prepared their minds and affairs to take the consequences.

The draft law announced to Smith and Jones and Ford and the rest of them that they were not their own. And then the calls began to come. You saw them start. We, at the other end, saw them coming in—young men getting off the trains in a bewildered way, dressed in old clothes of every description, carrying suit cases and paste board boxes and paper bundles. (They had not learned as yet in how small and neat a package the necessities of life can be carried.) The tags revealed them for what they were, the raw material that the nation had claimed for its own. And they straggled up the muddy road to camp like geese in barley. (They had not learned yet that rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief, doctor, lawyer, merchant, chief, can really keep step.) Then the transformation began in earnest.

One of the first things required was that each man should take the oath of enlistment prescribed by the 109th Article of War: "I, John Smith, do solemnly swear that I shall bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve them honestly and faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever; and that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the rules and articles of war."

The lives of these men had hitherto been ruled by a multitude of masters, by the claims of family and friends and profession, by what appeared pleasant or profitable, by rival obligations and rival pleasures. But when they took this oath of enlistment all these other considerations were entirely subordinated to the will of the nation. Of course it would be sentimental and unreal to say that any such thoughts as these were in men's minds at that time. Few of them knew how great a thing they were doing. But in effect, as we look back upon it, we can see that these men were saying: "Henceforth I shall take no thought for my life, what I shall eat or what I shall drink, nor yet for my body what I shall put on. I shall seek first the will of the nation and trust the nation to care for these other things." "I hereby forsake houses and brethren and sisters and father and mother and wife and children and lands for the nation's sake." And there were men in those days who prayed in their hearts if they did not say with their lips: "Let this cup pass from me; nevertheless not my will be done."

This demand for a complete obedience was a hard one to make on Smith and Jones and Ford. It is quite certain that they did not like it. In its small details it was the most distasteful element in military life. To be told to get up at such and such a minute, to be forbidden to wear a white collar, to be told to go to the rifle range in the morning and to be told not to go to Lowell in the evening, was irritating to most men. And yet in spite of this irritation men as a whole were contented and at peace in this obedience.

In one sense these men were not free. If freedom means liberty to serve many masters, to follow now this appetite, now that whim or mood, to hesitate day by day between many pleasures and many obligations, these men had lost their freedom. But if freedom means liberty for a man to do, not what the weakness in him or the love of pleasure in him or the fear in him wants, but what the best in him wants, then these men were free. If freedom is liberty of conscience, liberty with a conscience, the opportunity to do one's duty, then these men were free. They knew that the will of the nation was at heart their own best will. And if our greatest slavery is to our own weaknesses, our own moods and anxieties and the petty circumstances of life, these men were freer than ever before. Some few at least discovered that by a complete surrender of self-will they gained a peace they had not known before. Life took on a wonderful simplicity. Day after day just one purpose.

The complete obedience demanded and obtained in the army is a demonstration on a large scale of what the Gospel demands of us. Upon those who acknowledge that their lives are not their own, and who would serve the Lord with gladness since it is He that hath made us and not we ourselves, this demand for a complete obedience is made. Beyond all fidelity to special laws and general orders, to codes and Ten Commandments, it is clear that God wants our wills. Our lives as we find them are wayward things, drawn in many directions, ruled in part by many masters. As we look ahead for a day, for a year, or for a lifetime, so many things claim us; houses and brethren and sisters and father and mother and wife and children and lands. And we take so much thought for our lives, what we shall eat and what we shall drink, and for our bodies what we shall put on. And then through the confusion of wavering desires and conflicting aims comes the voice of God, saying: "Ye cannot find freedom in serving many masters. One is your Master. And His first commandment is that 'Thou shalt love the Lord Thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind.' Not to drive brethren and wife and children and lands from your heart and mind, but to place all the interests of your life under one Master. So that day after day and year after year one great and simple purpose shall rule your life, the will of God."

We are asked to do on a larger scale what we have seen other men doing; stand on our feet and take this oath: "I, John Smith, do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to my God, that I will serve Him honestly and faithfully against all His enemies whomsoever; and that I will obey His orders as revealed to me in my conscience, in the leadership of His Son, and in the needs of my fellow men."

And the promise is that we shall find His service is perfect freedom.

NEWS OF THE CHURCH

TEN MINISTERS DEPLORE SPIRIT OF VIOLENCE

Dean Robbins, Churchman Editor and Others Urge Fair Play

Ten New York clergymen have made public a statement deploring the spirit of violence, bitterness and unreason among the American people and the attempt to remedy it by a hue and cry against anarchy and Bolshevism. The signers of the statement are: the Rev. George Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Charles R. Brown, dean of the School of Religion, Yale University; the Rev. Henry E. Cobb, pastor of the West End Reformed Collegiate Church; the Rev. Henry E. Fosdick, professor at Union Theological Seminary and minister in the First Presbyterian Church; the Rev. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church; the Very Rev. Howard C. Robbins, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine; the Rev. William Austin Smith, editor of THE CHURCHMAN; the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

The statement is as follows:

"While the horror of the latest bomb outrage is still fresh in the minds of Americans, we would call attention to the menace of the growth of the spirit of violence, bitterness and unreason among our people. We sincerely trust that the criminals responsible for these outrages will be discovered and punished by due process of law. Terrorism must be given no room in our land. But to eliminate this menace it is not enough merely to join in the hue and cry against anarchy and Bolshevism; we must also study the economic and mental factors which form the background for this half-insane type of terrorism. A common resolve to abide by our time-honored principles of free discussion and the regular processes of constitutional government is the need of the hour.

"Unhappily, violence, recently employed in the name of patriotism, has been allowed to go unpunished by the authorities, and has even been praised by leaders in government and in the press. In New York City on May Day peaceful meetings were attacked, the Call building was raided, and innocent men and women suffered serious injuries. Many voices openly praised such treatment of the 'Reds.' But condonations of violence lead to contempt of law and strengthen those who counsel revolution.

"To meet the situation we urge:

"(1) That all men and women of goodwill set themselves to influence public opinion through every available medium against lawless measures by whomsoever they may be employed.

"(2) That they resolve to see that fair hearings and just trials are given to men, irrespective of their political or economic opinions, so that it may be truly said that in America no man's case, be he an I. W.

W. or a Bolshevik or the most reactionary conservative, is prejudiced by an appeal to popular feeling; and in particular that they set themselves against the counsels of hate, whose effect upon the rising generation can only be to pile up future disaster for mankind.

"(3) Since in the judgment of the Attorney General of the United States, existing laws against criminal terrorism, are adequate, and since free discussion is essential for the exposure of economic and political errors, that the attempt by repressive legislation to defeat social change or coerce minority opinion, so long as it does not promote disorder, be abandoned.

"As ministers of the Christian Church and as citizens of this liberty-honoring republic we plead for faith in reason, goodwill and fairness to oppose the forces of bitterness and violence in our national life."

Dr. Grant Phi Beta Cappa Poet

THE Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, D.D., rector of the Church of the Ascension, New York City, was the Phi Beta Cappa poet at the Harvard commencement last week. His poem, which is in the form of an ode, is entitled "Welcome Home." It opens with a vivid word picture of the returning soldiers on their voyage up New York harbor, and closes with a description of the "home that can never decay, in peace or war, in youth or age" which can be accomplished "If our toil be a new creation, a brotherhood complete."

Dioceses Organize for N. W. C.

Forty-one dioceses are completely organized for the Nation-Wide Campaign and chairmen have been appointed by the bishops of twenty-five other dioceses, according to the latest report from the central office of the campaign. On June 26 with the approval of Bishop Mikell of Atlanta, the regional conference in St. Philip's Cathedral was made a conference for discussion of the Nation-Wide Campaign. Delegates were present from the Dioceses of Atlanta, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina and Tennessee. The call for the conference was issued by the Rev. Robert S. Gibson of Macon.

Bishop Brent on Vacation

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Bishop Brent has announced that from the present until August 10 no mail will reach him.

Many Churchwomen at Silver Bay

One hundred college girls registered as communicants of the Episcopal Church at the college Y. W. C. A. conference at Silver Bay last week. The Rev. Francis White of the Church Missions House preached to the conference on Sunday and celebrated the Holy Communion for the church delegation. Eighty out of the hundred churchwomen were present at the early service.

SINGLE EXECUTIVE BOARD PLANNED FOR CHURCH

General Convention Will Hear Proposal for One Board of Strategy

A proposal to create an executive board of the General Convention to take the place of the Boards of Missions and Religious Education and of the Joint Commission on Social Service is embodied in a report just made public, signed by Bishop Reese of Southern Ohio as chairman of the joint committee of these three boards appointed to draw up the canon. According to Bishop Reese's prefatory statement during the past years these three federal boards have demonstrated their value and this plan is simply in order to enlarge their scope. As the three boards have developed, the Church has recognized the inconvenience of having three boards instead of a single board of strategy, three apportionments and three sets of officers. From many directions have come expressions of dissatisfaction and a desire for such unification of the Church's work as will make that work more effective and at the same time win workers and finance its program. The committee which has drawn up this proposed canon is as follows: from the General Board of Religious Education, Bishop Reese (Southern Ohio), Dean Bartlett, Robert H. Gardiner; from the Board of Missions, Bishop Lloyd, Bishop Rhinelander, Dr. Sedgwick, Burton Mansfield; from the Joint Commission on Social Service, the Rev. F. M. Crouch, Canon Elmendorf, Clinton Rogers Woodruff and John M. Glenn. The committee has been assisted by the Rev. Edwin A. White, D. C. L., who for many years has been chairman of the committee on canons of the House of Deputies.

According to the report of this committee, Canon 57 is to be revised so as to have the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society administered by the new executive board of the General Convention. A new Canon 58 follows, and the succeeding canons will accordingly have to be renumbered.

The executive board is to have delegated to it "the unification, development and prosecution of the work of church extension, religious education and Christian social service." The board is to be composed of seventy-six members, a number set for the purpose of forming a basis of discussion, according to Bishop Reese's statement. The presiding officer of the executive committee is to be a bishop, who shall resign his diocese to accept the new post and who shall remain in office for six years. When, however, the office of presiding bishop of the Church becomes elective, the presiding bishop shall be ex officio the presiding officer of the executive board.

"Any communicant of the Church, clerical or lay" (does this mean a woman?)

ALLIANCE ASKS BISHOPS TO INTERPRET CANON 20

Churchmen Wish to Defend Church from Congregational Concordat

An organization known as the Churchman's Alliance for the Defence of the Church has been launched by a group of men and women who have been meeting at the Church of St. Ignatius', New York City, for several weeks. The Rev. Arthur W. Jenks, professor at the General Theological Seminary, Professor Tinker of Yale University, Mrs. Miles Standish of New York, and the rector of St. Ignatius' are leaders in this movement. The statement of principles says that the alliance has been formed to include those "who are willing to work together for the defence of the Church against movements and practices which tend to undermine the essential principles of the organization, doctrine and worship of the Church as witnessed in the constitution and the Book of Common Prayer of the Protestant Episcopal Church." The aims continue:

"Specifically, the present aim is to defend the Church from such dangers as threaten it from violations of Canon 20, on the 'Open Pulpit,' the misinterpretation of the confirmation rubric which leads to indiscriminate admission to Holy Communion, the violation of the canons on the marriage of divorced persons, and the alteration of the methods of approach to receive holy orders by episcopal ordination.

"Membership in the Churchman's Alliance is open to all communicants who hold that loyalty to their baptismal promises, renewed in confirmation, solemnly binds them to keep inviolate the creeds and the principles of the sacramental system and sacred ministry as set forth in the Prayer Book and constitution, historically and authoritatively interpreted."

The Churchman's Alliance is circulating for signatures a memorial and petition to the House of Bishops. The bishops are asked to interpret Canon 20 "so that there may be no doubt in the mind of any as to its meaning" and that they refine particularly the words "Christian men" "as to whether such persons must be baptized and confirmed," and the words "special occasions" as to whether those times include Morning and Evening Prayer and the Holy Communion. The bishops are also asked to interpret the last rubric of the confirmation service as to "whether any who have not been confirmed and are not ready and desirous to be confirmed may be permitted to receive the Holy Communion;" to declare that "pure wheaten bread and pure natural wine separately consecrated are necessary for a celebration of the Holy Communion;" and finally not to enact the canon called for in the proposed concordat with the Congregationalists.

Dr. Capers Succeeds Bishop Green

JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI.—The Rev. Walter B. Capers, D. D., who for the past year has been rector-in-charge of Trinity Church, New Orleans, has been called to the rectorship of St. Andrew's Church here in succession to Dr. Wm. Mercer Green, recently consecrated bishop coadjutor of the diocese. St. Andrew's is the leading parish in the diocese. Bishop Bratton, Bishop Green, Archdeacon Smeade and the Rev. G. G. Smith, in charge of a number of missions in the vicinity, all reside in Jackson.

Dr. Capers entered upon his new duties as rector on June 1 and has been enthusiastically received. The St. Andrew's Men's Club, at a recent meeting largely attended, unanimously voted to push forward the plans for a modern, up-to-date parish house while a strong sentiment has sprung up in the congregation to purchase a new rectory at once.

Venerable Rector Dies

BEDFORD HILLS, NEW YORK.—The Rev. Lea Luquer, S. T. D., since 1866 the rector of St. Matthew's Church here died at the rectory on June 17 in the eighty-seventh year of his age. The funeral was held at the church on June 20. Dr. Luquer was born in 1833 of an old New York family. In 1863 he was made deacon and the following year priest by Bishop Horatio Potter. Except for three years at the Church of the Atonement, Brooklyn, his entire ministry was spent at St. Matthew's Church.

SINGLE EXECUTIVE BOARD

may be elected vice-president. The bishops of the Church are to be honorary members, without vote but with the right to attend sessions of the board.

At the General Convention of 1922 and at succeeding conventions the executive committee shall submit a budget. The budget and the work of the executive committee shall be the business of the convention in joint session beginning on the first Monday and continuing as long as is necessary. The budget is to be sent to the provinces and by them to the dioceses and districts. The executive committee is to meet at least twice a year. Four departments are to be organized at once, and the board has power to organize other departments. Those departments are for church extension, religious education, Christian social service and finance. Each department can create a council and appoint executive officers. Provincial synods have the right to appoint provincial secretaries to carry out the work of the board, working under the direction of the board. The board shall submit the provincial apportionments and appropriations to the synods for subdivision, but in case the synod does not subdivide, the board may do so. The salaries of missionary bishops shall be paid by the executive board. Careful provision for reports of bishops to the board, of synods to the board and of the board to the Church, is made. No missionary may be appointed not a member of the Episcopal Church or of a Church in communion with it, but other persons may be appointed in the field for non-religious work.

Canon 58 would take effect immediately if passed by General Convention and on January 1, 1920 the three general boards of missions, education and social service would go out of existence except in so far as the holding and management of property and the maintenance of their existence as corporations, made necessary.

LEAGUE FOR DEMOCRACY ANNOUNCES ITS PROGRAM

Bishop of Michigan Accepts Presidency of Social Justice League

"The Church League for Social and Industrial Democracy" is the name which has been tentatively selected for the organization which had its inception at a conference held at the Church Missions House early in May. Bishop Williams of Michigan has accepted the presidency and the other officers selected to act until the meeting of the organization during General Convention are Miss Vida D. Scudder, chairman executive committee; the Rev. Richard Hogue, executive secretary, and among the members of the executive committee, the Rev. J. H. Melish, the Rev. B. I. Bell, Mrs. V. G. Simkhovitch, Dean Lathrop, Dean Ladd.

The purpose of the organization, according to the statement of principles, is "to unite, for intercession and labor, those within the Episcopal Church who believe that it is an essential part of the Church's function to make justice and love the controlling motives in all social change, and who wish, as Christians, to promote all sound movements looking towards the democratization of industry and the socialization of life." Any member of the Episcopal Church who signs the statement of principles may become a member of the organization. The statement affirms belief in, as the only social order which can properly be called Christian, one which substitutes fraternal cooperation for master-ship in industry and life; it includes the statement of social principles issued by the 1913 General Convention; it states that "the Church far from being in tendency and membership reactionary and unawakened, is, as a matter of fact, ready and anxious to a degree unsuspected by the world to discover the way in which it can best be useful in forwarding the new order" and therefore pledges the association to help the great mass of church-people, as yet uncertain how they can function, to find the way. The proper procedure, it states, is to deduce a social program from our Lord's will. Investigation, moral and practical support to religious teachers and preachers of the Episcopal Church, who shall have incurred persecution through advocacy of social change, is promised. The use of prayer and sacraments is pledged by the members that men and women may be released from selfish inhibitions and inspired to work with God for humanity. The urgent need of preaching the power and will of Christ to the passing era of selfish competition and industrial mastership and likewise to the emerging democratic order, is recognized. Opportunity for students in seminaries to know the social gospel is to be advocated by the association. Investigation of new social and industrial programs is pledged. The suppression of freedom in America is deplored and work for the immediate restoration of free assembly, free discussion, free press and free pulpit is encouraged. In making these statements, the organization is convinced that it states nothing not consistent with the Church's abiding mission.

ISAIAH IN DRAMATIC FORM PRESENTED IN CHURCH

Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, Inaugurates Popular Dramatic Evening Service

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.—A novel method of presenting the message of the Bible to the people has just had its initial experiment at the Church of the Holy Trinity. The last twenty-seven chapters of Isaiah, which Professor R. G. Moulton calls "The Rhapsody of Zion Redeemed," was selected for this experiment, and arranged in three dramatic services. Each service began with an introductory hymn, prayer and address giving the historical setting and vital message of the prophet for our own time. Then for about forty minutes came the dramatic rendering of the prophet's words. This was done through anthems, hymns and responsive readings, minister, choir and people each taking active and appropriate part. Handel, Stainer, Sullivan and other great musical composers have beautiful settings for many portions of this great spiritual drama. Four or five of these were selected for each service and sung in their original literary connection in the prophet's work. The hymns were metrical translations of appropriate verses of the drama which the congregation sang to familiar tunes. These services were arranged by the associate rector, the Rev. Robert B. B. Foote, and given on Sunday evenings, May 18, and June 1 and 15. They were entitled "The Heralds of a New Age (Is. 40 to 51:3), "The Hope of the World" (Is. 51:4 to 57:21), and "The Glory of the New World" (Is. 58 to 66).

A visiting clergyman at the conclusion of the last of these services said that it seemed as if this might be the solution of the problem of the second service, presenting the Bible to the people in its own words in a dramatic form. The oratorio does this in a different way, weaving together texts from various parts of the Bible without regard to their connection with one another. In such dramatic services as these just given at Holy Trinity it is possible to present the message of certain books and parts of books in its own historic and literary setting, and at the same time have a musical service in which the congregation can readily take part with their voices as well as their ears. Many people expressed their appreciation of the arrangement of the Bible words so that they themselves could sing and read them in the service as well as listen to them.

Interchurch Meeting in Cleveland

Two hundred delegates from various sections of the country attended the conference on "The Church in the City" held under the auspices of the Interchurch World Movement of North America on June 10, 11 and 12, in Cleveland. They were pastors of downtown, residential and suburban churches, specialists in rescue mission, Americanization, community centre and other particular types of work, including those who had given attention to the industrial situation and the approach to so-called radical groups. In addition, a number of officials of the national organization of the movement attended for the purpose of conducting the meeting and for presenting to the assemblage at the start a comprehensive view of what the movement is, its causes, history, general nature and proposals. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, of New York, director of the home survey, presided, and stated the purpose of the meeting, which was to decide principles and methods by which the survey of the cities will be made.

DAYTON PUTS ACROSS

A MONTH OF SUNDAYS

How Christ Church, Dayton, Ohio, made up its mind that by a well planned advertising campaign the church attendance could be increased considerably, conducted such a campaign and as a result showed a one hundred per cent increase in the congregation each Sunday from April 27 to May 17, is told in a leaflet just issued by the parish called The Story of the "Month of Sundays" Campaign. The church bulletin announced this campaign. Then on four successive Saturdays advertisements appeared in the Dayton papers, big merchandising advertisements, three columns wide and thirteen inches deep, calling attention to the fact that Christ Church had something to offer to the Dayton public. So good was the advertising that it drew out letters of commendation from leading business men and neighboring ministers and liberal mention in the editorial and news columns of the press. The copy was changed each week. There was a bold catch line: "The Spirit of the Church," "You Fathers of Boys," "Will you give Ninety Minutes Tomorrow?", "The Last Day." Not only did Christ Church through its campaign increase the attendance at its own services, but at services in the other Dayton churches as well. So successful was the campaign that, although in smaller space during the summer months, the same type of copy will continue to be carried each week, with a resumption of larger space in the fall.

Methodist Bishops Issue Radical Statement

The Methodist board of bishops has issued a statement on labor in which the principle of collective bargaining is asserted. The board likewise favors advancing the workers into "positions on boards of directors." The board declares further that "we cannot put a limit on the extension of democracy." It recognizes the "inevitability of the application of democracy to industry." As the Central Christian Advocate commenting on this labor platform remarks editorially: "There can be no chloroforming free thought or free speech under such a banner."

Mr. Hickson's Mission Ends

The final service of the mission of healing conducted for three weeks in New York by Mr. James Moore Hickson of England, was held in Trinity Chapel on June 17. Mr. Hickson spent last week in New York before continuing on his journey, in order to see a number of people privately to whom he had ministered during his mission, and to visit some bed-ridden folk. The crowds at Trinity Chapel have been extraordinary.

MRS. GREER DIES JUST A MONTH AFTER BISHOP

Bishop Greer Always Considered Her His Coadjutor

Caroline Keith Greer, the widow of the late Bishop of New York, died on Tuesday afternoon, June 17, two days less than a month after the death of her husband. Mrs. Greer has been an invalid for almost three years, and during the past winter has been steadily growing weaker. Because of her feeble condition she was not told of the bishop's death until the afternoon of his funeral. She died at the bishop's house in the cathedral close. Her funeral was private. The service was held in the Chapel of St. Ansgarius at the cathedral on June 19. Bishop Burch, Dean Robbins and Dr. Slattery conducted it. The interment was in the family plot in Woodlawn. Mrs. Greer was born in St. Louis on November 19, 1845. When she was a young girl her family moved to Covington and there the late bishop, then rector of the Covington church, met her and in 1869 married her. Had Bishop and Mrs. Greer lived until June 29, they would have celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

Mrs. Greer always took a large share in the bishop's work. His tribute to her at the dinner in celebration of his tenth anniversary as Bishop of New York, has become famous. He said: "Dear brethren, you will never know just what Mrs. Greer is to the diocese. She is my coadjutor bishop and I am sure Bishop Burch will not be offended when he hears me say that." It is said that when Mrs. Greer was no longer able to accompany the bishop about the diocese the bishop's own health began to show signs of failure.

Sewanee Summer Conference Plans

SEWANEE, TENNESSEE—The Summer Training School for Workers will meet here August 5 to 14. Instruction will be given in missions, in education and in church activities. In addition to these periods of instruction there will be conferences in the afternoons and addresses at the evening sessions on such subjects as have to do with the solution of problems which confront us at the present time, by the application of Christian principles. Mrs. George Biller and Miss Frances H. Withers will have charge of the department of missions. The Rev. Gardiner L. Tucker will be in charge of the department of education, and under church activities many social problems will be discussed. Representatives from the General Board of Religious Education, the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and the Nation-Wide Campaign will be present. The keynote of this year is victory.

The Quintard Hall—the dormitory of the military academy—will be opened and operated by the University of the South, and board may be had at the following rates: For the ten days, $16; for less time at the rate of $2 per day. For those rooming outside the building, the cost for meals only will be $8 per week, and for less time at the rate of $1.50 per day. For information address the Rev. Mercer P. Logan, Charleston, South Carolina.

PANAMA MISSIONARY NOW MAY HOLD MARRIAGES

Republic Changes Marriage Laws After Several Years Effort

ANCON, PANAMA—The promulgation of a new marriage law for the Republic of Panama, effective May 29, makes necessary certain interesting legal steps on the part of representatives of the Church, in order that missionaries may celebrate marriages in accordance therewith. For several years past, efforts have been made to modify the provisions of the civil code respecting marriage, with little popular approval, but the new regulations have general approval, excepting only the Roman Catholic influence. Heretofore, only marriages performed by civil magistrates or the Roman Church had the privilege of registration and consequent validity. Then, for a short period, notwithstanding the pronounced opposition of the Roman Church, a civil ceremony had to precede the religious ceremony in every case. One Father Martinez, of Aguadulce, Panama, was reported to have said of this law in a Sunday sermon: "Young girls, I'd rather see you leave your homes without being married than to have you comply with the law on civil marriage, because before God the former is less of a crime than the latter."

Now comes a further modification which is likely to stand. After a license has been obtained from a municipal judge in the domicile of either of the contracting parties, any priest or minister properly authorized may proceed with the celebration of the marriage and return made within the three days.

But not every minister is authorized to celebrate marriages; only those whose Church has personeria juridica, a legal personality. In order to secure this standing before the law, the Rev. H. R. Carson has been advised that the president of the republic will make formal recognition of the Church when there has been filed with him the following properly certified documents, all translated into Spanish, and written upon the usual stamped paper of the republic:

(1) A copy of the constitution of the Church; (2) a copy of Bishop Knight's certificate of consecration as Bishop of Cuba; (3) a copy of Bishop Tuttle's order appointing Bishop Knight to the charge of the Canal Zone and Panama; (4) the authorization of a local representative of Bishop Knight to act for him and for the Church.

International Morality Conference Called

Religious and moral leaders from practically all of the allied and neutral nations are coming to America to attend the Third World's Christian Citizenship Conference, which is to be held in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Victory Week, November 9 to 16, 1919. Assurance of this has been given to Dr. James S. Martin, superintendent of the National Reform Association, who has spent the spring in Paris.

Dr. Martin has met with the chairman, secretary or members of official peace delegations from twenty-eight different nations, and in every case he has found cordial interest and been promised the presence at the conference of at least one representative from each nation, who will participate in its proceedings.

The purpose of the conference is to collect and present authentic data as to the status of the moral problems in each country; to consider the present-day political, social and industrial condition of the world, and to devise plans for the better solution of all moral problems, that the world may be brought more nearly into conformity to the moral teachings of Christianity.

The conference will be attended by official delegates from nations, states, cities, churches and other organizations, but all other persons who are interested in world reconstruction on a Christian basis are also invited to be present. Further information can be obtained from the National Reform Association, 603 Publication Building, Pittsburgh, which has taken the initiative in calling the conference. A number of churchmen are on the committee.

ENEMY WOMEN UNITE

Resolve to Band Together to Work Against War

The following address from the women of France to the women of Germany was read at the international conference of women in Zurich at a public meeting on May 12:

"Today for the first time our hands which have sought each other in the night can be joined. We are a single humanity, we women. Our work, our joys, our children, are the same. French and Germans! The soldiers which have been killed between us are for both of us alike victims. It is our brothers and our sisters who have suffered. We do not want vengeance. We hate all war. We push from us both the pride of victory and the rancor of defeat. United by the same faith, by the same sense of service, we agree to consecrate ourselves to the fight against war and to the struggle for everlasting peace.

"All women against all wars!

"Come, to work! Publicly, in the face of those who have vowed eternal hate, let us unite, let us love each other."

The German women replied:

"We German women have heard the greetings of our French sisters with the deepest joy, and we respond to them from the depths of our souls. We too protest against the perpetuation of a hate which was always foreign to women's hearts. Our French sisters! It is with joy that we grasp your extended hand. We will stand and march together, in common effort for the good of mankind. On the ruins of a materialist world, founded by force and violence, on misunderstanding and hate, we women will, through death and sorrow, clear the road to the new humanity. As mothers of the coming generations, we, women of all nations, want love and understanding and peace. Despite the dark and gloom of the present we stumble, comforted, toward the sunshine of the future."

CHAPLAIN J. GREGORY MABRY, who served with the A. E. F. in France, went through much hard fighting with the tanks and was gassed, is back in New York City.

BAPTIST CONVENTION IS FIRMLY AGAINST REUNION

Reject Proposals from Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches

At the Denver conference of the Baptist Church, two propositions looking towards Christian organic union and one looking towards a high degree of cooperation were presented. The first two were decisively rejected, and the latter after much debate was accepted. The two propositions rejected were the Presbyterian plan looking towards organic reunion of evangelical communions in America and the plan for a world conference on faith and order. The sentiment of the convention was vehemently adverse, not to say contemptuous, of these proposals.

Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, of New York, presented for the Commission on Faith and Order, a report of the progress of the world conference and of the Presbyterian call for organic union. Of the former the report said: "We have said to the Episcopal commission with utmost candor that the trend of our views and attitude is in the opposite direction from its, and that our convictions concerning ordinances, sacraments and ministry of the Church are at such variance with its conceptions that we are convinced that its above named overtures would not elicit the interest, much less a serious consideration, on the part of our Baptist people. On these grounds there is nothing to hope for in the direction of church union."

After Dr. Woelfkin's report had been presented, Dean Shailer Mathews of the University of Chicago presented a resolution refusing to send delegates to such a national council on organic union and stating the "distinctive" doctrinal position of Baptists in explanation of such refusal. Dr. Mathews' resolution and doctrinal statement was received with "hilarious joy" by the convention which punctuated his every declaration with tumultuous applause. The document is interpreted by the Baptist press as so adequate and pertinent a statement of the Baptist position that it is destined to become historic.

CONFERENCE ON ORGANIC UNITY CALLED FOR WINTER

Ad Interim Committee Issues Invitation for Meeting in Near Future

The following preliminary statement has been issued by the ad interim committee of the Interchurch Conference on Organic Union of Protestant Churches in America which met in Philadelphia early last winter:

A conference on organic union, composed of representatives of evangelical Churches, gathered in Philadelphia in December, 1918, at the invitation of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

Responsive to the request of this conference, a considerable number of communions acting through their executive committees, commissions on unity, etc., have appointed members of an ad interim committee charged with the duty of carrying forward the inquiry initiated by the conference.

The immediate duty with which the undersigned are entrusted as members of that committee, is that of inviting the various national church bodies to appoint delegates to a council on organic union to be held late in 1919 or early in 1920. Arrangements for extending this invitation have been made.

In addition, we are asked to submit for the consideration of such council, when it shall assemble, a plan or plans of organic union. Upon this task we have made a beginning and expect to be able to place in the hands of the delegates the results of our study some weeks in advance of the date which may be set for the meeting of the council.

In undertaking the duties described, we are full of confidence and hope. We are persuaded that the large degree of spiritual unity already attained by the evangelical communions of America and expressed in manifold forms of fellowship and cooperative action is ready for still more distinct and outstanding expression.

We believe that the same fidelity to conscientious conviction out of which our division sprang now summons us under changed conditions and the steady movement toward a common mind to seek to overcome whatever of aloofness still remains and to enter a new era of united love and service.

It is our earnest conviction that we have no need nor right to postpone that era. Vast tasks, patent to all eyes, are impossible to our unorganized resources. A world broken and bewildered waits for the clear call and potent ministry of a united Church. Multitudes of true-hearted men and women now disheartened by divided counsels and frequent defeats will find hope and power in a movement toward unity.

While we find the call to unity in our shortcomings, we find it even more in our achievements. All can see the notable growth of our membership, the swift advance of the mission cause, the conquest of great public evils, the increasing volume of philanthropy, the steady leavening of the mind of the nation with the ideals of Christ. If our gospel is of such power that it can achieve these things through unrelated Churches, what might it not achieve through a Church made one by its more abundant indwelling.

We ask our fellow Christians of every name to join us in our task. Let us move forward as far and as fast as we can toward the goal of unity. At no distant day we shall be able to answer our Lord's prayer "that they all may be one."

SCOTCH CHURCH ADMITS WOMEN TO ITS COUNCILS

At the recent meeting of the Representative Church Council of the Episcopal Church in Scotland, an amendment to the constitution inserting after the word communicant the words "male and female" was made and thereby women were admitted to the church councils. The motion emanated from the bishops who in this instance took much pride in the fact that they were leading from in front and not from behind. The Bishop of Aberdeen in presenting the motion said that if the council voted down the measure "it would mean that in the hour of the Church's greatest need our Church had refused an opportunity because the forces of prejudice and reaction were stronger than the forces of reform and common sense." Mr. John A. Spens in answering the vigorous opposition to the amendment said: "The danger is just this. If we seek to dam the stream, we may find that ultimately it will break out and go to far."

Mr. Shayler Accepts Bishopric

The Rev. E. V. Shayler of Seattle has accepted his election to the bishopric in the Diocese of Nebraska subject to the action of the bishops and the Standing Committees.

Yale Honors Bishop Brent

The degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon Bishop Brent last week at the commencement exercises by Yale University.

Dr. Wood Back from the East

It has been impossible for Dr. John W. Wood, foreign secretary of the Board of Missions, to make his contemplated stop in Honolulu because of the difficulty of securing passage from Honolulu to San Francisco. He therefore continued directly to San Francisco on the same ship which he took in Yokohama and arrived in San Francisco on June 20.

Two Rectors Join N. W. C. Staff

Two southern rectors have been granted leave of absence from their parishes for six months in order to take part in the work of the Nation-Wide Campaign, the Rev. J. I. Yellott, Jr., D.D., of Belair, Maryland, and the Rev. W. H. Milton, D.D., of Wilmington, North Carolina. Dr. Yellott and Dr. Milton are in New York.

HARTFORD CHURCH BECOMES CONNECTICUT CATHEDRAL

Christ Church Pronounced Cathedral by Bishop Brewster, Trinity Sunday

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.—On Trinity Sunday Christ Church began a new era of enlarged service as the diocesan cathedral. Bishop Brewster entered the church with his pastoral staff, and opened the service with a short address tracing the local cathedral project from its inception with the late Rev. James Goodwin, D.D., to the present day, and concluding with the proclamation, "We declare this house of God to be the Cathedral Church of the Diocese of Connecticut, in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Amen." "O God our help in ages past" was sung as introt, and the bishop proceeded with the Communion office.

The sermon was by the Rev. Samuel R. Colladay who a few days ago received his degree of doctor of divinity from his seminary, Berkeley Divinity School, and who is now dean of the cathedral. His sermon developed the first words of the cathedral constitution: "This cathedral is established to the glory of God and for the good of men. It is to be a house of prayer for all people who may resort thereto to worship Him, and shall be forever free and open." He said that as time goes on the cathedral would do a larger work and do it in the spirit and effect of better service. He was glad the cathedral could be proclaimed on the octave of Whitsunday while the Church is emphasizing the truth of the Holy Spirit who "inspires us to ventures of faith. The cathedral means the reaching out to accomplish something that we know should be accomplished, and although we cannot see our way clearly to all that the future holds, we believe that what should be accomplished can be accomplished. We will trust to God's guidance and help, and dare to make the venture."

The service setting was from Gounod's Messe Solennelle. The dean, the Rev. Dr. Francis Goodwin, and Canon Paul Barbour, assisted in the service. Monday morning the cathedral opened its weekday services with the Holy Communion, and from that day on this service will be continued daily throughout the year. There is also a later Communion service on Thursdays and Evening Prayer daily.

Seamen's Institute Joins Campaign

The Seamen's Church Institute of America has joined forces with the other federal boards of the Church in the Nation-Wide Campaign. Dr. Mansfield, secretary of the New York institute, and the Rev. G. W. Davenport, the newly appointed executive secretary of the Seamen's Church Institute of America, have just returned to New York after a visit to the Pacific coast to study the problems and possibilities of extending the Church's work among seamen at once. With the exception of the institutes in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco and Charleston practically no work other than rescue work is carried on among the seamen of American ports.

BOSTON

Mortgage Burned at St. Stephen's, Fall River—Impressive services were held at St. Stephen's Church on Wednesday, June 11, in connection with the burning of a mortgage of $7,500.00 which for several years had been carried on the parish property. The Rev. Joseph Eamcs was presented with a purse of gold in recognition of the faithful service which he has given as rector of the parish.

Summer Camp for the Boys and Girls of Trinity—Dr. Mann writes that a beautiful site for a camp has been secured on Sebago Lake a few miles north of Portland, Maine. The camp will be maintained for the boys under the direction of Mr. Moses, the assistant minister at Trinity. Later it will be at the disposal of the Trinity Campfire Girls for two weeks.

Cambridge School Sees Mystery Play—The mystery play The Little Pilgrims and the Book Beloved, was given in the cloisters of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, on Thursday last by the Girls' Friendly Society of St. Stephen's Church, Boston, assisted by the young men of the parish.

East Arlington Church Dedicated—The new edifice of the Church of Our Saviour, East Arlington, was used for the first time last Sunday. Bishop Babcock dedicated the Church, confirmed a class and ordained Donald H. Morse.

Dean Rousmaniere on the Porch Service at the Cathedral—"We held our first open-air service of hymn-singing last Sunday evening in the level light of the western sun. Several hundred people stood on the sidewalk and on the edge of the Common. Some of them had joined in our porch services last year or were evidently familiar with the purpose of the service. They gathered near the iron fence where they could easily read the words of the hymns on the placards, and sang heartily with the choir.

"Others were strange to the scene. They were strolling by, smoking or talking when they saw the procession and heard the first lines of an old hymn associated with some sacred moment in their lives. Cigarettes and cigars were thrown away, hats came off, faces lighted up with new expression and at last their mouths opened and they found themselves singing."

DALLAS

Twenty-fifth Anniversary—St. James' Church, Texarkana, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation on June 8 and 9. Bishop Garrett and Bishop Moore were both present as guests of honor as well as a number of the clergy of the diocese. At the patriotic service on June 8 the permanent honor roll tablet was unveiled. The Rev. Edwin Weary is rector of the parish.

NEW YORK

Children's Church—The children's church in Calvary Parish is holding services for the eighth summer. Chaplain Brown gives regular talks to the children which he illustrates with French war posters and original sketches which portray graphically the contents of the Prayer Book. Once a month the children go to Rockaway Beach for an outing—those children that is who have not missed a Sunday at the children's church. The out-of-door services on the steps of Calvary Church are being held this summer on Sundays at 7.45 p. m.

The Church of the Incarnation Summer Home opened on June 15 at Lake Mohegan. There the parish fresh air work will be carried on as usual all summer. A new scout troop is meeting twice a week and keeping the New York end of the parish lively.

Bishop Greer's Prayer Used—Last Sunday in every church in the diocese a prayer for the Every Name Canvass was used which was authorized just before his death by the late bishop. The writing of this prayer had been delegated to Bishop Burch by Bishop Greer. Bishop Burch brought the prayer as he had written it to Bishop Greer only a day or two before his death in St. Luke's Hospital. With a single slight change, Bishop Greer approved the prayer and gave directions that it should be printed and circulated throughout the diocese. The prayer is as follows:

"Stir up, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, the wills of thy people throughout this diocese, that they may, with a spirit of true consecration, enter upon the united effort through the Every Name Campaign, to lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of Thy Kingdom here at home and throughout the world. Grant to the workers in full measure the help of Thy Holy Spirit; fire their hearts with purpose and zeal; sustain the efforts of bishops and other clergy and all the devoted men and women who shall engage in this worthy task, that they may be filled with a more real appreciation of their true fellowship in Christ and a true apprehension of the responsibility facing them to come closer to Thee and to each other in a common venture for Christ and His Church. We ask all in the Name of Him who went about doing good to all men. Amen."

Churchman Cooperates With Evangelistic Committee—At the annual meeting of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City held at the Union League Club last week, Mr. Stephen Baker, one of the leading laymen of the diocese, was re-elected president.

Girls in New Rochelle Unite for Community Work—In the transition from war to peace, the girls of New Rochelle, who banded together for patriotic service are planning to continue their efforts for the welfare of the community. It was through the efforts of the Girls' Friendly, that the Girls' Patriotic League came into being in New Rochelle. Before January, 1918, virtually no work in Westchester County had been done by the Girls' Friendly. In that month, however, it was decided to begin work and centre it at New Rochelle. A secretary was engaged and sent to the new headquarters to organize the league and recruit for its membership. Women of the county became interested. Support became widespread. Girls flocked to the league.

After the conclusion of the armistice the patriotic work of the Girls' Patriotic League in New Rochelle diminished greatly. It was soon seen, however, that the sick in the hospitals still could be visited and so it has been decided to continue the activities of the league along community lines.

Girls as Freaks in Vacation House Circus—Last Friday night at the opening of the city vacation house of the Girls' Friendly Society a circus was given by the senior members' club. Freaks, acrobats, clowns and fortune tellers, sandwiches, pink lemonade, peanuts and popcorn along with everything else that goes with a glittering, gorgeous three-ring show, could be found at 32 East 57th street, which Miss Chapin has again generously allowed the G. F. S. to use for the summer. One of the things the Nation-Wide Campaign is focussing attention upon is just such provision for the hot summer as this city vacation house offers to the G. F. S. members and their friends in New York.

WASHINGTON

Social Service Secretary—The Bishop of Washington as chairman of the provincial commission on social service, has appointed the Rev. Robert B. Nelson, now civilian chaplain at Camp Lee, field secretary for Christian Social Service in the Province of Washington.

Welcoming The Service Men—An excellent way of welcoming home the men returning from overseas was carried out in Epiphany Parish on June 11, when Dr. McKim, the vestry and the ladies gave the soldiers and sailors who had been starred on the parish service flag, a beautiful dinner in the parish hall. An orchestra furnished music, and the whole company after dinner sang the Star Spangled Banner. This was followed by a warm welcome home speech by Dr. McKim, who observed, among other things, that men of the parish had been in more than thirty branches of service. He spoke feelingly of the two who had made the supreme sacrifice, John Henry Taylor and J. Wilbur Tomlinson. At this all stood reverently and the church organ's solemn tones rolled through the parish hall as an appropriate requiem was played. General S. T. Ansell, a member of the parish, spoke for the army. Another member of Epiphany, Lieutenant Commander W. W. Vaughan, speaking for the navy, stressed its wonderful service in transporting the army overseas. Yet another, Col. W. H. Wilmer D. S. C., of the surgical service, described the medical methods of testing and fitting men for the various branches of military aviation. A fourth parishioner, Commander John A. Schofield, U. S. N., told of the nine barrage across the North Sea. Dr. McKim said the farewell, and it was brief, jointed, and appropriate: "Good-night men. Come back in the fall and help us fight the devil." The back of the menu bore the names of one hundred and thirty-two men ranging in rank from enlisted men and non-commissioned officers up all 'the rungs of the ladder of aspiration' to generals and admirals.

Baccalaureate at the Peace Cross—George Washington University this year broke its precedents and held its baccalaureate service and sermon in the open, at the Peace Cross on the cathedral close on the afternoon of Trinity Sunday. Preceded by the cathedral crucifer, choir and clergy, the great academic line led by a server vested in alb and girdle, and bearing the United States flag, was a charming sight to behold, as it passed through the trees of the close and on to its position on the hillcrest overlooking the city.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. Herbert Shipman, rector of the Church of Heavenly Rest, New York. It was a powerful call to our young men to continue their labors for humanity. The spirit of service and the benefits of discipline, fruits and products of our war experience, were the elements the preacher specially stressed as needful in our nation at this time. The university authorities were so much gratified with the beauty and helpfulness of the occasion that immediately afterwards they promptly accepted an invitation of the cathedral authorities to come again for the baccalaureate in June, 1920.

A Notable Ordination—The Bishop of Washington on Trinity Sunday made Mr. Thomas L. Small a deacon. The service was held at the Church of the Nativity. The vicar, the Rev. E. M. Thompson, was the preacher.

This occasion marked the fifteenth year of the foundation of this church, and the formation of the Sunday School, of which Mr. Small was a pupil from the beginning. It also observed the twentieth anniversary of Mr. Thompson's ordination as deacon, and to its joy was added the announcement of the extinction of the debt on the church, contracted for its building. Thus in one octave two of the five churches of our communion in the eastern section of Washington cancelled their debts.

The service was beautifully ordered and conducted, and an interested congregation crowded the church to testify their joy and their pride in this great day in their history, in their vicar, and in their first offering to the sacred ministry, Mr. Small. He is also the first offering of St. Alban's, the National Cathedral School for Boys. Several others of the alumni are well on in their studies for holy orders. In his alma mater Mr. Small becomes a master the coming autumn term, and for the summer he is helping in the St. Johnland work on Long Island. He is a graduate of St. Stephen's College, and of the General Theological Seminary.

HANKOW

A New Worker—Dr. Paul Wakefield arrived on April 28 to take up work with our mission in Wuchang. Mrs. Wakefield and her two children came too for a brief visit, before leaving for Kuling, where Vachell, their 13 year old son, is at the American school. For the present Dr. Wakefield lives with Mr. and Mrs. Sherman, serving the university and helping on the medical side at the tri-weekly hospital clinics.

The Wuchang Hospital—Both sides of the Wuchang Hospital are still in desperate need of doctors and nurses, for Dr. Wasell and Miss Dexter leave on furlough this summer, and Dr. James, working as the only doctor, on clinic days does not finish with out-patients until late in the evening. Miss Peters, who has most kindly been lent by the Honan diocese to help Miss Dexter, must go back to her station in the autumn. This will leave no nurse on the woman's side and only two on the men's.

Theological School Plans—Meagreness of prospective staff and more especially the difficulty of securing satisfactory accommodation, led to the decision that the regular work of the Central Theological School of the Chung Hwa Sheng Kung Hui should not be undertaken until September, 1921, and that therefore the theological school of the American mission should continue until that time on the general lines of its present management. This is the institution of which Dr. Ridgely is in charge in Hankow. The executive committee of the Central Theological School (consisting of Bishop Roots, chairman, Bishop Norris, Bishop Molony and Dr. Ridgely) has proposed to place this school in Nanking.

The Librarian of Boone Library—Miss M. E. Wood is extending her furlough in order to take a course in library work at Simmons College, Boston, and also some university extension lectures there. She expects to return during the summer.

What St. James' Boys Do—Of eighty-six old students of St. James' School, Hanchuan, it has been found that forty-seven are pursuing their studies at Boone and fifteen at other schools or colleges. Thirteen are merchants, eight clerks in foreign firms, two are doctors, two postal clerks, two teachers, while one each is recorded for the professions of farmer, nurse, policeman, village elder, preacher and "in army service."

Chinese Ordinations—The bishop ordained the Rev. Messrs. Stephen H. S. Tsang of Hankow, Leighton T. Y. Yang of Changsha and Ts'en Rao-Ch'u of Ichang to the priesthood, and Mr. Reuben T. S. Teng to the diaconate at the cathedral on May 14.

MISSOURI

The Healthiest City—The annual report of the City Water Department of St. Louis gives peculiar satisfaction to the dwellers in that big city. In this report the water commissioner tells us that the public health of St. Louis stands highest among the large cities of the United States. In 1904, in connection with the world's fair, the city began the installation of its water system which is now considered by experts to be one of the best in the world. The Mississippi is the inexhaustible source of supply, purified by chemicals and clarified by a wonderful filtration plant into which the water goes as brown as chocolate and out of which it comes as sparkling as the bubbling reservoir of a mountain spring. No longer is it said of St. Louis that the water is food and drink all in one.

Community Service—A most successful centre of the Community Service League has been conducted for three months at Epiphany Mission of St. Peter's Church, St. Louis. This has been a peculiar vantage ground because of its nearness to the great tobacco manufactories of the Liggett Company, with its hosts of working women and girls. Basket making, singing, calisthenics, theatricals, movies, have made a busy place of Epiphany Mission. The vicar, much involved in the community work, is the Rev. J. G. Seacord. The Rev. Dr. Z. B. T. Phillips, rector of St. Peter's, was one of the chief speakers at the closing exercises of the centre, in June.

The meeting of the Southern Convocation which was postponed last autumn on account of the influenza epidemic had a hard time to squeeze itself into the spring months and got put over into the middle of June. The Parish of St. Stephen's, Ferguson, gave delightful welcome to all who were able to come, but the enrollment was quite below the membership. Both bishops were unavoidably absent. Brothers Barnes and Penley who may always be depended on to keep convocation moments from lapses into dullness were absent. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. J. H. Lever, missionary to the city institutions of St. Louis. A most helpful ad clerum address was that given by the Rev. J. J. Wilkins, D.D., rector of Kirkwood. Mrs. Cushing of Webster Groves led a conference on Woman's Auxiliary work. Sermons were preached by the Rev. H. N. Tragitt, Jr., of Crystal City and Herculaneum, and the Rev. F. M. Weddell, special missionary in the field of the bishop coadjutor. "A New Form of Parochial Report" was discussed by the Rev. J. Courtney Jones, dean of convocation; "The Marriage Laws of Missouri" by the Rev. H. Nelson Tragitt; "Parish Records" by the Rev. F. M. Weddell; the Rev. A. P. Rein introduced the topic, "The Need of Winning the World for Christ," and the Rev. Mr. Tragitt developed the discussion. Mr. Thomas Q. Dix, a business man of St. Louis and secretary of the diocesan board of missions, spoke on "The New World and How to Meet It."

Ferguson is a beautiful suburb of St. Louis and it was good to be there, escaping in some measure the heat wave that came across the city during the convocation days. The new rector of St. Stephen's is the Rev. Frederick Gowenlock who was previously the rector and who resigned and went overseas during the whole period of the war. He takes up his new duties at Ferguson July 1.

Two Church People Knocked Down By Trolleys—The street cars and some of our good church folk have been unhappily mixing up of late. On Whitsunday morning as Mrs. H. S. O'Bannon was on her way to church in St. Louis she was knocked down and suffered a fracture of the hip and torn ligaments. The following Tuesday Mr. Thomas K. Skinner was struck by a trolley car and suffered a compound fracture of the leg. Both are seventy-four years old and much upset by the physical shock. Both are cared for in St. Luke's Hospital. Mrs. O'Bannon has been for years a most devoted volunteer worker in the institutions of the city, among the poor and friendless. Mr. Skinner is among St. Louis's prominent lawyers and is senior warden of St. Michael and All Angels' Church.

The Next Towns—The Rev. George L. Barnes, rector of Jefferson City, feels that he must preach the Gospel to "the next towns." On a recent Sunday in June he had permission of his parish to go into the regions beyond and so he traveled down to Portland, on the Missouri River, a trading point for a pretty wide section of farming country. He had such an experience as we sometimes have reported to us from what is called the real mission field. In the middle of the afternoon of a day when thermometers were flirting with ninety degrees, in a little cement block chapel which has been closed for the most part for the last three years, Mr. Barnes baptized seven children in the presence of a congregation so large that the youngsters were sitting on the chancel steps. The same night Mr. Barnes held service again and preached to a congregation of over fifty. After the services the people asked him to come again and punctuated their desire by signing up a better pledge list than has been signed up in Portland in many a day. Mr. Barnes is hoping to add Portland to his missionary enterprises. As rector of Jefferson City, he sat alone in the midst of a big area which has no ministrations of the Church.

PHILADELPHIA

Trinity Ordinations—Among those who were ordained at the Trinity Sunday services at the Diocesan Church of St. Mary, by Bishop Rhinelander on June 15, were Dr. George Aaron Barton, professor of Semitic Languages at Bryn Mawr College. Dr. Barton was confirmed and made deacon last year. He has been assisting the rector of the Church of the Redeemer at Bryn Mawr. Others advanced to the priesthood were the Rev. G. E. Boswell, curate at the Church of the Resurrection; the Rev. A. E. Holt, curate at St. Andrew's, West Manayunk; the Rev. E. V. Gray, curate at old Christ Church.

To the diaconate, the bishop ordered Messrs. Oscar Meyer, Jr., Andrew H. Haughey, Albert H. Lucas and Lewis Zacker. Mr. Meyer has been assisting at the Country Centre Mission in Bucks County; Mr. Haughey was a Methodist minister, and has been engaged in social service work at the navy yard. Mr.

Zacker has been active in the work among the Jews of the city.

Dr. Richardson, the Rev. Messrs. Booth and Hoard assisted the bishop in the service.

Ten Colored Congregations in United Service—Ten congregations of colored people attached to the Diocese of Pennsylvania held a service at the Diocesan Church of St. Mary on Trinity Sunday afternoon. The preacher was Bishop-Suffragan Delaney of North Carolina. This was the first service of its kind in this city: but there will be others each year. The music was sung by a vested choir made up of members of the several congregations.

Special Services and Preachers—The Rev. Crosswell McBee was the special preacher at the two hundred and fourteenth anniversary of St. Anne's Church, Middletown, Delaware, on Trinity Sunday.

The Rev. David M. Steele preached the sermon for the graduating class of the Pennsylvania Military Academy at St. Paul's Church, Chester.

The Rev. Dr. Jefferys was the preacher of the baccalaureate sermon at the University of Pennsylvania. He said that the discipline and organization of the army had proven a help to men in attaining a definite ideal of service.

Bishop Rhinelander, speaking at the out-of-door service on the Parkway, on June 15, made an explanation of the Cathedral League; and urged all to help, especially by prayer, the great project of building the cathedral on that spot.

The Rev. Bernard I. Bell is to be the preacher at St. James' Church during July and August.

IRVING A. MCGREW.

CONNECTICUT

Trinity Commencement—Trinity College commencement this year included in its program some items of interest to churchpeople. Major Philip J. McCook, '95, a son of the Rev. Professor John J. McCook, '63, delivered the chief address of the class day exercises on Saturday June 21. On Sunday the Holy Communion was celebrated at 9.30, and afterwards there was an open air assembly at which Secretary Lane of the Department of the Interior was the speaker. Dr. Luther preached the baccalaureate sermon that evening at Christ Church Cathedral. The commencement speaker on Monday was Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation. In the afternoon Dr. and Mrs. Luther gave their last reception in the president's house.

Nation-Wide Conference at New Haven

—One of a series of provincial conferences arranged by the Nation-Wide Campaign was held in New Haven at Trinity parish house on June 16. The Rev. John N. Lewis of Waterbury is the chairman of the diocesan campaign committee. The Rev. Eugene S. Pearce of Rome, New York, and the Rev. William P. Niles of Nashua, New Hampshire, who have been sent into the province of New England by the Nation-Wide Campaign, explained the plan of organization.

Conference on Rural Church Work—The annual Connecticut conference on rural church work was held at Berkeley Divinity School on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 24 and 25. Among the topics treated were "The Country Church and Americanization," "Using Moving Pictures and the Camera in Church Work," with an actual demonstration, "Greasing the Runners in Connecticut," and "Absent Treatment in the Church." Appended to the last topic on the program was a note saying that "much of the country work will have to be done by those living at a distance in villages and cities."

Chaplain Returns—After two years of service as an army chaplain, a year of which he spent on the Moselle and in Northern France, the Rev. Edmund C. Thomas has returned to his home and to St. James' Church, Hartford, and is now at Camp Devens awaiting his discharge. Mr. Thomas is in splendid condition. He is a graduate of Trinity College and has been rector of St. James' for seven years. During his absence the work of his parish has been very effectively cared for by the Rev. Reginald R. Parker.

Grafton Hall Notes—Grafton Hall, the girls' school, closed this week after a successful year. The commencement exercises were held Wednesday morning, June 11, the commencement address being delivered by Rev. George Craig Stewart, D.D., of Evanston, Illinois. There were six graduates in the academic department, two in the college and five in the preparatory department. The alumnae banquet was served Thursday evening. On Sunday morning the baccalaureate sermon was preached in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell.

Miss Margaret Thom, who has been dean of the faculty for some years past, is leaving the school this year. Miss Thom has done splendid work at the hall and all interested in its welfare regret her departure. She will be succeeded by Miss Avis Mooney, for some years a member of the Grafton Hall faculty and this year a member of the faculty in the English department at Ripon College, Ripon.

Cathedral Notes—The School of Religion of St. Paul's Cathedral closed for the year on Sunday, June 8. There was the usual award of prizes for perfect attendance and for good work done in the various classes during the year. Fourteen pupils had a record for perfect attendance during the entire year 1918-19. The school closed with an enrollment of 239. The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell of Chicago, formerly dean of the cathedral and superintendent of the Sunday School, was present at the session and gave the boys and girls a helpful and interesting talk. The sessions will be resumed in September.

The annual picnic of the Sunday School was held in the cathedral garth Saturday afternoon, June 14. It is always the aim to make this a parish affair and many families brought their suppers. There were various games, races and contests during the afternoon.

An informal reception was given at the parish house Saturday evening, June 7, for Mr. Bell.

The cathedral branch of the Girls'

June 28, 1919

Friendly has closed its regular meetings for the season, the sessions to be resumed the middle of September. The girls have planned, however, to have a picnic supper in the Cathedral garth once a month during the summer.

Notes From the Diocese—The Rev. Martin B. Kilpack, ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Webb at the Chapel of St. Mary the Virgin, Nashotah House, is assistant at St. Peter's Church, Sheboygan Falls. Mr. Kilpack spent last summer there.

The Rev. C. B. N. O. Reader, vicar of St. Katherine's Church, Owen, is planning to bring the members of his acolyte guild to Fond du Lac for a ten days' stay on June 21.

The Girls' Friendly holiday house at Green Lake is open to visitors, other than the girls, during the month of June. Miss Mary Rich is to be housemother again this year. Sister Mary Elizabeth, who has been at the house for many years and who is much beloved by all the girls who visit there, is ill in Baltimore.

LONG ISLAND

Annual Flower Service—The annual flower service was held Trinity Sunday night at the Church of the Redeemer, Brooklyn. This service was started fifteen years ago, and is celebrated each year with growing interest. There was beautiful music and a pageant given by the children of the parish. Floral emblems were carried in the procession, and at the close of the service, the flowers were distributed to the congregation as well as small flags as souvenirs of Flag Day. Dr. Lacey delivered the address.

Memorials—The Rev. John Williams rector of Calvary Church, Brooklyn, unveiled a window Trinity Sunday morning in memory of the late John Morgan.

A handsome silver ciborium was presented recently to the Church of the Messiah, Central Islip, by Mrs. F. Wollesen, in memory of her mother, Mrs. Patterson.

St. Paul's Anniversary—At the anniversary of St. Paul's Church, the Rev. S. B. Blunt, D. D., presented to the rector, the Rev. A. C. Wilson, from the congregation, an offering of twelve hundred dollars for the purchase of a solid gold chalice. The vestry made a personal gift with a testimonial to the rector, and a bronze war tablet containing fifty-eight names was blessed.

Diocesan Honor Roll—The diocesan honor roll book, which contains the complete honor roll of every parish and mission in the diocese, 5,300 names in all, is now ready for distribution. One thousand copies of this book have been printed for free distribution to rectors, parish clerks and members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

It was the original intention of the Army and Navy Committee, to mail a copy to everyone whose name is listed, but the list is so large that this is not possible, so parishes are being supplied at the printers' cost of $20.00 per hundred copies.

Beautiful Gifts Dedicated—St. John's Church, Huntington, has received three beautiful gifts, which were dedicated on June 1. One is a reredos, presented by Mrs. August Heckscher, a mural painting, divided into three panels, framed in oak, representing Christ in Paradise. The second is a rood screen, a series of arches in oak, the gift of W. J. Matheson in gratitude for victory and peace. The third is a litany desk, also of oak, given by Mr. and Mrs. Edwin J. Van Schaick in gratitude for the safe return of their son, Lieutenant Wynne Van Schaick.

TEXAS

Convocation Meets—The Northwest Convocation met in Temple on May 20 and 21. We had with us the Rev. Messrs. Witsell, Harrison, Dyer, Perry, Phillips and Whaling. Several lay delegates were also present. The treasurer's report showed that the financial side of the work was in good shape. The archdeacon's report showed that much ground had been covered and that new places had been opened. Much interest was manifested in the report and this work. That night after Evening Prayer the Rev. Mr. Witsell of Waco preached an inspiring sermon on the text "God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth that also shall he reap." At the business session the archdeacon's salary was raised $200 a year. The Rev. Mr. Phillips, chairman of the committee on Christian Nurture read an able paper setting forth this system. A missionary rally was held when Dean Harrison presided and made an address and the archdeacon told of his work in the fifteen counties that comprise his field.

The Bishop's Travels—Bishop Quin went on to Chicago to the conference on the Nation-Wide Campaign. From Chicago he went on to Virginia Seminary at Alexandria to attend the commencement exercises and to find men for this wonderful field.

Houston Church Consecrated—The beautiful new stone church (Trinity) at Houston, Texas, was formally opened last week by Bishop Quin, the rector and visiting clergy. Bishop Quin started this church when its rector, and it is now completed under his successor, the Rev. Charles Clingman. A great work is being done in this parish.

Asbury Park Church Consecrated—Trinity Church, Asbury Park, was consecrated by Bishop Matthews on Trinity Sunday. The building was erected about ten years ago, under the rectorship of the Rev. William N. Bailly. It is noted throughout the country as a beautiful example of Gothic structure. After Mr. Bailly's rectorship ceased the work of consummating the debt was most efficiently taken up by the Rev. Francis H. Richey. Under the present rector, the Rev. H. R. Bennett, the work was completed and the mortgage cancelled.

HARRISBURG

Church Increases Seventy-five Per Cent—The church attendance at St. John's, Westfield, in the last three months has been larger than in any corresponding period in the history of the parish. At the recent visitation of the bishop a class of fifteen was presented for confirmation, of which thirteen were adults. On August 1 five years of the rectorate of the Rev. Guy F. Caruthers will be completed. The occasion will be fitly celebrated by an assembly of the churchpeople of the Northern Archdeaconry and their friends in Eberle's Park in Westfield on Sunday, August 3. During these five years the membership of St. John's has increased seventy-five per cent, while the population of the town has remained stationary. The property is undergoing improvement. The rectory has been papered newly, installation of electric lights is in progress for the church, and cement walks about the rectory are projected. LEROY F. BAKER.

ARIZONA

The Bishop at Fort Defiance—On the eve of his departure for the East, Bishop Atwood made his annual visitation of the Hospital and Chapel of the Good Shepherd at Fort Defiance, on the Navajo Indian Reservation. He celebrated the Holy Communion in the morning, baptized fourteen Indian children and made an address in the afternoon, and preached at a service for the white people of the fort in the evening. In addition to these events in the chapel, he spoke at the Presbyterian mission in the morning, and held conferences during the day with Presbyterian missionaries and Roman Catholic priests, as well as with Miss Thackara. The latter is about to resign from the superintendency of our mission after twenty-five years of splendid service.

How a Parish Managed to Get the Rector it Wanted—St. Mark's Mission, in Mesa is about to become a parish. Mesa is a progressive and rapidly growing city in the heart of the fertile Salt River Valley. It has great prospects before it, as has also our church in that neighborhood. St. Mark's has a beautiful church building, a parish house, and a new rectory, making a picturesque group in the centre of the city. Several years ago the bishop sent Mr. F. J. Bloy, a candidate for holy orders, to take charge of our work in Mesa as lay-reader. He took hold in a most effective way, and the following year was made deacon. Mr. Bloy's endeavors not only in church work but in the community, as a citizen, especially during the war, were highly appreciated by all, and it was in spite of the earnest protests of his many friends, that he accepted the appointment by the bishop last summer as vicar of St. John's Mission in Globe where a larger field and opportunity were presented him. At our recent convocation at Tucson he was ordained to the priesthood and returned to his work at Globe. Meantime the people of our mission at Mesa, backed by the good-will of the community, took a decided step forward and raised enough money to make the mission self-supporting. Then they made formal application to become a parish. The bishop, much pleased with their efforts, granted their petition, with the consent of the council of advice, and now the vestry of St. Mark's have called Mr. Bloy to be their first rector, and it is understood that he has accepted. Everybody is pleased except the people of Globe, who have become very much attached to Mr. Bloy during his year's residence among them. However, the bishop hopes to find a new man for Globe who will satisfy our people in that important mining centre.

IDAHO

Memorial Windows—A handsome group of Tiffany memorial windows has recently been placed in St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, by Mrs. A. H. Boomer in memory of her husband and children. These windows portray the Nativity, and are placed in the east transept. They were unveiled by the dean, the Rev. Alward Chamberlaine, on Easter Sunday. They are providing a great joy and inspiration to the congregation.

Baccalaureate Sermons by Bishop Page—On Sunday, June 1, Bishop Page, Bishop in charge of Idaho, preached the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of St. Margaret's hall at St. Michael's Cathedral. On Sunday, June 22, he will preach to the graduating class of St. Luke's Hospital, at which time a class of ten nurses will receive their diplomas. Both school and hospital have been accomplishing splendid results during the past year. At St. Margaret's hall a larger number of boarding pupils were in attendance than for several years. The prospects for another season are very bright.

Convocation Meets in September—Bishop Page, after consultation with members of the Council of Advice, has named September 7 as the date of the convocation of the District of Idaho. On this date, the Rev. R. L. Lewis, deacon-in-charge of St. John's Church, Idaho Falls, will be advanced to the priesthood.

Woman's Auxiliary to Convene—The Woman's Auxiliary will convene at Boise on June 23. There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion and quiet hour held by Bishop Page at the opening of the convention.

Confirmation at St. Michael's Cathedral—Bishop Page confirmed a class of thirty on June 1 at St. Michael's Cathedral, presented by the dean. He has also confirmed classes recently at Nampa, Lewiston, and other points.

Dr. Carroll's Twenty-Fifth Anniversary—The completion of the twenty-fifth year of the rectorship of the Rev. E. F. Carroll, D.D., at St. Ann's Church, Amsterdam, the longest rectorship in the two centuries of the parish's existence, was observed during Whitsun-week. On Whitsunday there were two largely attended celebrations of the Holy Communion and a festival service for the children of the church school. On Tuesday evening several hundred of the parishioners gathered in the large hall of the Pythian Temple and through the representatives of the various organizations presented their felicitations and a substantial gift to the rector. On Thursday evening, the parish choir augmented by a number of extra singers gave a fine rendition of Barnby's Rebekah.

During the quarter century the rector has presented 896 persons for confirmation, and has officiated at 1086 baptisms, 371 marriages and 670 burials. A good-sized fund is in hand toward the erection of a new parish house, and plans are under way, whereby the system of pew-rents may be abolished.

Seventy-Third Anniversary—Whitsunday was the seventy-third anniversary of Grace Church, Albany, and the Rev. Paul H. Birdsall, rector of the church, observed the day with appropriate ceremonies. The occasion was also Mr. Birdsall's twentieth anniversary of rectorship. The sermon in the evening was preached by Dean Larned of All Saints' Cathedral.

Mr. Prout Leaves Herkimer—The Rev. William C. Prout rector of Christ Church, Herkimer, for over twenty-five years, has handed in his resignation to take effect November 29. The vestry accepted the resignation with deep regret. Mr. Prout will have charge of the Memorial Church, Middleville, and Trinity Church, Fairfield. He will also continue as assistant secretary of the General Convention and secretary of the Diocese of Albany.

St. Agnes' School Commencement was held last week. Six graduates received their diplomas. The bishop delivered the commencement address.

Parish Releases Missionary Stipend—St. John's Parish, Massena, has notified the bishop that it relinquishes its missionary stipend and will pay its incoming rector $1200 and rectory. The former rector, the Rev. H. W. Crydenwise, has accepted the rectorship of St. John's, Richfield Springs.

Archdeaconry Meeting—The meeting of the archdeaconry of Troy was held in St. Luke's Church, Cambridge, the Rev. A. J. Drew, rector, on June 2 and 3. The speakers at the evening service on Monday were the Rev. Richard A. Forde and the secretary, the Rev. Clarence R. Quinn. The Rev. Edgar A. Enos, D. D., was the essayist at the afternoon session on Tuesday. The Ven. G. H. Purdy presided at all meetings.

CENTRAL NEW YORK

Notable Memorials to Prominent Laymen—An altar and reredos of Botticino marble have been erected in St. Paul's Church, Syracuse. These were recently dedicated as a memorial to the late Judge Charles Andrews, formerly chief justice of the Court of Appeals. The dedication services, conducted by Dr. Hadley, were attended only by members of the family, intimate friends and officers of the parish. Dr. Hadley read a communication from Bishop Olmsted, who, because of the diocesan convention in Utica, was unable to be present.

The late Judge Andrews was for many years senior warden of the parish, a delegate to the diocesan convention, a deputy to General Convention, and chancellor of the diocese. The altar, and the reredos, which extends around the sanctuary and is of Caen stone, comprise one of the finest specimens of ecclesiastical architecture in this city. Throughout the whole memorial there is displayed a simplicity, typical of the man to whose memory it was erected.

The New Baptistry—On the Sunday following Dr. Hadley dedicated a baptistry of Botticino marble and Caen stone in memory of William Daniel Dunning, for many years junior warden and treasurer of the parish, and member of the Standing Committee of the diocese. This memorial was presented by William and Charles Dunning in memory of their father.

After the dedication the Rev. Dr. Hadley preached on "Worship and Holy Atmosphere," calling attention to the need of an imposing church in the centre of the city, simple and still dignified and majestic, where poor and rich alike might enjoy the beautiful, inspiring and aesthetic. He also emphasized the need of cultivating reverence and dignity in worship.

A Splendid Bequest—The estate of W. Branaugh, recently killed in automobile accident, will provide a boys' club house for the community at Carthage at an early date. The Rev. F. S. Eastman, rector of Grace Church, has been an active and aggressive worker in the Boy Scouts and has an enrollment of 75 boys. At a special service for boys he appealed for such a building and the impression made upon Mr. Branaugh resulted in this fine legacy.

Death of Aged Clergyman—The Rev. Thomas S. Ockford, father of the Rev. T. H. M. Ockford, rector of St. Mark's Church, Port Leyden, New York, entered into rest on June 2, after a brief illness due to the infirmities of old age.

Thomas S. Ockford was born in London, England. He received his theological training at Philadelphia and Berkeley Divinity Schools. He was ordained deacon at Trinity Church, Watertown, in 1870, and advanced to the priesthood in St. Paul's Church, Oxford, in 1871, by Bishop Huntington. He first served as missionary at Brownsville and Dexter. In 1873 he removed to Connecticut and was rector at Thornton and other parishes. His last cure was at Northfield, Vermont. He was buried from St. Mark's Church, Port Leyden, the Rev. A. C. Clark, rector of Trinity Church, Boonville, officiating.

Successful Campaign—The vestry of Trinity Church, Seneca Falls, recently undertook a campaign to raise $3,000 to meet the large expense incurred in repairing the church, in connection with the building of the parish house. The result of their effort was an Easter offering of $3,500.

Devoted Layman Dies—Trinity Church, Boonville, has sustained a heavy loss in the death of its senior warden and treasurer, John Howard Doig. Although in his last years he was weakened physically by ill health, he was unfaltering in his devotion to the Church. He was instrumental several years ago in organizing and directing the Men's Club of Trinity Church, Boonville. The Rev. Francis Curtis Smith, rector of St. Luke's Church, Utica, his son-in-law, assisted the rector of the parish at the burial.

English Church News

The Utica Unit of the Unconditional Surrender Club of America, of which Bishop Olmsted and the Hon. Thomas R. Proctor, a prominent layman of Grace Church, were directors, has passed out of existence, and turned over its balance of funds to the Salvation Army and the Boy Scouts, each of which receives a check for $54.09.

Parishes Amalgamate—Permission is about to be obtained to dispose of the property formerly belonging to the parish of St. Joseph's Church, Rome. Originally a German mission of the Roman Catholic Church, through a request of the congregation it was taken under the spiritual supervision of Bishop Huntington, in October, 1876. At first services were held both in German and English, but as the older generation passed away all services were conducted in English. The last clergyman to serve the parish as rector was the Rev. A. L. Byron-Curtiss. Gradually the character of the population changed and the German speaking people were supplanted by people of other nationalities. Finally the communicants attached to St. Joseph's were transferred to Zion Church.

Standing Committee Fills Vacancy—The convention left a vacancy in the clerical membership of the Standing Committee when it adjourned for lack of a quorum. Recently the committee filled this vacancy by the election of the Rev. James K. Parker of Waterville. The Rev. Mr. Parker was a member of the committee the previous year, but received few votes in convention as it was generally supposed that the condition of his health would not permit him to serve.

SOUTHERN OHIO

Bishop Tuttle Addresses Clericus—At Christ Church, Glendale, Bishop Tuttle spoke to the June meeting of the Cincinnati clericus about suggested legislation at the next General Convention. "Ohio," he said, "is in the lead among all the middle western states so far as numerical strength is concerned. It is not true of Cincinnati or of the other large cities, but of the state as a whole, especially of the northern part, the old Western Reserve, which in the early days was settled by church folk."

Speaking of the so-called "exclusiveness" of the House of Bishops, he said: "It is not an exclusiveness of the heart, but simply the result of tradition. At the first meetings of the house in the early years of the last century the five or six members sat in a circle and discussed informally the affairs of the Church. Nobody was asked to come in and listen; perhaps they would not have wanted to come, even if they had been asked."

Cathedral Open Air Services—At St. Paul's Cathedral, Cincinnati, very successful out-of-door services are being held on Sunday evenings in summer, on the porch. Two or three hundred people, mostly men, will gather there to listen to the stirring hymns led by the full vested choir and to a short address by the dean, the Very Rev. Stuart B. Purves. Many of them are induced to go into the church afterwards.

Remarkable Pioneers Commemorated—

At the close of the eighteenth century and the early part of the nineteenth a group of worthy London merchants resided at Clapham, which was then a beautiful village not more than three miles from the City of London. In company with the rector, these merchant philanthropists used to meet regularly for prayer and Bible study and conference. This fact led to their being nicknamed by Sidney Smith—the wit of those days—"The Clapham Sect." By that name they are still known.

This remarkable group included William Wilberforce, whose persevering zeal succeeded in passing a bill through Parliament for abolishing slavery throughout the British dominions. It is impossible for the present generation to appreciate fully what a triumph that was for the moral force of the country, neither is it possible for us to realize how potent and persistent was the opposition to the movement.

Missionary Pioneers—The Clapham Sect was also responsible for founding the Church Missionary Society. Further, the sect founded the Religious Tract Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Church Mission to the Jews, and an Evangelical Home Mission Agency. All these institutions have had an incalculable influence upon the life and work of the Church. They have all grown immensely and are more vigorous than ever in this twentieth century. I very much doubt whether so small a group of devoted men ever before or since wielded such a tremendous influence for good.

These incidents have been recalled by the fact that a public memorial to these notable men has now been erected in Clapham parish church where the members of "the Sect" worshiped for many years. It is an example of worthy men receiving public recognition almost a century after they passed away.

The Churches of Scotland and Unity—Scotland is leading us along the road to unity. For about twelve years negotiations have been in progress between the established Church of Scotland (which is Presbyterian) and the United Free Church. In the general assemblies which have just been held, it was definitely decided by a large majority to bring about reunion.

With regard to ancient endowments, it has been decided to submit the matter to a royal commission, but both Churches postulate that the endowments must not be secularized. The ruling principle of their allotment would be that primarily they are parochial endowments and they are not liable to be pooled for general purposes. This is an exceedingly important action, especially in view of the disendowment act of the Church in Wales, which is to come into force immediately after peace has been declared. The Welsh Church act may yet be modified, but it will be worth a great deal if we can get the principle established that religious endowments must be used only for religious purposes.

The Archbishop of Canterbury in Scotland—In this connection, the visit this week of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the assembly of the Established Church of Scotland at Edinburgh, is of more than ordinary interest. The primate in his address to the assembly pointed out that the fact of his receiving, an official invitation as Archbishop of Canterbury, was unique in the history of the Church of Scotland. The archbishop said that under the tremendous ordeal of the war we had learnt that the things that sundered us were smaller than those that drew us together. The harmonizing power of the trenches had become a reality and the churches must do all in their power to come together as much as possible.

General Sir Douglas Haig's Plan—Another indication of the way the idea of reunion is growing may be gathered from a speech by Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, during a visit he paid to the general assembly of the Church of Scotland on May 29. The gallant general said he believed that the Churches if they would act together, had a great and unequalled opportunity of fellowship and community of ideals, which by their teaching and example they did much to foster in the war.

"I want to see established," he continued, "a general staff for the Christian Churches of the Empire, some body at least analogous in the ecclesiastical sphere to the position held by the Imperial General Staff in military organization. There need be no interference with the internal economy of the Churches, whether on their spiritual or their temporal side. All that is needed is a strong representative body, not too large for energetic action, which can direct the general policy of the Churches, infuse them with new energy, and strengthen their resolution in the great crusade of brotherhood on the long road on which the war has set our feet. We are entering, we hope, upon an era of peace. To my mind, the one means by which that peace can be made secure and permanent is to develop throughout the whole of the British Empire and the whole world, the spirit of brotherhood born of war. For that work we need the active help of a strong, vigorous National Church."

Illegal Services—The Bishop of Truro, who, your readers may remember, has been translated to the Chichester diocese, has had a good deal of trouble with some of his clergy in regard to illegal services, principally the service known as Benediction. The bishop has been trying for three years to persuade the rector of Cury, Cornwall, to desist from the practices contrary to the law of the Church of England. The bishop has therefore now deprived the rector of his living as he has been found guilty by the diocesan consistory court at which the bishop sat as judge, of breaking the law of the Church and of wilful disobedience to his bishop. It is always regrettable when these cases occur, but even the Church Times admits "that a priest who persists in what is not tolerated when toleration has been expressly refused, can expect only one result."

The Sacredness of the Red Flag

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN,

Those persons who are trying to make a bugaboo of the red flag should stop, look and listen. Especially all believers in universal democracy will do well to recognize both the need of an international emblem, and the fact that nothing has yet been suggested so appropriate as the crimson banner. It may sometimes be abused and misapplied, but in its essential significance it has long been acknowledged, by both religion and sound statesmanship, as the standard of man's best sentiments and aspirations. For example:

(1) Our revolutionary forefathers, when democracy was in flower, expressed their love of liberty by unfurling the red flag, and it has the distinguished honor of being the first recognized flag of American freedom. (See Funk & Wagnalls' New Standard Dictionary, pages 934-935.) It is a solid red, with a small white canton upon which is designed the globe resting upon a red cross. Was there ever conceived a better standard for the gospel of self-sacrificing brotherhood?

(2) St. Paul declares (Acts 17:26) "God hath made of one blood all nations." The blood red flag definitely emblemizes this truth.

(3) Bishop Heber, in his well-known hymn, boldly flings the red flag to the breeze, thus:

The Son of God goes forth to war,

A kingly crown to gain:

His blood-red banner streams afar:

Who follows in His train?

(4) As our several state flags are not destroyed but fulfilled in our national flag, so all national flags find the fulfillment of their best sentiments in the universal flag. In mathematical language it is simply the rule of proportion: The Maryland flag is to the American flag what the American flag is to the red flag.

In consideration of these facts, all patriots and religious people will esteem the red flag, and enlighten others as to its meaning

Let us add, moreover, that the only flag which the red flag intends to destroy is the "Jolly Roger"—the black flag of predatory wealth. JAMES L. SMILEY.

A Call to Unity

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In your issue of May 31 you have pointed out Rome's views regarding Christian unity. Rome refuses to take part in the world conference because "The unity of the Church, in the opinion of Rome, can only occur by all returning to the Roman Catholic Church." Cardinal Gasparri is right from a Roman standpoint, and this has been the policy of Rome since its separation from the oneness of the "One Catholic (universal), Holy and Apostolic Church." Rome considers itself the nucleus of all Churches and the womb of Christendom. It believes that only in Rome there exists the character of the true Church. Such being the views of Rome, the world conference should not have invited the Pope to take part in its sessions for what else besides futile sessions could be expected from a conference in which one of the members does not approve of any deliberate discussion and openly refuses to take steps toward arriving at universally accepted resolutions unless they are based upon submission to Rome?

I am a member of the Eastern Orthodox Church, the direct descendency of which from the Apostolic Church and its keeping and preserving of the teachings of the holy fathers, is not ignored or denied by any of those understanding its history. Being a member of this Church and believing its doctrines to be on the whole the whole truth, I call the Christian world, in the meantime, to the unity within the folds neither of the Eastern Orthodox, nor the papal nor the protestant Churches, but I call the Christians to the unity under the Christian teachings, which in the olden days were uniting all the Christians,—when there was neither West nor East,—with our Lord Jesus Christ, the only Head of the Church.

Why does Rome ask submission before discussion? Why does it fear discussion before submission? If Rome is confident of the supposed validity of its doctrines, policy and rites, then why does it refuse discussion which is the only means of attaining, by reason and conviction, the required end? Why not follow the step of the Orthodox Church which is an open page for discussion and which yields to reason and calls the Christian world to unity upon the foundations of the Christian principles founded in the centuries when the Church was one in doctrines and rites?

Christendom seeks, nowadays, no union but unity. It needs not the union of different branches or different sects, but the unity of the Christians in the name of Christ who wished "that they be one."

I earnestly hope for a successful outcome of the world conference and pray God, as every Orthodox clergyman does, in every prayer: "For the peace of the whole world; For the constancy of the holy Churches of God, and the unity of them all, Let us beseech the Lord."

Christ and the Church

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

In THE CHURCHMAN for June 7 in the remarks on Dr. Jowett and the C. O., the reference to "pacifist religions" is rather cryptic. Are we to understand that in order to be a pacifist or conscientious objector one must belong to certain religions?

If I may be pardoned for saying it, it seems to me that the position of Christians in regard to war is a simple one, which each must be allowed to determine according to the dictates of his own conscience. As I understand, the Church distinctly teaches that we should take Jesus for our model in all things, and, as far as our human frailty allows, follow in His footsteps. Therefore it would have been a proper question for each Christian to have asked himself what attitude Jesus would have taken toward the Great War had He been here. Would He have seized a sword and led a great army against the common enemy of mankind? If so, and we really believe in Jesus, there would have been nothing left for us to do as loyal Christians but to follow Him. If, on the other hand, Jesus had reminded His followers that they should overcome evil with good, then, if we are sincere in our professions of loyalty to Him and it is not an empty pretense having nothing to do with the actualities of life, we could have done nothing less than obeyed His injunction.

Does the Church really believe in Jesus, or is He regarded as a dreamer and visionary? One of our leading church papers some months ago, reminded its readers editorially that Jesus is not only the Prince of Peace, but also the Prince of War. The time is coming, and perhaps soon, when the Church must declare itself positively and without equivocation or reservation regarding the teachings of Jesus, or else it may go down.

Some believe that the idealism of Jesus is profoundly practical, and that He has offered the only program that will work and bring peace to a distracted world, and that all the building through the slow centuries that has not been built on the eternal foundations of right and justice enunciated by Jesus, has been built on sand and has been built in vain, and the structure so painfully wrought now that the floods have come is already toppling down, as witness Russia.

Furthermore, it is too much to expect that the Christians only will be permitted a monopoly in the use of violence to overcome their enemies, and that their example will not be followed by anarchists, Bolsheviks, the I. W. W., and other organizations who, whether rightly or wrongly, also believe that they have enemies who must be overcome.

From a Reader

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHURCHMAN:

Please accept this expression of my appreciation, in general, of your recent editorials in THE CHURCHMAN.

In the first place, I would like to acknowledge that your "academic" attitude toward the League of Nations, which at one time I criticized, was more justified than my optimistic faith. Then I want to thank you for "The World's House Cleaning," as a good corrective for the reaction of pessimism. Finally may I bid you go on with your open minded attitude toward the great revolutionary movements with which we are confronted, and with your insistence that the problems involved can be solved only by the application of the Christian spirit of love.

"To inform the mind and awaken the conscience"

The Voice of the Presiding Bishop:

"Roads and cars everywhere are filled with soldiers discharged from service, breaking ranks for home. But their hearts do not break ranks. Hearts and minds and wills are fixed at 'Attention', unceasingly loyal to flag and country; and loyalty is love. They are watchful and waiting if so be that a call for re-enranking come.

"In our Nation-Wide Campaign be we also, with no breaking of ranks for rest or seeking of home for ease, at fixed attention. Fall in. Close up. Hold steady. Carry on.

"The Master is at the head. Follow."

Reunion in Eternity

REUNION IN ETERNITY. By Sir W. Robertson Nicoll, M.A., LL.D. George H. Doran Company, New York.

The editor of The British Weekly has most certainly made a real contribution to the literature on immortality and the life hereafter, a literature which has increased so greatly of late. Aside from the conclusions to be drawn from what he has written, and these conclusions are noted below, simply to have gathered his material and the references to the subject of "Reunion in Eternity" is in itself a task for which many a solicitous heart will be grateful.

Sir William says that hitherto the literature on this theme has been meagre, nevertheless he has mined richly if his use of what others have felt and written is any sign of an interest in reunion in the other world.

His book is divided into three parts: first, there are twelve "Essays on Reunion," then seven chapters of "Testimonials," with an appendix of miscellaneous witnesses from history and literature.

The key passage to the book is on page 35 in a chapter called "Life in God and Union There." "Given a personal God, a God Who is Love, Who bestowed love on His creatures and made them love Him in return, a God Who can be reached only by the stair of love, and given also the persistent individuality which maintains itself through all tamings and subduings and discipline and purifying, and we have a doctrine of recognition and reunion in eternity which, properly understood and fortified, defies denial."

His main conclusions are: That faithful souls pass in dying to the immediate presence of Jesus Christ. That they are, as Bishop Gore says, "cleansed and enlightened and perfected." That they are carried into the heart of their desire in immediate reunion with their beloved who have gone before. That they wait in peace for the Second Advent, the Resurrection, the Judgment. There can be no question but just at this time such a book as Sir Robertson Nicoll has published, will be read wherever the English tongue is spoken. Always a sympathetic interpreter of the needs of the human soul, he has offered something that will attract, as at no other time, an extraordinary number of bereft and grieving men and women.

A Life of St. Paul

THE LIFE OF PAUL. By Benjamin W. Robinson. University of Chicago Press. 1919.

This is one of the University of Chicago publications in religious education. It is designed as a text-book for classes undertaking the study of St. Paul's life and work, and is admirably suited for this purpose, being written in a very clear and vivid way, and dealing not only with what St. Paul said and did, but also with the conditions under which he labored, and the various social, political and religious forces which influenced the people to whom he bore his message. The author begins each chapter with the references from the Acts and the Epistles on which the chapter is based, and ends with a carefully selected list of readings from recent works dealing with the particular subject of the chapter. The book includes the results of the latest scholarship, but puts them in such a way that they may be readily understood by the ordinary student. There are four useful appendices: a chronological table, a reference library, topics for special study and an outline of the life of St. Paul. The book may be heartily recommended for use in schools, in parish classes and for general reading, but from the church standpoint it will need to be supplemented as almost nothing is said about St. Paul's idea of the Body of Christ, of our incorporation into Christ through the Church, or of sacramental religion.

A New Office Book

AN OFFICE OF INTERCESSION FOR THE CHURCH AND HER MISSION. The Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society. The Church Missions House. New York. 1919.

A most useful book of offices has come from the Church Missions House suitable for use at guild meetings, services of intercession, summer schools, etc., as well as privately. To the office used daily at noon in the Church Missions House chapel and the familiar litany of missions are added similar offices of intercession for the Church in social service and the Church in religious education, as well as the well-known Litany of Reconciliation. A selection of appropriate psalms follows each office. Six cents from the Scriptures and thirty pages of additional prayers complete this valuable little book.

Zionism as the Mediator

THE WORLD SIGNIFICANCE OF A JEWISH STATE. By A. M. Berle, A.M., D.D. Mitchell Kennerley, New York. 1918.

The title of this interesting essay might be too long if it were lengthened by the words: "Particularly to Christian ideas and ideals," for this is Dr. Berle's theme. The author pictures Zionism as the mediator between East and West, as a sort of national Hague, the home of scholarship, and the social unifier of the world, and Jerusalem once more The Golden, the source of wisdom and guidance in the art of righteousness. This thoughtful essay by the former professor of applied Christianity at Tufts is much more than a prophet's dream: it is an interpretation of the possible future state and influence of the Jews in the light of their great past.

The Hebraic Ideal

CHOSEN PEOPLES: The Hebraic Ideal versus the Teutonic. By Israel Zangwill, with a Foreword by the Right Hon. Herbert Samuel, M.A., M.P., and an Afterword by Dr. Israel Abrahams, M.A. The Macmillan Co. 1919.

This lecture by Israel Zangwill on the Arthur Davis Foundation is intended to answer a common charge that the Hun has borrowed his ideas from the Jew. The poet and philosopher proceeds to show the best of Hebrew sentiment, and even regards some of the teachings of Christ as merely the best sentiment of Judaism, of which He had not been informed. The use of "peace" as a common greeting and the promise to Abraham that he should be a blessing to many nations are stressed, while the traits commonly referred to the Old Testament are thrust into the background of the distant past.

G. E. T.

A Comparative Study

ZOROASTRIANISM AND JUDAISM. By George William Carter, The Gorham Press, Boston, 1918.

As the preface of this book states, it aims to indicate the probable influence or relation of Zoroastrianism on Judaism. To do this the author states briefly but clearly the main beliefs and customs of Zoroastrianism, and of Judaism "when it came to be somewhat a fixed system in the post-exilic times." The reader not already familiar with Zoroastrianism is enabled to gain a very good, though naturally rather superficial, conception of this most interesting religion. The student already familiar with the teachings of Zoroaster can refresh his memory, and then turn with interest to the points which Dr. Carter brings out on the relation of these two religions, so much alike in their conceptions of good and evil. At a time like this when so many sacrifices have been, and are still being made to hasten the triumph of good over evil, it is well to familiarize ourselves with the same struggles in the past, and this short but concise book gives us this opportunity. It is a pity that there should be so many errors in the type.

Tipi Sapa

THE PEOPLE OF TIPI SAPA. By Sarah Emilia Olden. Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee. 1919.

Tipi Sapa is very well known to anyone who has followed the story of the Church's work among the Indians, although to most the name of his Baptism is more familiar than is the name Siha Sapewin gave her little boy when she tied her gift of a buffalo robe and a peace pipe to a pole and according to the thanksgiving ceremony erected it on the hill. The Rev. Philip Deloria, for twenty-six years minister to the Indians of the Standing Rock Reservation, was the son of a chief and himself a warrior of no mean renown. The story of his life and some account of the customs of his people have been gathered into a well illustrated book by a lady who recently spent a year teaching at St. Elizabeth's School at Wapala. This contribution to our missionary literature should be of use to those who are teaching in Church schools and mission study classes as well as a source of pleasure to the general reader.

Our Case and That of Rome

OUR CASE AS AGAINST ROME. By N. P. Williams, Chaplain Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. Longmans, Green and Company, New York, 1918.

Mr. Williams may always be depended upon to go to the bottom of any subject with which he deals, and to treat it in an interesting and illuminating way; and certainly he understands the art of controversarial writing. Never for a moment does he allow his readers to lose sight of the main point at issue; minor matters are put aside and attention is centered always upon that which is fundamental. Thus in Our Case as Against Rome he does not dwell upon the various practical abuses usually associated with the Roman Communion but goes at once to the theory of the papacy and investigates the well-known text, "Thou Art Peter, etc." of which Roman controversialists make so much.

In the first place he points out that the text is found only in St. Matthew and, therefore, can not have been in the common synoptic source. This does not destroy its authority but it does show it was not regarded by all who heard it as of prime importance. Even St. Mark, whose information came mainly from St. Peter himself, omits it. He also calls attention to the fact that whatever powers were bestowed upon St. Peter, the Apostle who was expecting our Lord to establish His Messianic Kingdom almost immediately could not have understood that those powers were to be handed on, inasmuch as it was not supposed that St. Peter was to have any successor. These are but indications of Mr. Williams' method of approach in his small but weighty book, which is clear and strong throughout, and deserves careful reading. The last chapter has some interesting suggestions on the subject of reunion.

Mind Over Matter

MAN'S SUPREME INHERITANCE. By F. Matthias Alexander, E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 1918.

Mr. Alexander's interesting book urges the cultivation of the voluntary control of physical actions instead of the present careless reliance upon their automatic and instinctive functioning. In so far as this concerns such matters as right ways of walking, breathing, speaking and thinking, all will agree with him. There can be no question that serious ills result from lack of instruction in these things. They ought to be under the conscious guidance and control of each one of us. But one hesitates to follow Mr. Alexander when he asserts that the same control may be consciously exerted over the workings of the internal organs of the body and that this control will cure or prevent such diseases as appendicitis, tuberculosis and cancer. It is only fair to add that the author's long experience in this little-known field entitles him to serious consideration. The book is endorsed by Prof. John Dewey in a complimentary preface.

The Unshakable

THINGS THAT CANNOT BE SHAKEN. By Charlotte H. Adams, The Woman's Press, New York, 1918.

Three addresses delivered at various times by the author who, as director of the Biblical Studies in the National Training School of the Y. W. C. A., has had opportunity to bring to her hearers the sure things of the Christian faith. Her three-fold theme is, to be sure of God, to believe in the moral order of the world in which we live and "to greet the unseen with a cheer." Though written with the war entirely in mind there are, of course, many still helpful thoughts.

MINUTE

The Board of Managers of the Diocesan Missionary and Church Extension Society, realizing that they were called into being by our departed Bishop, that it was his statesman-like survey of the needs of the diocese that centralized its missionary activities, thus rescuing them from partial impotence and providing them with a policy and the possibility of uniform development, recognize that in his death they have sustained a peculiar loss.

They desire to record in their minutes their consciousness of what his leadership has meant to them. Not only will they ever be mindful of his faith and courage that demanded for its outlook the broad vista, but also of the patience that would not ignore the least detail, while ever it was humanity and its needs that concerned him most, he, having learned of his Master "to have compassion on the multitude." For him the Church was always a means, never an end in itself, and only fulfilled its mission as it shepherded the lost and helpless sheep.

But more than all this, there was a consciousness in his presence of his consecration, that he was indeed a servant of servants. We were drawn irresistibly by him into a more intimate fellowship than we realized our right to claim. We yielded eagerly, and yet reverently, to the summons of his humility, and found in our intercourse with him not only guidance and help as a board, but a personal inspiration.

The Faith By Which We Live

A SHORT, PRACTICAL EXPOSITION OF THE RELIGION OF THE INCARNATE LORD

Bishop Coadjutor of Central New York

Bishop Fiske is a writer who thoroughly understands the usual difficulties and human

The Commonwealth (London) says of him: "This is the day of the average man; he has at last come into his kingdom! Bishop Fiske knows how to write for every-day people. And how well he writes! In simple, homely language, with touches of quiet humor, yet with the deepest spirituality and reverence."

The Living Church says: "He has a real gift for stating Christian truth in terms of modern thought and with winning some attractiveness. He has moral originality, the power of filling familiar but little comprehended truth with the fire of his own reaction to it."

Read what one of our American Bishops says of this book:

"I cannot tell you how grateful I am for it. It is just what I need for my clergy, and people. I wish I could have written it myself; it is so thorough, sane, and persuasive."

Then read what the Dean of one of our Seminaries (Dr. De Witt) says: "Bishop speaking as man to man about the things of God. . . . This is a book for a father is a book for teachers of Bible classes. It is a book for any man or woman who would 90 per cent. secular lives."

Finally read what a layman says (in St. Andrew's Cross): "We wish Churchmen would then distribute it among indifferent, uneducated Churchmen, as well as unchurched people and thoughtful, and yet it is a book for those nominally Christian—a book for those who seek guidance in the spiritual life and a book for the unbeliever."

It is just what they need for their manual of the Catholic Religion."
